(III) Deacon David Fuller, son of Jonathan, was born Sept. 11, 1667, in Attleboro, Mass., whence in 1716 he removed to Coventry, Conn., where in 1717, he served as selectman. In Attleboro he was a deacon in the Congregational Church. His first marriage, on July 15, 1691, was to Mary Ormsby, and his second wife, to whom he was married in 1719, was named Constance.

(IV) David Fuller (2), son of Deacon David and Mary (Ormsby) Fuller, was born March 16, 1710, in Attleboro, Mass., and died, it is supposed in Hampton, Conn. On May 17, 1741, he married Hannah Fuller (a second cousin), who was born March 25, 1714, at Rehoboth, Massachusetts.

(V) Sergt. Abijah Fuller, son of David (2), was born Aug. 5, 1753, in Hampton, Conn., and died there May 5, 1835, at the age of eighty-one years. He served in the Revolutionary army, and as a sergeant, had the honor of being delegated by Gen. Putnam to take charge of the fortifying of Bunker Hill, where earthworks were thrown up by troops under his charge the night before the memorable battle, which resulted in making the British troops evacuate Boston. For his services he received a pension until his death. He was a farmer and cooper by occupation, a man of fine physique, and a leading and highly honored citizen. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church. On May 15, 1777, he married Abigail Meacham, born in Scotland, Conn., who died July 24, 1840, aged eighty-seven years, and she was laid to rest by the side of her husband in the South cemetery, at Hampton. Children as follows were born to this union: (1) Abigail, born May, 22, 1778, married Adonijah Burnham, a farmer of Hampton, and they had several children. (2) Arthur Lee, born March 27, 1780, died unmarried about the year 1868. (3) Lois, born July 9, 1782, married Amos Justin, a stage driver, of Eastford, Conn., and had a numerous family of children. She died at the age of four-score years. (4) Abijah, born May 16, 1785, was a sailor, and died at sea in 1808. (5) Seymour is mentioned below. (6) Clarissa, born Nov. 6, 1789, died when over seventy years of age. She married Luther Bradford, of Canterbury, Conn., and had several children. (7) Luther, born Jan. 12, 1795, made several whaling voyages in the capacity of seaman, and then, with some others, bought a sailing vessel, and in 1849 made a voyage to California, returning with a considerable amount of wealth and finally settling in Windham. After two years he made another trip to California, and died on the voyage home, at the age of fifty-eight years. He married Sally Peters, of Stonington, Conn., and had a numerous family of children, only two of whom reached maturity.

(VI) Seymour Fuller, son of Sergt. Abijah Fuller, was born Aug. 15, 1787, in Hampton, Conn., and there made his home until his removal, in 1816, to Tolland, Conn. He was a most industrious man, by occupation a cooper and farmer, and he did a large amount of business in both lines. In Tolland he purchased a farm in the north end of the town, two miles distant from Tolland Center, and there died Feb. 20, 1862. On Feb. 10, 1811, he married Loisa Butler, a daughter of William and Loisa (Huntington) Butler, the latter of whom was a member of the Huntington family, whose line of descent will be given further on. Samuel Huntington, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and also governor of Connecticut from 1786 to 1796, and who died during his term of office, was her uncle. Mrs. Loisa (Butler) Fuller was born in Hampton, Conn., April 9, 1790, and died Jan. 11, 1876, in Tolland, Conn. The children by this union, all now deceased, were: (1) Lucias Seymour was the eldest, and of him further mention will presently be made. (2) Abigail Loisa, born Nov. 27, 1815, married Sylvander Harwood, of West Stafford, Conn., and died in Tolland, Jan. 24, 1847, leaving one son, who went to sea. (3) Caroline Cordelia, born Dec. 9, 1817, died Nov. 7, 1834. (4) William Butler, born Aug. 4, 1821, died in Hartford, Conn., Oct. 20, 1863. He was a tobacconist, and for several years conducted a store in Hartford. He married Henrietta Blauvelt, of Ramapo, N. Y., and had two children. (5) Melissa Jane, born March 31, 1823, died Sept. 24, 1824.

(VII) HON. LUCIUS SEYMOUR FULLER, son of Seymour, was born March 27, 1812, in Hampton, Conn., whence when four years old he removed with his parents to Tolland. There he received an excellent education in the common schools, which was supplemented by attendance at the Academy at Monson, Mass., after which until the spring of 1846, he taught school during the winters and worked on the home farm during the summer seasons. In 1846 he became landlord of the County House, in Tolland, which he conducted for two years, and then for three years conducted the stage route from Tolland to North Woodstock, Conn. At the end of that time he purchased a farm in Tolland, and thereafter divided his attention between agricultural pursuits, insurance and his various other public duties, up to the time of his decease, Nov. 14, 1890. In his insurance work he was agent for various companies, and in June, 1872, was elected president of the Tolland County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, a position which he held up to the time of his death.

In 1869 Mr. Fuller became associated as director with the Tolland County National Bank, of which he was in 1871 elected vice-president, and president in 1878, a position which he filled with characteristic ability and fidelity. He was also a director and vice-president of the Savings Bank of Tolland. Mr. Fuller was also prominently identified with every public enterprise of his town. He was a Republican in politics, a chosen counselor and adviser, and for many years one of the most influential representatives of that party, representing his county as delegate to the Republican National Convention held at Philadelphia in 1872, while for over twenty years he was a member of the Republican State Central committee. In addition to all these, he held many of the town offices with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his fellow-citizens. At one time he served as judge of probate of his district, was deputy sheriff of the county, and was offered the position of high sheriff, but declined that honor. In 1854 he represented the town of Tolland in the State Legislature, and during that time served on important committees. In the year 1863, and again in 1864, he served as State Senator from the 20th Senatorial district, serving on several of the leading committees. In 1869 he was appointed by the Senate as one of the first trustees of the Connecticut Hospital for the Insane, at Middletown, Conn., and was serving in that capacity at the time of his death.

On July 4, 1838, Mr. Fuller was married to Miss Mary Eliza, daughter of John and Sally (Abbott) Bliss, of Tolland, Conn., and children as follows, all born in Tolland, came of this union: (1) John Bliss, born April 20, 1839, died Feb. 11, 1844. (2) Mary Jane, born June 17, 1843, died Feb. 13, 1844; both of these children died of scarlet fever, and were laid to rest in one coffin. (3) John Bliss is mentioned below. (4) Lucius Henry, born Sept. 12, 1846, died Sept. 20, 1846. (5) Lucius Henry is mentioned in full farther on. (6) Edward E. is also mentioned later. (7) Mary Eliza, born Aug.

18, 1857, lived but a few hours. Lucius Seymour and Mercy Eliza (Bliss) Fuller celebrated their golden wedding in 1888, on which occasion, which was a most enjoyable one, their children and relatives, as well as many friends, gathered about the venerable couple to give expressions of esteem, and many golden tributes testified to the regard and affection in which they were justly held. Mrs. Fuller passed away Sept. 25, 1899, highly esteemed and beloved by all who knew her. She was a devoted and loving wife and mother, and is most missed by those who knew her best. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller were consistent members of the Congregational Church, to the principles of which they were firm adherents. Mrs. Fuller was possessed of considerable poetical talent, which was frequently called into requisition by her friends and neighbors throughout her long life, her last poem being written less than a month previous to her death.

JOHN BLISS FULLER, second son of Lucius Seymour and Mary Eliza (Bliss) Fuller, was born Feb. 16, 1845, and received his early education in Tolland, Conn., subsequently taking a course in Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Hartford, after which, in April, 1866, he entered the office of the Tolland County Mutual Fire Insurance Company as clerk. A vacancy soon occurring in the secretaryship of the company, he was promoted to that office, June 15, 1868, and the same day was elected a director in the company, continuing in that combined responsibility for a period of about fifteen years, until his death. He had gone to Florida for the benefit of his health, and while on his way home died on the train, in North Carolina, Jan. 21, 1883. He was connected with many financial institutions, among them being the Tolland County National Bank, of which he was a director, and the Savings Bank of Tolland, of which he was both a corporator and director. As a Republican he took an active part in political affairs, for many years being chairman of the Republican town committee, as well as registrar of voters, and representing his town in the Legislature during the session of 1878. As a friend and promoter of education he served many years on the school board of Tolland. On Nov. 7, 1872, John Bliss Fuller was married to Lizzie Amelia Pomeroy, of Tolland, Conn., now the wife of Lorenzo Litchfield, of Willimantic, Conn. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, Lucius Pomeroy, born Aug. 17, 1877, who was graduated from Yale University in 1899, and from Yale Law School in 1902, and is now a practicing lawyer in Hartford. Fraternally John B. Fuller belonged to Fayette Lodge, No. 69, A. F. & A. M., and Adoniram Chapter, No. 18, R. A. M., both of Rockville.

HON. LUCIUS HENRY FULLER, a worthy member of this representative family, was born Aug. 31, 1849, in Tolland, Conn., the fourth son of Lucius S. and Mary Eliza (Bliss) Fuller. Fortunate in birth and ancestry, his own life has been regulated by high ideals, and he stands before his fellow-citizens to-day as the embodiment of what was best in his forebears, combined with personal attributes of his own, which elicit their approbation and esteem. His education was acquired in the excellent common and high schools of his native place. His natural talent was such that at the age of fifteen years he passed the necessary rigid examination and received a cadet appointment at West Point Military Academy. After one year of service young Fuller secured a release, maturer judgment causing him to decide upon a business career. At this time, in February, 1868, his father purchased the insurance business of A. G. Dart, of New London, whose branch office was in Putnam, and although he (Lucius, Jr.) was but eighteen years old, his father had confidence in his reliability and placed him in charge. The successful manner in which this business has been conducted for the past thirty-five years proves the wisdom of the decision.

In addition to carrying on his insurance agency, Mr. Fuller has been one of the foremost citizens of Putnam. He has been prominently identified with every notable public matter, and his voice, influence and purse have been given to aid every worthy enterprise. The schools have always been recipients of his thoughtful attention, and he has served on the school board for seventeen years, a portion of the time being school visitor and chairman of both the town school board and the high school committee. It was through his efforts that the Putnam Free Library Association was brought under the city's supervision, and he acted as chairman of its board for a number of years. Always an unwearied worker for the town of Putnam, its material prosperity has been one of the lines of energy into which he has often infused new life, and he has been the means of influencing the placing of much capital here. Every progressive enterprise of merit has been sure of his support. For many years he was chief engineer of the Fire Department, of which he was the organizer, and in every way has worked for the benefit and efficiency of that service. He was also warden of the fire district, his connection with the department covering seventeen years.

Mr. Fuller's experience at West Point did not entirely extinguish his military ambition, for he served the State as first lieutenant of Co. G, 3d Regiment, C. N. G., for nearly two years, and was promoted to the position of regimental inspector of small arms practice. Later, on the staff of General Frost, he filled the position of brigade inspector of small arms practice and ordnance officer, with the rank of major, being now on the retired list after eleven years of continuous service.

Like other members of his family, Major Fuller has always been identified with the Republican party, and, like the others also, early developed a taste and capacity for politics. Early in his career he was elected, on two separate occasions, to the office of justice of the peace, but both times declined the honor. His political career is a notable and familiar page in the history of the town of Putnam. In 1881, and again in 1882, he was elected to the Connecticut House of Representatives, serving most acceptably during those terms on several committees, being chairman of an important committee; his services were particularly acceptable to his constituents. His great abilities were recognized by the voters of the 16th Senatorial district, and in 1889 he was Senator from that district, being recognized by all parties as one of the most active and at the same time one of the most judicious legislators of the session; his work on the committee on Incorporations, of which he was chairman, was particularly important at that time. Senator Fuller has been a delegate to various State conventions, and was a delegate to the National Republican convention held at St. Louis in 1896. His long and honorable legislative experience made him acquainted with the leading men of the State, many of whom are now numbered among his attached and admiring friends. In 1897 Senator Fuller was honored at home by being made mayor of Putnam, having been the leading spirit in obtaining the city charter, was re-elected in 1899, and declined the renomination which was tendered him at the end of his second term in 1901. During his administration municipal affairs were conducted with that ability and dignity which has characterized all his public work. In 1901 he was appointed by the State Legislature deputy judge of the city courts.

Judge Fuller has a wide and valued acquaintance in fraternal organizations, is a faithful attendant at the meetings, and is recognized as a potent factor in molding the opinions and guiding the actions of his fraternal associates. He is advanced in Masonry, being connected with the Knight Templar Commandery at Willimantic; is a member of Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., and was one of the board of management of the Odd Fellows Home at New London, and one of the committee on the selection of the site. He has filled all the positions in the Order up to the highest, and has been one of its most useful and influential members. He is a member of Wolf Den Encampment, No. 33, of Putnam, has filled all the chairs, and served in 1896-97 as Grand Master of the State. For two years he was representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge, both at Springfield, Ill., and Boston, Mass., at the former place being one of the three selected orators. He was a Master Workman in the A. O. U. W., Regent in the Royal Arcanum and the head of the New England Order of Protection. Judge Fuller was reared in the doctrines of the Congregational Church, and has continued one of its regular attendants and liberal supporters.

Senator Fuller's business interests and connections are and long have been large, varied and important. One of the prime movers in the establishment of Putnam's excellent water system, he was president of the company for twelve years, retiring in 1897, and is either president or one of the directors in nine other companies, these including those of Palatka, Fla., Knoxville, Tenn., the Mystic Valley, of Mystic, Conn., that of Stonington, Conn., and others. Among other business connections, he is president of the Putnam Foundry & Machine corporation; vice-president of the Putnam Cemetery Association; a director of the Tolland County Mutual Insurance Co.; the Boston Harness Co.; and the Putnam Box Corporation. Since the establishment of the telephone exchange, in 1882, he has been its manager, and a large proportion of its extension and local improvement has been directly due to his efforts.

On Aug. 31, 1871, Judge Fuller was married to Miss Helen Averill, daughter of Isaac and Elizabeth (Cooper) Briggs, of Pomfret, Conn., who died May 21, 1875, leaving one son, Maurice Bernard, born May 7, 1874, who was graduated from the Putnam high school in 1893, traveled extensively in Europe, then attended Harvard, and later studied medicine in New York City. He is now located in New Mexico. The second marriage of Mr. Fuller was on June 30, 1880, to Miss Abby Clara, daughter of Joseph W. and Abigail N. (Fisher) Cundall, of Worcester, Mass. She died Nov. 10, 1884, leaving one son, Raymond August, born Aug. 7, 1881, who graduated from the Worcester Classical High School, attended Leland Stanford University, of California, and before completing his studies traveled extensively in Europe, Africa and Asia, returning later to the university for graduation.

As an orator and forceful and eloquent public speaker Judge Fuller has much more than a local reputation. His polished manner, his pleasing personality, his culture and learning make all the more pleasing his fluent and graceful speech. He has devoted no little time to political argument, and is ever in demand as an orator on Decoration Day or other notable occasions. In 1889 he was sent as a delegate to represent Connecticut at the Washington Centennial, celebrated at New York in April of that year.

HON. EDWARD EUGENE FULLER, youngest son of Lucius Seymour and Mary Eliza (Bliss) Fuller, was born May 13, 1853, and passed his early boyhood on the home farm in Tolland. He received his education in part at the public school in the neighborhood of his home, in part at Woodstock (Connecticut) Academy, afterward taking a course at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, in Philadelphia, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1871. On Dec. 19th, of that year, he entered the office of the Aetna Fire Insurance Company, at Hartford, as a clerk, and remained with that company until Jan. 1, 1882, when he was obliged to resign on account of impaired health, caused by too close application to his duties in the office. In June, 1883, having regained his health, and his brother John B. having died, he was appointed the latter's successor as secretary of Tolland County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which office he has since filled with the highest efficiency. This insurance company is one of the oldest and most conservative of the local insurance companies, having been founded in 1828. Senator Fuller has also been a director in several financial institutions, among which may be mentioned the Tolland County National Bank, in which he was a director for several years, having been elected in January, 1884. He was elected a corporator in June, 1883, of the Savings Bank of Tolland. A staunch Republican in politics, Senator Fuller is a prominent and active figure in the ranks of the party, and has served his constituents in several offices of trust and responsibility. In 1894 he was elected Senator from the 24th Senatorial district, and during his term served as chairman of the committee on Insurance and the committee on Manual and Roll. In 1900 he was an alternate delegate from Tolland county to the Republican National Convention held at Philadelphia. In March, 1900, he was appointed by Gov. George E. Lounsbury, commissioner on Building & Loan Associations of Connecticut. In town affairs he has been particularly interested, having served his town as auditor and member of the local school board, a part of which time he was acting school visitor and chairman of the board, filling the position for several years, until the pressure of other matters obliged him to resign.

Senator Fuller is a zealous advocate and champion of the principles of fraternal organization, and is a member of several, including the Masonic, in which he has attained to the thirty-second degree; is a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and has held the following official positions: Worshipful Master, Fayette Lodge, No. 69; Most Excellent High Priest, Adoniram Chapter, No. 18; Thrice Illustrious Master, Adoniram Council, No. 14—all of Rockville, Conn.; Eminent Commander, St. John's Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, Williamantic; and Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery, Knights Templar, of Connecticut, in 1902; he is at present Grand Junior Deacon of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the State of Connecticut; Thrice Illustrious Grand Master of the Most Puissant Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Connecticut; Junior Grand Warden of Charter Oak Lodge of Perfection, A. A. S. R., Hartford, Conn.; and a member of the Board of Visitors of the Masonic Home of Connecticut. Senator Fuller is also a member of the I. O. O. F., being Past Noble Grand of Rising Star Lodge, No. 49, of Rockville, and having served also as District Deputy of the Order for two years; he has also been Past Master Workman of Rockville Lodge, A. O. U. W.; he is a member of the Tolland Grange, No. 51, P. of H.; is a veteran of the Connecticut National Guard, being a charter member of Co. K, First Regiment; and belongs to the Sons of the American Revolution, joining through his connection with the Fuller, the Abbott and the White lines.

The general reader cannot fail to notice in the foregoing sketches of a remarkably intelligent family, the rare instance of a father and three sons all intrusted with legislative office, each filling his position with credit and honor to himself and to his constituency, the father and two sons having served as representative, and the father and two sons having served as senators. The entire family have, in each generation, earned the respect and esteem of the entire community in which they lived, and have added dignity and honor to the name they bore.

It will be seen that the paternal line of this family is traced through families illustrious in the history of New England, the names of Butler, Meacham, Huntington, Mason, Clark and Ormsby appearing therein. The connection with the Huntington family is through Mrs. Louisa (Butler) Fuller, wife of Seymour Fuller. She was a daughter of William Butler and his wife, Louisa Huntington, the former of whom died in Grand, Marion Co., Ohio, about 1843. Louisa (Huntington) Butler was a lineal descendant of Simon Huntington, who was born in England, and who died of smallpox on his way to America in 1633. His son Simon, better known as Deacon Simon Huntington, was born in England in 1629, and was but four years of age when brought to America. He located in Norwich, Conn., in 1660, being one of the original settlers of that town, where he died in 1706. He married, in 1653, Sarah Clark.

Joseph Huntington, son of Deacon Simon, was born in Norwich, Conn., in 1661, and in 1687 moved to Windham, Conn., becoming one of the founders of that town. In 1687 he married Rebecca Adgate.

David Huntington, son of Joseph, was born in Windham, Conn., in 1697, married Mary Mason in 1725, and died in 1771.

Nathan Huntington, son of David, was born in Windham, Conn., in 1726, and died there in 1818. In 1756 he married Mary Mason (a singular coincidence being that his mother and wife should bear the same maiden name). In their family of children was Louisa, born about 1771, who was married to William Butler, and died in Tolland, Conn., Feb. 4, 1837. She was the grandmother of Lucius Seymour Fuller.

On the maternal side of the Fuller family the ancestral array is no less brilliant, including the names of Abbott, White, Bissell, Baker, Burt, Dart, Douglas, Stearns and Barnes. The mother of the distinguished Fuller sons, Mary Eliza Bliss, was born April 27, 1812, in Tolland, Conn., daughter of John and Sally (Abbott) Bliss, the former a descendant in the seventh generation from Thomas Bliss, of England, his line being:

(I) Thomas, Sr., of England.

(II) Thomas, Jr., of England.

(III) Thomas (3), son of Thomas, Jr., was born in England, and came to America in 1635, dying in Hartford, Conn., in 1640.

(IV) John Bliss, son of Thomas (3), the emigrant, was born in Hartford about 1640, and in 1667 married Patience Burt. His death occurred in Longmeadow, Mass., in 1702.

(V) Ebenezer Bliss, son of John, was born in 1683, and in 1723 married Joanna Lamb. He died in Longmeadow, Mass., in 1761.

(VI) Rev. John Bliss, son of Ebenezer, was born in Longmeadow, Mass., in 1736, was graduated from Yale College in 1761, married Betty White, and died in 1790.

(VII) John Bliss, son of Rev. John, was born in Ellington, June 16, 1768. On May 30, 1809, he married Sally Abbott, of Tolland, who died in 1853, his death occurring in Tolland, Aug. 23, 1850. Sally (Abbott) Bliss was born, in Tolland, April 29, 1781, and died Feb. 18, 1853. She was descended from one George Abbott, who was born in England and emigrated to America, locating in Rowley, Mass., where he died in 1647.

George Abbott (2), son of George, was born either in Rowley, Mass., or in England. In 1655 he settled in Andover, Mass., and in 1658 married Sarah Farnum. He died in 1689.

Deacon Nehemiah Abbott, son of George (2), was born in Andover, Mass., in 1667, and in 1691 married Abigail Lovejoy. He died in 1750.

John Abbott, son of Deacon Nehemiah, was born in Andover, Mass., in 1697, and in 1721 married Elizabeth Birge, of Windsor, Conn. In 1720 he settled in Tolland, where he died in 1779. In 1720, in company with several others, John Abbott came from Windsor to Tolland, and, arriving at night, camped under a large rock near Beaver Brook, and the following morning located on the adjoining hill, which has since been known as Grant's Hill, they being the first settlers of Tolland.

John Abbott (2), son of John, was born in Tolland in 1725, and died there in 1776. In 1748 he married Elizabeth Stearns, of Tolland, who was born in 1728, and died in 1783.

John Abbott (3), son of John (2), was born July 30, 1750, in Tolland, and died May 7, 1814. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. On April 20, 1780, he married Temperance Baker, born in Dennis, Mass., in 1763, who died in Westfield, Mass., in 1850. In their family of children was a daughter, Sally, who became the wife of John Bliss, of Tolland.

Betty (White) Bliss, wife of Rev. John Bliss, maternal grandmother of Mary Eliza (Bliss) Fuller, wife of Lucius Seymour Fuller, traced her line of descent from Elder John White, who came over in the good ship "Lyon," and became one of the first settlers and leaders in Hadley, Massachusetts.

Lieut. Daniel White, son of Elder John, settled in Hatfield, Mass., in 1662, and was a farmer by occupation. His title of lieutenant was first given him in the records of 1692. He was probably born as early as 1639, in Hartford, Conn., and his death occurred in Hatfield, Mass., in 1713. In 1661 he married Sarah Crow, who was born in 1647, in Hartford, and died in Hatfield in 1719, aged seventy-two years. She was one of the seven daughters of John Crow, an early settler of Hartford, Conn., and Hadley, Mass., who subsequently became one of the largest landholders in the Connecticut Colony; he married Elizabeth Goodwin, the only child of Elder William Goodwin, who was a fellow passenger of Elder John White in the ship "Lyon." John Crow's daughters married into some of the best families of the Connecticut Valley, and of them a high authority has said: "Those Crow girls made smart women."

Capt. Daniel White, son of Lieut. Daniel, was born in Hatfield, Mass., in 1671, and in 1704 removed to Windsor, where he engaged in trade and died in 1726. He was captain of the State Troopers. His wife was Sarah Bissell, born in 1672, who died in Hatfield, Mass., in 1703. His second wife, Anna Bissell, cousin to his first wife, was born in 1675, in Windsor, and died there in 1809.

Capt. Joel White, son of Capt. Daniel, was born in Windsor, Conn., in 1705, and settled in Bolton, Conn., as early as 1724. In 1736 he married Ruth Dart, of that town. He was a member of the committee of Correspondence, Inspection and Safety of Connecticut during the war of the Revolution, serving as its chairman a portion of the time. During the early part of the war he loaned over £3,000 to the State of Connecticut and to the United Colonies. A part of this sum was repaid in the depreciated currency of those times. His property inventoried at his death £10,000. Capt. Joel White died in Bolton, Conn., in 1787. His daughter Betty married Rev. John Bliss, as previously mentioned.

ORIGEN ATWOOD SESSIONS, whose mercantile career in Willimantic, Windham county, antedates that of any other merchant in the city, is widely known as one of its prominent and successful men, who is thoroughly honorable and absolutely trustworthy. A farmer boy in early life, he came to his present occupation with hardened muscles and a vast accumulation of strength and energy that have stood him well in hand during the trying years when he was building up his business.

Mr. Sessions comes of some of the oldest families of Tolland and Windham counties, the Atwoods and Conants of Mansfield, being among his progenitors, while the Sessions family descends from one of the very early settlers of Massachusetts.

Alexander Sessions, who was born about 1645, was living in Andover, Mass., in 1664, where in a deposition, dated Jan. 27, 1669, he spoke of himself as aged twenty-four years. This Mr. Sessions was married April 24, 1672, to Elizabeth, a daughter ter of Job Spafford, of Rowley, Mass., who after the death of her husband, became the wife of Mr. Low. Alexander Sessions was one of the proprietors of Andover, and his name appears in early documents as "Suskins" and "Sutchins." Mr. Sessions died about 1688, and it was probably about 1727, that his son, Joseph, purchased land in Hampton, Conn. John Sessions, son of Joseph, and grandson of Alexander, was born April 8, 1741, and was married to Martha Neff, Nov. 20, 1766. He died Oct. 26, 1810, his widow surviving until Dec. 23, 1816.

Asahel Sessions, son of John and Martha, and grandfather of O. A. Sessions, was born June 12, 1769, and became one of the prominent men of his day in Hampton and Chaplin. A man of fine physique, standing fully six feet high, and weighing, in the prime of his life, 225 pounds, he lived to be over seventy years of age. Rebecca Robbins, his first wife, whom he married in 1793, was the daughter of John Robbins, and died in 1809, leaving two daughters, both of whom died young. His second wife was Clarissa Robbins, daughter of Solomon and Lois Robbins. She lived to be eighty-three years old, and was the mother of one son and one daughter. Her son was the father of O. A. Sessions, and her daughter, Clarissa, married William M. Bingham, and lived and died in Chaplin. There were two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bingham: Ellsworth, who is now dead, and Daniel W., who lives at Spring Hill, in the town of Mansfield. Daniel Sessions, the brother of Asahel, who lived near the Coventry turnpike, furnished all the brick, and much of the timber used in the early days of Willimantic.

Marcus F. Sessions, son of Asahel, was born in Hampton, Conn., Dec. 25, 1813, and died in Willimantic at the age of eighty-three years, the last five years of his life being spent in the home of his son. In his early life Mr. Sessions was a shoemaker, but in later years became a farmer, at which he was very successful. In his political relations he was a Whig, becoming a Republican on the formation of that party, taking always a broad and patriotic interest in politics, though never an aspirant for official position. Clarissa Conant, his wife, belonged to an old family in Mansfield, and her mother was an Atwood, also of an old Mansfield family. They had two children, Origen A.; and Lucius M., who was engaged in the trucking business at the time of his death, in Willimantic, at the early age of thirty-six years. Mrs. Clarissa Sessions was a woman of fine character, and a devoted member of the Congregational Church. Both husband and wife were buried in the Chaplin Center Cemetery, and their ashes repose amid scenes long familiar to them during life.

Origen Atwood Sessions was born Sept. 16, 1842, about three-quarters of a mile west of Chaplin Center, Conn., and is the last male representative of his grandfather, Asahel Sessions. His education was obtained in the local school, and as he was the elder son of his parents, and unusually hearty and strong for his age, he early assisted his father in the farm work during the summer season, so his schooling was presently confined to the winter terms. For some winters he had for his teacher that Foster who afterward attained fame as Capt. Joe Foster. Large and strong for his age, when he was fifteen years old, he was doing the work of a man, and for a time was employed as a farm hand by Daniel Sherman, of Chaplin, and Charles Bill, of Hartford, the latter the father of the present Judge Bill, of that city. In the fall of 1862 Mr. Sessions returned home, and in November of that year secured a situation with J. E. Cushman, of Willimantic, his application for it deriving much strength from his reputation as a reliable young man. At that time Mr. Cushman had his store at the corner of Union and Main streets, and he had an extensive business in undertaking and the furniture trade. Here Mr. Sessions began his career in a line to which almost his entire life has been devoted. In those days the furniture business was conducted in a very different manner from what obtains at the present time. The furniture came "knocked down," and required "setting up" and putting together, often having to be finished as well. Mr. Sessions remained with Mr. Cushman until 1872, when he began business for himself in the Atwood Block, where Puritan & Reade now are. From the start Mr. Sessions was engaged in the undertaking and furniture business, with which he combined frame making for all kinds of pictures. In addition to this line, he also conducted "dollar stores," in both Willimantic and Stafford, his store at the latter place being the first of the kind and in these ventures he was associated with C. W. Raynes, under the firm name of O. A. Sessions & Company.

Mr. Sessions was the first occupant of the old Hamlin Block, where he maintained his store for several years, which was next established at No. 677 Main street, remaining at that point from the month of December, 1891, to April 1, 1902, when it was removed to the corner of North and Valley streets, in a building of which Mr. Sessions is half owner. In undertaking there has been a vast change since Mr. Sessions was first associated with it, and it is but strict truth to say that he has kept pace with every advance in his art. It is a work for which his fine taste, delicacy of thought and expression toward his patrons, and a tender respect and sympathy for their feelings, give him a peculiar fitness. His store is fully furnished with all the appliances for the successful management of his business, including a fine and new rubber-tired hearse, which for beauty of design and artistic workmanship cannot be surpassed anywhere. Mr. Sessions devotes special attention to embalming, and uses a preparation that preserves the features in a life-like expression. His services are in demand throughout Eastern Connecticut, and to every case he still gives his personal attention, after a business career of over thirty-eight years.

On Nov. 20, 1868, Origen A. Sessions was married in Chaplin to Miss Maria S. Hough, who was born in that town Feb. 5, 1845, a daughter of Cornelius E. and Mary Ann (Rindge) Hough. During her earlier womanhood Mrs. Sessions was a teacher of much ability, and taught eight terms in all, in Chaplin, Northampton, Mass., and in Hartford. She began teaching when she was eighteen years of age, and received a dollar and a half a week and board as her compensation, never receiving more than two dollars and a quarter with her board during her eight terms of school. Mary A. Rindge, her mother, was born in Chaplin, Oct. 16, 1826, a daughter of Erastus and Chloe (Foster) Rindge, and a granddaughter of Joseph Foster, a fifer in the Revolutionary army, who received a pension for that service. Cornelius Everest Hough, her father, was the first child born in the town of Chaplin, after its formation, his birth occurring there in May, 1822. He was a son of Thomas and Sarah (Simons) Hough, and a grandson of Elijah Simons, of Hampton, who served in the Revolution, and received a pension from the Government of the United States in his old age. Thomas Hough was a son of Erastus Hough, and was a jeweler by trade, working in Hartford. In his later years he was a farmer in Chaplin, where he died at the age of fifty-four years. Cornelius E. Hough was a shoemaker by trade, and had just entered into a partnership with Otis Whiton, of Westford, and Henry Storrs, of Chaplin, in the manufacture of shoes, when his death occurred, and by a singular coincidence both his partners died within a year. Mr. Hough died in 1851, leaving a widow and three children: Mrs. Sessions; Theodore E., a book-keeper for Pitkin Brothers, of Hartford; and Frederick S., a farmer of Chaplin.

Mrs. Mary Ann (Rindge) Hough was married second to Seth Stowell Chapman, who served in the Rebellion as a member of Company H, 18th Conn. V. I.; taken prisoner by the Rebels, he was paroled, and died in 1863 from typhoid fever at Annapolis. Mrs. Chapman is still living in Chaplin, and is a remarkably well-preserved and active old lady. Mrs. Sessions belongs to the Congregational Church and the Ladies' Aid Society in connection with that church, her daughter Helen being a teacher in the Sunday School.

Mr. and Mrs. Origen A. Sessions have had the following family: May died at the age of one year; Myra A., born Feb. 25, 1874, was married May 1, 1899, to Walter Arthur Reed, of Cambridgeport, Mass., who is employed in the Boston office of the Claim Department of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway; Helen Everest, born April 27, 1880, is the wife of Franklin H. Elmore, of Willimantic, who is associated in business with Mr. Sessions. Mr. Sessions cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, on the occasion of his second election, and although he has been a regular voter and a strong supporter of the Republican party, he never has been willing to become a candidate for any position in public life. In his organization of the Willimantic Building and Loan Association, of which he has been a director to the present time, Mr. Sessions rendered a great service to the community. At the present time he is chairman of the Willimantic Cemetery Committee. As the veteran undertaker of Windham county, his name is known throughout this part of the State, and his present honorable and creditable standing in the community is entirely due to his own sterling manhood and unswerving integrity.

GEORGE M. DENISON, the oldest man now in active business in the town of Plainfield, and probably in the county of Windham, was born in this town June 7, 1820. Some twelve years ago he began an undertaking business, in which he has successfully continued to the present time.

Ruel Denison, his grandfather, was a resident of Preston, Conn., where he was engaged in farming. For a time, however, he was a resident of the town of Mystic, and there his son, Nathan Denison, the father of George M., was born.

Nathan Denison was reared to manhood in Preston, where he was married to Betsy Plumb, a native of the same town. He died in Plainfield at the age of seventy-four, and his wife passed away at the age of fifty-six years. Nathan Denison lived for a brief time in the town of Canterbury, but early established himself in Plainfield, where he purchased and operated a saw and grist mill, continuing in this occupation for several years, when he sold the property, and moved to what is the Dodge place at Plainfield. For some two years the family afterward lived in North Stonington, and then returned to Plainfield, where Mr. Denison ran a wagon shop east of Mr. Shepherd's present place. A year later the business was transferred to Central Village, where it was followed for some seven years. Mr. Denison also carried on work as a carpenter. In early life Mr. Denison was a Whig, and then became a Republican. He was a member of the Plainfield Congregational Church. His wife held to the Congregational faith, though not an active church member. To this worthy couple were born ten children, three of whom are still living: William, deceased, married a Miss Robbins, and reared a family; Susan, deceased, married Harry Wilcox, and after his death, George Montgomery, of Plainfield, Conn.; George M. is the subject proper of this sketch; Sarah, deceased, married John Medberry, and lived in Baltic, Conn.; Esther S. is the widow of Archibald Walker, and resides at Rockford, Ill.; Frances M., deceased, married Joseph Medbury, and lived in Baltic, Conn.; John P. died in California; Marv M., deceased, married Gardner Bentley and lived at Fonda, N. Y.; Cynthia, deceased, married Frank Colby, and lived in Plainfield; and Luther, who is a farmer and runs a saw and grist mill in Voluntown, Conn., was a soldier in the Civil war, and married Anna Fish.

George M. Denison was born in Plainfield, where he attended the district school until about his tenth year, when he was set to work in the shop by his father. When he was fifteen, his parents removed to Waterford, Conn., and the following year he became an employe in a woolen mill in that place. In 1837 he was thrown out of work by the coming of hard times, and on June 7th of that year he came to Moosup, where he has made his home to the present time, with the exception of some three years when he lived in Danielson. For a little while after coming to Moosup he was employed in the cotton mill, but he gave it up because the work did not agree with him, and he worked instead with his father in his shop. After the death of the latter he carried on the business alone for several years. While in Danielson he was doing repair work at the Quinebaug Mill, and when he returned to Moosup, he was employed by the contractor engaged in the building of the present Highland division of the Consolidated Road. For some years he worked in the machine shop of the old Gladding Mill, now the Cranska Mill. He started the top-roller covering business in the basement of what is now the Woolen Mill, but then used for the manufacture of cotton goods, and for some eighteen years he was very successfully engaged in this line, and in its later years it was mainly carried on by his son, Albert G., who was a partner with his father, but they discontinued about 1887. Still later Mr. Denison and this son engaged in the furniture and undertaking business under the firm name of George M. Denison & Son. Their quarters in Hill's Block were ample to their every need, but they were burned out in the big fire of 1893, and they now have room in the new building, but confine their attention entirely to undertaking. Mr. Denison, though past the four-score mark, still attends actively to business, and his faculties seem to be entirely unimpaired by his years of active labor.

Mr. Denison was a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been a Republican. He has been offered official position, but has uniformly declined. Of the men who were in Moosup when he came, not one is now living, Dr. F. S. Burgess being the last of his early associates to pass away. Mr. Denison was a member of the Brigade Band, which consisted of twenty-two young men from Plainfield, and two or three from Sterling. They wore light brown frock coats, trimmed with fringe about the collar, the bottom, and in front; white trousers and caps with blue and white feathers. In the Harrison campaign this band went to Worcester three times, and played at Boston and Dorchester on the 4th of July. It attracted great attention and won much praise when it played at Dedham, Mass., in competition with eight other bands. Mr. Denison was also a member of the Plainfield Rifle Company, made up of the "blue blades" of the town some sixty years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Denison are both members of the Moosup Baptist Church, where he led the choir some forty years. This was a time when three services were held each Sunday throughout the year, and at each service the choir was expected to be present in full strength. To hold the position of chorister in such exacting times for so long a period indicates a rare fidelity. At first the Puritan austerity would not admit an organ, but two flutes and a bass viol were permissible. Mr. Denison brought his choir into a high condition of perfection, and it had a fine reputation throughout the county.

On Nov. 14, 1842, Mr. Denison was married in Norwich to Lucinda Grant, a daughter of Charles and Lydia (Barber) Grant, of North Stonington, and a granddaughter of Joshua and Lucy (Green) Grant, and of Capt. Benjamin Barber. Mr. and Mrs. Denison have had the following children: Betsy, born May 30, 1846, married William H. Cole, Feb. 28, 1872, and lived in Moosup, where she had one son, and died July 16, 1879, at the age of thirty-three; Frances, born Dec. 31, 1849, is at home; Albert Gallatin, born Oct. 15, 1852, a capable and progressive member of the firm of George M. Denison & Son, married Oct. 12, 1887, Clara Tillinghast, and has four children: Orra, Ralph, Clark and Harry; Henry C., born March 16, 18—, died Feb. 19, 1879.

Mrs. Denison descends from Matthew Grant, who was born in England Oct. 27, 1601, and came to America in the ship "Mary and John" in 1630, landing in Dorchester. He was later active in forming the company that went to Windsor, Conn., in 1635, making the journey to that point overland in October, of that year. He married his wife, Priscilla, Nov. 16, 1625, and he died in Windsor April 27, 1644.

Samuel Grant, son of Matthew, was born in Dorchester, Nov. 12, 1631, was married in Windsor, May 27, 1658, to Mary Porter, who was born in England in 1638, a daughter of John and Ann (White) Porter. Mr. Grant had his home at Windsor, but removed to East Windsor Hill as early as 1672, where he built a home on the river. Later still, however, he sought another site. Mr. and Mrs. Grant joined the Church at Windsor in 1685, and about 1700 were members of the East Windsor Church. He died Sept. 10, 1718.

Josiah Grant, son of Samuel, born in Windsor, March 19, 1668, was married July 8, 1696, to Rebecca Miner, born in September, 1672, a daughter of Capt. Ephraim and Hannah (Avery) Miner. For a time they lived in East Windsor, and in 1695, removed to Stonington, where he and his wife united with the local church in 1699, and became a part of the organization at North Stonington in 1727. During his active days Mr. Grant was collector, lister, constable and tything-master. He died at Stonington, March 28, 1732, and his widow passed away about 1746.

Oliver Grant, a son of Josiah, born Sept. 3, 1703, in Stonington, was married May 26, 1726, to his first wife, Bridget Miner, daughter of Joseph Miner. For his second wife, he married on March 18, 1729, Silence Williams, born about 1703, a daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Wheeler) Williams. Mr. Grant resided at North Stonington, and was grand juror, constable, surveyor, etc. He died March 28, 1732.

Joshua Grant, son of Oliver, was born Jan. 30, 1732, in North Stonington, and there engaged in farming. He was married Nov. 15, 1753, to Sarah Breed, who was born in North Stonington, Dec. 28, 1735, a daughter of Job and Mary (Prentice) Breed. Mr. Grant died in his native town, May 16, 1788, and his widow passed away July 9, 1811.

Joshua Grant, son of Joshua, was born April 21, 1756. He married Jan. 1, 1778, Lucy Green, who was born June 11, 1757. They resided in North Stonington, engaged in farming, and there he died May 16, 1825; his widow passed away May 15, 1836.

Charles Grant, a son of Joshua, was born in North Stonington, Jan. 12, 1788, and he married Lydia Barber, who was born in Hopkinton, R. I., a daughter of Benjamin Barber. Mr. Grant died in Stonington, and his wife passed away some years prior in North Stonington.

Lucinda Grant, a daughter of Charles, born at Little Rest Hill, July 7, 1821, married at Norwich, Conn., Nov. 14, 1842, George M. Denison, whose history is narrated in this article.

EDWIN TALCOTT SMITH, first selectman of Hebron, Tolland county, in 1901-02, and the present representative from his town in the State Legislature, is a prominent and highly esteemed resident of that old Connecticut town, and belongs to a family long and favorably known in the community.

Nathan Smith, his great-great-grandfather, had the following named children: Abigail, born April 24, 1749; Elizabeth, Feb. 22, 1751; Esther, April 12, 1753; Nathan, Feb. 26, 1755; Sarah, April 4, 1757; Simon, Feb. 17, 1759; Benjamin, Feb. 27, 1761; Lucy, Aug. 12, 1763; John, June 1, 1766; Caroline, May 24, 1770. Of these, Nathan was probably the first of the family to come to this section of the State. He married Martha Comstock, and resided in Hebron, spending the later portion of his life on the farm now occupied by Edwin T. Smith, where he died.

Simon Smith, the great-grandfather of Edwin T., was a tanner at Westfield, Mass., where he died June 20, 1849. On Jan. 1, 1784, he married Abigail Fowler, who was born Dec. 3, 1759, and died Jan. 14, 1835. To them were born: Caroline, Oct. 2, 1784; Lydia, Feb. 26, 1787; Daniel, April 28, 1788; John, March 9, 1790; Horace, Aug. 15, 1792; Nathan, Nov. 17, 1794 (the grandfather of Edwin T.); Charles, Feb. 2, 1797; Hiram, Sept. 21, 1800.

Deacon Nathan Smith was born probably in Westfield, Mass., and when a mere boy came to Hebron to live with his uncle, Nathan Smith, whose home was childless. He remained with his uncle and aunt during their lifetime, and their farm passed to him when they died. Hard-working and thrifty, he was well-to-do at the time of his death, March 13, 1863. His remains rest in the old cemetery at Hebron. For many years previous to his death he had served as deacon in the Congregational Church at that place. He served as a soldier in the Mexican war, and his second wife drew a pension for his services.

Deacon Smith was married, Oct. 12, 1819, to Jerusha Ashley, who was born in West Springfield, Mass., July 6, 1794, daughter of Moses and Sarah (Rogers) Ashley. She died July 27, 1854. To this union came: (1) Martha, born Sept. 18, 1820, was married Sept. 9, 1844, to William Phelps, a farmer of Marlboro, where she died Oct. 3, 1849. (2) Sarah, born June 19, 1822, was married April 14, 1846, to James D. Eldridge, a printer and a farmer, who died in West Springfield, Mass., where she now resides. (3) Seth, the father of Edwin T. Smith, was born Sept. 27, 1824. (4) Samuel, born Dec. 14, 1827, married Ellen Kellogg, became a wealthy farmer, and is now living retired in West Springfield, Mass. (5) Moses, born Aug. 16, 1830, married Emily White. He graduated from Yale, entered the ministry of the Congregational Church, and was located at Detroit, Mich., for many years; he is now living retired in Chicago. Deacon Nathan Smith married May 20, 1856, for his second wife, Mary A. Leonard, who survived him many years. To this union came one child, Charles, born Sept. 3, 1857, who is now a farmer at East Saginaw, Michigan.

Deacon Seth Smith, father of Edwin T., was born in the house now occupied by that gentleman. His education was obtained in the district school and at Colchester Academy, where all his brothers also attended. It was the desire of their father that one of his sons should become a clergyman, and Moses gratified this desire. Seth Smith from early childhood had weak eyes, which greatly interfered with his studies. When a young man he lived at home, and bought out the other heirs after the death of his parents. Until his death he was engaged in general farming, and was noted as being very successful. He met his death on the night of Sept. 17, 1878, while hauling shingles from Colchester to Hebron, for the Congregational parsonage. By some mistake the shingles had been taken to Colchester, and Deacon Smith was bringing home a wagonload of them. About midway between Colchester and Hebron, it is supposed he fell off the wagon and broke his neck, as he was found dying in the road with his team standing beside him. His remains were laid to rest in the old cemetery at Hebron. Seth Smith was a Republican, and represented Hebron in the General Assembly of 1875. A very devout and earnest Christian, he was a leader in the church at Hebron, as was his father before him, was active in all its work, and met the needs of the society with an open hand.

Seth Smith and Eliza Hubbard were married Sept. 22, 1852. She was born Aug. 5, 1830, in Bolton, Conn., daughter of Edwin and Sophia (Hale) Hubbard. Her father belonged to the Middletown branch of his family, and her mother to the Glastonbury branch of her family. Mrs. Smith died May 14, 1891, at the home of her son, Edwin T. To this union came the following children: (1) Nathan Hubbard, born Dec. 26, 1855, died Oct. 29, 1875. (2) Edwin Talcott was born May 12, 1861. (3) Frank Winslow, born Dec. 3, 1863, married Cora Smith, of West Springfield, Mass., and resides in Torrington, Conn.; they have three children, Eloise C., Norman and Ruth. (4) Dewitt Eldridge, born April 21, 1872, is a farmer at West Springfield, Mass.; on Nov. 6, 1901, he married Emma Ridgeway.

Edwin Talcott Smith was born in the home where he is found to-day. He attended district school for a time, and was afterward sent to a select school at Hebron, kept by a Miss Patten, who now has a select school at Middletown, Conn.; he also recited to Cyrus Bestor, of Hebron. Until he was about seventeen years old he remained on the home, working for his father, and after the latter's death he and his brothers carried on the farm for their mother. When she died Mr. Smith bought out the other heirs, and secured the place, which consisted of 270 acres, as his own property. It has increased under his hands, and he now owns 378 acres, which he devotes to farming, dairying and stock raising.

Edwin T. Smith was married Oct. 27, 1878, to Ella Maria Coats, a native of Hebron, born July 19, 1855, daughter of Nathan E. and Elizabeth (Purinton) Coats. Her mother was a native of Worcester, Mass., and was a descendant of Gov. Bradford, of the Coffins of Nantucket, and of the Fitch family, of Norwich. Mrs. Smith taught school for several years in Hebron and Columbia, and ten terms in the district in which she now resides. To this union came: (1) Nathan Eugene, born Aug. 21, 1879, is now employed at H. D. Barrows' shoe store in New London; he is an usher in the First Congregational Church there. (2) Edna Louise was born Aug. 27, 1885; (3) Edward Ashley, May 20, 1887; (4) Florence Edith, Sept. 13, 1890.

Mr. Smith is a Republican in political faith. He was elected first selectman in 1900, has served many terms as assessor, and also on the board of relief; and on Nov. 4, 1902, was elected representative of his town in the State Legislature. Mr. Smith belongs to the A. O. U. W., and to the Hebron Congregational Church, in which he is very active. Mrs. Smith is president of the Ladies' Aid Society, and is one of the principal workers of the church, which she long served as organist. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are popular and esteemed in Hebron, where their good lives, industrious habits and kindly spirits have made them many friends.

GEORGE EDWARD CHALLENGER, proprietor of the well-known and popular hotel conducted under the name of the "Windham Inn," at Windham Center, Windham county, was born at Turton, near Bath, England, June 30, 1849.

Samuel Challenger, his grandfather, was a resident of Bath, a gardener by calling, and lived to be seventy-three years old. In his later years he resided at Turton, which is 106 miles from Liverpool. He reared a large family.

Samuel Challenger, father of George E., grew to manhood near Liverpool, and became a boss wool sorter, which position he held until he came to America, when over forty. Locating at Barre, Mass., he followed mill work, and died at that place, aged seventy-two. He married Mrs. Charlotte (Savage) Silcox, by whom he had the following family: Josephine, deceased; Mary, of Waltham, Mass., who married Peter W. Hill; Charlotte, of Waltham, Mass., unmarried; Jane, of Barre, Mass., unmarried; and George Edward.

George Edward Challenger was but five years of age when the family came to America, and after twelve years in Cherry Valley he was taken to Barre, Mass. At both places he attended school, until the age of eighteen, when he entered the mills at Barre, continuing to work there for four years. For a number of years he was dresser tender in the mill at Gilbertville, Mass., and was also employed for some time at Stafford, Conn. While in Gilbertville, he was married to Maria A. Finran, a native of Worcester, Mass.; no children have been born of this union.

Mr. Challenger finally commenced business for himself, conducting a market at Baltic, with great success, for six years. Then, for the four following years, he was proprietor of the hotel at Scotland, after which he purchased his present property from Mrs. Wilbur. The "Windham Inn" is one of the oldest in this portion of the State, having been erected in 1800. Mr. Challenger has conducted it for seventeen years, and it has always been his aim to make the place as comfortable and homelike as possible, and to contribute to the pleasure of guests in every way, and that he has been successful is clearly evinced by the popularity his house now enjoys. The "Windham Inn" is centrally located at the cross roads in the pretty little village of Windham, facing a beautiful park, is well supplied with shade, and is well known to all the residents of this section of the country, as well as to many city people who take advantage of its comforts during the hot summer months. The rooms in the house are all large, airy and comfortable, the halls are spacious, and the verandas roomy and pleasant. In company with Dr. Frank E. Guild, Mr. Challenger spent some $1,400 in fitting up a spring and laying 2,900 feet of pipe, through which the finest of water is supplied to the hotel and public fountains, as well as private residences. There are all the necessary conveniences that will conduce to the comfort and well-being of guests, an air of homelike comfort prevails, and one visit to the house is a sure guaranty of another.

The dining-rooms are cozy and comfortable, and the tables are always plentifully supplied with all the substantial and delicacies of the season, cooked to a turn and nicely served. This department is under the supervision of Mrs. Challenger, thus insuring superiority in every way. The sample room is always well stocked with everything in the line of refreshment that is pleasing to the taste and invigorating to the body. Good stables and sheds are also connected with the establishment, and transient horses are given the best of care in airy, well-ventilated stables, at the hands of experienced men; there are also accommodations for horses for the whole or part of a season. Mr. Challenger also conducts a livery, and has five good horses, as well as a variety of carriages and wagons, his turn-outs being as attractive as any to be seen on the streets and roads in this vicinity.

Mr. Challenger himself is a courteous and pleasant host, who has the welfare of his guests at heart. Personally he holds a position of high standing among the business men of his section, is very popular with all classes of the people, and is regarded by all as an influential business man and public-spirited and useful citizen. In politics he is a Democrat, and he takes an active interest in the affairs of the town.

JOHN HICKEY, a shrewd son of Ireland, who has made a very considerable fortune in Willimantic real estate, is ranked among the leading citizens and business men of Windham county. His children are bright and capable and move in the best society. Had Mr. Hickey received the educational advantages which he has given his children, undoubtedly he would have risen much higher in life. As his schooling was of the poorest and briefest character, hardly too much can be said of the heroic struggle which he made against adverse circumstances. His family has every comfort and luxury and his children would do credit to any parentage.

John Hickey was born in Grantstown, County Tipperary, Ireland, June 24, 1835, a son of Michael and Mary (Ryan) Hickey. The Hickey family is an old and well established one in county Tipperary, and for many generations its name was well and favorably known in that part of Ireland. Michael Hickey was a farmer, and while not wealthy, was better situated than most of his compatriots of that time. His death occurred in 1847, when he left a widow and seven children, with a small estate, but enough to bring them to the United States, whither they presently came in search of the better opportunities the New World presented. They sailed from Queenstown in May, 1849, in the sailing vessel "George Washington," and landed in Boston after a seven weeks' voyage, July 4th. Their destination was Webster, Mass., where neighbors from "the old sod" who were expecting them had already settled. The mother and the younger members of the family remained in Webster until 1844, when they all removed to Willimantic, where young John had already gone. Mrs. Hickey lived to be seventy years old, and all her life after her first coming to Willimantic was spent here, with the exception of eight years which she spent in Iowa with her oldest son, going there in 1860, and returning in 1868. The children of Michael and Mary Hickey are as follows: (1) Patrick went to Scott county, Iowa, where he bought 160 acres of land at eight dollars an acre. In 1860 he came back to Connecticut to bring his mother to his western home. He was a successful farmer, and died unmarried in January, 1892. (2) John is mentioned below. (3) Bridget married a Mr. Ryan in Chicago, and moved to New Orleans, where her husband was drafted into the Confederate army. When last heard from in 1862, she was living in New Orleans. (4) Mary married John Murphy in Willimantic, where she died a few months after her marriage. (5) Michael L. is a retired merchant in Willimantic. (6) Johanna married a Mr. Johnson in Iowa, where she died. (7) Timothy E. is a successful merchant of Providence, R. I., and is married, but has no children. The four sons of this family have all made their mark in life, and risen to prominence and prosperity.

John Hickey attended the National School of his native town, and walked two miles to get what little instruction it afforded. His schooling was ended in Ireland when he was only eleven years old, as in this country he had only the privilege of a very brief attendance at night school. He paid his wages to his mother until he reached the age of twenty-one years. She allowed him two dollars a month for spending money, all that she could spare from the needs of the family. This money he used to secure private instruction, as he felt the need of education more than of pleasure. When he came to Webster young John worked in the Merino Mills, and in 1852 he went to Willimantic to work for what is now the Willimantic Linen Co. In 1858 John Hickey went to Scott county, Iowa, where he remained two years, with the exception of the winter season, which he spent at Greenville, Miss., working on the levees then building on the Mississippi river. In 1860 he returned, to Versailles, Conn., and worked in a factory engaged in making seamless grain bags. There he remained two years, when he took a position in the "Rough Shop" of the Willimantic Linen Company.

Mr. Hickey invested his savings in business, her grandfather, came from Leicestershire, England, to America, bringing with him his wife Mary, and five children. They landed at Philadelphia, Sept. 16, 1796, having left England July 8th, thus consuming seventy days on the voyage. Two children were born in New Jersey, of whom Thomas, Mrs. Clarke's father, was one. A great-grandson, Lieut. Charles Exton, now stationed at Fort Sheridan, is a graduate of West Point, and served in the Spanish-American and Philippine wars; he participated in the battle of Santiago. Hugh Exton settled in New Jersey, where he, together with his four sons, purchased 1,000 acres of land, which became known as the Union Farms, and a portion of which is still in the possession of the family. For this tract he paid $30,000 in gold. Of this body of land Mrs. Clarke's father, Thomas, inherited 300 acres, which he brought to a high state of cultivation, and at his death left as a very valuable property. Thomas Exton was a self-educated man, and was well read. He was prominent in the local affairs of his community, and served for a period in the Legislature of New Jersey. In disposition he was kind and affable, and a man who attracted to himself a very circle of staunch friends. He married Sarah Ann Anderson, a daughter of George Anderson, a Revolutionary soldier. They had three sons and five daughters, and all were brought up in the Presbyterian faith, and all became prominent and earnest Christian workers. The grand-children now number nineteen, and the great-grandchildren seventeen, all but two of the latter being in existence at the time of the death of Mrs. Thomas Exton, who died July 10, 1899, having nearly completed the ninety-second year of her age. When Mrs. Exton joined the D. A. R., she was presented with a gold spoon, a souvenir presented to each "real daughter" of the Revolution.

George Anderson, father of Mrs. Thomas Exton, was born March 26, 1751, and died Nov. 8, 1839, near the close of his eighty-ninth year. He was a farmer in New Jersey, and he served for many years as a member of the Legislature of that State. He raised a company for service in the Revolution, and was made its captain, and was one of the participants in the disastrous battle of Long Island. His bureau in his home at Trenton, which Hessian soldiers sought to break open with their bayonets, is still preserved, and is in the possession of his granddaughter, Mr. Sarah Baker, of Rhinebeck, New York.

GILES HUMPHREY ALFORD, one of the leading men of Willimantic, Conn., comes from one of the old and long established families in Windham county.

Nathaniel Alford, his great-great-grandfather, was born in Windsor, Conn., in 1702, and he died in 1769. He married Experience Holcomb, and lived in Simsbury, Conn., where they had a family of five daughters, and one son, Nathaniel.

Nathaniel Alford (2) was born in 1738, in Simsbury, and was a private in the Continental army; he died in 1818, at the age of eighty years. In 1760 he wedded Abigail Hill, and to this marriage there were born nine children, among whom was a son, Arba, the grandfather of Giles H. Alford.

Arba Alford was born in 1769, and when twenty-three years old married Eunice Case, a daughter of Deacon Hosea Case. She was born Aug. 20, 1771, and died July 27, 1846, outliving her husband by twenty-three years. They had the following children: Roman, born July 25, 1793; Lora, born Aug. 15, 1795; Chloe, born Dec. 19, 1798; Abigail, born January, 1801; Esther, born May 5, 1803; Eunice, born July 11, 1805; Arba, born Nov. 6, 1807; Mary, born July 1, 1810; and Alfred, born Sept. 15, 1812.

Roman Alford, the oldest member of the above family of children, was born at Barkhamsted, where he was married to Charlotte Case. Soon after his marriage he removed to Otis, Mass., where he went on a farm, which was his home for some thirty-five years. At the end of that period he returned to Barkhamsted, spending there the remainder of his life. He died Feb. 19, 1875. His wife, Charlotte Case, was born Sept. 3, 1794, and died Nov. 22, 1876. Both were buried at Pleasant Valley cemetery, in the town of Barkhamsted. Humphrey Case, the father of Charlotte, was born in 1762, and died in 1813; his wife, Freelove Harridon, was born in 1767, and died in 1829. To Roman Alford and his wife were born the following children: Case M., born Jan. 14, 1818, was a butcher and farmer of Pleasant Valley, Conn., where he died Nov. 22, 1885; Harriet C., born Oct. 23, 1819, married John Fairchild, and died in Otis, Mass., in 1845; Esther N., born June 10, 1825, married Grandison Wilder, and died in Painesville, Ohio, April 9, 1884; Giles Humphrey; Eunice M., born May 10, 1829, became the second wife of Obed Smith, of Norfolk, Conn., and died June 23, 1873; Abigail, born March 13, 1831, was the first wife of Obed Smith, of Norfolk, Conn.; Mary L., born Jan. 14, 1835, married Isaac Everett, and died May 13, 1901; Henry B., born March 19, 1837, became a merchant at Riverton, Conn., where he died May 20, 1864; and Everett B., born Jan. 16, 1842, was a butcher, at Riverton, Conn., where he died May 18, 1873. Roman Alford was prominent in the Congregational Church, in local affairs and in the State Militia, from which he derived the title of Capt. Alford. Standing two inches over six feet he was well proportioned, and was in his bearing and demeanor a "gentleman of the old school." His influence in the community was strong, and always exerted on the side of the right and true.

Giles Humphrey Alford was born in Otis, Mass. April 18, 1827, and received his education in the district school, which was at times attended by seventy pupils. In those days "work came first d school second," yet he was exceptionally favored, and was a student at the Westfield Normal where he prepared for teaching—an occupation upon which he entered at twenty-one, at Springfield, Mass., receiving twelve dollars a month and "boarding round" the district. At Windsor, Conn., his monthly wages of twenty-six dollars, including board, was considered fine pay for teaching. In 1851 Mr. Alford went to Riverton, Conn., to take position as clerk in the store of his uncle, Alfred Alford, who was extensively engaged in the furniture business at that point. At this time he made his first visit to Willimantic, part of his work being to deliver a load of chairs to a customer in that city. After a short time spent with his uncle, Mr. Alford bought out the Union Shoe Co., of Riverton, then comprising a general store, and this was his first business venture. Although he incurred a heavy load of debt, he pulled through, and became the sole owner of the establishment. During the first years of the Civil war Henry Alford cared for the store while Giles H. Alford was engaged in Virginia and Maryland as a sutler with Gen. McClellan's army in 1861 and 1862.

In 1862 Mr. Alford removed to Willimantic, Riverton not affording as broad a field as he desired. In company with his cousin, James Alford, he opened a grocery store on Main street, in the present location of Purinton & Reade, but the close confinement soon undermined their health, and both retired from the store, Giles H., exchanging his interest for a farm belonging to Chauncey Turner in Mansfield, to which point he removed at once. Farm life restored his health, and after about two years he was again strong and rugged. According to him he sold the farm and became a traveling salesman for the Upson Nut Co., of Unionville, Conn. He came into contact with machine manufacturers, and for eight years followed the road. During this time his family lived at Unionville, but later removed to Willimantic. It was also during this time that Mr. Alford bought the bankrupt hardware stock of Mr. Simpson, and put it in charge of his oldest son. Upon his retirement from the road he went into this business himself. C. N. Andrew was at one time a partner with him, and later bought his interest in that store. At a later period Mr. Alford opened the hardware store where he is found at the present time, in company with his son, the firm being G. H. Alford & Son. This son was Howard R. Alford, and on his death, his brother, Carl R., succeeded to his interest, and the firm is unchanged in its title.

Mr. Alford was married in Riverton, Nov. 13, 1854, to Miss Adeline C. Cadwell, who was born in Bloomfield, March 23, 1835, a daughter of Ira and Phoebe (Filer) Cadwell. Ira Cadwell was a farmer, and lived in Bloomfield, where he had a family of seven children, Mrs. Alford being his youngest child. He was a son of Pelatiah and Elizabeth (Hopkins) Cadwell. The latter was a widow, and a daughter of a family by the name of Skinner. Phoebe (Filer) Cadwell was a native of East Granby, and the daughter of Roger and Phoebe (Meacham) Filer, the latter a daughter of Barnabas and Margaret (Owen) Meacham. Barnabas Meacham was born in 1720, and died Oct. 15, 1812; he was a private in the Continental army. Roger Filer was a son of Roger Filer, Sr. (who was born in Windsor in 1743, and served in the Revolutionary war) and of Triphena Walcott Allyn (a widow at the time of her marriage to Mr. Filer). In the retreat from Long Island, with seven others Roger Filer, Sr., was captured, owing to a lack of boats; in the battle or in the retreat he lost a leg, and he died at New Haven, of smallpox, soon after being captured.

Mr. Alford is father to the following children: Howard Roman, born in Riverton, Conn., Aug. 18, 1856, died at Willimantic, where he was in business at one time, Sept. 11, 1893, leaving a widow, Jennie Dow, and children, May, Giles Howard and Marian Jennie; Adelaide Louise, born Aug. 31, 1865, graduated from the Willimantic high school, and is a very successful teacher; Maude E., born July 25, 1874, in Willimantic, is at home; and Carl R., born Aug. 13, 1878, is now in business with his father. Mr. Alford is a Democrat, and was first selectman in 1875, having charge of the building of the "horse shoe bridge" across the river on South Main street. For about five years in the latter '80s he was prosecuting attorney. Over forty-five years ago he united with the Masonic fraternity at New Hartford, and is now a member of the Masonic Veteran Association. At one time he was connected with the I. O. O. F., at Winsted, Conn., but has long ceased to be an active member of the order. When seventeen years of age he united with the Congregational Church, and in that church and Sunday-school he has always been an interested and earnest worker. For many years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school at Riverton, but in 1899 he declined further duty in that connection on account of his great age. Mr. Alford is a man whose long business career in Willimantic and elsewhere has been singularly free from criticism. His personal habits are exceptionally clean, and he has never sworn, smoked, chewed or drank. He is still hale and hearty, and is spending his last days in a peace and comfort that should always attend so useful and honorable a career as his.

EPHRAIM KINGSBURY TAFT, who was in his lifetime one of the most respected and useful members of the community of Stafford Springs, Tolland Co., Conn., was born in Webster, Mass., Jan. 7, 1834, and died Jan. 6, 1893, in Stafford Springs.

Evander Taft, the father of Ephraim K., was born in Uxbridge, Mass., Dec. 27, 1801, and died in Willington, Conn., March 7, 1863, having been in the employ of the Willington Glass factory for a number of years. Personally he was a man of quiet and unassuming habits and was much respected for his sterling worth and character. In early life he was a Whig, but became a Republican on the formation of that party. In religion he was a pronounced Methodist, and his good life cast no shame or discredit upon his faith. Evander Taft was married Feb. 14, 1827, to Lydia Kingsbury, who was born in Uxbridge, Mass., June 9, 1809, and died Aug. 16, 1867, in Stafford. To them were born the following children: Joanna, born April 26, 1830, who died July 1, 1867, unmarried; Ephraim K.; Evander, born July 6, 1836, in Webster, Mass., a plumber in Norwich, who married first, Sarah Corbin, of Willington, and second, Jennie Brigham, of Norwich; Ellen M., born July 14, 1846, who married Rev. S. O. Benton, and is living in New York city.

Ephraim K. Taft was born in Webster, Mass., and attended school at Willington, to which point his parents removed when he was quite young, and at Wilbraham Academy, which institution he left when he was about eighteen years old, to take a clerkship for William A. Foster, in his store on Stafford street. In his later youth he also clerked for Lyman W. Crane and Francis A. Harwood. In 1865 he purchased an interest in the dry goods store of James Medbery, the two doing business under the firm name of Medbery & Taft, and continuing together for some two years. At the end of that time Mr. Taft retired from the partnership, and started in business alone as a druggist, following this line until his death, and making a great success of the enterprise. Much of his knowledge of the drug business came from the instruction of his brother-in-law, Dr. Albert Field, a practicing physician, but he studied and experimented for himself, and his mastery of the drugs he sold came largely from his indefatigable energy and determination to know what he was doing.

Mr. Taft was a charter member of Winter Post, No. 42, G. A. R., of which he was chaplain at the time of his death. His military experience was gained with Co. D, 25th C. V. I., in which he enlisted Aug. 27, 1862, and was first sergeant. After making a gallant and creditable record, he was wounded at Irish Bend, La., April 14, 1863, and the effects of this wound necessitated his discharge, Aug. 26, of the same year. Mr. Taft was a very active and devoted member of the Methodist Church, of which he was steward and Sunday-school superintendent for many years. In his political relations he belonged to the Republican party but was not an office seeker in any sense of the word.

Mr. Taft was married April 27, 1866, to Frances Augusta Field, a daughter of Abizer and Asenath (Every) Field, of Hamden, N. Y. To this union were born: (1) Mary Field, born April 25, 1867, who on Aug. 15, 1892, married Francis Asbury Bagnall, superintendent of the city schools of Adams, Mass., and who has three children, Katherine, Frances and Margaret; (2) Ernest Kingsbury, born Jan. 4, 1870, who graduated from the local high school, in 1893 completed the course of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, and is now in charge of the store at Stafford. Mrs. Taft is also a licensed pharmacist.

DAY. The Days, to whom Miss Louisa E. Day of Thompson, Windham county, belongs, is an old family of the town of Killingly. It has been handed down by tradition that the family originally came from Wales, which is undoubtedly correct. In a book of Heraldry containing Arms of William Day, B. D. Provost of Eton College, and Dean of Windsor, confirmed by William Flower, Norroy, on Oct. 21, 1582, in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, he is said to be descended from the Dees of Wales, being a younger son of Richard Day, who was a son of Nicholas Day, son of John Dee (called in English Daye), son of Morgan Dee a Welshman. Dee signifies, it is said, dark or dingy and was the name of a small river in Wales, and was applied to some ancestor living on its banks. In time the name Dee came to be written as descended, Daye or Day.

Robert Day, the emigrant of 1635, of Ipswich, England, born in 1605, came to America in the ship "Hopewell," and settled in Ipswich, Mass. He was made a freeman in 1641, and he died in September, 1683. By his wife, Hannah, he had five children: John, born in 1641; Thomas, born in 1643; Hannah, born in 1645, married Robert Lord; Sarah, born in 1647, married David Fiske; and James, born in 1649, married Susan Ayres, and died in 1690.

The line of descent is through James Day, born in 1649; his son Robert, born Jan. 17, 1684 (married, first, April 4, 1706, Elizabeth Dresser, and second, in 1736, Susan McKee), who moved to Killingly in 1717, and settled on the South Whetstone brook; and James, who was drowned Dec. 25, 1782, when sixty-six years of age. James Day who owned some 3,300 acres of land in Killingly and was the founder of the village of Dayville, married Mary Parkhurst, of Plainfield, Conn., who died July 28, 1818, at ninety-seven years of age. He and his wife are buried in the old Day cemetery, and a marble slab marks the graves of both. To James and Mary Day were born children as follows: Nathan, born July 28, 1743, Granville, N. Y.; Jonathan, born March 12, 1745, Killingly, Conn.; Elias, born Sept. 25, 1750, Woodstock, Conn.; Mary, born March 21, 1753, married Nathaniel Maize; Thomas, born June 9, 1755, Thompson, Conn.; John, born March 12, 1757, Killingly, Conn.; James, born Aug. 23, 1758, Killingly, Conn.; Asa, born July 23, 1760, Killingly, Conn.; and David, born July 20, 1762, Killingly, Conn. James Day was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and the following is a copy of the certified records of his services:

Thomas Day, son of James, was born June 9, 1755. He married, April 13, 1783, Susannah Buck, daughter of Samuel and Hannah Buck, of one of the old families of Killingly, who was born June 7, 1763. Thomas Day was a deacon in the Brandy Hill Baptist Church, of Thompson, and "a much esteemed deacon," and he and his wife were very worthy people. During the war of the Revolution Thomas Day served under Capt. Crosby. His death occurred July 15, 1830, and he was buried in West Thompson cemetery, West Thompson. The following children were born to Thomas Day and his wife: Waity, born April 19, 1784, married Obadiah Stone, Sept. 23, 1810, and died in Thompson, Sept. 14, 1854; James, born Aug. 3, 1785, married Nancy Ballard, Oct. 21, 1810, and died in Thompson, Sept. 17, 1824; William, born Dec. 29, 1786, married Esther Davis, of Thompson, Feb. 24, 1811, and died in Mohawk, N. Y., July 14, 1885; Thomas Jefferson, born June 14, 1790, married Lydia Clemmons, April 15, 1825, and died at Buffalo, N. Y., June 15, 1873; David, born June 12, 1792, is mentioned below; Susan, born April 18, 1794, married Ransom Seamans, March 16, 1816, and died in Schroon Lake, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1876; Joseph, born May 19, 1796, married Mary Blaisdell, Aug. 3, 1837, and died in Upper Chippewa, Canada, Aug. 27, 1872; and George Washington, born March 10, 1801, married Sarah H. Morse, March 20, 1823, and died June 14, 1885.

DAVID DAY, father of Miss Louisa E. Day, attended school in Thompson, where his life was spent as a farmer and stockman. He purchased the Charles Crosby farm, a tract of 100 acres, on which property he carried on general farming and made many improvements, making of it one of the finest farms in that section of the country. It is now owned by J. E. Doane. David Day died Dec. 2, 1873, and was buried in the West Thompson cemetery. On Dec. 13, 1814, he married, for his first wife, Betsey Cady, daughter of Nedabiah Cady, of Reading, Vt., born Dec. 21, 1791, died Jan. 16, 1833; she was buried in the West Thompson cemetery. One child came to this union, Caroline Elizabeth, born in October, 1825, who died Aug. 3, 1826. Mr. Day married for his second wife Miss Louisa Cady, daughter of James and Rosanna (Cutler) Cady, of Killingly, and a granddaughter of Joseph Cady, of Killingly, the Cadys being one of the old families. She was born in Killingly, Feb. 9, 1801, and died June 10, 1893, at the ripe age of ninety-two years. Two children came to Mr. and Mrs. Day: Louisa Elizabeth, born May 11, 1836, and David Elmer, born Dec. 21, 1838. The latter, who died Nov. 21, 1900, is buried in the same cemetery as his father, and at the time of his death was engaged in farming the old homestead, being a hard-working man, highly respected. In his politics he was a Republican, and in all the relations of life he endeavored to live up to the teaching of the Golden Rule. David Day, the father, participated in the war of 1812, and was at New London. In his political faith he was a Whig, and upon the formation of the party became a staunch Republican. He was a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and carried out in his life the doctrines of the faith in which he died, being a loving husband, a kind father, a true and loyal friend, an exemplary citizen and a man whose life was a benefaction to the community in which he lived. Mr. Day inherited from his father a small sum only, but in his lifetime accumulated a large property. He was a man of superior judgment in business matters, and wholly self-made. He was not a public man in any sense, but was universally esteemed for his genuine worth.

MISS LOUISA E. DAY, the last of her family, is a lady highly respected by all who know her. While she still retains her home in Thompson, having a life interest in the old home, in which she has spent her life, she spends her summers at different pleasant resorts on the coast. Miss Day understands thoroughly the management of her large wealth, and, having made safe and wise investments, she can rest secure in the enjoyment of her ample income. A kind-hearted lady, her charities are many, but she is one of those who prefer to give in secret and not to sound her benefactions to the world, and her friends are many, for she possesses the virtues which attract people to her and inspire affection.

EDDY. The Eddy family of Windham county are descendants of William Eddy, A. M., Vicar of the Church of St. Dunstan, of the town of Cranbrook, County of Kent, England, for twenty-seven years. All that is known of his family is what is entered upon the church record in his own hand writing: That he was born in Bristol, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; that he was curate of the church some eight years before becoming vicar. On, or in, the marriage records he records the marriage of William Eddy, Vicar, to Mary Fosten, virgin, Nov. 20, 1587. There were ten children, five sons and five daughters.

Although born and reared in the Episcopal faith, two of his sons, John and Samuel, seemed to have early imbibed the Puritan principles, and they sailed from London to America Aug. 10, 1630, in the ship "Handmaid," Capt. John Grant, master. They arrived at Plymouth, Mass., Oct. 29, 1630, after being twelve weeks at sea. They were spoken of by Gov. Winthrop as two gentlemen passengers. Soon after their arrival they united with the Puritan Church, took the oath, and became freemen in the Colony. John, the oldest, was born in March, 1597, and died Oct. 12, 1684. He was thirty-four years old when he came to Plymouth, and he settled at Watertown. Samuel was twelve years younger; he was born in May, 1608, and died in 1685. He was twenty-two when he left England. They were both married in England, and nothing is known of their wives but that John's was named Amy and Samuel's Elizabeth. Samuel settled in Middleboro, Mass. He had five children, four sons and one daughter, Hanna.

Zachariah Eddy, second son of Samuel, was born in 1639, and died Sept. 4, 1718. He was a farmer and owned land in Middleboro and Swansea. At an early age he was bound out by his parents to John Brown, a shipwright of Rehoboth, until he was twenty-one. On May 7, 1663, he married Alice Paddock.

Zachariah Eddy (2), son of Zachariah, born April 10, 1664, in Middleboro, Mass., married, Feb. 13, 1683, Mercy Baker, of Swansea, and became the father of six children. He moved to Providence, R. I., in 1707. He also lived in Glocester, R. I., was a large land owner there, and his will is on the records there.

Zachariah Eddy (3), the fourth son of Zachariah (2), was born in Swansea, moved to Providence in 1707, and from there to Glocester, where he died. He had seven children.

Samuel Eddy, the first child of Zachariah (3), married, on Sept. 4, 1730, Deborah Lewis; she belonged in the vicinity of Providence, probably Johnston. Her parents were well-to-do, and she was well educated for the times and was noted as a writer of both prose and poetry. They were the parents of three children: Abigail (no record) probably died young; Lewis, born May 28, 1735, inherited the literary talents of his mother, was a good scholar, and became insane from too close application to his writing; and Samuel, born June 17, 1736, died Aug. 1, 1804.

Samuel Eddy (2), was a blacksmith, and owned a farm in Glocester (now Burrillville). On Buck Hill, near the pond called Eddy pond (now Wakefield pond), he carried on quite a trade in repairing and making farm implements. He also conducted a saw and grist mill. In 1790 he purchased land of Stephen Brown on the Connecticut side of the line in Thompson. The house where he died stands quite a number of feet in Thompson. About thirty rods southwest of the house, on a sunny knoll on the Burrillville side, is the burying ground known to this day as the old Eddy burying-ground. In 1758 Samuel Eddy married Peggy McDonald, who was born Feb. 27, 1739. Of her family there is not much known, but she was the daughter of an officer in the British army, who was killed in the French and Indian war; there was a brother, who served in the Revolutionary war and was killed on Lake Champlain (tradition says he was a commissioned officer, but there is no record). She also had a sister (name unknown) who married, and lived either in Southfield or Scituate. She was probably a tailoress, and according to the times went to the homes of her patrons, as she taught two of her girls to cut and make garments. Her children spoke of her in their old age with a loving reverence, as a devoted wife and mother. Husband and children made her world, and for them she toiled cheerfully, early and late, at the wheel and the loom. When in the year 1794, death took away two of her children—Annie, aged eleven years, and her namesake, Peggy, aged twenty from whom she was receiving so much help and companionship—she took up the cares of the home laying aside her own grief to comfort others. After the death of her husband, she kept the home and had her daughter, Levina, Mrs. Joy, live with her a number of years. Of her other children:

Deborah Eddy, the eldest, born Jan. 13, 1759, died at the age of ten years.

Lewis Eddy, second child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born Jan. 28, 1760, and died at the age of six years.

Essec Eddy, third child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), born May 27, 1762, was by trade a blacksmith, and married Annie Cutler moved to New York, not far from the falls of Niagara, and died in August, 1845, at Boston, N. Y.

Barrack Eddy, fourth child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born April 21, 1765. A short time after the birth of Barrack, the father moved to Nova Scotia, returning after the commencement of the war of the Revolution. The record of his going and returning is lost. Some claim that Barrack was born there, others that he was three years old when his father moved there. In 1794 Barrack Eddy married Rebecca Blackmar, daughter of Ezekiel Blackmar, of Burrillville. Soon after his marriage he bought the property now owned and occupied by Frank Davis, in East Putnam, of Azariah Cutler; the deed is dated June 28, 1794. In 1802 he purchased land adjoining his, of Eleazer Bowen. He was a blacksmith by trade, and carried on the business there in connection with a saw and grist mill. A man of strong physique, he was a good workman, and was an obliging and kind neighbor. All of his children but one were born at East Putnam. In the spring of 1815 he sold his property there, and purchased, on April 26, 1815, the farm, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying in January, 1857, at the age of ninety-two, lacking but two months of being ninety-three years of age, retaining his faculties in a wonderful manner until two years before his death. After moving to the place where he died, he built a blacksmith shop, and worked at his trade for a number of years, until the shoeing and handling of horses and oxen became too hard for him. After that he did small jobs of repairing, going often to help Ebenezer Talbot, a wheelwright living at and owning the place now owned by his grandson, George E. Talbot, the florist. Elisha W. Brown, a carriage builder, lived about the same distance on the eastern boundary line of his farm, and he often helped him to set tires and do any nice parts of the iron work. Being a fine mechanic and a great worker, he always enjoyed helping them, after he gave up work entirely in his own shop. On the day he was eighty years old he set four sets of tires for Mr. Brown, walking there and back. He was very proud of that day's record, often speaking of it, and telling his grandchildren, what a wonderful thing it was, that a man eighty years old could do it. He was a great reader, always keeping up with the times. He never united with any church, but adhered strictly to the Puritan faith of his fathers, going to the Church on Killingly Hill, and training his children to do the same. He was a kind father and good husband. His wife died sixteen years before his own demise, but he never ceased to mourn her loss, and as the years passed missed her more than at first. She went from home to visit her brother, was taken sick and died, and it always grieved him to think she died away from home. They are buried in East Putnam near the West Gloucester line. They had eight children: (1) George, born in 1794, died of consumption, in 1818, unmarried. (2) Williard, born in 1796, died in 1877. In 1820, he married Ruth Bushee, of Killingly, and they had three children: George, who died in June, 1883, in North Providence; and Williard Sanford and Albert Lewis, both living in Providence at the present time. (3) Waldo, born Sept. 25, 1803, died July 12, 1883. In his early years he was clerk in a store at Pawtucket, but later he returned to the homestead to care for his parents in their declining years. He was a member of the old Killingly Hill Society, and a constant attendant at that place of worship. Among his papers there is a receipt from Andrew Leavans, for $25 to pay for "a pew, sold to Waldo Eddy, June 13, 1831." The last twenty-five years of his life he went to the Putnam Baptist Church, sometimes to the Advent, but never united with either. On Dec. 23, 1832, he was married to Sarah Knight Seaman, who was born Sept. 28, 1802, daughter of Darius and Susannah Bartlett Seaman; she died Oct. 27, 1860. They had three children: Susan Keziah, who married Samuel Brown, son of Lemual and Phebe Hall Brown, in June, 1863, lived in Hammond, Wis., a number of years, moving from there to Luverne, Minn.; she died Oct. 15, 1896, and her remains were brought East at her request, and laid away in the family lot in Grove Street cemetery, in Putnam; Samuel Brown is living in Florida at the present time. William Waldo, second in the family of Waldo and Sarah Eddy, married Nancy F., daughter of George and Caroline Bradley Blanchard of Killingly, Feb. 28, 1865, and on Sept. 25, 1871, moved to Marysville, Kan.; they have six children. Sarah Frances, youngest child of Waldo and Sarah Eddy, married Moses Lyman, son of Henry Newell and Lucy Butterfield Aldrich, of West Dummerston, Vt., Feb. 8, 1887. They lived in Putnam on the homestead, making the third generation that have owned and occupied the same—Barrack gave it to his son Waldo, and at his death, it came by wish of her father, brother and sister, into the possession of Mrs. Aldrich. Mr. Aldrich is a small fruit grower, making strawberries his specialty, but grows other fruits in connection; a few years ago he purchased a tract of land above the farm for flowage purposes, and has quite a system of irrigation in progress. They are members of the Baptist Church at Putnam. They have no children. (4) Mary lived most of her life in Providence, R. I., and her sister (8) Patience, the youngest child in the family, lived with her; they owned a good home on Fountain street. Patience died first, Mary outliving her several years, and leaving at her death quite a property. They were both unmarried and are buried in Pawtucket, R. I. (5) John, who was a machinist, lived at his death in Bellingham, Mass., where he owned a small farm. He by his wife Alvira had a large family. (6) Rebecca died in childhood. (7) Samuel married Eliza Bly, and owned a farm in Coventry, R. I., where he died, and both he and his wife are buried there; they had six children.

John Eddy, the fifth child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born May 30, 1767, and died April 11, 1820. There is but very little record of him. He bought land of Bradley Green, of Thompson, Jan. 18, 1794, and sold it to Ebenezer Wakefield March 25, 1802, two years before the death of his father. He must have bought land of his father on the Burrillville side, as the administrator deed dated Feb. 29, 1816, speaks of land sold to John and to Essec Eddy by the "said Samuel Eddy, deceased." No record of whom he married is at present found. Tradition says he settled in Woodstock, Conn.

Alice Eddy, sixth child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born Jan. 1, 1770, and died at the age of eighty-three. She married Silas Smith, of Smithfield, R. I. About the year of 1791 he bought the place now owned by Miss Ann Cunningham, in Thompson. They had no children, of their own, but reared Samuel and Esther, children of Mrs. Smith's sister, Mrs. Joy. Samuel married Lucena Sargent, of Thompson; both are deceased, and are buried in the West Thompson cemetery. They had several children. Esther married Eshon White, of West Thompson, and they had one daughter, Julia A., who married William H. Mansfield, of Webster; her two sons Albert L. and William H. live in Putnam. Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield are buried in Grove street cemetery.

Samuel Eddy (3), seventh child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born March 6, 1772, and died Aug. 5, 1850. By trade he was a blacksmith (each of the boys seemed to have learned the trade of their father), and he set up his shop and started business in Glocester. The first record of him is the paying of $5.70 to Daniel Davis, June 4, 1798, for a small piece of land on which to place his forge. Three years after he bought a farm of Joseph Page, the deed bearing the date of Dec. 12, 1801, and says "for the sum of five hundred and twenty-five good silver dollars, now in hand, I relinquish," etc.; signed Joseph Page, Freeloze Page. The sum paid in good silver dollars must have been of his own earning, as his father was living at that time. For his first wife he married Mary Saunders, of Glocester. They had five children: (1) Nancy married an Ormsbee, for her first husband, and they had one child, Maria (who married John Ross, and both are deceased); she afterward married Ebenezer Green, and they had one son, Marvin, who died two years ago; they are all buried in East Putnam cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Green owned the place in Quadric, now owned by Frank Kies. (2) Lydia married Lyman Pearsons, and had several children, only one of whom is living in the county: Laura, who married Hiram Munyan, and lives on a farm in East Putnam, formerly called the Miller Bowen farm, which was purchased by Mr. Munyan several years before his decease. Mr. and Mrs. Munyan had two sons and one daughter living in the county: Jerome, living with his mother; Ira, working with a steam saw mill; and Mary, married to Joseph Towne, of Buck Hill, Thompson, and the mother of two children. (3) Orra Jane married John Buchanan; they owned a farm between Quadric four corners and Brandy Hill. They had seven children, only one of whom is living in Windham county, Joseph, on the homestead. (4) Sarah Alzada married Marvin Davis, and they lived in Providence the last years of their life. They had three children: Mary Jane, who married William Covil, a prominent citizen in the north end of the city; Schuyler, who carried on the grocery business, and whose wife's name was Esther; and Jerome, who died unmarried. Mr. and Mrs. Davis and son Jerome are buried in East Putnam. (5) Aseph Eddy was a machinist, and owned the place in Quadric now owned and occupied by Oscar Ross. He and his wife both died there. He married Mary Burton, and their one son, Raymond, who is a painter, living in Putnam, married Sarah F. Randal, and has one son, Charles, who married Cora Chaffee, daughter of David and Diantha Bosworth Chaffee. They lived with his parents. After the death of his first wife, Samuel Eddy (3) married in 1817, Almira Talbot, and their five children were: (1) Samuel married Nancy Burlingame, and both are deceased. (2) Polly married Monroe Warren, and they, too, are both deceased. (3) Almira married Ervin Munyan, and they had two children, Marcus (a young man giving good promise of a useful Christian manhood, who died at the age of twenty-one) and Calvin Monroe. The latter lives on the farm owned by his father which came to him at his decease. He is a man held in high esteem for his business integrity and Christian character. He is deacon of the Central Baptist Church, of Thompson, and active in all that concerns the welfare of the church. In March, 1873, he married Ella J. Bates, youngest daughter of Deacon Welcome and Charlotte Gleason Bates, and they have two children, Florence (who married, May 19, 1899, Henry A. Converse, son of James and Mattie Lincoln Converse, of Thompson, and has one child, Hazel M.) and Claude (who married, Sept. 28, 1898, Ada E. Brown, of Harwinton, and has three children, Gladys E., Merrill C. and Hermon B., and they all live with his parents). (4) John married, in 1848, Julia Dagget, of Killingly, and they had four children, of whom two live in Windham county. Almira married Norton Randal, of Woonsocket, R. I., and has one son. Emma, the eldest child, married Charles Bradway, of Eastford, Conn., now of Putnam, where he has a grocery store on School street, and is prominent in the business of the town, being considered one of the solid men of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Bradway have four children: Warren, in business with his father, married Caroline, daughter of Henry and Ellen Bixby Cady, and has one child; Gertrude married James A. Houghton, a painter, living in Putnam, and they have one child; and Luella and Mattie live with their parents on School street. Clara, youngest child of John and Julia (Dagget) Eddy, lives with her mother; she was employed eighteen years in the greenhouse of R. F. Buxton, Pascoag, R. I. Mrs. Julia Eddy is much respected by all who know her. Mr. Eddy married for his second wife Mrs. Jane Culley, and they had four children: Fred, a young man of blemished character respected by all who knew him, married Mattie, daughter of Nathan and Ellen Ballard Chase, and died five years after his marriage, leaving a widow and two children. John died young, respected and beloved in the community where he lived. Alice married Thomas Hale, of Quadic, a conductor on one of the trains running through Putnam, and they have one child, Eddy. John Eddy died Sept. 14, 1902. He is buried at East Putnam. He was a blacksmith. (5) Lucine married Samuel Basto, son of George and Hannah Hayward Basto, of Killingly, March 26, 1854. He is a farmer and lives on the farm owned by the Basto family for three generations. He is quite an extensive land owner in Putnam, and also owns the farm in Quadic, which Mrs. Basto's father owned at the time of his decease.

Peggy Eddy, eighth child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born Jan. 21, 1774, and she died Aug. 3, 1794, aged twenty years.

Levina Eddy, ninth child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), born Feb. 12, 1776, died June 13, 1850. She married, in 1794-95, a Mr. Joy. They lived on Buck Hill with her father. After his death Mrs. Eddy kept the home for a number of years. About 1818 or 1819 she went to live with her daughter Alice, Mrs. Smith, remaining with them until her death in 1822. Soon after the farm was sold and the old home broken up. Mr. and Mrs. Joy removed to the southwestern part of New York, where they lived to a good old age. They are buried in that vicinity. Their descendants are living there and in Pennsylvania.

Asel Eddy, tenth child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), born Dec. 5, 1778, at Buck Hill, died June 13, 1850. On June 10, 1816, he married Lucy Mowery, and soon after his marriage he went to New York and from there to Pennsylvania, presumably to Lackawanna county, as several families went to that vicinity from Thompson. His wife was born Nov. 4, 1790, and died April 19, 1855. They had several children.

Patience Eddy, eleventh child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), born July 19, 1781, died June 1, 1821. She was a tailoress and she made her home with her sister Alice after her mother went there to live. She died there and is buried in West Thompson beside her father and mother.

Anna Eddy, twelfth and youngest child of Samuel (2) and Peggy (McDonald), was born Aug. 24, 1783, and she died March 27, 1794.

And parted thus, they rest,
Who played beneath the same green tree,
Whose voices mingled as they prayed
Around one parent knee.

In conclusion it does not seem amiss to copy a few lines from R. H. Eddy, that "the descendants of Rev. William Eddy, in this country, may justly feel proud of this 'Genealogical Tree,' whose trunk had piety, virtue and intelligence for its roots, and whose branches have generally been fruitful in all that leads to worth and responsibility, if not to great wealth and very exalted station."

CAPT. JOHN SEAMAN, of Norfolk, England, landed at Salem, 1643, and moved to Long Island, 1647 (Hempstead), where in 1660 he purchased 15,000 acres of land from the Indians. He raised a family of eight sons and eight daughters, and he died in 1695. The old homestead still remains in the family, with a small portion of the land. The name is spelled variously, Seaman, Seamans, Siemon, Seamon, Simmons. The name was originally Danish and meant "a man of the sea." The heraldic Seaman arms, "Azure for a crest—a sea horse, or hippocampus."

When he died the farm was sold and Horace purchased the house now owned and occupied by Edgar Clarke, on Elm street, in Putnam, where he lived until his sudden death from heart disease, June 18, 1863. When the town of Putnam was established, he was chosen judge of the probate court, an office he held up to the time of his death. WILLIAM F. HALL. The Hall family in Plainfield, Windham county, of which William F. and Henry Hall are the oldest surviving members, is one of the early settled and representative families of that town. The name is found among the earliest Colonial annals, and tradition has it that several Hall brothers came from England, three settling in Massachusetts, and the others in Connecticut. The Hall family in Plainfield is counted among the descendants of the Massachusetts settlers.

Samuel Hall, the first of the family to locate here according to the Plainfield records, on Jan. 5, 1719, bought land in Connecticut bordering on Moosup pond, for which he paid his uncle, John Hall, the sum of £90. Soon after he bought other tracts in that neighborhood, made while he was still a resident of Middlesex county, Mass. Subsequently he moved to Plainfield. There are on record two children that were born to him, John and Stephen. Samuel Hall and members of other branches of the family owned at one time the greater part of the land lying between Snake Meadow brook and the Quinebaug river, in Plainfield. Samuel Hall, the first of the family in Plainfield, was married in Middlesex county, Mass., to Elizabeth, who died in Plainfield Nov. 18, 1776, aged eighty-two years. He died Nov. 5, 1770, at the age of seventy-eight years. Both are buried in the old cemetery in Plainfield.

John Hall, son of Samuel, was born in Massachusetts, and died in Plainfield in 1808. He married Hannah Williams, of Sterling, Conn., and had three sons: (1) John (2) who was born in July, 1761, and died in 1826, was twice married. His first wife was a Kennedy, of Plainfield, by whom he had three children, Jeremiah, Fannie and Selina. By his second wife he had Celia, Ruth, John W., Mary Ann, James A., Julia Ann, James A. (2), George W., Caleb S., Abby, Betsy and Emily. (2) Squire married a Peck of Rhode Island, and had three children, Peleg, Hannah and Israel. (3) William was born in Plainfield, and lived for a time in Sterling. Later in life he removed to East Killingly, where he resided until his death, which occurred in 1839, while he was making a trip to mill in a wagon, and was caused by a shock. All his life he was a farmer. Nabby Hyde, his wife, was born at Sterling, Conn., and their children were Joseph, Clarissa, Harry, Noah, Ebenezer (mentioned elsewhere as the father of Esek Hall), Lucina, Susanna, Betsy, Lydia and Martha. The youngest of these was the mother of Moses A. Linnell, of Moosup.

John Hall was a life-time resident of Plainfield, where he was engaged in farming, and owned a number of slaves, many of whom were liberated through his own and his wife's benevolence. They never sold one, and some of the descendants of these slaves are still residents of Windham county. Mrs. Hall possessed natural healing gifts and was a doctor of ability for her time. In the fall of the year it was her custom to send slaves to search the country for all kinds of herbs, and the enormous stock which was to carry her through the winter, and bring relief to hundreds of sufferers, was truly amazing.

Stephen Hall, son of Samuel, was born in Massachusetts in 1719, and came with his parents to Plainfield, Conn. Here he married Hester (or Esther, as it is engraved on her tombstone Lennard, in March, 1748. She died July 13, 1797, at the age of sixty-seven. He died April 1, 1818, at the age of ninety-nine. Both were interred in the old Plainfield cemetery. To them were born, according to the town records: Stephen, Jr., the grandfather of William F. Hall, July 6, 1749; Lucy, Nov. 18, 1750; Sarah, Jan. 8, 1756; Hester, Nov. 3, 1757.

Stephen Hall, Jr., was a lifetime resident of Plainfield, and had his home in the eastern part of the town, where he was engaged in farming. For a time he served in the war of the Revolution, holding commission as a captain. His death occurred Feb. 6, 1814, in his sixty-fifth year. His first wife died May 24, 1790, at the age of forty-three, and his second wife, Fannie, passed away

July 10, 1849, at the age of eighty-three. William Hall and his sister, Sally, who married Douglas Parks, and moved to the town of Picher, Oneida Co., N. Y., were the only children born to the first marriage of Stephen Hall, Jr. To his second marriage were born: Abby, who married John Gordon; Esther, who married James Wilson; Lydia, who married Joseph Lathrop; Olive, who married Hezekiah French; Eliza, who died unmarried; Polly, who married James Spencer; Otis, who lived in Sterling, and later moved to Jewett City; Leonard, who died in Voluntown, Conn., leaving a family; and Calvin, who moved West.

William Hall was born in Plainfield in 1776, and when a young man taught the local school for a year or more, and was for a time a teacher in the Plainfield Academy. Well known throughout the county, he took an active part in political affairs, and for sixteen years served as deputy sheriff, a part of that time being during the war of 1812. He collected the war taxes of 1812-14, covering the eastern portion of the State, and carrying the specie with him on horseback in saddle-bags. In politics he was a Democrat of the old type. A small property in Stone Hill belonged to him, and when not engaged in public life he followed farming. He died in Plainfield June 16, 1861. Ruth Davis, his wife, was a daughter of David Davis, of Plainfield, and died Nov. 27, 1848, at the age of seventy years. To William and Ruth came the following named children: (1) George, born July 30, 1811, died Jan. 15, 1813. (2) Edward Perry, born Oct. 28, 1812, died Nov. 18, 1891. He married Elizabeth R. Comstock, who was born July 27, 1827, and died April 9, 1900. They lived in Plainfield. (3) Catherine Lucretia, born Aug. 28, 1814, married Joseph Dean. (4) Stephen, born Feb. 23, 1816, died in 1887, in Moosup, where for a number of years he had been a teacher in a district school, and had later presided over a private school of more than local reputation. He married Mary Westcott, by whom he had eight children, several of whom are still residents of Moosup. (5) Henry, who is mentioned elsewhere, was born April 19, 1818. (6) William F., whose name introduces this article, was born March 13, 1820. (7) Philip Davis, born June 8, 1822, lives at North Smithfield, R. I., and is unmarried. He served in the war of the Rebellion.

Capt. William F. Hall was born in Plainfield, and, like many boys of his generation, his schooling was confined to a few winter months' attendance at the Green Hollow and Stone Hill District schools. His boyhood and youth were spent on the parental estate, and he became a practical farmer. At the age of twenty-eight he went to Jewett City, where he had charge of a farm. At Slatersville, R. I., he had charge of an extensive farm belonging to J. and W. Slater, where he had twenty men under his direction, and as outside agent for the firm was very faithful and efficient. After ten years he had his first release from the onerous cares of this position, and, returning to Plainfield, purchased the Judge Eaton place, which was his home for five years. At the end of that time he returned to Slatersville to resume his position as agent for Slater Brothers, and for nine years acted as their capable and trusted representative. In 1874 he bought the Andrews farm, which was his home for ten years, when he removed to his present home on Plainfield street.

When he was a young man Mr. Hall was a Whig, sided for a time with the "Know Nothings," and in 1856 became a Republican, though largely taking an independent stand in all political matters. He has served his town in various offices, and has been selectman, constable, and member of the school committee. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are both members of the Plainfield Congregational Church, and he belongs to the Society Committee.

Capt. Hall was married, March 28, 1851, to Abby T. Shepherd, and to this union came: (1) William H., born Feb. 13, 1852, married Frances Mason; for twenty-five years has been in the jewelry business at Attleboro, Mass. (2) Ruth A., born Dec. 28, 1860, lives at home. (3) Edward, born Nov. 29, 1867, is a farmer on Bradford Hill, in Plainfield; he married Evalyn Harvey, by whom he has had four children: Ruth Harvey, Henrietta Catherine, William Francis, and Evalyn Abby.

WILLIAM H. YEOMANS, one of the representative men of the town of Columbia, Tolland county, descends from an old Colonial family.

The first of the name recorded in America was (I) Edward Yeomans, whose marriage to Mary Button, Dec. 6, 1652, is on record at Haverhill, Mass. They had children as follows: Samuel, born Sept. 1, 1655, who died Sept. 1, 1704; Thomas, born Dec. 6, 1657; Edward, Feb. 6, 1663; and three daughters. The family then removed to Stonington, Conn., where the following were born: Henry, Jan. 15, 1669; and John, April 18, 1670. Edward Yeomans was voted an inhabitant of Stonington July 24, 1672.

(II) Samuel Yeomans was married Oct. 19, 1684, to Mary Ellis, and among their children were: Samuel, born Oct. 25, 1688; Edward, March 28, 1690, who died June 16, 1758; Jonathan, May 25, 1693; and Silas, Feb. 15, 1695.

(III) Edward Yeomans was married Sept. 5, 1716, to Thankful Bidwell, and had this family: Giles, born May 18, 1719, who died July 8, 1799; Molly; Sarah; Hannah; Thankful; Moses, the great-grandfather of our subject; and Daniel.

(IV) Moses Yeomans married March 22, 1761, Esther Chesbrough, and they had this family: John, born Aug. 30, 1762, who served in the war of the Revolution, and died on the prison ship "Jersey;" Esther, March 16, 1764; Lydia, April 14, 1766; Amos, May 24, 1768; David, July 1, 1770, who became the grandfather of William H.;

Annie, Aug. 11, 1772; Polly, Sept. 15, 1775; and Keturah, Oct. 10, 1778, who died Jan. 20, 1786.

(V) David Yeomans was married Nov. 4, 1801, to Sally Little, and to them were born: John S., born Sept. 27, 1802, who died Oct. 16, 1878; William A., born June 14, 1805, who died Jan. 18, 1846; Sarah, born Sept. 9, 1810, who died Oct. 25, 1842; Cynthia, born Aug. 4, 1817, who died Feb. 10, 1903.

(VI) John S. Yeomans was married Oct. 14, 1830, to Sophia C. Lyman, and their children were: Sophia C., born June 30, 1831, unmarried and residing in Columbia; and William Henry, born July 14, 1835. The settlement of the Yeomans family in Columbia dates back to David Yeomans, the father of John S., who came there from Stonington, Conn., located on Pine street, married in the town, and successfully engaged in farming, always upholding the principles of Democracy. On this Pine street farm, John S. was born. He attended the Pine street school, and as he grew to manhood he learned the trade of carpenter and builder, and was very active in public affairs. In addition to holding all the local offices, he was school visitor and justice of the peace for a number of years, and principal trial justice of the town. Being an ardent Democrat he was elected on that ticket as Senator in 1853, and made a record of which his family may well be proud. Prior to this, in 1840, and again in 1851, he represented the town in the State Legislature. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Congregational Church.

(VII) William H. Yeomans was also born on the Pine street farm, and there received his early education, but later attended the private school conducted by Rev. James K. Hazen, D. D., a graduate of Williams College, but afterward located at Richmond, Va., and now deceased. After attaining manhood, Mr. Yeomans conducted a general store at the Centre with great success, early displaying considerable business ability and keen aptitude for business affairs. In addition to the duties imposed upon him by his store, Mr. Yeomans devoted much attention to surveying and did some farming. His present farm, one of the finest in the town of Columbia, is the old homestead on Pine street, from which Mr. Yeomans removed several years ago, to his present handsome home on Main street, Columbia.

On Oct. 15, 1863, Mr. Yeomans was married to Mary E. Babcock, of Coventry, and to this union have been born two children: John B., born Jan. 1, 1866, who died Aug. 16, 1874; Howard W., born March 16, 1870, secretary and director of the Bishop & Babcock Manufacturing Co., of Cleveland, Ohio.

Mrs. Yeomans was a daughter of the late William Babcock and his wife, Esther Elizabeth (Loomis), also deceased, of South Coventry, and was the eldest of their three children, the others being: Will-

Wm H Geomans

am A., who was killed by falling over a precipice while hunting in Montana, and who amassed a fortune as a member of the Bishop & Babcock Manufacturing Co., of Cleveland, Ohio; and Ellen E., who first married Irving A. Spaulding, of Coventry, and second, J. V. B. Prince, of Brooklyn, New York.

In the paternal line Mrs. Yeomans is descended from Jonathan Babcock, one of the first settlers of that part of the ancient town of Windham, which is now the city of Willimantic. Jonathan Babcock is credited by the late William L. Weaver, with being the probable second settler on the site of Willimantic. He bought land there Sept. 15, 1709, and was then referred to as of Lebanon. He was twice married, taking for his second wife Mary Heberd, and he became the common ancestor of nearly all the Coventry and Mansfield Babcocks, who were quite numerous. Several of the children of Jonathan Babcock settled in Coventry, whither he himself removed, and there died.

In the maternal line Mrs. Yeomans is a descendant in the tenth generation from Joseph Loomis, a wool draper of Braintree, England, who came in 1638 in the ship "Susan and Ellen," to Boston and thence to Windsor, Conn. From him her lineage is through Joseph and Mary (Chauncey), Deacon John and Elizabeth (Scott), Thomas and Sarah (White), Ensign John and Martha (Osborn), Timothy and Ann (Taylor), Dan and Sarah (Field), Timothy (2) and Tizah (Badger) and Esther Elizabeth (Loomis) Babcock.

Of the family on Mr. Yeomans' maternal side, we have the following:

Chester Lyman was born Nov. 11, 1784, and he died March 16, 1832. He was married Nov. 12, 1807, to Sophia West, who was born April 26, 1786, daughter of Samuel West, and who died Nov. 14, 1870. Both were professors of religion and were worthy people. The wife survived about forty years, and retained her faculties to a remarkable degree, continuing active in mind and body to the close of her days. Their children were: Chester W., born Sept. 25, 1808; Sophia C., Aug. 8, 1810; William C., Oct. 11, 1812, who married Mary Ann Phelps, of Hebron. Sophia C. married John S. Yeomans, and became the mother of William H.

Chester W. Lyman, brother of Sophia C., born Sept. 25, 1808, married Nov. 13, 1831, Cornelia E. Porter, daughter of Daniel Porter. Chester W. Lyman was one of the pupils of the first Sunday-school organized in 1820, and for many years was active as a teacher and superintendent, and united with the Church in 1823, being made a deacon in 1858. His children were: Corinthia B., born Jan. 12, 1835, who married Walter R. Kingsbury, of Andover, and removed to Illinois; Henry E., Sept. 26, 1838; and Chester.

In politics Mr. Yeomans is a Democrat, and has served as judge of probate; he represented the town in the State Legislature in 1863, where he served on the committee on School Funds, and he has always taken an active interest in town affairs, held the office of Acting School-visitor for many years and many other local offices; he has also been a member of the State board of agriculture. For over thirty years he served as a director of the Tolland County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and for some fifteen years served as a director of the Willimantic Savings Institute.

In 1900 was completed "Yeomans Hall," a fine structure, which was a gift of Mrs. Yeomans to the town of Columbia. It contains a reception hall for general social functions, and as well, rooms for the town officials. Mrs. Yeomans is connected with the Children's Aid Society of Hartford, and is a member of the committee for "The Tolland County Temporary Home" for neglected and dependent children, located at Vernon Center. She was a member of the first committee and has served in that capacity continuously since, a period of about fifteen years.

FRANK HOXSIE. True biography has a more noble purpose than mere fulsome eulogy. The historic spirit, faithful to the record, the discerning judgment, unmoved by prejudice and uncolored by enthusiasm, are as essential in giving the life of the individual as in writing the history of a people. Indeed, the ingenuousness of the former picture is even more vital, because the individual is the national unit, and if the unit be justly estimated the complex organs will become correspondingly intelligible. Thus contemporary biography is clearly justified, for in rendering a record whose accuracy is vouched for by the subject himself there is bequeathed to the future the legacy of personal accomplishments which goes to make up generic history.

Though the subject of this review has been a resident of Canterbury, Windham county, for a comparatively brief term of years, he is recognized as one of the representative citizens of the town, and as one whose abilities and public service merit recognition and popular appreciation, rendering particularly consonant a review of his life and genealogy in this compilation. His position in the community may be clearly understood from the statement that he is a successful merchant of Canterbury, is assistant postmaster of the town, judge of probate, town clerk and treasurer, and treasurer of the town deposit fund, these preferments showing the confidence and esteem in which he is held.

The orthography of the name borne by Mr. Hoxsie has undergone several modifications, having been variously spelled in different generations and branches of the family, as Hoxsie, Hoxie, Hawksie, Haxie and Hoxsey. The original American ancestor, as determined by records still extant, was one Lodowick Hoxsie, a native of England, who was a young man without fortuitous influence or financial re-inforcement at the time when he left his native land to seek a home in the wilds of a new world, braving the dangers and trials and privations incident to a life on the frontier of a veritably howling wilderness, exposed to the attacks of savage beasts, which alone disputed dominion with the still more savage aborigines, while both apparently resented the encroachment of civilization. Still we see the hardy pioneers and patriots of the new country gradually spreading over the land, from the shores of Massachusetts to the green hills of Vermont, the mountains of New York, the sylvan wilds of the South and middle West, and finally onward to the prairies over which the star of empire was making its way to where the sunset gates are open wide, far out in the crimson west." In the average case to be a pioneer means to be a man of courage, self-reliance and indomitable will, and all this must have been true of the progenitor of the family of which we write.

Lodowick Hoxsie (with the name indifferently spelled in the forms noted above) is found to have been residing in Sandwich, Mass., in 1664, but no authentic data are obtainable as to what section of England was his former home, or how he came to the shores of America. In December of the year mentioned he married Mary Presbury, supposedly the daughter of John Presbury, and to this union came the following named children: Bashua, born Oct. 15, 1665, married Samuel Allen. Joseph, born March 15, 1667, settled in Charlestown, R. I.; he and his wife, Sarah, had six children, Peleg, Joseph, Sarah, Martha, Mary and Deborah. John, born Feb. 25, 1669, was located in Hopkinton, R. I.; he was twice married, his first wife having been Mary, daughter of Joseph and Experience (Harper) Hull, and his second wife Ann Richmond (a resident at the time of Richmond or Kingston, R. I.); of these two unions were born five children, Joseph, Solomon (born Dec. 6, 1710), Stephen, Benjamin and John. Ann, the fourth child of Lodowick Hoxsie, was married April 11, 1701, to Joshua Wing. Gideon, born Feb. 14, 1673, (first) married Grace, daughter of John Gifford, of Sandwich, Mass., and (second) Hannah, daughter of Caleb Allen; the children of the first marriage were Mary, Content, Bashua, Elizabeth, Joseph, Simeon, Ann, Gideon, Kezia, Ludwick (or Lodowick), and Grace. Hezekiah, born April 8, 1679, married, June 23, 1702, Dinah, daughter of Daniel Butler, and their children were Solomon, James, Desire, Hannah and Peleg. Solomon, the seventh of the children of Lodowick Hoxsie, was married April 24, 1704, to Elizabeth Wing, who bore him six children, Barnabas, Maria, Samuel, Sherebiah, John and Peleg; he was afterward three times married, and by the second union had two children, by the third five, and by the fourth one.

In the various generations the Hoxsies have not been, as a rule, over-ambitious for political honors. Not many of them have ever entered the arena of public life, preferring the peaceful vocations of life and the quiet repose of home to the noisy and empty praise of political followers.

In the line of direct descent to the subject of this review the genealogy is traced from Lodowick Hoxsie through his son John and the latter's third son, Stephen, who was born Nov. 28, 1713. Stephen Hoxsie was married, Feb. 27, 1735, to Elizabeth Kenyon, daughter of John Kenyon. She was born April 5, 1720, and was thus in her fifteenth year at the time of her marriage; she died Sept. 25, 1778. The children of this union were as follows: Barnabas, born Nov. 1, 1735, married Elizabeth Wilbur; Stephen, born May 8, 1738, married Elizabeth Tefft; Elizabeth, born July 13, 1740, married Thomas Rogers, Jr., and they finally removed to New York State; Edward, born Jan. 9, 1743, died young; Hannah, born Jan. 7, 1745, became the fourth wife of Simeon Perry; Samuel was born Aug. 13, 1747; Ruth, Jan. 4, 1749; John (next in line of descent to our subject), May 28, 1752; Edward, born Nov. 11, 1754, was married late in life to Mary Barker, sister of Deacon Weed-barker, of Hopkinton, R. I.; Mary, born March 23, 1757, married John Knowles, and they lived in Richmond, R. I.; Gideon, born Sept. 7, 1759, went to Vermont, and at Whiting, that State, in 1788, married Mary Haines; and Presbury, born Jan. 14, 1762, married Alice Perry, of Charlestown, R. I., and died in 1816. Stephen Hoxsie, the father of these children, and the ancestor of all of the name in and about Richmond, R. I., was a man of influence and prominence, and on May 2, 1744, was sent as a deputy to the General Assembly of that State.

John Hoxsie, son of Stephen, was married, Feb. 14, 1779, to Bridget Tripp, daughter of Peregrine Tripp, of Exeter, R. I., and their son Henry, of whom no record can be found in any of the towns of Washington county, R. I., was the great-grandfather of our subject. The line is thence traced through his eldest son, John, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Enoch and Elizabeth (Tefft) Hoxsie, both of Richmond, R. I. The children of this union were as follows: Elizabeth, who married Maxon White; Henry, who married Mary Lillibridge; Phœbe, who became the wife of Dr. Job Kenyon; Lydia, who married Robert K. Hoxsie; Enoch Franklin, father of our subject; John Quincy, who died a bachelor; Sarah, who became the wife of William Maxson; Mary, who married George Rice; Susan, who married Joseph Arnold; and Joseph Greene, who married Rose Chappell. Grandfather John Hoxsie was a lifetime resident of Richmond, R. I., and was a carpenter by trade and vocation. His wife also descended from Lodowick, the English ancestor, her line being common with our subject through three generations, viz.: Lodowick, John and Stephen. Barnabas Hoxsie, of the fourth generation in her line, was born Nov. 1, 1735, and married Elizabeth Wilbur, who was

Dec. 10, 1747. Their children were as follows: Edith, who never married, and died April 10, 1778; Stephen, who married Ann Kenyon; Enoch, who married Elizabeth Tefft, daughter of Benjamin Tefft, and lived near Carolina Mills, R. I.; Elizabeth, who married Joseph Nichols; Joshua, who married Betsey Kenyon; Esther; and Lydia.

Enoch and Elizabeth (Tefft) Hoxsie had children: Benjamin, Barnabas, Gideon W., Enoch, Clark W., Hannah, Deborah, Elizabeth (grandmother of our subject), Sally and Mary.

Enoch F. Hoxsie, father of Judge Hoxsie, of this review, was born in Richmond, R. I., where he was reared, receiving a common-school education. When a child of but seven years he obtained employment in a mill, and for a number of years, when not in school, he was thus engaged. After attaining years of maturity he continued to follow the line of enterprise to which he had been thus trained, and in time he became overseer of the weaving, and devoted forty years of his life to the woolen industry. For the past decade or more he has been retired from active business life, maintaining his home in Hopkinton, R. I. In politics he has given unequivocal allegiance to the Republican party from the time of its organization.

In Richmond, R. I., Enoch F. Hoxsie was united in marriage to Susan Johnson, daughter of Gideon B. Johnson, who was born in that place in 1803. They became the parents of two children: Estella and Frank. The daughter, born Dec. 31, 1851, married Albert Kenyon, a native of Richmond, and a son of David Kenyon; their home is now in East Providence, Rhode Island.

Frank Hoxsie, son of Enoch F. and Susan (Johnson) Hoxsie, was born in Richmond, R. I., Sept. 10, 1858. After receiving such educational privileges as were afforded in the excellent graded schools of his native town he there secured employment in one of the leading woolen mills, where he held the position of weaver, becoming an adept in the work, and he finally advanced to the position of overseer or superintendent of the weaving, an office which he held for about ten years, being employed in various mills, principally in Woodville and Niantic, R. I. Thereafter he was for a period of five years employed as traveling salesman for the Attwoods, of Stonington, Conn., prominent manufacturers of silk machinery, and for about one year he was the incumbent of a position in the stock-room of the factory.

In July, 1894, Mr. Hoxsie came to Canterbury and effected the lease of the Samuel J. P. Ladd property, on Canterbury Green, where he established himself in business as a dealer in general merchandise; the enterprise was formerly conducted by A. H. Mathewson. He remained in that location for a period of five years, when the demands of his increasing business rendered it imperative that he secure more commodious and eligible quarters. Accordingly, in 1898, he purchased the Marvin Sanger place, opposite his original stand, together with adjacent property, and there erected the commodious and well arranged and equipped store building which he now occupies. His is the only general merchandise establishment in the town, his stock is large and comprehensive in all lines, and his trade is of a representative character, the business showing a gratifying and consecutive expansion under his discriminating and progressive management, while his scrupulous attention to the demands of his patrons, his fair and honorable methods of dealing, and his sterling integrity of character and genial personality, have commended him to the unreserved confidence and good-will of all with whom he has been thrown in contact, in either business, official or social circles. In addition to his mercantile business our subject also owns and conducts a small but prolific farm in the vicinity of Canterbury.

In politics Mr. Hoxsie is a stalwart supporter of the Republican party and its principles, and though he has resided in Canterbury for less than a decade the people of the community have recognized his eligibility for offices of trust and responsibility, and have given unmistakable evidence of their confidence and esteem by entrusting him with duties of prominent public nature. For the past four years he has served as judge of probate, town clerk and treasurer, and also treasurer of the town deposit fund, giving careful and discriminating attention to the work assigned and having a high sense of his stewardship. He is a member of the First Congregational Church, as is also his wife, and both take an active part in the church work and the support of its collateral benevolences. Mr. Hoxsie is chairman of the Ecclesiastical Society.

On July 3, 1883, Mr. Hoxsie was united in marriage to Miss Eva Newton, who was born in Hopkinton, R. I., Sept. 6, 1863, daughter of Nathan and Mary (Chappell) Newton, both natives of Rhode Island, but now residents of Canterbury. Mr. and Mrs. Newton have one son, Frank Henry Newton, who was born July 31, 1866, married Miss Ida Palmer, and has three sons, Richard, Elwood and Harold. Mr. and Mrs. Hoxsie have two sons, Howard Franklin, born in Stonington, Conn., May 12, 1891; and Paul Henry, born in Canterbury, Sept. 13, 1897.

JEREMIAH O'SULLIVAN, one of the leading successful contractors and builders of Williamantic, Windham county, whose place of business is at No. 48 Jackson street, has been at that location for many years. He is a courteous man, still alert and active, and ever ready to consider any proposition of a business character. His honorable methods of dealing and thorough acquaintance with every form of construction work, are a guarantee to all doing business with him. Personally Mr. O'Sullivan is a progressive citizen, and a man of fine social qualities. Liberality and generosity have always been strongly marked in his character, and he has many friends in the city.

Mr. O'Sullivan was born March 17, 1850, in the village of Colaris, County Kerry, Ireland, son of Otho and Mary (Shanahan) O'Sullivan, and comes from an old and honorable family. His birthplace had been the home of his ancestors for many generations, and was their property previous to the religious troubles in the time of King James when it was confiscated by the Government, and became the estate of the Marquis of Lansdowne. The Sullivans of New Hampshire come from this same old and respected Irish family. The O'Sullivans in County Kerry, finding their income greatly lessening, concluded to leave Ireland, as did many others of the aristocracy, and came to the United States, where was afforded an adequate field for endeavor.

Otho O'Sullivan was a man of education and refinement. In early life he occupied land which is now the property of the Marquis of Lansdowne. In 1856 he brought his family to this country, sailing from Liverpool on the White Star steamer "Neptune," then on her first voyage, and on which Daniel O'Sullivan, son of Otho, was one of the assistant stewards. Otho O'Sullivan remained a short time in New York, and then found work and a home for his family in Jewett City, Conn. In 1864 he removed to Willimantic, where he and his wife continued to reside until his death, which occurred Nov. 28, 1868, when he was about eighty-six years old. His widow survived twenty-seven years, dying on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 28, 1895, at Norwich, also aged about eighty-six, and was buried in Willimantic. Their coming to Willimantic was largely due to the invitation of A. B. Burleson, at that time the agent of the Willimantic Linen Company, who was an acquaintance of long standing.

Otho O'Sullivan was the father of the following family: (1) Daniel was a noted Union soldier in the Civil war, serving first as a second lieutenant in the 9th Conn. V. I., and becoming first lieutenant of Company K, same regiment. For a time he was stationed at Norwich, on recruiting service, and was then ordered to report to Gen. Butler at New Orleans. In 1863 he came to New York in command of a guard with seventy-five Confederate prisoners, to be confined at Fort LaFayette. This was the last time he came North, or that his family saw him, until 1893, when he visited them at Willimantic. He was stationed at Governor's Island for a short time, and was then ordered to report again at New Orleans, where he resigned his commission to take the position of superintendent of river and harbor transportation at New Orleans. This incumbency he filled some six months, when he resigned to take a position on Gen. Custer's engineer force, with the rank of captain, and accompanied that distinguished general to the Rio Grande, where he was mustered out of the service in 1866. For a time he was revenue collector at Galveston, but soon went to the far South, where he was engaged in mining. In 1879 he served in the Chilean army, in the war with Peru, holding the rank of colonel. After that struggle was over Mr. O'Sullivan went to the Sandwich Islands, and thence to Venezuela, but very soon went to Durango, Mexico, where for years he was extensively engaged in mining. In 1893 his business called him frequently to San Francisco, and in that year he visited his people in Willimantic, after an absence and silence of thirty years. During his travels and experiences he has learned to speak Spanish as fluently as if he were born to the tongue. In addition to his extensive mining interests near Durango, Mexico, Mr. O'Sullivan has interests almost as valuable in the mining regions of Arizona and Colorado. (2) Ann, Mrs. P. D. Murphy, is a widow, engaged in the dry-goods business in Willimantic. (3) Catherine, married E. F. Casey, and died in Willimantic. (4) Jeremiah is mentioned below. (5) Otho is a master mechanic in the employ of the Atwood-Morrison Company, of Stonington, Connecticut.

Jeremiah O'Sullivan was a lad of six years when his parents sought a home in this country, and he began his education at Jewett City, Conn., where Hezekiah L. Reade, now the president of the Jewett City Savings Bank, was his teacher. When he was thirteen years old young Jeremiah applied himself to work, and thereafter was able to attend night school only. For some years he was in the employ of the Willimantic Linen Company, but presently took up the work of contracting and building, gaining his knowledge and experience of that work under Chappell & Potter, with whom he began at a dollar a day, but was presently receiving two and a half a day. His inclination was to be a free-hand draughtsman, but his health would not permit in-door work, so whether he would or no, he must work in the open air. In 1874 the firm of Casey & O'Sullivan was formed, the gentleman whose name introduces this article going into business for himself. In 1877 he began again for himself, and has since that time followed contracting and building very successfully. He is familiar with all parts of the business, and can take up work anywhere, as his knowledge of free hand and mechanical drawing is equal to any demand made upon it. Among the more important buildings erected by him may be mentioned the Windham county court house and city hall, the fire department buildings, the parochial school and convent buildings, the Johnston, Flaherty and Kimball blocks, the Windham high school building, and the electric light station, all in Willimantic; the Roman Catholic churches in East Hampton and Danielson; and the public school in Rockville.

Mr. O'Sullivan was married Nov. 13, 1873, to Mary A. Regan, a native of Providence, born Aug. 13, 1852, daughter of Mortimer Regan.

Mr. O'Sullivan cast his first vote for Horace reeley, and while not a politician has filled various fices which his friends have insisted on his accepting. For three terms he was a member of the board of burgesses of Willimantic, and has served on the school committee. In 1886 and 1888 he was a candidate of his party for the State Senate, but declined to make the run in 1886. He was one of the incorporators of the Willimantic Building Loan Company, of which at the present time he is a director. Mr. O'Sullivan is a director of the Willimantic Savings Institute; vice-president of the Board of Trade; was one of the organizers and member of the first board of directors of the Willimantic Silk Company; one of the original stockholders in the Willimantic Machine Company; and a director and treasurer of the Sullivan Safety Nut Lock Company, of New York City, which manufactures a device completed by his brother, Otho. Since 1872 he has been a member of the Putnam Phalanx, of Hartford, and has served as a lieutenant in that organization. He is also an associate member of the Knights of Columbus. Mr. O'Sullivan is, withal, a most pleasant and courteous gentleman, void of pride, and very approachable. From a poor boy he has risen steadily in the world, and holds his present enviable position as the result of his own merit and industry.

H. BEECHER BROWN, selectman, and successful farmer of Plainfield, Windham county, descends from Rev. Chad Brown, who was prominent in the early settlement of the Providence Plantation. He traces his line through Jeremiah, Samuel, Jephaniah, Christopher, James, and George W.

Rev. Chad Brown, with his wife, Elizabeth, and son, John, came from England on the good ship "Martin," landing at Boston harbor, Massachusetts, in 1638. He located in Salem, but, owing to his religious and political sympathy with Roger Williams, soon afterward removed to Providence, R. I., where he became very prominent in the affairs of the town. To an unusual extent he enjoyed the confidence of the settlers, and because of his all-around ability was chosen to fill many important offices of responsibility. In fact, he held about all the offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen, acquitting himself always with credit and even distinction. He was ordained in 1642, and was called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Providence, of which he was the first settled pastor. To himself and wife were born the following named children: Phoebe, John, James, Jeremiah, Chad and Daniel.

Jeremiah Brown, son of Chad, died in 1690. To him and his wife Mary were born several children, among them being Daniel (of Westerly, R. I.) and Samuel.

Samuel Brown, son of Jeremiah, was born in March, 1680, married his wife Mary Oct. 23, 1702, and died in July, 1762.

Jephaniah Brown, son of Samuel, born Dec. 23, 1721, died May 4, 1805. In April, 1755, he married Alice Wilson, who was born July 10, 1733, and died Nov. 2, 1811.

Christopher Brown, son of Jephaniah, born Feb. 16, 1756, died Jan. 19, 1844. In January, 1788, he married Anna Braman, who was born March 2, 1760, and died March 12, 1861, at the age of one hundred and one years and ten days. Christopher Brown was a private in the Rhode Island militia, and served at South Ferry against the British during their attack on Newport. His sons were Christopher, John, James and Charles.

James Wilson, son of Christopher, born Jan. 7, 1789, died Nov. 1, 1871. On Sept. 12, 1819, he married Abby Ann Wilcox, born in 1797, who died April 12, 1851. Mr. Brown was a farmer and carpenter, and lived at Hopkinton, R. I. To himself and wife were born six children, viz.: Thomas, who located in Wisconsin; Mary W., who became the wife of Levi Frink, of Willimantic; George W., the father of H. Beecher; Elizabeth; John R., who lived in Hopkinton; and Phoebe, who first married a Mr. Mathewson, and afterward a Mr. Johnson. Of these children, George W., Thomas and Phoebe have children living.

George William Brown, father of H. Beecher, was born in Hopkinton, R. I., May 30, 1830, and died in Plainfield, Conn., Aug. 22, 1876. He was reared in his native town, where he learned the trade of ship carpentering, which he followed for about ten or twelve years, later plying his trade at Mystic, Conn. For ten years he was engaged in farming in Hope Valley and Hopkinton, where he owned two farms, in connection with the management of which he conducted an extensive business in ship timber. In 1873 he removed to Plainfield, Conn., and purchased a fine farm on Black Hill, at present the property of his son, and where his death occurred in 1876. He was a well informed man, with a large fund of practical common sense, and his general ability resulted in his being called upon to fill numerous trusts. He had a good knowledge of legal matters, settled many estates, and adjusted many complications. A Republican in politics, he adhered to his party only when he considered it in the right, and was never an office seeker.

On Sept. 7, 1856, he married Lucy Ann Enos, who died Dec. 26, 1858, the mother of one child, George E. E., who was born June 16, 1857, and died June 5, 1858. On Sept. 19, 1858, he married for his second wife Martha Jane Bromley, who was born Jan. 1, 1830, daughter of Theophilus Ricks and Mary (Spaulding) Bromley. She died March 16, 1898. To them came children as follows: Everett Enos, born March 10, 1861, married Nov. 24, 1887, Cornelia Smith, and lives in Pomfret, Conn. Henry Beecher is mentioned below. Lucy Jane, born June 2, 1865, died May 17, 1871. Wendell Phillips, born March 27, 1866, is a civil engineer in the employ of the King Bridge Company, of Cleveland, Ohio; he married, Nov. 14, 1893, Hattie, daughter of the late Hon. Marvin Sanger, of Canterbury, Conn., and has two children—Marjory Antoinette, born Nov. 22, 1894, and Marvin Sanger, born Feb. 13, 1900. Horace Greeley, born July 17, 1869, is a normal teacher at Worcester, Mass., and married, July 18, 1900, Emma Pike, of South Framingham, Mass. Mary Antoinette, born Jan. 9, 1872, died Dec. 1, 1890. Fannie Elizabeth, born Feb. 17, 1875, is a teacher in the city schools of Plainfield.

H. Beecher Brown was born in Hopkinton, R. I., Oct. 8, 1863; and at the age of ten years removed to Plainfield, which has since been his home. He received a practical education in the public schools, and in time bought out the other heirs to the homestead, now owning one of the finest farms in the town of Plainfield, or, indeed, in Windham county. This property is best known to the older generation as the Kinney place, and consists of 127 acres of finely improved land on Black Hill, on which is conducted general farming and dairying. To the latter occupation especially Mr. Brown devotes considerable time and attention, keeping from forty to forty-five head of stock the year round. His farm conveys an impression of neatness and thrift, of modern enterprise and untiring industry. Politically a Republican, Mr. Brown has served his locality in various capacities, has been a member of the board of selectmen for four years, and is also a member of the school committee. Fraternally he is a member of Moosup Lodge, No. 113, F. & A. M., and he was a charter member of the Canterbury Grange, but has since united with the organization at Plainfield. He is popular and well known, and has many friends in the neighborhood where he has so long made his home.

In Canterbury, Conn., Jan. 1, 1895, Mr. Brown married Myrtie Agnes Button, daughter of Lyman and Susan Helen (Smith) Button, and granddaughter of Richard and Hannah (Penry) Button, of Canterbury. Lyman Button was born in Canterbury Feb. 2, 1833, and is at present successfully engaged in farming. His wife was born in Canterbury Feb. 18, 1839, daughter of Capt. Walter and Susan (Lyons) Smith, of an old family of that town. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been born two children: Ralph Weston, March 17, 1896; and Roger Chipman, Jan. 24, 1901.

WILLIAM SWIFT, the oldest merchant in the town of Windham, Windham county, and for many years an honored deacon in the Congregational Church, traces his ancestral line far back, to the early days of New England settlement.

The first family record tells of William Swift, who came to America with his wife, Joan, and their three children, Hannah, Esther and William.

William Swift (2), only son of the emigrant, died about 1705-06. He and his wife Ruth had children as follows: Hannah, William, Ruth, Ephraim, Samuel, Jireh, Josiah, Temperance, Esther, Dinah and Mary.

Jireh Swift, son of William (2), was born in 1665, and died in April, 1747. On Nov. 26, 1697, he married Abigail Gibbs, and their children were: Alice Croker; Susannah Isham; Jabez, who married a Pope; Zephaniah; William, whose second marriage was to Abigail Burges; Nathaniel, who married a Tupper; Jireh, who married a Halloway; Job, who married a Blackwell; Silas, who married a Tupper; Abigail Hammond; Jesse, who married the Widow Ames, formerly Keith; and Rowland.

Rowland Swift, son of Jireh, was born March 24, 1721-22, and died Feb. 13, 1795. On Dec. 5, 1745, he married Mary Dexter, who was born in 1728, and died Oct. 19, 1798. Their children were Barzillai, born Jan. 9, 1747, married Sarah Fearing, and settled in Mansfield, Conn. Abigail, born Feb. 9, 1749, died Feb. 11, 1749. Abigail (2), born July 8, 1751, married Amos Peabody. Rowland, Jr., born Dec. 10, 1753, died Jan. 20, 1849; he married Betsey Lowell, and settled in De Ruyter, N. Y. Jireh, born Dec. 6, 1755, was drowned at sea. Zephaniah, born Feb. 27, 1759, died Sept. 27, 1823, in Ohio, while on a visit to his son; he married a Watrous, of Colchester, and, for his second wife, Lucretia Webb; in active life he resided in Windham, and he became a distinguished man, acting as Chief Justice of the State. Mary, born March 1, 1761, died in 1845; she married Lathrop Davis, of Mansfield. William, born Jan. 19, 1764, died in 1835, and was buried in Windham cemetery. Thankful, born Oct. 14, 1766, died in 1806; she married a Farrel, of New Haven. The father of this family moved from Wareham, Mass., to Lebanon, Conn., where he died, and after that event his widow went to Mansfield, where her last days were passed.

William Swift, youngest son in the large family of Rowland Swift, was born in Lebanon, and married Abigail Clark, of that place. Two children were born of this union, Abigail (who died unmarried) and Justin.

Justin Swift, son of William, was born in Lebanon, Conn., Nov. 3, 1793, and married Lucy, daughter of John and Sally Lathrop. Mrs. Swift was born June 8, 1799, and died Sept. 20, 1876. To Justin and Lucy Swift came children as follows: Abby, born Jan. 22, 1821, died Sept. 14, 1835; William was born March 16, 1823; Sarah, born April 26, 1830, died Sept. 1, 1835; Julia A., born May 21, 1832, resides in Windham, and is the efficient librarian of the Windham Library.

At the age of twenty-two years Justin Swift came to Windham. When a mere boy he engaged in merchandising, as a clerk, and later for himself, carrying on a general store in Windham for many years. For a period of five or six years he was interested with others in the manufacture of roots in Windham, but this venture was not successful. For a short time, also, he was interested in cottonmaking at Willimantic, and purchased the old paper mill property at North Windham, put in cottonmaking machinery, and carried it on very successfully until 1862, when he disposed of the property to the Merricks. This property was twice destroyed by fire, the first time by the torch of an incendiary, and second by lightning. Through life Justin Swift was an active, energetic man. In politics he was first a Federalist, then a Whig, finally a Republican, and he was a factor in the public life of the town. Twice he served as Representative, elected in a strong Democratic town, on the Whig ticket, after holding all of the local offices, including those of selectman, assessor, member of the board of relief, etc. For many years he was judge of probate, remaining in office until disqualified by the age limit, seventy years. In belief he adhered to the Christian religion, and he was one of the leading men of his day. His death occurred in Windham, Oct. 17, 1884.

William Swift was born at Windham, where he first attended school, and then was sent to Bacon Academy, at Colchester, and to the high school at Ellington, where men of State and National note were schooled. While there he was a schoolmate of Donald G. Mitchell, known to the literary world as Ik Marvel. After spending one year at the Ellington school and attending Bacon Academy one term he went to East Hartford, and entered the Classical and English School then conducted by Mr. Perkins, completing his schooling at Wesleyan Academy in Wilbraham, Massachusetts.

While at home young Swift spent much of his leisure time at his father's store, in fact, he grew up in the business. In 1840-41 he was employed as a clerk at Willimantic by Samuel Lee & Co., then was clerk for his father, and in time became interested in the business. As his father advanced in years, he more and more assumed its care, before his father's death taking entire charge, and he has been a merchant in the town of Windham for the past sixty years.

Mr. Swift's first vote was cast for Henry Clay, the Whig candidate, but since the birth of the Republican party he has been its ardent supporter. In 1864 he represented the town of Windham in the Legislature, and served on the committees on New Towns and Probate Districts. For years he was town clerk, and judge of probate, and was connected with the Probate office as clerk for other judges, holding these offices when the town business was done in Windham. Since April 16, 1880, he has been postmaster at Windham; he has been connected with the post office since 1865, proving a most efficient officer.

Mr. Swift was married in Windham, May 3, 1847, to Harriet G. Byrne, who was born June 26, 1823, and died Aug. 27, 1900. She was a daughter of Samuel H. and Mary G. Byrne, the former of whom was a native of New London, Conn., and a son of John Byrne, of New London, who by trade was a printer and published a paper, the Windham Herald, about 1799.

Two children were born to William Swift and wife, William and Abby. William, born March 17, 1848, on Sept. 25, 1863, entered the Naval Academy at Newport, R. I., while it was located there, on account of the Civil war. Ever since that time he has been connected with the service. From ensign he was promoted through the various grades, to the position of lieutenant commander, on April 6, 1897, receiving his commission as commander, and he is now a captain on duty at Washington, having served in the Asiatic Squadron. He married Grace V. Ransom, of Richfield Springs, N. Y., daughter of a naval officer, and to them were born: Virginia, July 4, 1873; Pauline, Nov. 13, 1875; Madeline Grey, Oct. 10, 1877; Justin Ransom, Nov. 3, 1879; William Garfield, Sept. 21, 1881; Jennie R., Oct. 16, 1882 (died Aug. 4, 1894); and Julia M., Jan. 23, 1884 (died Nov. 16, 1889).

Abby, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Swift, was born June 29, 1851, and was married Jan. 22, 1879, to Charles R. Utley, a stationer at Willimantic. Their children are: Walter B., born Dec. 3, 1881; Helen Louise, Nov. 6, 1884; and Rollin Swift, Sept. 3, 1886.

For more than fifty years Mr. Swift has been a member of the Congregational Church. In 1863 he was made deacon, and has served in that office ever since, being now senior deacon in the church at Windham.

GEORGE TIFFANY (deceased). There were few if any better known business men in Willimantic at the time of his death than George Tiffany, and none who possessed the confidence of the people of Windham county to any greater extent, or whose integrity was less questioned. Mr. Tiffany came from an old New England family, and was born Jan. 11, 1829, at East Douglass, Mass., son of Lemuel and Betsy (Barnes) Tiffany. Lemuel Tiffany, Sr., his grandfather, was a Revolutionary soldier from East Douglass, Mass. In that place this branch of the family had resided for several generations. Both father and grandfather were devoted to an agricultural life. The parents of George Tiffany lived and died in East Douglass, Massachusetts.

George Tiffany was the sixth child in a family of eight children, and was the youngest of three sons, as well as the only one of the family to settle in Connecticut. His mother died when he was five years old, and for some years he lived with relatives, but his father married again, and he was returned to his home. Reared as a farmer, he attended the district school in his native town, and at the age of seventeen became a cattle drover with an elder brother, and in this business he spent his entire active life. At that time the calling was a popular one, and men were engaged in it in almost every town. The brothers formerly bought their stock at Brighton, Mass., selling to the farmers, who fattened the cattle, or to the butchers for slaughtering. They also bought shoats on an extensive scale, which they sold to the farmers for preparing and making ready for the market. Mr. Tiffany acquired a very practical knowledge of the business, and bought car loads of stock in Albany, then a great cattle market, and sold to farmers and slaughterers in New England.

After his marriage in 1852 Mr. Tiffany made his home in Upton, Mass., where he began his business career in a most modest manner, his capital coming entirely from his savings while working for wages. When he cast out for himself he was poor in everything but a stout heart and a good mind. On Aug. 15, 1864, he enlisted in the army, becoming a member of Company F, First Battalion, Mass. Heavy Artillery, and served until the close of the war, being stationed at Fort Warren, near Boston, and chiefly engaged in guarding exchanged prisoners. After living some time in Upton, Mass., Mr. Tiffany removed to Millbury, Mass., and from there to Oxford, Conn. In 1874 with his family he located in Willimantic, where Silas Tiffany, an uncle of George, who was living in the city at that time, did much to make their coming pleasant. For a few years after his removal to Willimantic he followed the business of cattle droving, going to the West and shipping cattle into New England. For a short period he conducted a retail meat market, and also did a wholesale business, and as the pioneer handler of dressed beef, being the first local representative of the large packing houses of the West, he did an extensive business. He retired from this line about four years previous to his death, Feb. 16, 1900, having had a stroke of apoplexy about a year previous. His last illness was but of a very few days' duration, and his remains rest in Willimantic cemetery.

While in Oxford, Mass., Mr. Tiffany was secretary and treasurer of the Universalist Church, but in later years he became a member of the Unitarian Church, and was active and influential in that body. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and served as first selectman in 1899. When Willimantic was a borough he was senior burgess. Never an office seeker, he was a good citizen and interested in the welfare of the city, being often called to prominent places in the city and town government. In his political capacity he was painstaking and sincere, faithfully discharging his duties and making an honorable record wherever he was employed. In 1891 he completed his fine residence on Prospect street, where his widow is now living.

On Nov. 17, 1852, George Tiffany was married to Miss Sarah A. Cook, in West Boylston, Mass. Mrs. Tiffany was born Jan. 23, 1832, in Wrentham, Mass., daughter of Leonard and Julia (Aldrich) Cook, the former a farmer, and the latter a member of the old Aldrich family, long and favorably known in the annals of New England. Of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Cook, three are living, as follows: Willis A., of Clinton, Mass., a veteran of the Civil war, where he served in the 15th Mass. V. I.; Julia Alma, now the widow of Charles Whipple, of Pawtucket, R. I.; and Sarah A., who is Mrs. Tiffany. Mrs. Julia Cook lived to her ninetieth year, and was buried in Willimantic. Mrs. Tiffany left Wrentham when young, and her home was at West Boylston, until her marriage. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Tiffany are as follows: (1) Clara B., born Sept. 12, 1853, at Upton, Mass., was married, Jan. 28, 1879, to William H. B. Kibby, then of Webster, but now of Chelsea, Mass.; their children are: Sidney Vernon, George Tiffany and Leonard Cook. (2) Fannie J., born Oct. 3, 1855, in Upton, Mass., married Calvin Brown in 1886, and resides in Willimantic. (3) Cora J., born Nov. 10, 1857, in Millbury, Mass., married Jan. 3, 1881, in Willimantic, George Ashley, of Springfield, Mass., now agent for the Cudahy Packing Co., at Nashua, N. H., and they have a family of two children, Walter Tiffany and Ruth Emily. (4) Luman Henry, born April 30, 1864, in Oxford, Mass., married April 6, 1889, Hattie Moore, of Webster, Mass.; he is the local representative of the Swift Packing Co. at Webster, but for a number of years he was engaged in the dressed meat business in Willimantic with his father. (5) Ruth Elma died in infancy. (6) Daniel M., born May 25, 1870, at Oxford, Mass., lives in Willimantic. (7) Effie Alma, born Nov. 13, 1873, at Oxford, was married Sept. 21, 1901, to Franklin G. Taft, a native of Blackstone, Mass., and resides in Willimantic.

CHRISTOPHER ALLEN, of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, was born in Allenton, R. I., Aug. 15, 1854, a son of Charles and Mary (Congdon) Allen. Allenton, R. I., was named for the first settler of this family of Allens, who located there at an early date, and to this honored pioneer Mr. Allen traces his line of descent through his father Charles, Samuel B., Matthew, Benjamin, and Matthew.

Matthew Allen emigrated from England to Dartmouth, Bristol Co., Mass., in 1700, and in 1712 purchased and settled on a tract of land in North Kingstown, which is now called Allenton, Rhode Island.

Charles Allen, father of Christopher Allen, was born in 1798, in Allenton, and was prominently identified with all public affairs of his native town. He died in 1869. He married Mary Congdon, daughter of Benjamin Congdon, of North Kingstown, R. I., and became the father of the following children: Phebe A., Almira, Eliza, and Charles D., all now deceased; and Hannah (now Mrs. Andrew Whiton), Mary (now Mrs. Albert Rodman), Charles, Matthew and Christopher, all of whom survive.

Christopher Allen received his education in the common schools at Allenton, and later attended the Friends School at Providence, leaving the latter institution at the age of seventeen. He was, however, a student for some time in a business college at Providence, where he acquired a good knowledge of business principles. He then began to learn the woolen business under the practical tuition of the late Gov. Gregory at North Kingstown, where he remained for several years. Subsequently he went to Wales, Mass., where he became interested in the woolen business. In 1883 Mr. Allen came to Stafford, and became superintendent of the Phoenix Mills. In 1886 he became one of the owners, and has since had a very active share in the management, his efficiency being amply demonstrated by the remarkable success attending his efforts.

Mr. Allen has proved himself an invaluable addition to Stafford Springs, while he has been identified with almost every enterprise that is calculated to advance the moral and material welfare of his adopted town. He has steadily declined all proffered political honors; his political views, however, are in accord with those of the Republican party.

On Oct. 28, 1880, Mr. Allen was united in marriage with Miss Emma A. Davis, daughter of the late James M. Davis, of Davisville, R. I., and they reside in the home built by Mr. Allen in 1892. Mr. Allen is a member of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Congregational Church. Kind-hearted and charitable, he has many friends in every walk of life, and all who come within the radius of his genial nature hold him in high esteem.

WILLIAM TALCOTT WARNER, one of the most highly respected citizens of the town of Hebron, Tolland county, has his home in that part of the town known as the Gilead Society, and is descended from a sturdy New England stock.

Dr. Ichabod Warner, his great-grandfather, was born March 1, 1738. In 1761 he went from Windham to Bolton, where he stood high in the profession to which his life was given, and he took an active part in the formation of the Tolland County Medical Society, of which he was president eight years, and of which he was a fellow. In 1800 he retired from the organization, and received many thanks from the society for his long service as its chairman. During the most of his active life he was in public station, serving as selectman, and for more than thirty years was justice of the peace. In public meetings he was usually called to the chair. From 1779 to 1795 he was a member of the State Legislature, and was a member of the Convention called to ratify the Constitution of the United States in 1788, and cast a vote in the affirmative. For nearly fifty years he practiced his profession, having a large business in that calling the most of the time. A handsome property constituted his estate at his death. His weight was about two hundred and eighty pounds in his prime, and his mind was constructed on a corresponding scale. His death was unexpected, as he was found dead in bed Nov. 16, 1815, when he was aged seventy-eight. On July 17, 1760, Dr. Ichabod Warner was married to Mary Lazell, by whom he had the following family: Martha, born Jan. 24, 1761; Mary, born Sept. 7, 1762; Lucy, born May 11, 1764; Pamela (1), born Nov. 21, 1765, died in infancy; one that died unnamed Feb. 10, 1767; Pamela (2), born Feb. 26, 1768; Ichabod Mape, born Feb. 14, 1770; Jerusha, born Feb. 18, 1772; Elijah, born Jan. 21, 1774, died Feb. 10, 1774; Sally, born April 28, 1775; Octa, born April 21, 1777, died June 3, 1777; Elijah (2), born Nov. 28, 1779, died Nov. 29, 1779; and Hannah, born Feb. 16, 1781, died March 10, 1781.

Ichabod Mape Warner, son of Dr. Ichabod, made his home in Bolton, where on May 19, 1791, he married Mary Talcott, by whom he had the following children: Mary, born April 9, 1792, married Israel E. Hutchinson; Elijah, born Jan. 19, 1794; Harriet, born Feb. 1, 1796, married Samuel Talcott; Ashbel, born Dec. 30, 1797, who first married Abigail Lyman, and second Hannah Morgan, was a farmer, and lived in Bolton, where he was a deacon in the Congregational Church; Martha, born Oct. 10, 1799, married Royal Talcott, a farmer of Vernon; Ichabod, born April 5, 1801, married Lucy Foster, and followed farming in Gilead; Sally, who was born Feb. 18, 1803, married Russell T. Loomis, a sea captain, of Bolton; Maria, born March 12, 1805, was the second wife of Capt. Russell T. Loomis; Jerusha C., born Dec. 27, 1806, died unmarried; William T., born Aug. 19, 1808, left home in early manhood, and all trace of him was lost by the family; Albert F., born Jan. 19, 1810, married Eunice Gager; and two sons not named.

Elijah Warner, son of Ichabod Mape, and the father of William T., was born in Bolton, where he spent his life as a farmer, making his home on the old Ichabod Warner farm on Bolton Hill. His death occurred Aug. 21, 1837, at the age of forty-three. He was a gentleman of the old school, bright and intelligent, and a member of the Congregational Church. He was twice married: first on March 21, 1821, to Abigail Buell, of Hebron, who was born in Massachusetts, Nov. 14, 1799, and who passed to her reward June 17, 1833, the mother of the following family: Sarah Jane, born Dec. 25, 1826, died Sept. 4, 1831; William Talcott; and Abigail Buell, born March 4, 1833, died Aug. 23, 1834. For his second wife Mr. Warner married June 24, 1834, Martha Hammond, who was born in Vernon, Conn., Sept. 2, 1795, and who died Sept. 9, 1845, leaving one child, Josiah H., born June 24, 1836, died Jan. 17, 1858.

William Talcott Warner was born Sept. 16, 1830, on the Warner homestead, in Bolton, Conn., where he resided until the death of his father, which occurred when he was but seven and a half years old. As his mother had died when he was but three years of age, he was taken, at the death of his father, to the home of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Israel Ele Hutchinson, of Gilead, who bestowed upon him a tender care, and reared him to a strong and sturdy manhood. He attended the public school until he was seventeen, and was then given two terms at the Brainerd Academy, when he returned to the farm, where he has since resided. Mr. Warner looked after his uncle and aunt in their old age, and cared for them as long as they lived. About the time of his marriage he came into the possession of his present farm, a tract of seventy-five acres, on which he has made very extensive improvements. With the assistance of his son, William J., he is conducting a fine farm business.

On Sept. 14, 1853, Mr. Warner was married to Olive Maria, who was born in Gilead, Dec. 9, 1833, a daughter of John Bissell and Loretta (Jewett) Hutchinson. Her mother was a native of East Haddam, and a granddaughter of Dr. Gibbons Jewett, a surgeon in the Revolutionary army. Mrs. Warner is a lady of remarkable mental gifts, and has a vivid memory of historical and genealogical events. In 1892 she wrote a small book known as "Memoirs of John Bissell and Loretta (Jewett) Hutchinson." Mr. and Mrs. Warner had the following family: Charles H., who was born Sept. 23, 1854, and who in 1876 went to California, where he is now adjuster and collector for an insurance company, was married April 23, 1887, to Isabel Whitney, by whom he had one child, Helen W., who died in infancy; Josiah B., who was born Dec. 14, 1857, and who married Helen G. Dix, Sept. 15, 1886, by whom he has one child, Olive F., born Nov. 14, 1890, learned the trade of machinist at the Lincoln Iron Works in Hartford, and in 1878 went to San Francisco, where he was employed by the Union Iron Works, but in 1884 he secured an appointment as boiler inspector for an insurance company, and is now chief inspector of the company, with his home in Alameda, Cal.; William J., who was born March 1, 1864, and who was married June 8, 1886, to Ella Carter Warner (who was born July 14, 1861, at Chicopee Falls, Mass., a daughter of Norman P. Warner), by whom he has one child, Norman Jewett, born Aug. 26, 1887, is engaged in farming with his father, and has attained quite a standing in his community, having been called by the Republican party to several public offices. Mr. William J. Warner has served on the board of relief and has been assessor, and in 1895 he represented Hebron in the General Assembly, serving on the Labor committee.

William Talcott Warner has been a Republican, and was in the State Legislature in 1865, and has served one term as selectman. He has been assessor, grand juror, and trial justice of the peace for over twenty-five years, and has also served on the board of relief. Since 1891 he has served as a deacon of the Congregational Church of which Mrs. Warner and the family are also members.

The HUTCHINSON Family, of which Mrs. Warner is a member, is one of the old families of Gilead, running its history back to Joseph Hutchinson, who came from Lebanon in 1718, and settled in Hebron. His son, Jonathan Hutchinson, born Oct. 19, 1719, died Sept. 26, 1796; he married a Miss Carter, of Marlboro, by whom he had one son, Jonathan, and later he married Hannah Sawyer, by whom he had the following children: Joseph, Israel, Zephah, Elizabeth, Job, John, Abigail, Daniel, Lydia, Mary and Hannah.

John Hutchinson, noted in the above children, was born in Gilead, Jan. 18, 1759, on the site of the present home of Mr. Warner. His active life was spent in farming, but he became an invalid in middle age, and he died on the farm now occupied by Frederick Prentice. He belonged to the Congregational Church. John Hutchinson married Molly Post, a daughter of Jaazaniah and Elizabeth (Bissell) Post, by whom he had the following family: Betsy married E. Gillette, of Colchester, and they both died in New York; John Bissell; Belinda married Calvin Luther; Clarissa died unmarried; Ira married Mrs. Lucenthia (Cone) Warner, of Haddam, and was a well known physician, of Cromwell, Conn.; William married Caroline Post; Anna married Joshua Eaton, of Stafford, and Harvey married Susan Tracy.

John Bissell Hutchinson, the father of Mrs. Warner, was born Jan. 14, 1790, on Gilead Street, where he was reared a farmer, and remained at home until his marriage, when he removed to a house which he had erected in 1813. For years he was engaged in farming and stock raising, and became very prosperous. For a time he had a small store near his house, and he owned and dealt in lumber, timber, and lands. After he was forty years of age, his health became impaired, and he died April 24, 1877. In political faith he was a Whig, and later a Republican, representing Hebron in the General Assembly one term. In religion he belonged to the Congregational Church.

On Oct. 28, 1818, John Bissell Hutchinson married Mrs. Loretta (Jewett) Hutchinson, widow of Champion Hutchinson, and a daughter of George and Mary (Champion) Jewett. She died April 2, 1872, at the age of seventy-nine years. On Oct. 18, 1868, Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson celebrated their golden wedding. To them came the following children: Mary Loretta, born Sept. 23, 1819, married Ralph Gilbert, and died in Gilead, Dec. 18, 1861; Harriet B., born Jan. 21, 1821, married Daniel Way, and died July 5, 1891; Clarissa V., born March 21, 1823, married Andrew Prentice; John Calvin, born March 29, 1825, married Maryette Keeney, became a "forty-niner," but returned to Gilead, and died in Bolton; George C., born April 22, 1827, who has served a term as county commissioner of Tolland county, married Mary T. Loomis, and they celebrated their golden wedding May 22, 1900; Amelia Rhoda, born Nov. 28, 1829, married James L. Cutter, of Utica, N. Y., and in March, 1901, they celebrated their golden wedding; Jewett E., born Feb. 15, 1832, was a farmer and stock dealer in Gilead, married Louisa D. Root, and he died March 9, 1863; Olive M., born Dec. 9, 1833; Josephine M., born Nov. 2, 1836, married Chester M. Hills, of East Hartford, Conn., a tinner and a plumber, who was a soldier in the Civil War.

CHARLES FREEMAN RISEDORF, the general manager and the leading stockholder of the Union Shoe Co., of Willimantic, Windham county, is one of the leading men of the city, and comes from old Knickerbocker stock, the Risedorf family having long been prominent in Dutchess county, New York.

Mr. Risedorf was born Sept. 16, 1849, in Milan, six miles east of Rhinebeck, Dutchess Co., N. Y., a son of John E. and Lydia A. (Cornelius) Risedorf. His paternal grandmother, Catherine Waldorf, belonged to the Waldorf family, and married John Risedorf, who was a resident of Dutchess county, who died at the age of eighty-six; she reached the age of eighty-four.

John E. Risedorf was born May 4, 1816, in Dutchess county, N. Y., where he was married to Lydia A. Cornelius. In 1855 he left his native county and came with his wife and two children, Charles F. and Mary T., to Simsbury, Conn., where another child was born, and where the mother died at the age of sixty-one. Mary T. died at the age of seventeen in Simsbury; Hattie A. is now Mrs. D. W. Sizer, of Brighton, Mass. Mr. Risedorf is still living in Simsbury, and is a well preserved and highly respected citizen. All his life he has followed farming.

Charles F. Risedorf attended district school in Simsbury, having as teachers Oliver Case, Julius A. Harmon and Cornelia Holcomb. For one winter he attended a school at Simsbury kept by a clergyman, and finished his preparation for Wilbraham, where he was a student for a year and a half, beginning in 1865, and concluding his schooling in that institution. Mr. Risedorf had been reared as a farmer boy, and in the doing of the work at home had accumulated strength and vital force that prepared him well for his subsequent career. The farm did not prove to him a congenial field, and while still a youth, he secured a position in the shoe store of Anthony R. Parshley, of Middletown, where, March 18, 1867, he began a mercantile career that has been singularly successful. He remained with Mr. Parshley until 1873, when he entered the employ of H. H. King, at No. 495 Main street, Hartford, one of the noted shoe men of that city.

On Jan. 29, 1878, in Middletown, Conn., Mr. Risedorf was united in marriage by the Rev. S. D. McConnell to Mary Virginia Franklin, daughter of Henry Marshall and Adeline Louise (Wells) Franklin, and granddaughter of Abel Franklin. Abel Franklin was born in Foster, R. I., in 1793, and he settled in Columbia, Conn., where he died in May, 1842; his wife Amy Brown, was born in Columbia. Through the Wells family Mrs. Risedorf is connected with the Peters, the Trumbulls, and other old families of Connecticut. Gov. Peters was a cousin of Lysander Wells, grandfather of Mrs. Risedorf.

Lysander Wells was a son of Shipman and Zilpha (Trumbull) Wells, and he became a livery man and real estate owner. At one time he conducted the old "Mansion House," the leading hotel in Middletown in the old days. He married Clarissa Eggleston, and their daughter Adeline Louise, born in Middletown, married Henry Marshall Franklin. Mrs. Zilpha (Trumbull) Wells was a daughter of Asaph and Zilpha (Phelps) Trumbull, and a granddaughter of Benjamin and Mary (Brown) Trumbull. Asaph Trumbull was a lieutenant and ensign in the Eighth Company, of a Battalion raised in June, 1776, for the Revolutionary war.

Henry Marshall Franklin was born in Columbia, and was married in Middletown to Adeline Louise Wells. He died Sept. 30, 1901, highly respected. His children were as follows: Mary Virginia, who became Mrs. Risedorf; Lysander Wells, an electrician at Hartford; and Alice, the wife of Wilbur F. Burrows, of Middletown. Mrs. Franklin still resides in Middletown, where she has many friends and is much esteemed. Mrs. Risedorf lived in South Glastonbury when a girl, and there attended an academy which was taught by Mr. Seymour, Miss Lee and Miss Mitchell, and also private schools taught by Miss Dayton and Mr. Kenny. When she was about fourteen her parents removed to Middletown, where she grew into young womanhood and where she was married.

Mr. Risedorf remained in the employ of Mr. King until 1879, when he was given charge of the shoe department of the store of W. H. Cheney in South Manchester, a position he held until 1883, when he was compelled to give it up on account of failing health, and to spend part of a year at Macon, Ga. This southern trip quite restored his health, and in August, 1884, he took a place in the shoe store of D. E. Strong, of Hartford, where he spent a year, when he came to Willimantic to take charge of the shoe department of what was then the Linen Company's store at the foot of Union street. In 1888 he was installed as manager of the Union Shoe Co., the business being the outgrowth of the oldest shoe house in the city, dating back to 1857. In July, 1894, Mr. Risedorf became a partner in the business, which was incorporated Feb. 9, 1898, he being the secretary. At the present time he is the principal stockholder in the company.

Ethel Risedorf, the only child of Charles F. and M. Virginia Risedorf, was born in South Manchester, Conn., Nov. 28, 1881, and is an accomplished musician, having completed her musical studies in New York in 1900.

Mr. Risedorf is a Republican, and cast his first vote for Gen. Grant. In the success of his party he is interested, though he does not take the part of an active politician. For some years he has served as town auditor, and in 1893 was elected collector of taxes, being also the first collector of taxes in the city of Willimantic. At the present time he is treasurer of the Board of Trade, and is a member of the Merchants' Exchange. In Masonic circles he is far advanced, and holds membership in Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M.; Trinity Chapter No. 9, R. A. M.; the Olive Branch Council, No. 10, R. & S. M.; and in St. John's Commandery, K. T., No. 11, at Willimantic. In the ecclesiastical society connected with the Congregational Church at Willimantic, he has held various offices, and is much esteemed. Mrs. Risedorf belongs to Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter of the D. A. R.

Mr. Risedorf can hardly be pronounced a wealthy man, but he has lived well, paid his bills, educated his daughter, and has a very comfortable competence put by. He and his family hold an assured position among the best people of the city. His thorough knowledge of his business, his affable disposition, and his competent management have united to bring the Union Shoe Co. to the very front as a representative Willimantic institution.

He is also treasurer of the Union Agricultural Society.

EDWIN BUGBEE, an old and honored citizen of Willimantic, Windham county, belongs to a family that has been represented in Ashford, that county, for many generations, and is in the seventh generation from Edward Bugby (as the name was then spelled), who came to Boston in 1634. Richard Bugby, brother of Edward, who came in the fleet with Winthrop, was the first of the family to come to New England. Edwin Bugbee's line of descent from Edward, the emigrant, is through Joseph, Josiah, Josiah, Amos, and Amos, Jr.

Edward Bugby came from Stratford-le-Bow, on the river Lee, near its junction with the Thames, now a part of the city of London. He brought with him his wife, Rebecca, and his daughter, Sarah, sailing from Ipswich on the ship "Francis," and on his arrival in Massachusetts made his home in Roxbury, where he died in 1669, most of the family fortune descending to his son Edward, who remained in that place.

Joseph Bugbee, born in 1640, married Experience, daughter of Andrew Pitcher, and by her had the following children: Joseph, Rebecca, Edward, Samuel, Abigail, Mehitable, Jonathan, Josiah and Nathaniel. All these with the exception of Nathaniel, who died young, married and had large families.

Josiah Bugbee, whose name appears above, was the first of the family to come to Connecticut. In 1686 he came to Woodstock, Conn., and rose to prominence in the new Colony.

Josiah Bugbee, son of Josiah, was a farmer, and located in what is now Ashford.

Amos Bugbee, the grandfather of Edwin, lived in what is now a populous and fertile district, but was then close to the wilderness of nature. The old home in which he lived was built by his father, Josiah Bugbee, in 1767. Amos Bugbee married a Miss Woodward, by whom he had the following children: (1) Amos, Jr., was the father of Edwin. (2) Frank received a good education, went South, married in Virginia, and settled in Montgomery, Ala., when that place was a small village. There he became wealthy, owned a large property, and was a judge of the United States District court. He left one son. (3) Ralph became a physician at Waterford, Vt., where his sons, Ralph, Abel, Frank and Lafayette, also took up that profession. (4) Minor, who never married, died in Vermont. (5) Caroline married Isaiah Carpenter, and made her home in Vermont.

Amos Bugbee, Jr., known as "Col." Bugbee, was born Dec. 8, 1782, on the old homestead in Ashford, Conn., and, being the eldest in the family, on the death of his father a large responsibility fell on him. Col. Bugbee was reared on the old homestead after the fashion of the farmer lads of the time, which meant much work and a little schooling, during the winter term of the neighboring district school. While his father was still living, he concluded to go West, and had gone as far as Albany with congenial company. In that city, with others of his party, he attended the seance of a clairvoyant, and was advised to give up his Western journey and return home, as his presence would be shortly needed there. Mr. Bugbee was so impressed by this that he did go back to Ashford, where his father soon passed away, leaving a heavy burden on his shoulders.

Col. Bugbee was first married, Sept. 9, 1816, to Miss Mary Dunham, of Mansfield, who bore him one child, that died in infancy. On the death of his first wife Col. Bugbee was again married, April 15, 1822, to Eunice Richmond, who was born Feb. 25, 1798, in Woodstock, Conn., daughter of Abner and Eunice (Dewing) Richmond. Soon after 1800 her father removed to Westford parish, in the town of Ashford, where he was engaged in business as a farmer and a merchant, doing much business also in the manufacture of shoes. His death occurred Sept. 17, 1834, when he was aged seventy-three, and his widow died Dec. 19, 1839, at the same age; both are buried in the Ashford cemetery. Abner and Eunice Richmond had the following named children: (1) Michael, born Nov. 13, 1786, was a farmer, merchant and shoe manufacturer in Ashford, where he married Polly Byles. (2) Charles, born April 12, 1789, was a farmer and merchant in Ashford. (3) Esther, born April 7, 1792, was married in 1812, to Sias Potter, who died in Wisconsin, after having lived near Buffalo, N. Y., for some years. (4) Danford, born March 5, 1795, was a merchant in Tolland at one time, and was later in business in the West. His death occurred in Ashford. (5) Eunice, born Feb. 25, 1798, married Amos Bugbee. (6) Abner Thompson, born Oct. 25, 1801, died at the age of fourteen years. (7) Jared Dewing, born March 30, 1804, was a lawyer, and lived and died in Ashford. (8) Mary Ann, born Sept. 12, 1806, married Elnathan Paul, and spent her life in St. Thomas, Ontario. (9) Susan Potter, born April 27, 1811, married Amasa Carpenter, of Woodstock, where she died in 1835.

Col. Bugbee died in 1869, and his wife the previous year. He was over eighty-six, and she over seventy years old at the time of death. They had the following family: (1) Mary Emeline, born Jan. 31, 1823, married William H. Breed, of Norwich, in 1855, and is now a widow, residing in that place, where her son, William A., has his home. (2) Edwin, whose name heads this writing, was born June 30, 1825. (3) A. D. Carlos, born July 6, 1827, married Lavinia Boylan, of Joliet, Ill., where he lived for a number of years, and died in Racine, Wis., leaving a large family and the record of a successful and honorable business career. (4) Patrick Henry, born Sept. 17, 1829, was engaged in the manufacture of shoes in company with his brother Edwin, and died unmarried at Ashford, Jan. 19, 1862. (5) Jane Antoinette, born April 17, 1832, died in Ashford, unmarried, Dec. 17, 1861. (6) Louisa Josephine, born May 2, 1834, died in 1839. (7) John C. Calhoun, born April 24, 1837, is a merchant in Willimantic. (8) Henrietta Angell, born June 28, 1839, died March 18, 1848. (9) Susan E., born July 23, 1843, died July 28, 1846.

When he married Amos Bugbee "settled down" on the old home farm where his useful life was passed. He was an active and industrious man, and became very wealthy for his day. At different times he was a merchant, a farmer, a steelyard manufacturer, owned and operated a flaxseed mill, got out lumber, manufactured iconium, and raised cattle. He belonged to the old State militia, and presented an imposing figure when mounted and in command of the regiment. He was active in all local affairs, especially in promoting road construction. In the town of Ashford he held many local positions, his opinion carrying weight, his judgment being held as most excellent, and he was regarded throughout the town as a valuable man, and his influence was great. He held to the cardinal tenets of the Christian faith, was a liberal supporter of the church, and religious practices prevailed in his home, which was the headquarters for the ministers, of all denominations, who traveled through Ashford. His home was near the western part of the town, near Warrenville. In the cemetery of that place he and his wife were buried.

Edwin Bugbee attended school in the Knowlton District, in Ashford, the school being a mile and a half from his home. In his later youth he attended McLean's high school, at Willington Center, where he prepared himself for teaching, an occupation which he followed several years. His first salary as a teacher was earned in the Corbin District of Ashford, where he received ten dollars a month and was "boarded round." When he taught in the Reidsville District in Thompson, Conn., he received sixteen dollars a month, and was making satisfactory progress when he concluded to go to sea on account of his somewhat delicate health, and journeyed to Gloucester, Mass., for the purpose of joining the fishing fleet. Arriving too early for the season, he returned home. Stopping on his homeward journey in Boston, he accidentally discovered a new industry which was destined to play an important part in his life—the making of fancy webbing. It struck him that the material could be used in making shoes, and he bought a quantity which he took home and worked up into shoes, the completed shoes being taken back to Boston and offered in the market. After considerable difficulty the young and enterprising Mr. Bugbee found a market for his goods, Everson, Cochran & Co., then extensive wholesalers of shoes, becoming his patrons. This was in 1852, and for the ensuing five years a very satisfactory business was maintained. With Mr. Bugbee was associated his brother, Patrick H. Bugbee, and they did a very good business until the panic of 1857 caused them to discontinue.

Edwin Bugbee and his brother, A. D. C. Bugbee, went West, and made large investments in land in northern Illinois, which have proved extremely profitable. Our subject returned from the west in 1867, made his home in Hartford, and in 1868 removed to Willimantic, where he bought property on the corner of Jackson and Valley streets. He was connected with the grain and lumber business for a number of years, being associated at different times with Ansel Arnold, J. C. Bugbee and W. D. Grant, the latter in 1891 succeeding Mr. Bugbee, who since that year has devoted his time to his private interests, which are extensive and varied. Still hale and hearty, his long and highly successful life has not broken his spirit nor quenched the ardor of his strong and intense nature. In politics he is a Democrat, and takes much interest in the success of his party.

Mr. Bugbee and Sarah M. Preston were married Sept. 18, 1866, in Ashford. Mrs. Bugbee was born there Sept. 6, 1839, daughter of Silas and Betsey (Wright) Preston. To this union has come one son, Edwin Frank. Mrs. Bugbee is a member of the Baptist Church. She is a charter member of Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, D. A. R., at Willimantic, of which she was regent for three years, and representative at the National Congress in Washington, D. C., in 1901; she is also eligible for membership in the order of Daughters of Governors. The handsome residence of Mr. and Mrs. Bugbee, at the corner of Turner and Prospect streets, was erected in 1876.

EDWIN FRANK BUGBEE, noted above as the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Bugbee, was born Jan. 21, 1868, in Willimantic. He was graduated from the local high school in 1886, after which he took a course in banking and bookkeeping at the Eastman Business College, in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., completing this course in 1887, and the same fall matriculating at Williston Seminary, in the scientific department. In 1890 he was graduated from the Law Department of Yale, and the same year was admitted to practice in New Haven. For a time he was associated with J. L. Hunter, at Willimantic, in the practice of law, and on the retirement of that gentleman continued alone in his professional labors. In May, 1897, Mr. Bugbee was appointed prosecuting attorney of the city police court at Willimantic, a position he has very successfully filled to the present time.

Mr. Bugbee was married, in October, 1896, to Miss Alice Monroe Johnson, daughter of Marcus M. and Emeline (Hall) Johnson, of whom a sketch may be found elsewhere.

Silas Preston, maternal grandfather of E. Frank Bugbee, and the father of Mrs. Sarah M. Bugbee, was born Feb. 29, 1798, in Ashford, son of Deacon John and Persis (Works) Preston, and grandson of John and Sarah A. (Eastman) Preston. John Preston was born in 1737, and was married in 1759, in Ashford, to Sarah A., daughter of Capt. Peter Eastman. John Preston served in the Revolutionary army, and was among the gallant band who marched from Ashford under Col. Thomas Knowlton for the relief of Boston in 1775. He afterward became a member of Col. Chester's regiment, Sixth Battalion, Gen. Wadsworth's Brigade, which hastened to reinforce Gen. Washington in New York. In 1777 he was in the Connecticut militia, and served on the Hudson, being a sergeant in Capt. Aaron Foote's Company, of the regiment commanded by Col. Hooker.

John Preston, the father of this veteran of the Revolution, married for his second wife Mary Haynes, granddaughter of the first governor of Connecticut, and by her had twelve children. He bought a large tract of land in Ashford, for which he paid twenty-five cents an acre, and which was the home of the family down to the time of Silas Preston. The old Preston homestead, which belonged to Silas Preston, was in Westford Parish.

Silas Preston was there engaged in custom shoe-making on a considerable scale, having several apprentices under him, and carrying on an extensive business. The cultivation of the farm was carried on under his direction. Twice he represented the town in the General Assembly, and he was long a prominent man in the community. He organized the bank at Eastford, and served as its first president. For a number of years he was also connected with the bank at Stafford.

As the eldest son of his parents, when his father died Silas Preston became the main support of his widowed mother, and rendered invaluable assistance in the care of the younger members of the family. By the purchase of soldiers' land warrants he came into possession of a large amount of land in Illinois. He was a thoroughly successful and honorable man, and left a handsome competence and an untarnished name. His long life was terminated Dec. 19, 1893, when he had almost reached the age of ninety-six years. He rests in the Westford cemetery, by the side of his wife. Silas Preston and Miss Betsey Wright were married in 1820, in Plainfield, N. Y., where she was born Jan. 13, 1800, daughter of Ezra and Rhoda (Preston) Wright. She had been a pupil in the high school at Eastford, coming to that point from her New York home for the purpose of attending school, and there she made the acquaintance of Silas Preston. When they were married Mr. Preston drove from Connecticut to her home in Plainfield, and brought back his bride in the same conveyance. To their union were born: (1) Susan E., the wife of Nelson Spalding, died in February, 1901. (2) Ezra was a wholesale grocery merchant in Providence, where he died. (3) James H. a member of the wholesale fruit firm of J. H. Preston & Co., also died in that city. (4) Mary D. married Holstein Brown, of Union, Conn., and died in Woodstock. (5) Augustus, formerly engaged in business as a merchant in Providence, R. I., is now living a retired life. (6) Emily A. married George Brown, of Stafford, Conn., who engaged in a mercantile business in Providence, where he died. She now has her home in Hartford. (7) Sarah M. became Mrs. Edwin Bugbee. (8) Julia R. is Mrs. Albert Reynolds, of Putnam.

Silas Preston was a Whig in his earlier life, then became a Republican, and in his last years voted the Prohibition ticket. He attended the Baptist Church, though not a member of that body. For sixty-three years and one week Mr. and Mrs.

Silas Preston lived an almost ideal married life, and their happy union was broken by the touch of death Nov. 11, 1883, when the wife and mother was called home. In early life she belonged to the Congregational Church at Eastford, but became a Baptist in her later years.

Among the illustrious ancestors of Mrs. Edwin Bugbee was Major Earl Clapp, who served in both the French and Indian and the Revolutionary wars. He became a Major in the Continental forces and fought by the side of Gen. Washington at Monmouth. He died in Eastford, Conn., at the age of ninety-six years. His home was in Rochester, Mass., but he came to Eastford to spend his last years in the home of his daughter Sarah, who was the wife of Esek Preston.

DEACON HENRY TROWBRIDGE. No name in Windham county carries with it greater influence than that of Deacon Henry Trowbridge, of Eastford, known as one of the upbuilders of the community, and above all devoted to the maintaining of its good name, and the fostering of its spirit of humanity, tolerance, and good-fellowship. The architect of his own opportunities and successes, a farmer during the greater part of his active life, and the steward of important political trusts by reason of ability and public confidence, his claim upon the present and future is more deeply laid in a rare sympathy and resourcefulness which makes the whole world kin, and which renders the possessor thereof beloved, honored, and masterful. He was born in his father's tavern near Eastford Center, Aug. 14, 1837, a son of Ephraim and Hannah (Work) Trowbridge, and grandson of James Trowbridge.

The Trowbridge ancestry is authentically traced back to Thomas, a native of Somersetshire, England, and who came to America in 1636, locating in Dorchester, Mass., where his wife united with the Methodist Church. In 1638-39 he removed to New Haven, and thereafter made several voyages between the Barbadoes and England, locating again in his native land in 1644, and remaining there until his death in Taunton, the place of his birth in Somersetshire, Feb. 7, 1672. The three sons whom he left in New Haven inherited his thrift and honest name, and not only became influential in their respective localities, but acquired large estates.

Deacon James Trowbridge, born in Dorchester, Mass., in 1636, went to New Haven with his father, but later returned and occupied the parental lands in Dorchester. He married for his first wife, Dec. 30, 1659, Margaret Atherton, daughter of Major General Humphrey Atherton, and who died Aug. 17, 1672. His second wife, married Jan. 30, 1674, was Margaret, daughter of Deacon John Jackson. He removed to Cambridge Village, Mass., in 1664, and on the death of his father-in-law, Deacon Jackson, in 1665, succeeded him in the office which he maintained until his death, May 22, 1717, a period of forty-two years. He was chairman of the first board of selectmen of Cambridge in 1679, and continued in the office for nine years; and he was clerk of the writs in 1692-93, and lieutenant and representative in 1700 and 1703. His second wife, Margaret, died Sept. 16, 1727.

James Trowbridge, born Sept. 20, 1682, died Aug. 21, 1714. On Jan. 6, 1709, he married Hannah Bacon, and for his second wife, in 1712, he married Hannah Jackson.

Daniel Trowbridge, born April 6, 1711, married Oct. 8, 1733, Hannah, daughter of Ensign John Spring, of Cambridge, and settled on a farm near Pomfret, Conn., where his wife died June 26, 1763. On April 15, 1767, he married Widow Jerusha Bowen, of Cambridge, who died June 27, 1791. Mr. Trowbridge died Oct. 1, 1795.

James Trowbridge, the grandfather of Deacon Henry, was born Feb. 15, 1740, and died Dec. 17, 1820. He lived on a farm of four hundred acres, and his house stood on the town line between Pomfret and Eastford, the latter being at the time a part of Ashford. He was a very successful farmer and became well-to-do, his wealth being made entirely through a judicious management of his large property. He reared a family of twelve children, and was able to give each of them $2,000 and a "setting out." As a Congregationalist he was one of the main pillars of the church at Eastford, and so regular was his attendance and that of his family, that the neighbors vowed they could set their clocks with perfect accuracy when the band of Trowbridges passed by to service. He was thrice married: Frances Darrow became his wife Dec. 4, 1766, and died July 2, 1782; in November, 1782, he married Mary Kendall, who died March 4, 1801; and his third wife was Rachel Styles, whom he married Nov. 26, 1801, and who died Dec. 30, 1808. James Trowbridge lived to be eighty-three years old, and of his large family, eight were born of the first marriage, and three sons and a daughter by the second union. These children scattered to different parts of the Union, and their descendants are very numerous.

Ephraim Trowbridge, the father of Deacon Henry, was born on the old homestead between Pomfret and Eastford, Aug. 4, 1789, and attended the district schools, remaining at home until his marriage. He then located on a farm which he had purchased near Eastford Center, and which was south of that upon which his son, Henry, now lives. His occupation of farming was combined with the management of a tavern on his property, and this hostelry was for many years the center of sociability among the young people of the neighborhood. The old farm was otherwise interesting, for in the old "training days" its fields became familiar with the tramp of soldierly feet, and great crowds gathered to witness the preparing of the defenders of the country. The owner of the tavern and farm conducted his affairs on a large scale, and his 320 acres yielded him large returns for labor invested. In early life he was an unusually hard worker, but previous to his death, Aug. 4, 1852, he suffered from ill health. He served in the war of 1812, and was present at the defense of New London, and he was a Whig in political affiliation, filling among other offices that of selectman for many years. Like his father he was a regular attendant at the Congregational Church, and contributed liberally towards its support. On April 29, 1818, he married Hannah Work, born in Eastford Feb. 13, 1799, and a daughter of John and Hannah (Paine) Work. Mrs. Trowbridge drew a pension as a soldier's widow, and was among the last of the pensioners of the war of 1812. She died at the home of her son, Henry, May 14, 1884, and is buried beside her husband. The children born to Ephraim Trowbridge and wife are as follows: Hannah, born Feb. 5, 1819, married Frances Watkins, a carpenter, and died in Worcester, Mass., July 7, 1847; Mary Ann, born June 8, 1821, married Elbridge G. Watkins, deceased, and is living in Worcester; Eliza, born May 30, 1823, died May 5, 1824; Elthea, born July 12, 1825, married Prescott A. Thompson, who was in early life a boot-maker, but later for thirty years in the shoe findings business, and she died March 13, 1875; Katherine, born Jan. 20, 1830, died in April, 1831; Edward, born March 29, 1832, was a farmer on the old homestead, married Louise Lyon, and died Feb. 22, 1858; J. Augustin, born Oct. 13, 1834, died Oct. 1, 1855; Henry, born Aug. 14, 1837; and Charles, born April 20, 1840, married Hannah R. Ridge, and died on his farm in Eastford, March 31, 1863.

In his youth Deacon Henry Trowbridge received excellent educational advantages, his training beginning with the district school, which at the time claimed about eighty students. After reaching ten years he worked during the summer time and went to school in the winter, and later, up to his seventeenth year, attended the Eastford high school. Among his earlier teachers was Samuel F. Jones, who afterward became a noted criminal lawyer of Hartford, Conn. Mr. Trowbridge lost his father when fifteen years old, and two years later went to Williamstown, Washington, Co., Vt., where he was employed for three years, 1856-59, on the farm of an uncle. Returning to take charge of the home farm at Eastford, because of the illness of his brother, Edward, he remained there until the death of the latter, and after that worked out by the month for a couple of seasons. For a time he was employed by Joseph D. Barrows, the well-known tanner and currier, in his tannery and on his farm, and was later with Erastus Spalding for six months, the latter having purchased the farm upon which Mr. Trowbridge was born. At the end of six months his health failed, and he went to live with his mother at Eastford Center, and for several years afterward he worked at teaming and farming as his strength permitted. On April 1, 1874, he removed to the farm which has since been his home, and which formerly belonged to Porter Noble. He has for years been among the foremost farmers of the township, but of late has materially lessened his labors in that line. Many pairs of sturdy oxen have been reared and sold on the well-tilled farm, which covers about ninety acres, and is located in the towns of Eastford and Woodstock.

The marriage of Deacon Trowbridge and Laura F. Day, occurred Feb. 24, 1874. Mrs. Trowbridge being a native of Eastford, born March 29, 1842, daughter of Thomas E. and Sally (Butler) Bou-telle, and widow of Abel C. Day, a farmer of Eastford. No children have been born to this union. Mr. Trowbridge is a Republican in political affiliation, and has served as chairman of the board of selectman for two years. He has been assessor three terms, has been a justice of the peace for many years, and for several terms has been a member of the grand jury. In the latter capacity he fearlessly discharged his duty as a citizen and Christian, and was instrumental in bringing many violators of the law to justice. The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Trowbridge has been a particularly harmonious one, the unity of their interests, and their zeal in well-doing, redounding to the betterment of the community at large. They are among the best known Grangers in the country, and are charter members of the Crystal Lake Grange No. 60, of which he has served as master for two years, and has at times been overseer, lecturer, chaplain, and is at present treasurer. Mrs. Trowbridge has served as lecturer for two years, Pomona for the same length of time, Ceres for two years, secretary one year, and is at present overseer. They are also members of Quinebaug Pomona, of which Mrs. Trowbridge is lady assistant; the State and National Granges; as well as various other organizations for mutual aid and encouragement. They are members of the Eastford Congregational Church, and it is doubtful if any other two people in the township have worked so faithfully, or with such good results, in promoting the interests of the church. Deacon Trowbridge united with the church in 1865, and his wife in 1874, and in 1893 he was chosen deacon to succeed Deacon Joseph Barrows. He has served as chairman of the church committee, and has been clerk and treasurer for over a dozen years. Mrs. Trowbridge is a teacher in the Sunday-school, and has been unusually active in the Ladies' Aid Society, of which she has served as president and vice-president, and has for twenty years been secretary and treasurer. This couple are among the mainstays of the high and moral life of Eastford, and the serenity and beauty of their existence, its helpfulness and unfading charm, have been an inspiration to all who have been permitted their friendship, or have known them in whatsoever capacity.

FITCH A. CAREY, one of the representative men of Central Village, Windham county, and a descendant of one of the Colonial families of this part of the State, is a real estate dealer of considerable prominence. The family history of this branch of the Carey family is published in connection with the sketch of Dwight Carey, of the town of Scotland.

James Carey, the grandfather of Fitch A., and the son of James Carey, was born on the old homestead in Scotland town, Dec. 9, 1777. After he reached manhood he was given a portion of the homestead farm in the town of Canterbury, where he resided. He was considered a substantial citizen, was prominent in town affairs, and died in the town at the age of eighty-four years, and was buried in the Carey cemetery. Here also was buried his wife, Phoebe Howard, who was a native of Hampton, Conn. He was a member of the Westminster Congregational Church. To James Carey and wife were born the following children: (1) Phoebe Howard married William F. Willoughby, and their son, Andrew J., is an active farmer in the town of Canterbury; (2) Abigail K. married April 4, 1832, David Adams, of Canterbury, and their son, William S., for many years town clerk, and long a teacher in his native community, is now living retired; (3) Jane died unmarried; and (4) James Benajah was the father of Fitch A.

James Benajah Carey was born in Canterbury, and attended the local school. When a young man he went to Ohio, to make his home with an uncle Howard, and while there also attended school. Being a man of intuition and keen observation he made the most of his advantages, and by the time he was grown had acquired a good practical education. He returned to Connecticut, acquired property and married Mary Adams, a native of Canterbury, and a daughter of Fitch Adams, whose history appears elsewhere. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Carey located on a farm which was given him by his father, a fine farm property in the northwest part of the town, which was worth from $8,000 to $10,000. Here he died at the age of seventy years, and his wife was nearly that age at the time of her death. In politics he was at one time an active Democrat, but later voted with the Republicans, and was elected by them as a selectman in the town, as well as to other local positions. To James B. Carey and wife were born: (1) Asa B. graduated from the West Point Military Academy in 1857, and became an officer in the regular army, serving through the War, and continuing in military life until quite recently, when he retired, being at that time Paymaster General of the United States Army. He married Laura Colby, by whom he had two children: Edward C. (a graduate of West Point, and now a Major in the Philippines), and Edith. Gen. Carey is a resident of Washington, and has a summer home in Vineyard Haven. (2) Fitch Adams is our subject. (3) Elizabeth mar-died Henry Geer, a resident of Scotland, who died, leaving no family. (4) George L. lives retired in Norwich, Conn.; he married Fannie Fisher. (5) Dwight served in Company F, 8th Conn. V. I., and was killed at the battle of Antietam.

Fitch Adams Carey was born Feb. 22, 1838, in Canterbury, where he had the advantage of the local schools, and also of a select school in the town of Pomfret. When he was seventeen, he began for himself as a clerk in the "Company Store," which was then conducted by Darius Wood, in Central Village, and here he remained for a dozen years. For a year he was traveling, chiefly in Mexico, and when he came home, he located in Canterbury, purchasing a farm in the Willoughby District, a short distance west of Packerville, where he carried on farming quite largely for some eight years. At the end of that time giving up farming, he returned to Central Village, where he has since made his home. Since 1877 Mr. Carey has dealt in real estate in Plainfield and Canterbury. In politics he is a Democrat, and in 1860 represented Canterbury in the General Assembly. For a number of years he served on the school committee, has been a member of the board of relief, and for twenty years he has been town auditor. He is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Moosup Lodge, No. 114.

Mr. Carey has been twice married. On April 15, 1868, he married Jennie, daughter of Archibald, Fry; she died Dec. 9, 1879, leaving a daughter, Jennie F., born May 20, 1872, who is now the wife of Fred W. Tillinghast, of Central Village. For his second wife Mr. Carey married Eliza, the daughter of Comfort Walker.

The Walker Family records are in part as follows: Aaron Walker, a farmer, was the grandfather of Mrs. Carey. He lived and died in South Killingly, passing away June 16, 1816, at the age of forty years. His widow married James Love. To Aaron Walker was born the following family: Thomas, who lived near Auburn, N. Y., where he died; Comfort, the father of Mrs. Carey; Julia, who married Elisha Vaughn, of Killingly, Conn.; and Mary, who died young.

Comfort Walker was born Oct. 2, 1809, and he died Sept. 2, 1852. He married Betsy Bennett, of Foster, R. I., who was born March 9, 1809, and died March 28, 1882. She was a daughter of Israel and Deborah (Mitchell) Bennett, of Rhode Island. Mr. Walker was a mason, and for a time lived in Killingly, but his later years were spent in Central Village. To Comfort Walker and his wife were born: (1) Aaron, born April 18, 1835, married Delia Cleveland, of Brooklyn, Conn., and died in Colorado Springs, Colo., May 5, 1883; (2) Henry, born Oct. 15, 1838, served in the Civil war, and married Caroline Safford, a resident of Central Village; (3) William O., born March 31, 1840, married Annie Cutler, and lives at Newton, Mass.; (4)

Eliza, who is Mrs. Carey, was born Feb. 13, 1843; and (5) Albert C., born July 4, 1850, married Carrie Besse, and has a home in Central Village.

ALONZO LYMAN HOWARD, a merchant at Stafford Springs, with a varied and creditable history behind him, was born in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., April 9, 1841, and is a son of Alonzo Azariah Howard, who was a farmer, and who married Angeline Colton. The father died June 20, 1840, at the age of thirty years, leaving to those who followed him the memory of an honest and hard-working man, who thought it enough to attend to his own business, and while he took Democratic ground, was not seeking office or anxious for political emoluments. Of medium size, and quite healthy, his death came as the result of a fall from a building he was assisting in moving.

Alonzo A. Howard was married Nov. 18, 1834, to Angeline Colton, who was born July 22, 1818, a daughter of Chauncey and Loruhamah (Hancock) Colton, of Monson, Mass. Mr. Colton was a tanner and for many years was in business for himself. To this union were born two children: (1) Harriet Alvira, born Jan. 24, 1837, in Stafford, married John Fay Hyde, of Sturbridge, Mass., April 26, 1870. Until he reached the age of forty, he was a farmer, but then became a banker, and with his wife removed to Buda, Ill., where he died Sept. 3, 1889. (2) Alonzo L.

Mrs. Howard did not remain a widow long, but was married Oct. 3, 1844, at Monson, Mass., to Joseph Dorsett, a man of quiet and unassuming character, but of genuine worth. He was a carpenter and farmer, and died Oct. 31, 1870. To this second marriage was born Olive Malvina, April 27, 1846, who married G. W. Chamberlain, a shipping clerk in the Jewell Belting Company of Hartford, by whom she had one child, Palmer Harrison, married to May Lucinda Case, and the bookkeeper for a firm in West Hartford. On his mother's side, Mr. Howard is descended from Moses Hancock, his great-grandfather, who served seven years in the Continental army.

Abijah Howard, the grandfather of Alonzo L., lived on the old Howard homestead in West Stafford many years, where he died about 1838, having been a lifelong farmer. The farm on which he lived was a large one and he is remembered as a hard-working man. Phoebe Butler, who became his wife, was born in Monson, Mass., and died in 1848. To them were born: Caroline, who married Marvin Church, and died in Great Barrington; Lyman E., who married Adaline Colton, and lived and died on the old homestead; Alonzo A., the father of Alonzo L.; Joseph Butler, who married Lucilla Lull, and died on the old homestead; Arasmus A., who married a Miss Bartlett, died May 11, 1902, in New Hampshire; Angeline, who died on the old homestead when she was sixteen years old.

Alonzo L. Howard was born in Stafford, but had his schooling in Monson, Mass., where his parents removed when he was but three years old. When he was nineteen years old he finished his school days, though from the age of sixteen years he had worked quite a little in the Converseville Woolen Mill, attending cards, doing this from April, 1857, to October, 1860, when the mill was destroyed by fire. Young Howard went to Wales, but soon resumed his place in the rebuilt mills at Converseville, where he remained until his enlistment in the Union army. This occurred at Stafford, Conn., Aug. 23, 1862, when he became a member of Co. D, 25th C. V. I., being mustered into service as a corporal at Hartford. In the battle at Irish Bend, La., April 14, 1863, he received wounds in his head and in his breast, which have given him some trouble. In the expedition of Gen. Banks to Port Hudson, and elsewhere, he saw active service, and made a good record as a gallant and intelligent soldier. At Hartford, Aug. 26, 1863, he was mustered out of service.

After the return of Mr. Howard from the war he resumed his position as a spinner in the Converseville Woolen Mill, but remained there a brief time only, leaving to take a position as a loom tender in the loom department of the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Company. There he was employed some three or four years, when he was put in charge of the weaving at Orcuttville mill, owned and operated by Josiah Converse. On the closing of this enterprise, Mr. Howard went to Monson, Mass., to take charge of the looms and weave room of the Lyon Mill, a place he held for about a year, after which he was in charge of the weaving at the Orcuttville mill for a number of months. In 1873 he left the mills and opened a fish and oyster market in Stafford Springs, Conn., a business in which he was quite successful, but which he sold out after some three years, and was quite steadily engaged in the ice business for some seven or eight years. Then he sold this to Horace Town, and for some three years was engaged with Dimock Brothers in the meat business, and then for eight years with Bidwell and Company in the same line. His health became poor, obliging him to give up hard manual labor, and in September, 1895, he went into the dry goods business on an extended scale, almost immediately meeting with a marked success.

Mr. Howard is Officer of the Day of Winter Post, No. 44, G. A. R., and is financial recorder of the Temple of Honor, of which he was a charter member. In the Golden Cross, of which he was a charter member, Mr. Howard is the Keeper of Records. In his religious associations, Mr. Howard is a devoted Methodist, and has been one of the stewards of the Church for several years. In his politics he is a Prohibitionist.

Alonzo L. Howard and Hannah E. Winter were married April 9, 1862. Mrs. Howard is a daughter of David and Sallie (Dean) Winter, of Stafford, Conn., and is the mother of the following family: Fred William, connected with the Stafford Press; Mary Alvira, in the store with her father; Gertrude Amelia, who died at the age of six years and two months.

HON. JOHN THOMPSON, a veteran of the Civil war, is a prominent resident of Tolland county, but as his farm in the town of Ellington extends "over the line" into the town of East Windsor, Hartford county, he may also be claimed as a citizen there. His family has been more or less closely identified with East Windsor from an early period, and, in fact, is well known throughout the State, many of its members having served in public office or been prominent in other lines.

Mr. Thompson was born Jan. 11, 1840, on his present homestead, a son of John and Annie E. (Ellsworth) Thompson. The family is of Scottish origin, and has been identified with Connecticut for nearly two hundred years, the ancestors having been among the early settlers of East Windsor. William and Margaret Thompson, natives of Scotland, left their early home in 1716, setting out for New England with their family of nine children. William, Robert, Ruth, Marian, James, Hugh, Samuel, John and Joseph. They first went to Ireland, however, and while there the father was taken sick and died. Before death he advised his wife to continue the journey, and in 1718 she came with her family to this country. The Thompsons located in Hartford county, in the town of East Windsor, and some of the land now occupied by John Thompson has been held in the family name for many years. Samuel Thompson, one of the sons of William and Margaret, was the progenitor of the Thompsons of East Windsor. His son James was the father of John McKnight Thompson, and grandfather of John, father of the John whose name introduces these lines.

John Thompson, father of Hon. John, was a well known agriculturist of the town of Ellington, Tolland county. He married Miss Anna E. Ellsworth, daughter of Benjamin Ellsworth, and they had nine children, as follows: Sabra, wife of Fitts Stoughton, of Rockville, Conn.; Mary F., wife of James D. McKnight, of the town of Ellington, Tolland county; Julia, deceased wife of G. N. Booth, of East Windsor; Edwin Franklin, a farmer of East Windsor; Martha, who married J. A. Pascoe, and is deceased; Sophronia, deceased; Emily, wife of James B. Stiles; John; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Newell, and is also deceased.

During his youth John Thompson attended the common schools near his home and the high school at Ellington, and at the age of twenty-one he took charge of the homestead, where he has continued to reside. On Aug. 25, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, 25th Conn. V. I., in which he served as first corporal, and was wounded in his first engagement, the battle of Irish Bend, La., April 14.

John Thompson

1863, a minie ball passing through his right jaw. From April until August, 1863, he was under treatment in a field hospital, also at the Institute Hospital in New Orleans, and on Aug. 26, 1863, he received an honorable discharge at Hartford. On his return home he resumed the management of the farm, but as time passed his attention was given to other interests and the place is now operated by his son. It is a fine estate of 200 acres, upon which he has made substantial improvements, keeping fully abreast of modern agricultural methods. He is president of the Ellington Creamery, and is connected with other enterprises, being the director of the Patrons Mutual Fire Insurance Co., for Tolland county. His sound judgment on business matters is valued by his associates, and of late years his time has been largely occupied with duties as a public official. In 1885 he was elected, on the Republican ticket, to the State Legislature, and was again so honored in 1895, while in 1897 he was elected county commissioner of Tolland county, in which office he has served since July 1st, of that year. Among other responsible offices which he has held we may mention several years of service as selectman of the town of Ellington; two years as a member of the State Board of Agriculture; and two years as county auditor, in 1895 and 1896. He is a leading worker in the Patrons of Husbandry, having served two years as master of Ellington Grange, and also as first master of East Central Pomona Grange for two years from the date of its organization. Mr. Thompson is a member of the Congregational Church at Ellington, and unites with Burpee Post, No. 71, G. A. R., at Rockville.

On Feb. 10, 1870, Mr. Thompson married Miss Amanda J. Bancroft, daughter of Bissell and Joanna (Morton) Bancroft, of Warehouse Point, and four children have blessed the union: (1) Morton E. has charge of the homestead. (2) Lizzie M. married B. F. Pinney, of Somers, Conn. (3) Royal W. is the private secretary of Senator Joseph R. Hawley, of Hartford, Conn. (4) Emery J. is quartermaster's clerk on board the United States steamer "Chester." He was at Porto Rico during the war with Spain, and is now stationed at Havana.

LEANDER FREEMAN has been longer in mercantile life in Willimantic than any other merchant in the city now in active business, and he is the president and principal stockholder in the T. R. Sadd Company, the largest notion house in Willimantic and indeed in Windham county.

When a young man Mr. Freeman was thrown entirely on his own resources, but became one of the successful merchants of the city, and he has contributed a very considerable force to its growth and development. His long career as a merchant has been honorable, and has put him in the foremost place in the business and commercial circles of the day.

Leander Freeman was born at Albion, R. I., April 29, 1838, a son of William and Olive (Merchant) Freeman, the former a native of Mendon, Mass., and the latter of Cape Cod. The grandparents of Leander Freeman removed to Albion, when William Freeman was but a small boy. The grandmother of Leander Freeman was known when a girl as Miss Legg, and belonged to an old and prominent family. The same thing may be said of the Merchants, to which Olive Merchant belonged; she was one of thirteen children.

William Freeman, one of eleven children, was reared in Albion, where he was employed in the cotton mills under Whiting Hayden, who later became one of the most prominent manufacturers of Willimantic. William Freeman and Olive Merchant were married in Albion, where they began their housekeeping, but he soon removed to Pawtucket, to enter the employ of Stephen P. Fisk, a brother-in-law, the husband of Sally Merchant. Mr. Fisk was an extensive contractor and builder, and William Freeman was employed by him as a foreman in many varied enterprises, remaining with him through his active life as a trusted and confidential employe. Mr. and Mrs. William Freeman had the following children: Leander; William H., who died at the age of six years; and William F., who died at the same age. Mr. Freeman passed away at the age of sixty-five years, and his wife when she was sixty-three.

Leander Freeman was the only child of his parents who lived to maturity, and when he was but a small boy he was taken by his parents to Pawtucket, where he had his education in the city schools, all being completed before he was sixteen years old. At this age he took up the jeweler's trade with a Mr. A. G. Reynolds of Pawtucket, receiving three dollars a week for wages. The store in which he worked was owned by B. S. Farrington, of Woonsocket, R. I., but was managed by Mr. Reynolds. After his first year at Pawtucket, Mr. Freeman went to Woonsocket, where he remained five years, and was then employed in the Waltham Watch Factory at Waltham, Mass. After some time, during the Civil war, Mr. Freeman returned to Woonsocket, where he spent four months in 1864, and then came to Willimantic, to enter the employ of J. R. Robinson, jeweler. A little later, Mr. Freeman was employed as foreman of a gang of men, then engaged in the construction of a part of the then N. Y. & N. E. Railroad, between North Windham and Willimantic. In 1866 Mr. Freeman became a member of the firm of Walden & Freeman, to engage in the jewelry business, having their store on Main street, nearly opposite the Windham National Bank, the postoffice being established in the rear portion of the room. The store was opened in October, 1866, and continued for twelve years. At the completion of the Plaza hotel at the corner of Church and Main streets in 1874, Mr. Freeman severed his connection with Mr. Walden, and opened a jewelry store in the corner store of that building, being the first occupant of the room. C. C. Crandall shared it with him and carried a line of books and stationery. Mr. Freeman formed a partnership with John C. Tracy, in September, 1886, under the firm name of Freeman & Tracy, and four years later Mr. Freeman sold out to Mr. Tracy. Prior to this, the business had been removed to Union Block. In 1893 Mr. Freeman purchased the stores of the T. R. Sadd Co. syndicate in Bridgeport, New London, Willimantic, and Putnam, Conn. The Willimantic store was then located in the Bank Building. These various enterprises were conducted by Mr. Freeman until he could dispose of them advantageously, and at the present time the store in Willimantic is the only one that remains in his possession. In December, 1896, Mr. Freeman erected an excellent business block on Main street, into which the store was removed. On May 15, 1899, the T. R. Sadd Company, a joint-stock business, was formed, with Mr. Freeman as president, a position he is still holding.

On Nov. 27, 1866, Mr. Freeman was married in Willimantic to Miss Anna, daughter of John H. and Abby (Cook) Capen, the former of whom was one of the prominent men in Willimantic in his day. To this union came one child, Grace, born June 5, 1871, who married, Oct. 23, 1889, T. R. Sadd, a native of Ellington, Conn., and a son of Carlos R. and Elizabeth A. Sadd. Mr. Freeman cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860. Although never a politician, he has been a staunch supporter of his party, and was elected to represent the Third ward in the first city council of Willimantic, serving two years as a member of that body. Mr. Freeman has given his attention to business to the exclusion of an active participation in politics. He is a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., at Willimantic, and held the position of local treasurer for two years. Mr. Freeman has been many years in Willimantic, and has come into the possession of a large landed property. In the city he has seen many changes, and has been an important factor in its development.

JAMES H. WITTER. The soldier, the statesman and the poet all have their places in history, but there have been men who have never engaged in sanguinary conflicts, never held the attention of nations through their utterances and never courted the muse, and yet whose lives have been potent for good and have stood representative of the loftiest integrity and honor. History, in its generic province, is cruel in its concealment of the noble, ambitious and worthy deeds of men who were neither born to greatness nor had it thrust upon them, but whose lives have been an essential part of civic economy and have been as prolific in absolute values as those of many whose names and deeds have been widely heralded. Each man plays a part in the great human drama, and, if he performs well his assigned role, whether in the sphere of "lofty deeds and great," or on the more obscure level where the acts and efforts are equally as valuable as elements in the complex production, he is deserving of all honor and a place on the pages of history. The ranks of the world's workers find an able and honored representative in the subject of this review, who is one of the progressive and influential farmers of the town of Canterbury, Windham county, and who is a member of a family whose name has been prominently identified with the history of the State of Connecticut from the early Colonial epoch. None can deny that there is all of wisdom in the statement of Sumner, that "The true grandeur of nations is in those qualities which constitute the true greatness of the individual," and it is an important public duty to perpetuate, so far as possible, the record of the lives of those who have been factors in the civic, public and industrial affairs of every community, so that the example of each individual, in whatever field his work may have been done, may stand as an object lesson and an incentive to those who come after him. In the case at hand we are gratified in being able to offer a brief resume of the personal career and genealogical record of one of the representative citizens of Windham county.

The Witter family traces its lineage to staunch Scottish origin, and the name became identified with American history in the latter half of the seventeenth century, when two brothers, Ebenezer and Joseph Witter, emigrated to the New World from Scotland, Joseph locating in Rhode Island, where he passed the residue of his life. Deacon Ebenezer Witter, the other, and the progenitor to whom the subject of this sketch traces his lineage, left Scotland in the year 1668, and upon arriving in America settled at Preston, New London Co., Conn., where the remainder of his life was passed, his death occurring in the year 1712, while his wife, Dorothy, survived him many years, passing away in 1750, at the venerable age of eighty-four years. They became the parents of three sons and four daughters, and our subject traces his direct ancestry through the son Ebenezer, Jr., concerning whom the records reveal the fact that in 1729 he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Brown, who was born in 1708. They resided in Preston, and of their fifteen children the one who is next in the line of direct descent to James H. was Deacon Nathan Witter, who was born in Preston in 1731, and who was there reared to maturity, and there married.

In 1754 Nathan Witter came to Brooklyn, Windham county, and located on the farm now owned and occupied by Joseph B. Stetson, one of his descendants. The land was in its primitive state at the time when he thus made settlement, but he cleared and reclaimed the same and developed a valuable and productive farm, where he continued to make his home until his death, which occurred Oct. 30, 1822, at which time he had attained the patriarchal age of ninety-one years. In Preston was solemnized his marriage to Keziah Branch, who died Oct. 25, 1806, at the age of seventy-two years; both were interred in the old cemetery located about one mile south of the present burying-ground of the Witter family, the exact location of their resting-place being not certain at the present time, on which account the stones erected in their memory are placed in the Witter cemetery, in the old homestead farm; the original burying-ground is now a tangle of vines and shrubbery.

Nathan Witter, Jr., the next in line of descent, a representative of the fourth generation of the family in America, was born on the old homestead in the town of Canterbury in 1760. He passed practically his entire life in Brooklyn, having erected a house on the farm, and having there made his home until his death, except for a short interval passed at Killingly, this State, while his vocation was that of farming, in which he met a due measure of success, being one of the honored and substantial citizens of his community. He married Mary Fuller, who was born in Hampton, Conn., and died May 24, 1837, at the age of seventy-seven years. Her husband survived her, his death occurring Nov. 14, 1856, and they rest side by side in the Witter cemetery. Mr. Witter was a staunch Democrat in his political proclivities, holding to the principles exemplified by Jefferson, and in the stormy epoch leading up to the war of the Rebellion he was an ardent Abolitionist, though he did not live to see the foul institution of human slavery blotted from his country. He was one of the prominent and zealous members of the Unitarian Church in Brooklyn. Nathan and Mary (Fuller) Witter, grandparents of our subject, became the parents of six children, namely: Hannah became the wife of Nathaniel Williams, of Brooklyn, Windham county. Nathan, Jr., was the father of James H. Mary first married a Mr. Payne, by whom she had three children, Horatio, Nathan and Sarah, and after his death became the wife of Phineas Searles, by which union there was one son, Lewis. Nancy never married, and lived to a venerable age in Brooklyn. Asa, who died in Hampton, this State, was twice married, first to Myra Holt, and after her death to Mrs. Adams, of Canterbury; they had one daughter, Amelia. Eben, who passed his entire life in Brooklyn, was first married there to Mehitable Jewett, and second to a widow, Mrs. Sophia Clark; he had no children.

Nathan Witter, father of our subject, was born in Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., in November, 1790, but his parents soon afterward returned to Brooklyn, where he virtually passed his entire life. He acquired his early educational training in the district schools and in the Bell School, at Hampton, conducted by a Mr. Stevens. That he made good use of the opportunities thus afforded him is evident when we revert to the fact that as a young man he proved a successful and popular teacher in the schools of his native county, his pedagogic efforts having covered several winter terms. His vocation was that of farming, his fine homestead being located south of that of Joseph B. Stetson, and comprising 127 acres. After his death the place was appraised at a valuation of $2,250. He was a man of strong intellectuality, progressive ideas and industrious habits, and in his chosen field of enterprise attained a high degree of success, while he so ordered his life as to retain the unqualified confidence and regard of all who knew him, as was shown in his being chosen as the incumbent of various local offices of public trust and responsibility, including that of justice of the peace, in which he served for a number of years. In politics he originally gave his support to the Whig party, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same, and thereafter continued a stalwart advocate of its principles and policies. His life was one of signal usefulness and honor, and in his death, which occurred Nov. 5, 1861, the community lost one of its valuable and worthy citizens.

Nathan Witter was united in marriage, in 1818, to Miss Abigail Litchfield, who was born in Brooklyn April 13, 1797, and who died in Canterbury Oct. 30, 1886, loved by all who had come within the sphere of her gracious and kindly influence. She was the daughter of Daniel and Olive (Pierce) Litchfield, both representatives of old families of New England. Of the children of Nathan and Abigail (Litchfield) Witter we incorporate the following data: Nathan P., born July 18, 1819, died in Brooklyn, and he is survived by three sons, Riley B., Nathan W. and George A., and Harriet A., who married Warren Gardiner. Emily Eliza, born Aug. 25, 1823, is the wife of Addison Mascraft, of Putnam, this State. James Henry is the immediate subject of this review.

James Henry Witter was born on the parental homestead in the town of Brooklyn, Feb. 6, 1834, and in his youth was afforded such educational advantages as were to be had in the public schools of the locality, there laying the foundation for that broad fund of information which he has since gained through personal application, judicious reading and association with the practical affairs of life. Mr. Witter gave practical inception to his independent career when seventeen years of age, at which time he secured a clerkship in the general store of Edwin Ely, at Danielson, Windham county, retaining this incumbency about one year, and gaining a valuable knowledge of business methods. After leaving this position he turned his attention to the sturdy vocation to which he had been reared, and in connection with the great basic art of bandry he has gained marked prestige and being recognized as one of the leading representatives of the agricultural industry in his

f Mansfield, who died March 8, 1868. Their children were: Heman, born Nov. 20, 1811, a stone cutter in Willimantic, who married (first) Samma Sessions, and (second) a Miss Harding; Steadman W., born Oct. 15, 1812, a tailor and later a butcher, who married Olive Barrows and died in Mansfield; Leander, born May 6, 1815, a farmer, who married Mary Abby Edgertown and died in Holland, Conn.; Edwin, born March 16, 1817; Mary Ann, born June 18, 1828, who married Francis Marble, and is now a resident of Willimantic.

(VI) Edwin Storrs, father of Ralph W., was born in Mansfield and was reared to farm work. He resided at home until his marriage and then purchased a farm adjoining the homestead, where he resided for the rest of his life, and where he died Feb. 16, 1870. In politics he was a Republican, and was a member of the Baptist Church. On Sept. 26, 1838, he was married to Lura Wright, a native of Ashford, Conn., and died in Mansfield at the age of sixty-eight. To this marriage but one child was born, Ralph Wright.

(VII) Ralph Wright Storrs was born July 14, 1839, in Ashford, Conn., while his mother was at her home on a visit. He was reared to farm work, and later worked for his father and for the neighbors by the month, and had only a district school education. After his marriage in 1861, he removed to the home of his wife's parents, where he resided engaged in farming until in September, 1863, when he enlisted for nine months service in the Civil war, entering Co. E, 22d Conn. V. I., as a private. The regiment was recruited at Hartford, under Col. Burnham, the first captain being Gardiner Southworth, and a later one, Capt. Everett Preston. They saw service in Virginia, although they had no fighting; Mr. Storrs was obliged to spend a part of his time in the Fairfax Seminary hospital, but returned north with his regiment and was mustered out at Hartford.

Judge Ralph Wright Storrs in the seventies was extensively engaged in dealing in live stock. He went west to Canada and to New York State and bought a large number of horses and cattle which he shipped East and sold them to butchers and farmers. He was engaged in this business a number of years or until dressed beef was shipped in. In addition to his private business Mr. Storrs has been very active in town affairs. In politics he is a Republican, and has been town clerk for fourteen years; was judge of probate of Mansfield from 1882 to Jan. 1, 1901, when he resigned; he has also held the office of town treasurer, but now is devoting his time to the management of his extensive private affairs. Mr. Storrs represented Mansfield in the Legislature in 1880, and served on the committee on Agriculture, and he was a delegate to the constitutional convention in 1902. He is one of the town's most substantial citizens and has done much toward its development. All of the handsome buildings on the farm were erected by him and these are now owned and operated by his son.

On Nov. 26, 1861, Judge Storrs was united in marriage with Mary A. Gurley, who was born Oct. 21, 1841, in Mansfield, a daughter of Ebenezer R. and Julia Ann (Gardiner) Gurley; she died Nov. 19, 1896. Their oldest son, Eckley R., born Oct. 19, 1866, is a graduate, 1890, of the American Veterinary College of New York, and for several years practiced in Willimantic; later he attended and was graduated from Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, and is now one of the physicians at the city hospital in Hartford; he married Edna C. Green, of Providence, R. I., and has one son, Ralph Warren. Lewellyn J., the second child, was born May 22, 1868. Marion, born Aug. 3, 1874, graduated from Mt. Holyoke Seminary in 1900.

(VIII) LEWELLYN J. STORRS, son of the Judge, was born in Mansfield, on the farm he now occupies. His education was pursued in the district schools, with one year at the Natchaug high school, at Willimantic, graduating from the business department of that school in 1886. He then returned to the home farm, where he has continued ever since, successfully engaged in general farming and owning a fine tract of 200 acres. He is recognized as one of the most prosperous and enterprising of the younger farmers of the county.

On May 22, 1889, Mr. Storrs was married to Louise Gardiner, who was born in Willington, Oct. 13, 1869, daughter of William and Louise (Church) Gardiner, and their children are: Wayne L., born June 9, 1891; and Bernice G., born Oct. 4, 1895. Mr. Storrs was first elected on the board of selectmen in 1891, and served one year as third member of the board. In 1893 he was elected as second member of the board and in 1896 he became elected first selectman, holding the office four terms, until 1900. In November of the latter year he was elected judge of probate to succeed his father, who intended to resign, and he has held the office since January, 1901, one of the youngest judges in the State. From March 22, 1902, to Jan. 6, 1903, he acted as judge of probate of the Coventry District. Although he was elected town clerk and also treasurer in 1892, the vote was thrown out on account of some defect in the ticket. In February, 1903, he was made one of the trustees of the Connecticut Agricultural College. His Republicanism is staunch but he is an official pleasing to the town, irrespective of party. For a long period he has been a member of the Spring Hill Baptist Church, as is his estimable wife, and he has held the greater number of official positions in it. Both he and his father are among the leading citizens of the town, and are active in all of its affairs.

WALTER PALMER, a retired farmer and cattle drover of Plainfield, Windham county, who has accumulated a very fair portion of this world's goods by honest effort and energetic striving, comes from an old Colonial family, and well sustains the good name that has come down to him from a God-fearing ancestry.

The first American representative of this excellent Plainfield family was Walter Palmer, born in Nottingham, England, in 1598, who came in 1629 to Charlestown, Mass., where he died in 1662. Our subject traces his descent back through Samuel, Walter, Walter, Gersham and Walter to this English-born progenitor.

Walter Palmer, the great-grandfather of our subject, was the first of the name in Plainfield, Conn., and was a native of Stonington, Conn. When quite a young man he came to Plainfield, purchasing a farm on Stone Hill. His son, Walter Palmer, grandfather of our subject, for a time kept hotel at the foot of Palmer Hill, where George H. Palmer now lives. He took an active part in town affairs, and was a stockholder in the Union factory, the first cotton mill built in the town. In religious affairs he was also prominent, and assisted in building the Presbyterian Church.

Samuel Palmer was born in Stone Hill, where he was reared, and where he remained until about the time of his marriage, when he located on the farm that was first purchased by his grandfather, in the Stone Hill District. He was a lifelong tiller of the soil. He married Lydia R. Ormsbee, a daughter of Capt. Abraham and Isabella (Perry) Ormsbee; the latter was a daughter of Capt. John Perry, and was born in Seekonk, Mass., in 1801; she died in Plainfield in 1885. Capt. Ormsbee was a native of England. He had two sons, William and Abram, who were in the War of 1812. Capt. Ormsbee was a colonel in the Revolutionary war.

Samuel Palmer was the father of the following family: (1) Walter, whose name appears at the opening of this article, was born March 25, 1824. (2) Samuel, born in Plainfield, has always lived in his native town until recently, when he moved to Griswold, Conn. (3) Nancy J. married Benjamin Cutler, and, after his death, Philip H. Manchester, of Swansea, Mass. (4) Benjamin died young. (5) William H. died young. (6) Lydia C. married George Dorrance, of Plainfield.

Walter Palmer was born and reared in the Stone Hill District of Plainfield, where he received his education in the common school. Starting out at the age of twenty-one, with hardly a dollar in his pocket, he has not only acquired a competence by his business thrift and industry, but has gained in the school of experience those practical qualities that go to make up the typical New Englander, and have long ago won for him the respect and confidence of all with whom he has come into contact. As a farmer few have matched his successful achievements. In March, 1852, he bought the Isaac Gallup farm, lying about a mile south of Plainfield, comprising at that time some 221 acres.

A mortgage of $4,200 was placed on the place, and acquaintances said that he would never be able to lift it. However, he succeeded in paying the debt in five years, at the cost of almost superhuman efforts. Since that time he has laid out in improvements considerably more than the original sum which the place cost him. He has dug ditches and put up stone walls that represent years of such toil as only men of great physical strength and powerful constitution could endure. Although Mr. Palmer is a man of seventy-nine, he is strong and hearty, having only recently given up the working of the large farm to his son-in-law.

It was in 1852 that Mr. Palmer made his first trip into northern New York and Canada to buy cattle. The business proved remunerative, and though several men have dealt in cattle in Plainfield, without doubt Mr. Palmer carried on the most extensive business in that line for many years. In a single year he brought in 1,400 head of cattle, and on a single day has sold 218 head. For many years he made a business of handling from 400 to 600 head, his customers coming from all parts of New England to deal with him. Mr. Palmer began buying wool from the farmers in 1861, acting as agent for others, and since that time, with the exception of the factories, has probably bought more wool than any other man in the county. He has a fine reputation as an upright and thoroughly honest dealer. Mr. Palmer now owns more than a thousand acres of land, and has fourteen tenement houses in Central Village, which yield him a very good income. He also owns three houses and the postoffice building at Plainfield.

Mr. Palmer was married, in 1848, to Hannah, daughter of Capt. William Shepherd, and not a little of his success in life he attributes to her counsel, help and hearty co-operation. She died in April, 1902. They had the following family: (1) Walter L. is now a resident of Medway, Mass. He was married Feb. 3, 1881, to Ella F. Witter, and for his second wife married Harriet L. Carey. (2) Margaret H. was married Nov. 15, 1883, to Jason P. Lathrop, at present in charge of the family farm; five children have been born to them: Susan H., Nov. 8, 1884; Elsie F., July 24, 1889; Mildred E., March 12, 1893; Walter P., Aug. 14, 1895; and Raymond J., July 14, 1897. (3) Martha E. is the wife of Herbert A. Gallup, of Oneco, Conn., and has two children, John A., born Oct. 5, 1896, and Helen P., Jan. 19, 1900.

In politics Mr. Palmer is a Democrat, and he has held nearly all the offices in the gift of his fellow townsmen. In 1854 he served as first selectman, and he has been on the board many times since. For years he was a member of the board of relief, and for two years was judge of probate. In 1879 he was sent to the General Assembly from Plainfield, and served on the Fish and Cattle committees. His son, Walter L., has also been a representative in the General Assembly.

GEORGE CLARK MARTIN, now living retired in Willimantic, Windham county, has long been noted as one of the most substantial citizens of that place, one whose integrity has never been questioned, and whose character is above reproach.

The Martin family has long been established in this State, and at one time was numerously represented in Hampton and Chaplin, Conn. It has been widely scattered throughout the United States, and perhaps its most distinguished member was Martin Van Buren, the eighth President of the United States. Its history in New England begins with Christopher Martin, who was the ninth signer of the "Compact," and who was treasurer of the "Mayflower." His wife, two sons and two servants accompanied him to this country, where he died shortly after landing. His character and standing were evinced by the fact that he was one of the few men to be called "Master" among the Pilgrims. The death of his wife and that of his son, Solomon, soon followed. The other son settled in Brunswick, Maine. Extensive research has failed to reveal the exact line of descent, yet it is hardly to be doubted that George Martin, of Ipswich, Mass., who married Anne Choate in 1706, was a lineal descendant of the only surviving son of Christopher Martin.

George and Anne (Choate) Martin had two children, Elizabeth, born in 1708; and George, in 1710.

George Martin (2) married for his first wife Grace Howard in 1733, who became the mother of two children, of whom Jonathan died in infancy. Mrs. Martin died in 1736, and her ashes were interred in Hampton, Conn.

David Martin, second son of George (2) and Grace (Howard), was born in 1736, and he died in 1823. Sarah Durkee, his second wife, born in 1714, was married to him in 1737, and she died Nov. 5, 1807, in Vermont. She was the daughter of William and Rebecca (Gould) Durkee, and was a member of a family of ten children. To David and Sarah Martin were born the following family: Grace, born March 6, 1738, married Amos Utley; Sarah, born May 1, 1739, married Henry Brown, died in 1818; Gideon, born Sept. 24, 1740, married Rachel Heath, and removed to Vermont; Aaron, born July 30, 1742, married Eunice Flint, and settled in Vermont; Mercy, born April 18, 1744, went to Vermont; Jonathan died in infancy; Rebecca, born July 3, 1747, married a Mr. Robinson; Lucy, born May 6, 1749, married Ezekiel Nott; George and William, twins, born April 7, 1751, of whom George died when a month old, and William is mentioned below; and George, born Nov. 16, 1753, was the grandfather of James Martin, of Willimantic, and the maternal great-grandfather of Mayor Grant, of Willimantic.

William Martin, son of David and Sarah, married Annie Slate, and became the father of seven children: Zalmon, born in 1785, died at the age of two years; Anna, born in 1786, married Levi Johnson, and lived and died in Windham; Sarah, born in 1787, died when thirteen years old; George, born in 1790, was a merchant in Brooklyn, Conn., where he died unmarried; William, died in childhood; William (2), born in 1795, was a farmer on the old homestead in Hampton, and married Betsy Walcott, by whom he had the following children: Caroline (the first wife of Albert Knight, of Chaplin), William (who lives on the old place), Emily (the second wife of Albert Knight), Eliza (who married Horace Eaton, of Chaplin, and resides in Springfield), Horace (a carpenter, of Toledo, Ohio) and Zalmon (a farmer near Beloit, Wis., where he later became a grain dealer, and where he married); and James. William Martin was a farmer, a man of character and ability, and was highly esteemed in the community where he passed his useful life.

James Martin, son of William and Annie, was born in what was then Hampton, but which is now a part of the town of Chaplin, Conn., March 23, 1798, and was reared after the fashion of farmer lads of his time. He had a district school education, but while still a young boy, he lost his father and made his home with his older brother, William, for some two years. He was married March 6, 1821, to Miss Sarah Clark, who was born Aug. 21, 1799, in Hampton, the daughter of Deacon Amasa and Eleanor (Fuller) Clark. Her father was a prominent man in his day, and his family stood among the best in the town. Mr. and Mrs. Martin were always engaged in farming, and their first home after their marriage was on a farm in what was then Mansfield, but which is now a part of Chaplin. This farm became their home, and there he died Nov. 18, 1846, his wife dying on the second day of the following December. They were buried in what was called the Bedlam cemetery in Chaplin. Early in his life Mr. Martin attended the Christian Church, but later was a worshiper at the Congregational Church, where both he and his wife were regarded as excellent Christian people. He was a staunch Democrat, and represented Chaplin in the General Assembly, and also served as one of the selectmen of the town. A successful farmer, and a man of much energy, his judgment was sound and his management productive of good results. James Martin was the father of the following children: Cornelia, born Dec. 2, 1821, died unmarried Dec. 22, 1839; Sarah J., born Aug. 13, 1823, died March 12, 1839; Angeline, born Nov. 22, 1825, died March 27, 1839; George Clark, born Oct. 31, 1827; James Griffin, born Oct. 8, 1832, was married Oct. 11, 1860, to Jane Johnson, who died in 1879, and he, a successful farmer now retired from active life, makes his home in Willimantic with George Clark.

George Clark Martin was born on the farm in Chaplin, and attended the common schools of his time, working on the farm during the summer seasons.

son, and attending the school in the winter. As his father was not strong and his health very poor for some years, much responsibility was thrown upon the oldest son, so that George Clark was early inured to hard work, and at nineteen had responsibilities thrown upon him far beyond his age. When he was twenty-one the estate was divided and he elected the old homestead as his share. Until 1872 he was very successfully engaged in its cultivation, when he removed to Willimantic to make that city his home. He resided at first on Mountain street, and in 1890 removed to the corner of Spring and North streets, where he has since lived.

Mr. Martin was married April 10, 1853, in North Windham, Conn., to Mrs. Alma (Lincoln) Dexter, widow of William Dexter, and daughter of James and Asenath (Flint) Lincoln. She was born in North Windham. Mr. Martin cast his first vote for Lewis Cass, the Democratic candidate for President in 1848, and the first year he voted he was elected collector and constable of his native town, a compliment rarely paid to so young a man. From time to time, he has filled important offices in the town of Chaplin, being assessor, a member of the board of relief, selectman, and in 1869 was a member of the General Assembly from Chaplin, where he served on the committee on Incorporations. Since coming to Willimantic he has been assessor and a member of the board of relief, and he has also been warden of the borough of Willimantic, as well as a burgess. At the present time he is a trustee of the Willimantic Savings Institute. Since locating in Willimantic Mr. Martin has been practically retired, devoting himself to such labors as he may carry on without too much fatigue and worry. As a cool, clear-minded man of good judgment and shrewd sense he has more than a local standing, and his opinion is often solicited in important financial transactions. His character and integrity are of the very highest order, and his standing among those who know him well is most enviable.

HORACE GOODALE HOLT, now living retired at Rockville, Tolland county, is one of the esteemed residents of that city, who, although in 1846 he came a poor country boy and began work in the mills, has amassed a comfortable fortune, and can look back over a well-spent life. Mr. Holt was born Nov. 21, 1830, in Willington, Conn., the youngest child of his parents, Horace and Polly (Holt) Holt.

Caleb Holt, the grandfather of our subject, resided in Willington, where he successfully followed the business of tanner and currier. He married Sarah Goodale, and the children born of this union were: Royal, who lived near the old homestead in Willington and carried on the business of the farm; Ralph, who lived just opposite and carried on the tanning business, and who married Sally Rider; Joshua, who lived and died in Willington; Johanna, who married Robert Sharp, a builder, joiner and manager of a saw mill, and lived in Willington, near the glass factory; and Horace, the father of our subject.

Horace Holt was born on the old homestead in Willington, Aug. 29, 1784, and attended the district schools of that town. While still a youth he learned the tanning trade under his father, later the shoemaker trade, doing all the family work and repairing for others. Later he bought a farm and engaged on it with his boys. On March 8, 1821, in Willington, he married Polly, daughter of James Holt, and the children born to them were: Henry O., born in 1822, married Louisa Holt, and died in Willington, leaving one daughter, Roselle, who lives in Natick, Mass.; Celenda, born in 1825, married James Caulkins, deceased, and lives in Mansfield, with two daughters, Emily and Harriet; Charles, born in 1827, learned the machinist trade in Stafford, later becoming a member of the firm of M. B. Harvey & Co. at Stafford Hollow, Conn., was also agent of the Phoenix Woolen Company, and in 1880 bought the business, retiring in 1887, and was president of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs; and Horace G., our subject. Mr. Holt was a Whig and attended elections regularly, but was no office seeker. He died Jan. 30, 1863, his wife having died ten years previously, and both lie in the old cemetery at Willington.

Horace G. Holt was born Nov. 21, 1830, in District No. 1, Willington, Conn., where he attended his first school, Orland Glazier being the teacher. Early in life he showed a talent for looking out for himself, engaging with Jonathan Weston, postmaster of Willington, to do chores for him and attend school for his board. During the winters he seldom missed a day from his books, but in the summer time work on the farm had to be done, and the boys of the family usually performed a large part of it. In December, 1846, he determined, if possible, to get a position in some factory. Rockville was beginning to flourish, and many turned to that village to enter some mill, where for some time there seemed work for all, although the salaries were not very large. Our subject was industrious, and when a place as picker was offered him, at $6 a month with board, under Henry Palmer, then manager, he eagerly accepted it. In the spring of 1847 he went to the New England Mill in order to learn the wool-sorting trade, learning this and receiving $140 for eighteen months' work. But he had learned a trade, and was now a sorter, able to command higher wages, and he remained one year and was then put in charge of the department for the New England Mill. Two years later he went to Waterbury, and was wool sorter at the Manhan Mill, one year later going to Glenville, in the town of Greenwich, as wool sorter in a felt mill, two years later returning to Rockville to take a similar position in the Leeds Mill, where he remained some twenty years. For a short time he was in the American Mill, and then went into Clark Holt's Thread mill, which was known as the Glasgo Mill, where he was overseer in the spooling room, his first employment at other work than wool sorting, and there he remained until the failure of the mill. A gingham mill then secured his services as starcher, but the work did not agree with him and he decided to give up mill work entirely. Since that time he has engaged in carpenter work, and was also an efficient salesman for the lumber yard of George Paulk for a number of years, later engaging with Thomas A. Lake, but since 1896 he has practically attended only to his private interests.

Mr. Holt was married in Mansfield, Conn., Oct. 18, 1852, to Miss Jane Lyman, who was born Sept. 1, 1822, in Tolland, Conn., a daughter of Eliphalet and Nancy A. (Hovey) Lyman; she died in Rockville in 1899, having lived a Christian life, a consistent member of the Congregational Church. One daughter, Jennie L., was born June 4, 1859, and died in December, 1865. The second marriage of Mr. Holt was to Elizabeth A., widow of Ira Emery, daughter of Joseph and Julia (Richardson) Irish. Mrs. Holt is a native of Manchester, Conn., and a lady of education and refinement. She is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to Burpee Post, G. A. R.

Mr. Holt is a very strong Republican, his vote having been cast for Winfield Scott, ever since which time he has taken a great interest in the success of his party. As a member of the Union Congregational Church he is highly regarded, and fraternally is a valued member of Fayette Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Rockville. As a substantial business man of high integrity, Mr. Holt enjoys the confidence and esteem of the whole community.

WILLIAM E. FENNER, a successful farmer and extensive poultry raiser of Mansfield, Tolland county, occupies a fine farm about a mile east of Gurleyville.

Bowen Fenner, his grandfather, was a resident of Warwick, R. I., where he was born. He acted as watchman for many years in a factory at Natick, R. I., owned by A. & W. Sprague. He married Hulda Wright, and they died within a short time of one another.

Amos Fenner, his son, and father of William E., was one of a large family. He was born April 7, 1807, in Warwick, R. I., where he spent his early life, working upon the farm, and later employed as overseer in a weave shop owned by A. & W. Sprague, continuing with that firm for fourteen years. The famous "Dow war" in Rhode Island then came on, and not liking the disturbed state of affairs he removed to Mansfield, Tolland Co., Conn., after making a visit to the town, purchased the farm where our subject now resides, and there spent the remainder of his life, engaged in farming. He died in November, 1883, and was buried at Gurleyville. In politics he was a Republican, but not particularly active, and he never sought for office. Both he and his wife were consistent members of the Baptist Church. On April 2, 1833, he married Hannah Burlingame, who was born June 3, 1805, daughter of Earl and Amy (Burton) Burlingame. Mrs. Fenner fell from a wagon April 1, 1881, and died very soon afterward, from injuries sustained in the accident.

William E. Fenner was the only child of his parents, and was born Feb. 9, 1837, in Warwick, R. I. He was brought to Mansfield when but six years old, and here worked upon the farm, attending the district school during the winter months. When twenty-one he removed to Holland, Mass., and purchased a saw and grist mill, which he operated for nearly seven years, finally selling it and returning to Mansfield, where he was engaged in the buying of produce for several years. His next venture was carried on in Worcester, Mass., and after the death of his mother he returned home to look after his bereaved father, and upon the death of the latter came into possession of his present fine farm. Since then he has enlarged his field of operation, and now raises poultry and has a large vinegar mill, besides carrying on general farming on his place of 100 acres. He has been engaged in poultry raising for the past ten years, and has in the neighborhood of 1,000 fowls in his yards, which are among the largest in the county, and are thoroughly equipped with all modern improvements. His chickens and eggs find ready market, as he carries a fine strain of poultry. His vinegar, which he has been making for twenty years, also meets with a ready sale, and the same is true of his other products. As a result of his prosperity his home is a very pleasant and comfortable one, and all his buildings are in excellent condition.

On Aug. 16, 1859, Mr. Fenner was married to Antice D. Holly, who was born Feb. 21, 1835, and one child has come to this union, Frank Ellsworth, who was born July 17, 1865. He graduated from Storrs' Agricultural College in June, 1885. Later he was employed as manager of the store of T. R. Sudd, in Putnam, Conn., and since 1889 has been engaged in operating a kitchen furnishing and notion goods store in Waterbury, Conn., of which he is proprietor; by his efforts he has built up a large business. On Sept. 12, 1888, he married Miss Minnie Davis. Socially he is a member of Connecticut Lodge, No. 76, A. F. & A. M., of Waterbury, and has served as master of same.

William E. Fenner is a Republican in politics, and acted as representative from Mansfield in 1888, and served on the committee on Capitol Furniture and Grounds. Mrs. Fenner is a member of the Methodist Church, which Mr. Fenner attends and liberally supports.

The history of the Holly family is interesting. Perry Holly, the grandfather of Mrs. Fenner, was a native of Rhode Island, and a blacksmith by trade. Late in life he removed to Mansfield, Conn., purchased a farm near that of Mr. Fenner, and returned to Rhode Island for his family, but died. His wife, Celia (Rawson) Holly, removed to Mansfield with her family, and there died in October, 1859, at the age of eighty-three. The children were as follows: Lucinda married Eldridge Cranston, and died in Willimantic; Perry was the father of Mrs. Fenner; Betsey married Elijah Shumway, and resided in Chaplin, Conn., upon a farm, where she died; Nancy married Alden Church, a carpenter, and died in Chaplin, Conn.; Gilbert went South and died there.

Perry Holly, father of Mrs. Fenner, was born July 2, 1809, in Rhode Island, and came to Mansfield when a boy. During his boyhood he worked upon the farm, and when still a young man learned the trade of forger, working at the manufacture of bits and augers in various localities where those goods were made; he was also one of the first operators of the trip hammer, being very expert in the handling of the clumsy machine, and consequently commanded good wages. In company with Hiram Parker he operated a forge shop near his house for a few years. After working at his trade for many years, he spent his declining years in Mansfield, farming, and died there in March, 1885. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Church at Gurleyville, and when a young man took a very active part in its affairs.

Mr. Holly married Lois Fenton, a native of Mansfield, daughter of Elisha and Phileta (Storrs) Fenton, where her father was a blacksmith. Mrs. Holly died on April 18, 1892, aged eighty-four years, four months, to a day. To Mr. and Mrs. Holly were born: (1) Celia Ann died aged eight and one-half years. (2) Antice D. is Mrs. Fenner. (3) George G. married Mary Ann Scott, and resides in Sturbridge, Mass.; he is an expert in mechanics. They have two children, George Henry (now living in Springfield, who has three children) and Fred M. (living in Sturbridge, who has three children); George G. had one child, Lida, who died when young. (4) Lurinda, fourth child of Mr. and Mrs. Holly, died in infancy. (5) Harriet Lurinda Phileta, widow of David Clapp, resides in Willimantic; she had one daughter, Hattie M., who was the first wife of W. D. Grant, of Willimantic, and had two children, Florence A. and Jay E. (6) Mary Ellen married Edmund Simons, by whom she had one child, Jennie R., who became the second wife of W. D. Grant, of Willimantic, and has three children, Ethel Y., Winnefred C. and Mary Ellen. Mrs. Mary Ellen Simons married for her second husband Norman Dunham, a blacksmith, who is now deceased, and she resides in Willimantic. (7) Lovisa Maria married George M. Clark, cashier of the Meriden National Bank at Meriden, Conn. (8) Perry Earl, a professor of penmanship, married Carrie Allen, and resides in Waterbury, Conn.; they have two children, Perry N. and Pearl. (9) Sarah Jane died at the age of fourteen. (10) Dwight Storrs married Harriet Smith, and resides at Forestville, Conn.; he has two children, Everett (residing at Forestville, who has two children) and Edna. (11) Julian R. married Calista Brockett, resides in Bristol, Conn., and their family consists of two children, Julian Lawrence and Margaret Storrs. He is secretary and treasurer and general superintendent of the Bristol Brass & Clock Company.

ELIHU PORTER BUELL (deceased) was in his lifetime one of the leading residents of Hebron, Tolland county, doing much for the best interests of the town, and his memory should be preserved. He was a son of John W. and Mary (Porter) Buell, and on both sides descended from the oldest families of Hebron, of whom a record may be found elsewhere.

Mr. Buell was born Dec. 23, 1807, on the Buell homestead in the west part of Hebron, lately owned by his brother, Josiah M. Buell. As he was the eldest son in a large family, and the father died early, the duties and management of the farm home fell on his shoulders. The education with which he began life was gained in the public school. When a young man he peddled tinware in Hebron and vicinity, and all his early years were passed in hard work. He remained on the farm until April, 1844, when he removed to Hebron Green, where, in company with his brother Charles G., he engaged in a very successful mercantile business, under the firm name of E. P. & C. G. Buell. He was also interested in the manufacture of paper, having a mill in the western part of the town, and was also engaged in a paper factory at Andover. His mill was burned down, and then rebuilt, and he was engaged in its operation at the time of his death. For many years he was in the store at Hebron Green, finally selling out to his brother, who kept the firm name unchanged. Mr. Buell was a man of enterprise and push, ever ready to grasp an opportunity. Straight, honest and upright in his dealings, he was possessed of more than the ordinary intellect, and of rare good sense and business judgment. He died May 30, 1868, and is buried in St. Peter's cemetery, in Hebron. He had acquired a good fortune, and his family was well provided for. Both himself and wife were active and devout members of the Hebron Congregational Church.

Mr. Buell was married, Feb. 20, 1833, by Rev. Mr. Southworth, to Lucy, daughter of David Kellogg, of Marlboro. She was born June 3, 1806, and died May 11, 1887. To this union were born: Maria K., who died Feb. 3, 1853, at the age of nineteen years; and Ellen F., who resides in Hebron, unmarried.

In early life Mr. Buell was a Whig, and later became a Republican. He took much interest in local political matters, and from time to time held many local offices, serving also as member of the General Assembly, and of the State Senate from the old 21st District. For many years he was postmaster at Hebron Green.

ALONZO BRAYMAN GREEN, whose venerable figure is still seen on the streets of Willimantic, Windham county, in which city he is well known and highly respected, was born in the town of Lisbon, New London Co., Conn., March 16, 1826, son of William A. and Rufina (Ames) Green.

William A. Green was born in the town of Franklin, New London Co., Conn., where his parents died when he was but a lad. While he was still a young boy he lived for some time with a family named Hyde, and he was reared to farming. In Lisbon, Conn., he married Rufina Ames, daughter of Cyrus Ames, and the young couple located on a farm in Lisbon, later living on a farm which is now the site of the town of Taftville, same county. He sold that place to buy another—of a Mr. Fuller—in South Coventry, Tolland county, on which the remaining years of his life were spent. He was always a very active man, indeed, until the very last his activity and vitality were remarkable, and his death, which occurred quite suddenly, when he was aged eighty-two years, was caused by neuralgia of the heart. His ashes were interred in Willimantic. His wife preceded him to the grave by a short time, also when eighty-two years old. They attended the Methodist Church, and were always much respected by all who knew them. William A. Green was an old-time Democrat until 1856, when he united with the Republican party, whose principles and tenets he supported from that time with a strong and clear apprehension of patriotic obligations.

William A. and Rufina Green were the parents of the following named children: (1) Harriet is now the wife of George Vickers, of Willimantic. (2) Alonzo B. is our subject proper. (3) Charles was a soldier of the Union army, enlisting from Worcester, Mass., and served through the war. He lived in Willimantic a number of years, and followed the trade of a machinist. (4) George, who was also a soldier in the Rebellion, became an overseer in a factory at Collinsville, Conn. (5) Lester, who enlisted from Connecticut, was killed in the army. (6) Cyrus also lost his life in the Civil war. (7) Mary, who married William Faulkner, has her home in Coventry, Conn. (8) Henry lives in Rockville; he enlisted in the Union army, but was rejected. (9) Nelson, who was a soldier in the Rebellion, died in Hampton, Conn. (10) Jane married Edward Metcalf, and died in Coventry, Conn. As will be seen, six sons of this family enlisted for service in the Union army, and two died on the field of battle.

Alonzo B. Green received his first schooling in Lisbon, Conn., after he was eight years old, attending only in the winter months. As the oldest son he was the first to help his parents, whose resources were limited. Reared as a farmer, he had little acquaintance with idleness. After he was eight years old, he was at home very little, working most of the season for the farmers in the neighborhood. At nineteen he commenced to learn the spinner's trade in what was then the Tarbox Mill, at Versailles, Conn., his wages amounting to two dollars a week, out of which he paid all but twenty-five cents a week for board. Mr. Green came from Packerville to Willimantic to work at the trade of a mule spinner, entering the Watson Mill, of which John Tracy was agent. After about four years' employment in that line he took up farming, as the wages in the mills had become very small, hiring the Young place, at the corner of South and Pleasant streets, in Willimantic. During the war he ran omnibus lines in Hartford and Norwich, carrying people to and from the military camps. For several years he had been a teamster. For over twenty-five years Mr. Green conducted a carriage factory at the corner of Bridge and River streets, Willimantic, where he employed many men and did an extensive business, building vehicles entirely. Since leaving the factory he has had public duties, and has been extensively engaged in the real-estate business. He enjoys a well-earned competence. He has always been straightforward, and is regarded as especially efficient in caring for the property interests intrusted to his hands. At the present time he is in charge of over sixty tenements. He has more than a local reputation as an expert in real-estate values, and financial institutions of great strength have repeatedly asked his judgment in important transactions.

Mr. Green was married Nov. 12, 1848, to Miss Susan Sweetland, of Coventry, who was born in January, 1827, and they became the parents of the following children: (1) Charles died when four years of age; (2) Duane died when sixteen years old; (3) Harriet married Martin H. Waterhouse, of Milford, Conn., and died at the age of twenty-three. Mr. and Mrs. Green are of the Unitarian faith, and supported the organization of that faith while it existed in Willimantic. When they celebrated their Golden Wedding their friends rallied from far and near, and made the occasion one long to be remembered. They have their summer home at the old farm of Mr. Green's father which he now owns. In 1848 he purchased the house on River street, Willimantic, which is still his permanent home.

Mr. Green cast his first vote for the candidate of the Whig party, and became a Republican on the organization of that party. For some years he served as constable, and for seven years was deputy sheriff; he has also been assessor, and has served as tax collector for thirteen years.

Mr. Green has always loved a fine horse. He bought from Silas F. Loomer the mare "Belle Jef-person," and it was his skillful handling that brought out her speed and excellent racing qualities. She never entered a race that she was not "within the money." Mr. Green drove, himself, in all the races in which she was entered. Today he owns and drives one of the good horses in his city.

ANDREW KINGSBURY, a prominent farmer of the town of Coventry, Tolland county, who is president of the Rockville Fair Association, and a deacon of the Congregational Church, comes of an old and respected family of this part of the State.

Joseph Kingsbury, son of Henry, married Love Ayers, by whom he had a son, Joseph. This Joseph Kingsbury married Ruth Dennison, by whom he had twelve children. Their son Ephraim, born in Haverhill, Mass., in 1706, married Martha Smith, and became the father of Asa, Absalom, Martha, Obadiah, Irene, Ephraim, Tabitha, Ann and Joseph. Ephraim Kingsbury, son of Ephraim, was born in Franklin, Conn., in 1740, and married Phoebe French, by whom he had: Oliver, William, Phoebe (who married William Porter), Jabez and Ephraim.

Jabez Kingsbury, born in Coventry in 1769, married Freelove Utley, of Mansfield, by whom he had nine children: Anna, who married Daniel Smith, of Tolland and later of Stafford; Elisha; Amariah; Ephraim; Alvin; Backus; Nelson; Phebe; and Erastus. To the second marriage of Jabez Kingsbury, with Chloe Talcott, of Bolton, were born two children: Harriet N. (who married Adron Dart, of South Windsor) and Jabez H.

Ephraim Kingsbury was born July 20, 1799, married Clarissa Bingham Sept. 10, 1824, and moved to Chaplin, Conn., the year afterward. There his four children were born: Charles A., Feb. 18, 1826; George C., Feb. 26, 1827 (a resident of Chaplin); Eleazer Bingham, July 3, 1829 (of South Coventry); Eliza, Nov. 1, 1834 (married Philo Preston).

Erastus Kingsbury, son of Jabez, was born in Coventry, April 29, 1812, and married Hannah Needham, who was born Oct. 28, 1819, in Stafford, a daughter of Jasper Needham. To this union came: (1) Hannah, born March 21, 1840, is the wife of Allyn K. Talcott, a merchant of Rockville; (2) Amelia, born Sept. 16, 1842, died April 10, 1864, when twenty-one years old. (3) Ellen, born April 5, 1847, died April 18, 1864, when seventeen years old. (4) Andrew was born April 8, 1849.

Hannah Needham was a daughter of Jasper and Hannah (Agard) Needham, and a granddaughter of Jasper and Deborah (Fuller) Needham. Her father was a teacher and a farmer, and long lived at Wales, Mass., where she was reared. He died in 1848, at the age of sixty-six; and her mother, who was born in 1792, lived to be eighty-eight years of age; she was a daughter of Benjamin and Sally (Hiscock) Agard.

Erastus Kingsbury in his early manhood lived in Stafford, but later removed to Rockville. For a number of years he worked in a Stafford mill, and then removed to Coventry for four years. At Rockville he was superintendent of the American mill for five years. His last years were spent at Coventry, in the home which Andrew Kingsbury now occupies, where he was an extensive farmer. People had confidence in his judgment, and it was often sought in matters of controversy. Politically he was a Whig and then a Republican, taking an active part in the doings of his party, which often called upon him to take important positions, such as school visitor, selectman, and representative to the General Assembly, in which he served in 1866. For many years he was a deacon of the North Coventry Congregational Church, and was especially zealous in church work. He died March 19, 1895.

ANDREW KINGSBURY was born in Rockville, where he lived until four years of age. He received his education very largely at home, his instruction there being supplemented by attendance at a select school in Coventry. When he was twenty-one he taught his first winter school, and followed that work for fourteen years, engaging in farming during the summer seasons. The greater part of his teaching was done in Coventry, though he did teach in Vernon, and had a graded school at Manchester.

Mr. Kingsbury was married, May 26, 1880, to Mary Laura Hughes, daughter of John Hughes. Her father, who was born in North Wales in 1833, at the age of thirteen years began a seafaring life, which he followed until 1859, in that year coming to this country, and making his home in Williamsburg, a suburb of New York. In 1875 he came to Coventry. By his first marriage, to Elizabeth Jones, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., he had three children: A son that died in infancy; Mary L., wife of Andrew Kingsbury; and John Rowland, born in May, 1862, who died when eight years old. He married for his second wife Sarah Ann Hardenburgh, by whom he had four children: James Rowland, Sarah Ann, Carrie E. and George A.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Kingsbury have had the following named children: (1) John Erastus, born May 11, 1881, graduated from the Rockville high school in 1901; (2) Howard Andrew, born April 19, 1883, attended the Rockville high school, and died May 30, 1900; (3) Hannah Elizabeth was born July 6, 1887.

Mr. Kingsbury has been engaged in farming on the paternal homestead since he grew to manhood. His farm, which is located in the northwestern part of the town of Coventry, originally consisted of ninety acres, but it has been increased to 105 acres, one of the finest farms in Coventry, very largely devoted to dairying. He has been very successful in his agricultural work.

Mr. Kingsbury is a Republican, and his first Presidential vote was cast for Gen. Grant. He takes a lively interest in the political affairs of the day. For a number of years he served as school visitor, and has been secretary of the board since 1884; he has also been selectman and justice of the peace. When he was fifteen years of age Mr. Kingsbury united with the Congregational Church, and has since been active in its work, having been elected deacon in 1887. For twenty years he has served as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and from time to time has served on important society committees. He is a trustee of the Hale Fund, a fund for students preparing for the ministry. When the Coventry Grange was instituted some fourteen years ago Mr. Kingsbury was one of its charter members, and is a past master; he was the first lecturer of the Grange for a number of years. For many years he has been a director of the Rockville Fair Association, and has been its president since 1899; he has taken especial interest in this organization, and to his interest and enthusiasm much is due. Mr. Kingsbury is president of the Coventry Cemetery Association and president of the Village Improvement Society.

JAMES STEWART MACFARLANE, a well-known silk manufacturer of Mansfield, Tolland county, comes from good, sturdy Scottish people, and preserves in his own character some of the best traits of his ancestry.

Duncan Macfarlane, the grandfather of James S., was a weaver, and resided in Paisley, Scotland, where he was employed in the manufacture of the famous Paisley shawls. He lived and died there, in middle life. In his religious views he was a Presbyterian. His wife, Jeanette, who survived him, later became the wife of Alexander Wilson, and attained an advanced age, living in Paisley. Duncan Macfarlane was the father of the following children: (1) John was the father of James S. (2) Christina, the wife of John McIntire, died at Dumbarton, Scotland. (3) Jessie married Alexander Wilson, and died in Paisley. One of her sons, David Wilson, is a shawl manufacturer, and provost of the town of Paisley. (4) Margaret died unmarried, in middle life. The mother when she became a widow established a small provision store, which she conducted until her death. The property she owned now belongs to the Alexander Clark Thread Company.

John Macfarlane, the father of James S., was born in Paisley, where he grew to manhood. When his father died he was only eleven years old, and from that time he made his own way in the world, having received all his schooling while his father was alive. He learned the trade of weaving in his native town, and followed that business until his marriage. Soon after that event he was employed in the thread factory owned by the Coates family, this being the first factory established by the family, who afterward became very noted as thread-makers. When he was twenty-two Mr. Macfarlane moved to Glasgow with his wife and daughter Elizabeth, to take a position as manager of the silk factory of John G. Campbell, by whom he was employed in all twenty-seven years, being engaged three different times under a seven-years contract, and remaining six years longer, until the death of Mr. Campbell. While there he was presented with a handsome silver watch, with the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. John Macfarlane, by the Workers of the John St. Silk Mills, Bridgeton, As a token of respect for him as their manager. Glasgow, 21st Oct., 1840." After the death of Mr. Campbell, Mr. Macfarlane bought a grocery store in Glasgow, which he carried on several years. In 1848 he sold out, and, fulfilling a long-cherished ambition, sailed for the United States in the ship "Warren," being about five weeks on the voyage between Glasgow and New York.

In New York Mr. Macfarlane advertised for a position as a silk worker, and was engaged by Foss & Jenks, as an assistant overseer in their factory at Camden, N. J. After several years in their employ he worked for the Cheney's, at South Manchester. Then returning to Foss & Jenks he worked for them until he received a flattering offer of a position as overseer in the silk factory of William Skinner, of Haydenville, Mass., where he was employed several years. In Yonkers, N. Y., he worked in the silk factory of his son, William Macfarlane, remaining there until 1861. That year he came to Mansfield, and, in company with his sons, John G. F., George N. and James S., leased the factory at Atwoodville, owned by William Atwood. This they bought two years later, and were engaged in silk manufacturing until 1875, when the senior Macfarlane retired from the business, which was henceforth managed by his sons. The rest of his life was spent in Atwoodville, where he died Jan. 18, 1882, from a complication of diseases, aged seventy-five years, nine months; he was buried in the local cemetery. He was of medium height and slender build, and during most of his life was gifted with good health.

Mr. Macfarlane was a man of character and resolution. His schooling being limited, he managed by close observation and wide reading to gain a very good knowledge of the world. His knowledge of current events was broad and appreciative, and he was fond of standard literature, filling his mind with choice bits from Shakespeare, Byron, Pope, and his own much beloved Burns. Domestic in his tastes, he kept close at home. With the organization of the Republican party he became one of its active members, and though he never sought an office was from the beginning a staunch supporter of its principles. In Glasgow he joined the Presbyterian Church, and was a devout and earnest member.

Mr. Macfarlane was married in Paisley, Scotland, Nov. 19, 1826, to Stewart Ann McArthur, who was born in January, 1810, at Oban, in the Scottish Highlands. She died March 19, 1895, in Mansfield, Conn., and her remains rest beside those of her husband in the local cemetery. To this singularly fortunate marriage came children as follows: (1) Elizabeth, born Nov. 19, 1827, was married first to a Mr. McLane, second to Lewis Smith, and third to Henry Starkweather; she died in Mansfield, Dec. 14, 1879. (2) John Gordon Campbell, born Jan. 10, 1830, is the subject of a sketch on another page. (3) William, born June 21, 1832, married Jane Short, who survives him. He was a silk manufacturer at Yonkers, N. Y., for many years, and became very prominent. The village made him its first president, and he was named as the postmaster, when Garfield was President. His death occurred in Mansfield, Feb. 5, 1883, while he was visiting there, and his remains were interred in Atwoodville. During the Civil war he served thirty days in the Union army in answer to an emergency call, being at Fort McHenry, and in the trenches at Washington. Fond of athletics, he was an expert oarsman, belonged to the Vesper Rowing Club at Yonkers, and rowed in the four and eight-oar crews, which won many prizes and medals. The Yonkers crew won a three-mile race in the fastest time ever made on the Hudson river, their antagonists being the crack crew of the Argonauts Boating Club, of Bergen Point. William and Jane (Short) Macfarlane had six children: Emma, widow of John Simes, at one time a wholesale druggist of Philadelphia, resides in New York City with her son, John Weston; William Wallace, who married Sarah Gibbs, lives in Philadelphia, where he is a floor walker in Wanamaker's store (he has two children, William and Miriam); Albert Edward died when a young man; Bertha married Frank Ridabock, a manufacturer of military supplies, and lives in New York (they have two children, Henry Gratacap and Fayette Grace); Fayette Jennings married G. L. Shearer, and has one child, Julia Russell; Arthur L. is unmarried. (4) James, born Jan. 25, 1835, died Aug. 31, 1838, in Glasgow, Scotland. (5) George N., born May 22, 1838, married Isadore M. Conant, and, subsequently, Lizzie Stiles; he died in Mansfield, where he was instantly killed by a kick from a colt. His widow married a Dr. Blood. To his first marriage was born George F., who married Mrs. Jennie Weeks Sherman, and lives in Mansfield, with his wife and children, Beatrice and Isadore. (6) James Stewart was born Oct. 15, 1843. (7) Ann died Aug. 6, 1845. (8) Jessie A. died Dec. 12, 1846.

Mr. and Mrs. John Macfarlane were treated to a surprise party on the Golden anniversary of their Wedding, Nov. 19, 1876, by their children, grandchildren, and Mr. Macfarlane's fellow silk manufacturers of Mansfield. Among other valuable testimonials he received a gold-headed cane bearing this inscription: "Presented Nov. 19, 1876, to John Macfarlane, by the Silk Manufacturers of Mansfield, Conn." The names of the donors also appear: Emory B. Smith, Orwell S. Chaffee, L. D.

Brown, Philo G. and G. R. Hanks, C. L. Bottum, and Asael Hammond, who lived in Putnam.

James Stewart Macfarlane, whose name introduces this article, was born Oct. 15, 1843, in Glasgow, and accompanied his parents to this country when but five years of age. His first school instruction was gained in Camden, N. J., and later he studied in Haydenville, Mass., to which point his parents had removed. When he left school he applied himself to learning the dyeing trade with such success that very soon he was put in charge of the dyeing in the silk mill of William Skinner, in that place, and was later employed by his brother in Yonkers, N. Y. In 1861 he entered the firm of his father and brothers, in the leasing and operating of the silk mill at Atwoodville. One by one they withdrew from the business in the course of years, and when his brother George N. died the entire factory business passed into his hands, and has since been conducted by him. Beside the Henry Atwood mill the Macfarlanes purchased the L. D. Brown mill, which stood close at hand, and which is now the scene of our subject's main activity. The Atwood mill was burglarized and fired, and was never rebuilt. The L. D. Brown silk mill was the second one erected in the United States. Mr. Macfarlane also operated the factory in Willimantic, at the corner of Church and Valley streets for several years, and has been highly successful in his various enterprises.

Though an active Republican, and ever taking an earnest interest in public affairs, Mr. Macfarlane has seldom been willing to accept official station, even when such honors came to him wholly unsolicited. He was, however, a delegate to the Republican State Convention of 1888, and a representative to the General Assembly in 1892, where he served on the Committee on Capitol Furniture and Grounds. In 1894 he was a delegate to the General Convention. He was also chairman of the committee which had charge of the erection of the statue of Col. Knowlton, on the Capitol Grounds at Hartford. He is active in the affairs of his town. Mr. Macfarlane is very ingenious in the line of machinery, and has patented two very valuable inventions in silk spinning.

Personally Mr. Macfarlane is popular, his genial disposition and unpretentious character making and keeping friends for him. He is more than an amateur musician, playing the violin in the Congregational Church choir at Mansfield Center. Fond of athletics and aquatics, he has a handsome yacht, and spends all his leisure time in the summer at his summer home at Black Point, Conn., with his family. Plain and simple in his tastes, unpretentious in his nature, and domestic in his disposition, he delights in his home and family. His residence in Mansfield Center is well appointed and attractive, and he owns a large farm in the town of Chaplin, Conn., where he lived for several years.

Mr. Macfarlane was married Aug. 24, 1867, to Mary Anjenette Conant, of Mansfield, where she was born Aug. 17, 1850, a daughter of Rufus Fielder and Roxanna Minerva (Balch) Conant. To this union have come the following children: (1) Ida S., born Nov. 17, 1869, died Aug. 8, 1870. (2) Clara C., born Sept. 3, 1872, graduated from the Willimantic Normal School in 1892, and for a year taught in the Normal Training School at Willimantic. She was married Oct. 17, 1892, to Herbert T. Clark, a leading hardware merchant of Willimantic. (3) James Lloyd, born Feb. 9, 1879, is now employed in Willimantic.

The CONANT Family, of which Mrs. Macfarlane is a member, is one of the old New England families. Roger Conant, the emigrant ancestor, was baptized in the parish of East Budleigh, Devonshire, England, April 9, 1592, and was the youngest of eight children born to Richard and Agnes (Clark) Conant. He was married in London in 1618, and came to New England in the ship "Ann," arriving in Plymouth in July, 1623. His reputation was that of a "pious, sober and prudent gentleman," and as he was more strongly Puritan than the people around him he was chosen to head the settlement at Cape Ann, near Stage Head, on the North side of what is now Gloucester harbor. Though not recognized as the first governor of Massachusetts, it seems he should be, as the colony over whose destinies he so ably provided made the first real advance toward a permanent settlement within the limits of what is now the State. Roger Conant was a man of intelligence, and historians pay glowing tributes to his ability, integrity and honor. He was a member of the second representative assembly ever held in America, very shortly following a similar gathering in Virginia. The record of his active labor in forming that system of government which has made the United States great and mighty in every field of labor, or department of thought, was the noblest heritage he could leave his children. Many important offices were held by him in Salem, and for many years his services were continually in demand by the people. He and his wife were among the members who assisted in forming the First Church at Salem in 1637, and both signed the Covenant. His death occurred Nov. 19, 1679. He and Sarah Horton were united in marriage in Black Friars, London, Nov. 11, 1618, and they had the following family: Sarah, who died in England; Caleb, who came to New England, but returned to England, where he died; Lott, born in 1624, who married Elizabeth Walton; Roger, born in 1626 (the first white child born in Salem, Mass.), whose wife's name was Elizabeth; Sarah, born in 1628, who married John Leach; Joshua, who married Seeth Gardner; Mary, who married John Balch; Elizabeth and Experience.

Experience Conant, born in 1637, became a free-man in 1663, and bought a house in Windham Center, in 1694, being admitted an inhabitant of Windham in November of that year. In the settlement at Lebanon he was one of the first to locate. In 1701 he sold his Windham property, and removed to Boston, Mass. Remaining there until 1718, he returned to Windham, where he died April 28, 1722. He and his wife Sarah had the following family: Sarah, born in 1668, married John Moulton; Abiah became the wife of Joshua Wallis; Jane, the wife of William Moulton; Elizabeth, the wife of Richard Hendee; Josiah married Joanna Dimmick; Caleb was born April 29, 1682, and was baptized in 1683.

Caleb Conant purchased a right of land of his brother Josiah in 1703. He died in 1727, a member of the First Church of Windham. Hannah Crane, daughter of Ensign Jonathan Crane, a prominent settler of Windham, became his wife in 1714, and died in Windham in 1726. Their children were Malachi, born June 12, 1715; Benajah, who married Jemima Bosworth; Sarah, who died unmarried in early womanhood; Ruth, wife of Shubael Conant; Mary, who died in early infancy; Josiah, who married Ann Ames; and, Hannah, born in 1726.

Malachi Conant was born in Windham, and settled in the eastern part of Mansfield, near Gurleyville, where he followed farming, and where he died Jan. 23, 1783. He was married Feb. 15, 1738, to Sarah Freeman, who was born in 1720 in Sandwich, Mass., a daughter of Edmund and Kezia (Presbury) Freeman, and died May 7, 1791. Their children were: Lydia, born Aug. 25, 1739, married Ebenezer Fenton; Mary, born March 26, 1741, married James Parker; Priscilla, born May 1, 1743, married Elisha Hopkins; Kezia was born Sept. 25, 1745; Malachi, born Oct. 11, 1747, died Dec. 8, 1747; Seth, born Dec. 5, 1748, married (first) Eunice Royce, and (second) Mrs. Martha Wing Fay; Sylvanus is mentioned below; Sarah, born March 3, 1753, died Jan. 30, 1780; Malachi, born Aug. 25, 1755, died Aug. 30, 1775, at Cambridge, Mass., while serving in the Continental army; Abigail, born in 1757, died in 1777; Edmund, born April 19, 1759, married Asenath Jacobs; Nathaniel, born Sept. 28, 1761, married Lois Royce; Hannah, born June 19, 1764, married Amasa Wright.

Sylvanus Conant, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Macfarlane, was born Feb. 10, 1750, in Mansfield, and lived on the homestead of his father. He was a member of the Congregational Church, and died Sept. 2, 1843. His first marriage was to Anna, daughter of James Wright, on Oct. 22, 1778. She died May 5, 1802, at the age of forty-two, and Mr. Conant was again married, April 12, 1807, to Elizabeth Utley, of Ashford, who died Jan. 5, 1836, at the age of seventy-two years. The children of Mr. Conant were; Abigail, born Oct. 7, 1779, died unmarried in October, 1862. Sarah, born Dec. 12, 1780, married Nathan Utley, and died Dec. 7, 1861. Sylvanus, born Dec. 6, 1782, died April 23, 1851; he married (first) Chloe Agard, and (second)

Anna Dimmock. James, born Feb. 15, 1784, died July 18, 1862; he (first) married Sophronia Atwood, and (second) Betsy Campbell. Abiah, born Dec. 10, 1785, lived fifteen days. Kezia, born Jan. 4, 1788, married Asa Symons, of Mansfield. Chester, born May 23, 1790, died Aug. 7, 1865; he married Sarah French. Joseph, born March 22, 1792, died Oct. 10, 1870. Edmund is mentioned below. Lucius, born Sept. 29, 1799, married Marietta Eaton, and after her death married Mrs. Julia (Hanks) Conant. Lois, twin of Lucius, married Elisha Fenton, and died Jan. 1, 1884. By his second marriage Mr. Conant had one child, Roxa, who was born April 24, 1808, and died April 6, 1864, unmarried.

Edmund Conant, born Nov. 22, 1796, was a farmer, and resided all his life in Mansfield, where he died Feb. 24, 1872. He married Hannah Anderson, and their children were as follows: (1) Rufus Fielder was the father of Mrs. Macfarlane. (2) Julius, born Sept. 19, 1829, married Laura M. Batchelder, and had his home in Lowell, Mass. He died while bathing in a lake at a summer resort. (3) A daughter died young. (4) William died unmarried in Mansfield.

Rufus Fielder Conant was born May 27, 1827, in Mansfield, son of Edmund and Hannah Conant. He was employed while a young man in the silk factory of Henry Atwood, at Atwoodville, where he learned the dyeing business. After a few years he went to Paterson, N. J., where he was made superintendent of Dale's silk factory, located at that point. This was his chosen work for many years, but he was obliged to resign on account of ill health during the Civil war. Returning to Mansfield, he found employment as a dyer, and was engaged at that business at the time of his death, which resulted from a sudden attack of heart disease. Roxanna Minerva Balch, his wife, survived him, and became the wife of Edwin Jackson, a resident of Mansfield. All her children were by her first marriage: (1) Isadore M., born March 12, 1849, married (first) George N. Macfarlane, and is now the wife of Lewis Wheeler. She has one son, George F. Macfarlane, now of Mansfield. (2) Mary Anjenette is Mrs. James S. Macfarlane. (3) Eunice Helen was married July 4, 1882, to Edwin Whitehouse, a farmer, and resides in Chaplin, Conn. They have four children: Helen Blanche, born Jan. 19, 1884; Louis Edwin, Nov. 1, 1886; Phronsie Mary, April 12, 1893 (died Oct. 20, 1893); Elsie Conant, Aug. 2, 1894.

ADELBERT NEEDHAM. Prominently identified with the business interests of Stafford, Tolland county, is Adelbert Needham, who is one of the best-known business men of the town, and who, as a dealer in horses, has a wide reputation in his State. He is a representative of a family that has ever been amply endowed with the New England characteristic—industry.

Daniel Needham, his grandfather, was born in Wales, Mass., Jan. 27, 1775, and died Sept. 11, 1844. Although crippled from a fall, Mr. Needham was a successful man, and was extensively engaged in the business of shaving shingles in Wales, where his whole life was spent. In political faith he was a Democrat, and is remembered as a quiet unostentatious man, who always did his duty. He married Lucy Green, who was born Oct. 25, 1779, in Wales, and who died July 29, 1872. Their children were: Lyman, born Dec. 20, 1802, died in infancy; Lovisa, born Jan. 27, 1804 (first) married William Thompson, of Wales, and (second) Luke Childs, of Brimfield, Mass.; Darius Munger, born March 28, 1807, married Levina Nelson, of Brimfield, where he was a large farmer; Alanson Andrews, born Sept. 16, 1808, married Cynthia Baxer, of Wales, where he carried on a shoemaking business and spent his life, although his death occurred at Braintree, Mass.; Phebe Green, born June 14, 1809, married Amasa Moulton, of Wales, but they afterward removed to Bloomington, Ill., where he worked in a foundry, later had charge of the Chicago & Alton Railroad foundry, and died very wealthy; William Merritt, born Nov. 21, 1813, died May, 1814; Abner was born Jan. 31, 1817; William, born May 9, 1819, married a Miss Moulton, of Wales, Mass., and lived and died in Wales, a successful boot and shoemaker; and Lucy D., born Aug. 20, 1821, married Nov. 21, 1847, Joseph E. Winter, a painter by trade, who died Dec. 21, 1872.

Abner Needham, son of Daniel, and father of Adelbert, was born Jan. 31, 1817, in Wales, Mass., and died in Stafford, Conn., in the part of the town known as Stafford Hollow, Jan. 24, 1898. Early in life he learned the excellent trade of shoemaking, which he industriously pursued for a number of years. Later he opened a cafe in Stafford Hollow, retiring from activity about ten years prior to his death. In politics Mr. Needham was a staunch Democrat, and was very active all his life in the councils of his party. In 1843 Abner Needham was united in marriage to Mary Worthington, who was a daughter of Albert Worthington, of Springfield, and died June 29, 1873, at the age of fifty-one years. The children of this marriage were: Adelbert; and Isabel and Arabel, twins, born Oct. 9, 1848, in Stafford Hollow, of whom the former died Aug. 22, 1849, and the latter married, Feb. 19, 1873, Chauncey Orcutt, of Orcuttville, town of Stafford, by whom she had one child, Gertrude Mary, born May 3, 1881. The second marriage of Abner Needham occurred March 12, 1874, Mrs. Hannah (Gibbs) widow of Cyrus Nichols, of Stafford, becoming his bride; her present residence is in Springfield.

Adelbert Needham was born in Stafford April 5, 1847, and was reared and educated in his native place, leaving school at the age of eighteen. Soon after this he began to deal in horses extensively although a natural aptitude and love of animals had made him successful at the age of fourteen. Even since those early days Mr. Needham has followed his business, and has been the owner of many fine specimens of horseflesh. Since 1877 he has been very largely interested in shipping horses from Canada and the West, and for more than ten years he conducted a successful sales stable in Willimantic, Conn. In 1883 Mr. Needham engaged in business in association with Lyman Cushman, the firm style being Cushman & Needham, but two years later Mr. Needham withdrew, selling his interest to Mr. Cushman. In 1895 he opened a stable at the "Stafford Springs Hotel," two years later selling this business to C. C. Anderson. In 1889 Mr. Needham erected his fine residence on the main highway running out from Stafford Springs, a most desirable location, being between the place mentioned and Stafford Hollow, and here he has 100 acres of beautiful land, besides a tract of seventy acres in another place. His push and enterprise have done wonders in the improvement of the property on which he lives. From what at the time of the purchase was an unsightly piece of ground, he has made one of the most beautiful country homes in the town, the outbuildings and grounds in harmony with the residence, with all modern improvements and conveniences. His business transactions have shown ability, and he is regarded as one of the substantial men of his locality.

On May 4, 1887, Mr. Needham was married to Helena Wenberg, who was born in Willington, Conn., a daughter of Benjamin J. and Julia A. (Bell) Wenberg, the former of whom was during his life a business man of New York City. The children of this union are: Adelbert Jordan, born May 28, 1889; and Howard Chamberlain, born July 1, 1897. In politics Mr. Needham embraces the principles of the Democratic party, as his ancestors have done, but he is no office seeker, believing that politics is a business of itself, and had best be engaged in by those not so busily occupied with personal affairs. Fraternally Mr. Needham is well and favorably known in many of the most prominent organizations, being a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M., also of Orient Chapter, Stafford Springs, St. John's Commandery, of Willimantic, Norwich Consistory, and Phoenix Temple of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford. He has reached the thirty-second degree. Mr. Needham is also a member of the A. O. U. W. Mrs. Needham, who is a lady of intelligence and culture, is a member of the Universalist Society of Stafford.

As a business man Mr. Needham is a successful one, straightforward, with keen regard for his word and promise. He has handled thousands of horses, and is one of the best judges of a horse in this section of Connecticut. As a citizen no one in the town is any more interested in the town's welfare, as he is ever ready to encourage any beneficial movement, and never seeks public honors. As an individual he is decidedly one of the jolly, well-met fellows. "Del," as he is almost invariably known, is a generous, kindhearted man, always glad to see his friends, and even more delighted when he can contribute to their enjoyment. Accumulation of property has never been his sole desire—the wishes of his family have always come first, and in their company he finds his greatest pleasure. Whatever are his faults, he does not attempt to hide them. He is somewhat outspoken, and always understood. He has always lived well, yet never by any means beyond his income, and he has a very comfortable competence and an excellent business.

WILLIAM NILES POTTER belongs to an old New England family and traces his descent in unbroken lines from ten different emigrant ancestors. The Potter family includes in its various generations many men of character and standing in every walk of life, and alike in business, literature and art, at the Bar and on the Bench, and in the councils and ministrations of the church, as well as on the field of battle, have its representatives worthily sustained the honor of the name, and gallantly and faithfully served their day and generation.

From the Potter who sat on the Commission of the English House of Commons that condemned Charles I, in England, to the Potter who vindicated the honor of the Supreme Court at the Bar of the New York Legislature in 1870, the same lofty and invincible spirit has animated those who bore the name.

The emigrant Potter, from whom has descended this branch of the family, was Robert Potter, of Warwick, R. I. He came from Coventry, England, in 1634, and resided at Lynn, Mass., Roxbury, and elsewhere, and in 1642 was one of the original purchasers and proprietors of the "Shawomett Purchase" in Rhode Island, to which was later given the name of Warwick. Rev. Alonzo Potter, D. D., LL. D., was bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, being in charge of the diocese of Pennsylvania; and the Right Rev. Horatio Potter, D. D., LL. D., was the sixth bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of New York, and who died in 1857, were both descendants of this branch of the Potter family, as is the Right Rev. Henry Codman Potter, D. D., LL. D., the seventh bishop of the diocese of New York, and the son of Rev. Alonzo Potter, bishop of Pennsylvania.

William Niles Potter is a descendant in the ninth generation from Robert Potter, of Warwick, R. I., and his ancestral line is as follows: William Niles, a son of John Niles (and Amy B. Dorrance), who was a son of Stephen (and Amy Lewis), who was a son of Curnell (and Ruth Calvin), who was a son of Capt. John (and Elizabeth Fisk), who was a son of Robert (and Catherine Johnson), who was a son of Robert, who was a son of John (and Ruth Fisher), who was the youngest son of Robert, of Warwick.

William Niles Potter was born April 10, 1846, in a house that stood on the site of the Loomer Opera House, where his parents were living at the time.

John Niles Potter, his father, was born at Scituate, R. I., Nov. 3, 1809, a son of Stephen Potter, who was born at Plainfield, Conn., Sept. 28, 1778, and died March 28, 1849. John Niles Potter came to Willimantic when a young man, and was the first and only member of this family, at that time, to live in that city; others of the name there belonged to a different family. Mr. Potter was employed in the plant of the Windham Manufacturing Co., and as he was saving and prudent with his earnings, soon became quite independent. His marriage to Amy B. Dorrance occurred Nov. 7, 1833. The original building on the site of Young's Hotel was built by him, and in this he conducted a hotel. The building previously there was burned Jan. 9, 1842, and though he rebuilt, he retired from the hotel business three years later. About 1847 he bought the farm that has since become the town farm, on which he lived and followed farming until 1863, when he sold it, becoming the steward of the Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, then a noted and flourishing school. In 1869 he left the Institute and returned to Willimantic, to buy a farm on South street, where he spent the remaining years of his life, and where he died at the age of seventy-eight, a greater age than any of the Potter ancestors had attained so far as the records go. His widow lived until Dec. 30, 1900, dying at the age of eighty-nine. Both were buried in the Willimantic Cemetery. Mr. Potter was an old-line Whig, and later became a Republican. At various times he held town offices, and was regarded as a pillar of the Baptist Church. William Niles Potter is his only son who lived to adult age.

William Niles Potter, the veteran shoe dealer in Willimantic, though not the oldest in years, has a longer connection with that business in this city than any of his competitors, dating from May 1, 1870. For nine years he was in the Commercial Block; for eight years in the Tilden Block; since that time he has been in his present location, at No. 2 Union street. He carries a very large and well selected stock, which embodies the best lines of goods on the market, including leather and findings. He enjoys a patronage that is still increasing, the result of his long and honorable career as a shoe merchant.

Mr. Potter's earliest memories are those of what is now the town farm, where his boyhood, up to seventeen years of age, was spent. His first instruction was had in the Sessions School, and the First District School in Willimantic, John D. Wheeler being in charge of the school at the time. When he was about seventeen years of age he went to Suffield, where he attended the Literary Institute, noted above, from which he was graduated in the class of 1867. After his graduation he became one of the teachers in the school, where he continued until he accompanied his parents on their return to Willimantic in 1869. On May 1, 1870, he entered upon a mercantile career in Willimantic, as a shoe merchant, at first in company with Armin Martin under the firm name of Martin & Potter, but this firm was dissolved before the close of the year. Mr. Martin died, and the business passed to Mr. Potter, who without change of name has continued it to the present time, making it by over ten years the oldest shoe house in the city.

Mr. Potter was married May 4, 1874, to Miss Estella J. Bump, a native of Stockton, N. Y., who was born Aug. 12, 1854, a daughter of Lucius and Eliza (Ford) Bump. Lucius Bump was a native of Mansfield, Conn., and when a young man went to the West, where he was married and remained many years. In his maturer life he came back to New York, where he married Eliza Ford, who was born in Mansfield, Conn. After the death of her parents Mrs. Potter came to Willimantic, to make her home with her aunt, Mrs. Abel Clark, and was graduated in 1873, from the Natchaug high school. To Mr. and Mrs. Potter were born the following children: Eudora E., born April 13, 1875, graduated from the Willimantic high school in the class of 1894; Amy Lewis, born Aug. 14, 1877, graduated from the Willimantic high school in the class of 1897; Arthur N., born Nov. 24, 1879, graduated from the Willimantic high school in the class of 1898; Ida W., born Oct. 2, 1882, graduated from the Willimantic high school in 1902; and William. Lucius died in infancy.

Mr. Potter cast his first presidential vote for Gen. Grant in 1868, and has been a Republican to the present time. For six years he has served as selectman in Windham, being first elected in 1892 a position that came to him entirely unsought. Mr. Potter was a charter member of Natchaug Lodge No. 22, K. P., at Willimantic, in which he has been very prominent from its organization. In 1890, and the following year he served as Grand Chancellor of the State, and in 1897 was made Grand Master of the Exchequer of the State, a position he still holds. Mr. Potter belongs to the Uniform Rank K. P., at Willimantic, and he is also a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F. Mr. Potter joined the Putnam Phalanx at Hartford in 1880, and is secretary of the Willimantic Board of Trade, of which he was one of the originators, and he is a member of the Merchants' Exchange. Since 1869 he has been a trustee of the Baptist Church and since 1870 he has been clerk of the church, and is now treasurer of the trustees of that body. When the Windham County Court House and the City Hall were built, he was a member of the building committee. Mr. Potter has been the treasurer of the Willimantic Building and Loan Association since its organization in 1891, and has contributed not a little to the honorable history of that body. Mrs. Potter belongs to the Women's Club of Willimantic.

HENRY YOUNG, ex-member of the State legislature and successful agriculturist, is now living retired at Tolland Center, Tolland county. He was born Sept. 5, 1834, in Tolland, a son of Benjamin Lathrop Young.

The Youngs came from the Old World promptly by hatred of oppression and love of liberty. Four brothers came from Scotland to America by way of Londonderry, Ireland, where they spent some years, and in 1720 settled on the Willimantic river in Connecticut. William, the eldest of the brothers, was the great-great-grandfather of Henry Young. He was the father of five children, John, William, Samuel, David and Anna.

Samuel Young, the third son mentioned above, was born in 1740, and married Lydia Drew. He died in 1810, and his widow some three years later. Their children were: Consider, Eliphalet, Samuel, Gordon, Eunice (who married Judge Charles Swift), and Nancy (who wedded Deacon Aaron Chapman, of Tolland, and died in 1870, at the age of ninety-one years).

Eliphalet Young, son of Samuel, was born in Windham, Conn. A farmer all his life, he spent a number of years in the contracting and building business, doing considerable house and stone construction work. In 1811 he removed to Tolland, and here he followed farming. He became prominent in public affairs and was soon elected justice of the peace, serving from 1820 to 1836, was judge of the county court for some years, selectman in 1819, and represented the town in the General Assembly of 1818, and again in 1823. Eliphalet Young married Sybil Lathrop, by whom he became the father of four children, Samuel, who died in infancy, and was buried by the side of his mother; Edwin, who for twenty-five years was connected with the Home of Refuge for Boys in Philadelphia as its Superintendent; Julia, the mother of Mrs. J. P. Root, of Tolland, and the wife of Deacon Ira K. Marvin; and Benjamin Lathrop, the father of Henry Young.

Benjamin Lathrop Young was born Feb. 13, 1804, in Coventry, Conn., and died Nov. 13, 1874, in Tolland, his ashes resting in the South Cemetery. When he was seven years old he came with his parents to Tolland, and here he was bred to farming, owning and cultivating in his maturer years a farm of 180 acres. Mr. Young was a Democrat, and served as selectman many years, being also representative to the State Legislature in 1844 and 1845. An active man in local affairs, he held all the town offices and was regarded as one of the leading citizens of the place. He married Betsy Edgerton, of Tolland, who was born Sept. 30, 1808, a daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Lathrop) Edgerton. To this union were born: (1) Mary, born Dec. 15, 1830, was married Dec. 15, 1852, to John W. Wright, of Dalton, Mass., a forwarder of freight in Hartford for many years, but during his residence in Tolland, where he died in 1870, he was a farmer; they had one son, Edwin Burdette; a daughter, Lizzie Minerva, died in infancy. (2) Henry is second in the order of birth. (3) Edwin, born Sept. 1, 1840, married for his first wife, Nettie Righter, and for his second wife, Josephine Auspin, and is now living a retired life in Easton, Pa. (4) Julia was born Sept. 13, 1841. (5) Charles, born Oct. 23, 1845, is a traveling salesman from Philadelphia. For many years he had a general store in Tolland, and was a member of the General Assembly in 1882, where he served as a member of the committee on Railroads.

Capt. Daniel Edgerton, the grandfather of Mrs. Betsy (Edgerton) Young, came to Tolland, probably in the spring of 1770, probably from Norwich, Conn., and became the progenitor of the Coventry Edgertons. Capt. Edgerton was a very highly respected man, deserving and receiving the good-will and regard of the community. He served as first selectman for fourteen years, was chosen a justice of the peace, and served in the State Legislature twenty-three terms. He was twice married. His first wife, Sarah, was the daughter of Deacon Ichabod Griggs, and she died in 1777, leaving two children, Sarah and Rhede. His second wife, Mary Cobb, was a daughter of Samuel Cobb, and the widow of William Chapman. To this marriage came the following children: Daniel, Reuben, Sarah, Mary, Erastus, Mary (2) and Levi.

Daniel Edgerton, son of Capt. Daniel, was born in 1778, and married in 1801, Sarah, daughter of Zebulon Lathrop, and to this union were born five children: Marvin, Linus, Erastus, Betsy and Phebe. Dr. Samuel Cobb was born in Wales in 1716, and came to Tolland about 1743, and married Mary Hinkley that year; in 1749 he married his second wife, Hannah Bicknell, of Ashford, and one of his children, Mary, born in 1753, married Capt. Daniel Edgerton for her second husband.

Henry Young was born in Tolland, and received his education in the district school. He left the school room when eighteen years old, but remained at home for about a year longer, and then went to Philadelphia, where he secured a position in the chair department of the House of Refuge of the State of Pennsylvania, holding this for some twenty-five years, and being foreman of the department for many years with from twenty-five to forty hands under his direction. At the completion of this long term of service, he came back to Tolland to the old homestead in 1875. After the death of his father he acted as executor of the will. He bought the interests of the other heirs, and securing the farm to himself, has conducted it very successfully to the present time, retiring, however, from the active work in 1892. He then made his home with his brother-in-law, until 1896, when he came to Tolland Center, and here he has his home.

In his political affiliations Mr. Young is a Democrat, and represented the town in the Legislature of 1879, where he served on the committees on Incorporations and on Forfeited Rights. At different times he has been selectman, assessor, grand juror and member of the board of review. Mr. Young is one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Tolland, and is now one of its vice-presidents and a director. He attends the Congregational Church.

On Feb. 23, 1860, Henry Young was married to Elizabeth Holman, who was born in 1837, a daughter of William and Annie (Nye) Holman, and a granddaughter of Abraham Holman, of Tolland. She died Dec. 16, 1891, and was buried in the East Cemetery in Tolland. Mr. Young was married second, April 21, 1896, to Sarah C. (Preston) Lathrop, of Tolland, a daughter of Dr. Gilbert H. and Sarah (Cogswell) Lathrop, the former of whom was for many years the leading physician of Tolland, where his personal standing was also very high.

FREDERICK E. JOHNSON, M. D., the leading exponent of the medical profession at Mansfield, Tolland County, and a physician of exceptional skill and great popularity, has won his way into the hearts of the people of his town by sterling merit, combined with a thorough knowledge of his calling and a natural genius for ministering to the sick and afflicted. His patients claim that Dr. Johnson cures as much by his pleasant, cheery manner as by his prescriptions, efficacious as they are.

Dr. Johnson was born June 5, 1847, in Willington, Tolland county, where he received his rudimentary education, and until the age of sixteen aided in the work of the farm. At that time he became a resident of Atlantic county, N. J., and there engaged in teaching and fruit raising. In 1869 he entered the Providence (R. I.) Hospital as druggist, and was afterward placed in charge of the male ward. While in the hospital he decided to become a physician, and with that idea in view began the study of medicine under Dr. E. Kingman, of the hospital staff. Later, for two years, the young man assumed the direction of a farm in Connecticut, but never gave up his intention of fitting himself for his chosen profession. Resuming his studies under Dr. Melancthon Storrs, of the Hartford Hospital, he entered the Medical Department of the University of New York, from which he was graduated in 1879, after which he at once located at Mansfield Depot, where he very speedily brought into practical use the careful and thorough training he had acquired, both in hospital and in his classes. His practice steadily increased, he was from the beginning successful, and he is now limited only by his physical inability to respond to all the demands made upon his time.

Dr. Johnson was married in 1874 to Betsey I. daughter of Ira Fisk, of Willington. She died in 1882, and Dr. Johnson was again married, June 10, 1885, in Brooklyn, N. Y., to Miss Emma L. Jacques, a resident of Ellington, Conn., adopted daughter of Amos Jacques. One child was born to Dr. and Mrs. Johnson, Grace, who was taken away when but two years of age.

In politics Dr. Johnson is a Republican, but the exacting duties of his profession leave him no time for political matters. Like all modern physicians he is a member of several societies pertaining to his profession, being associated with the Tolland County Medical Society and the State Medical Society. He is a member of the State Pomological Society. While in Providence, R. I., he joined the Cranston Street Baptist Church, and Mrs. Johnson is a member of the Congregational Church in Brooklyn, New York.

Having all his life taken a deep interest in fruit raising, Dr. Johnson, as a pastime, directs a fruit farm, having ten acres of fruit trees and berry bushes, about seven acres in peach trees and three in berries. Every inch of ground is made productive, and this beautiful, model farm, known as Maple Grove fruit farm, is the envy and admiration of all who see it. The trees and bushes yield abundantly, and Dr. Johnson is justly proud of his venture.

Successful, popular, public-spirited, standing high in his profession, not only in his own town but throughout the county, Dr. Johnson is a man of worth and prominence.

ELLIOT PALMER SKINNER is one of the leading men of the town of Andover, and is well known throughout Tolland county. He descends from one of the old Colonial families.

Richard Skinner was the great-grandfather of Elliot P. Zenas Skinner, his grandfather, a native of Bolton, Conn., enlisted in Coventry April 16, 1775, under the command of Col. Israel Putnam, Jr., the eldest son of the gallant and patriotic general. He married Mary Loomis, a native of Hebron, Conn., whose brother was deacon of the Bolton Church. Mr. Skinner spent the greater part of his life in Bolton, where he was engaged in farming. For over forty years he led the singing in the Bolton Congregational Church, of which he was a member and the old pitch-pipe he used is still in the possession of the family. In 1829 he moved to Vernon where he died in 1838. He and his wife had children as follows: Polly, baptized June 17, 1792, married George Bidwell, of Manchester. Martha, baptized April 13, 1794, married Milton Burnap, of Andover. Zenas Bliss was baptized April 4, 1802. Amelia, baptized June 25, 1809, married Samuel B. Daggett, of Andover.

Capt. Zenas Bliss Skinner, the father of Elliot P., was born Dec. 31, 1801, and when a young man taught school in East Hartford, Vernon and Manchester. His familiar appellation was that of Capt. Skinner, a title derived from his services as captain in the Bolton militia. He married Anna Palmer who was born July 9, 1802, in Vernon, daughter of Elliot and Anna (Loomis) Palmer, of that place and died in Andover Oct. 31, 1875. Capt. Skinner ed Feb. 2, 1841. He engaged in farming in both Vernon and Bolton. He was very decided in his opinions, and in political faith he was a Whig, taking an active interest in the affairs of his town. Mr. Skinner was a member of the Vernon Congregational Church. To Capt. and Mrs. Skinner came: (1) Mary Anna, born Feb. 19, 1829, married Samuel T. Barrett, and removed to Kansas, where she died; she had a son, Eustis. (2) Elliot Palmer is mentioned below. (3) George Bidwell, born Jan. 1834, resided in Lincoln, Neb., where he died. He served as street commissioner, was nominated for mayor, was colonel of a regiment a short time during the Civil war, and was presented with a gold-headed cane as the most popular man in Lincoln. In the early days he crossed the Plains by teams from St. Joseph, visited the Mormons and sold goods to Brigham Young. He married, but had no children. (4) Jane Elizabeth was born Oct. 30, 1835.

Elliot Palmer Skinner was born in the town of Vernon, Tolland county, near Talcottville, Nov. 2, 1831. His first schooling was obtained in the district school at Dobsonville, and was continued in Plainfield Academy. In 1852 he entered Williston Seminary, at Easthampton, Mass., hoping to complete the course, but was unable to do so. When he began teaching he secured the principalship of the Franklin public school in the city of Rahway, N. J. There were six teachers under him, and he made decided success of his work as an instructor. Owing to serious sickness he returned to Connecticut, and for three or four years was able to do but little. He was married Oct. 9, 1862, to Mary Delia Burnap, eldest daughter of Daniel and Mary Kingsbury Burnap. [The particulars of her ancestral history are very fully given under the name of the Burnap family, elsewhere.]

Since his marriage Mr. Skinner has resided in Andover, making his home in the old Burnap homestead there, and he is extensively engaged in farming. He is the present president and treasurer of the Andover Creamery Co. He is a Republican, cast his first Presidential vote for John C. Fremont, and has always taken an active part in politics. It is said of him that any movement looking to the benefit of his town would find in him a hearty friend. All the local offices have been tendered him. He has been acting school visitor, and is chairman of the board of school visitors. Gov. Andrews appointed him an appraiser of the state property at Wethersfield. He has been agent of the Connecticut Humane Society since its formation. With two others he was appointed by the Superior Court to establish and fix the boundary line between the towns of Suffield and Enfield. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1881, and again in 1884, being chairman of the committee on Joint Rules and a member of the Finance committee during his first term, and chairman of the committee on Fisheries in 1884. He was not at the caucus, but was placed on the ticket without his consent. For many years he has been justice of the peace. He was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention in 1902. He is a member of the First Ecclesiastical Society, and was for a number of years the First Society's Committee and treasurer. When the Society funds amounted to less than $5,000 they were entrusted to him, and at his settlement he turned in between $7,000 and $8,000. All business entrusted to him has been well and ably managed.

JARED HYDE STEARNS is a representative of the best interests of Mansfield, Tolland county, and a worthy descendant of a long line of highly honorable ancestors, one of a family whose record is without a blemish.

The Stearns genealogy can be traced back to Nathaniel Stearns, who came from England and settled at Dedham, Mass., and was made a freeman on May 2, 1649. He married twice, and by his first wife, Mary, had six children. His second wife was Mary Raine, whom he married Oct. 24, 1687.

Samuel Stearns, son of Nathaniel, born Oct. 16, 1666, in Dedham, moved to Plainfield, Conn., and later to Killingly, Conn., where he died.

Boaz Stearns, son of Samuel, born in Sept., 1702, resided first in Killingly, Conn., and was representative from that town to the General Court for fourteen terms; he married Lydia Shepherd, of Plainfield.

Oliver Stearns, the grandfather of Jared Hyde Stearns, was born Feb. 5, 1776, on the farm now occupied by our subject, and there resided until about 1825, when he moved to Lebanon, N. H. (the home of his wife), at which place he passed the remainder of his life, dying there. He was quite an extensive farmer. On Jan. 25, 1798, he married Lois Lathrop, of Lebanon, N. H., who was born Sept. 10, 1776, and died Oct. 31, 1814. Their children were: Olive, born Jan. 3, 1799, married Earl Pierce, a farmer in West Lebanon, N. H., where he died; Shepherd, born Aug. 14, 1800, was the father of our subject; Sally (or Sarah), born Oct. 5, 1801, married a Mr. Hall and resided in West Lebanon, N. H., where she died; Elias L. was born April 9, 1803; Nathaniel Porter, born April 29, 1805, married Betsey Smith, was a farmer, and removed to New York State, where he died; Mary Eliza, born Sept. 27, 1806, married Edward Marsh, later married Thomas Tilden, and, for her third husband, Harry Brown, and died in Mansfield; Sophia, born April 23, 1808, married Eliaphaet Lyman, and died in East Hartford; Experience, born May 2, 1811, married Persis Lovett, and died in Hartford; Samuel, born Oct. 31, 1814, married Mary Steele, of Litchfield, Conn., was a farmer, and resided in that locality, where he was highly respected.

For his second wife Oliver Stearns married, Dec. 25, 1815, Melinda Barrows, of Mansfield, born June 7, 1787, died July 14, 1824. The children by this union were: Oliver L., born Oct. 21, 1816, married Betsey Wood; he was an influential man in West Lebanon, N. H. Nathan B., born Oct. 22, 1819, was four times married, first to Louisa Gerish, second to Justina M. Chapin, third to her sister, and fourth to Jane, who survives him; he was a deacon in the church at West Lebanon, N. H., and a prominent man.

The third wife of Oliver Stearns was Lydia Hyde, of Franklin, Conn., who died April 20, 1841. Their marriage took place Sept. 21, 1825. She left no children.

Shepherd Stearns, father of Jared H., was born in the house that was torn down to make way for our subject's present commodious one, which Shepherd Stearns built in 1867. During boyhood he attended the district schools, working upon his father's farm, but after his marriage he purchased and moved upon the property now owned by his son, Valette D. Stearns, where he remained several years. To the original property he added from time to time, made improvements, and there made his home, until death claimed him for its own, on March 16, 1885; he is buried at Mansfield Center. In addition to carrying on general farming, he was an extensive stock raiser. During the period of the old local militia he was captain, and was always known as "Capt. Stearns." He was an active man until within a couple years of his death, and retained all of his faculties until he died. His faithful wife only survived him until March 11, 1886. In personal appearance Capt. Stearns was tall and very muscular. In the course of his life he accomplished a great deal, and when not engaged in working was reading, keeping himself well posted on current events. Being a good musician, he played the double bass viol in the Congregational Church choir for forty years, having united with that denomination when a young man. No matter what was the state of the weather, Capt. Stearns and family could be depended upon, and all of them were earnest members, as well as active workers. In political matters he was first a Whig, and later a Republican, and although he never sought office, he was induced to accept a few of the minor local offices.

On Nov. 29, 1827, Capt. Stearns married Lucy Hartson Hyde, who was born Nov. 17, 1806, in Franklin, Conn., where the marriage occurred, and was a daughter of Jared Hyde, a farmer of that locality. Their children were: Vera Ann, born March 30, 1832, married in 1857 Ephraim Rood, a school teacher, later a contractor and builder, and died Dec. 21, 1865; she left two children: Alice married Otis Abel, had one child, Leslie, and died aged twenty-three; Alfred H. married Crusia Pebles, resides in Windsor, Conn., and has three children, of whom Vera and Alfred are named. Oliver Ellsworth, born Feb. 17, 1836, died Sept. 22, 1864; he was a member of Company D, 21st Conn. V. I.

Jared Hyde, born May 17, 1841, is our subject. Valette Deloss, born Jan. 22, 1843, is a dairymaid in Mansfield, was representative to the State Legislature from Mansfield in 1901, and is a deacon in the Mansfield Congregational Church; he was married March 18, 1869, to Emma J. Baldwin, and has two children, Ella Raymond (wife of Dr. Clarence E. Simonds, of South Coventry, Conn.), and Arthur Tilden. Charles Burleigh, born Nov. 20, 1847, a farmer of Andover, Conn., is still active there in town affairs, having held a number of offices, and is a deacon in the Baptist Church; he married Aug. 31, 1876, Jane Parker, granddaughter of Asa and Hannah (Sprague) Parker, and daughter of Philo F. Parker, and his children are Jennie Vera, born April 7, 1880, and Charles P., born April 8, 1882.

Jared Hyde Stearns was born in the old homestead, that stood on the site of his present home, attended the district schools, a select school at South Windham kept by Dr. Fitch, and later a select school kept by William C. Johnson, at Mansfield Center. Remaining upon the farm until he enlisted, in July, 1862, he left his plow for the terrors of war, and enlisted in Company D, 21st Conn. V. I., for three years' service. This regiment was the last three-years regiment from Connecticut, and saw service in Virginia and North Carolina, including the battles of Fredericksburg and Petersburg. During the greater part of his period of service he carried a musket, but later played E Flat bass in the regiment. After being mustered out, in 1865, he returned home and located on the farm, caring for his parents until their death, when he bought out the other heirs. His present farm consists of 200 acres, upon which he has made extensive improvements, and carries on fruit and general farming, as well as operating an excellent dairy. The farm is located on Chestnut Hill, in Mansfield, which commands a beautiful view, and from his dooryard there is a fine view of all the surrounding country. All the buildings are in good condition and the farm is a model of neatness.

On May 28, 1868, Mr. Stearns married Ellen H. Storrs, who was born April 17, 1842, in Mansfield, daughter of Steadman and Olive (Barrows) Storrs. To this marriage have come two children: Clara Melinda, born May 14, 1871, graduated from Willimantic high school, taught music for several years, later graduated from the Willimantic Normal School, and is now a school teacher; Robert E. born May 19, 1876, married Nov. 15, 1900, Alice E. James, and is engaged on the farm with his father.

Steadman Storrs, father of Mrs. Stearns, was born in Mansfield, learned the trade of a tailor, and worked at it in what is Mansfield City, also having a small store there. At times he employed a number of men. His health failing, he engaged in peddling silk through the New England States; later conducted a meat market at Fall River for fourteen years, and upon his mother's death returned to the old homestead in Mansfield, where he remained until his death, April 30, 1883; he engaged in farming and butchering the latter part of his life. In politics he was a Republican, although no seeker after office, and he was a member of the Congregational Church. On Jan. 24, 1817, he was married to Olive Barrows, a native of Mansfield, daughter of Dan and Abigail (Freeman) Barrows. Her death occurred Nov. 7, 1897. The children of this marriage were as follows: Clarissa Melinda, born April 27, 1840, died Feb. 25, 1870. Ellen H., Mrs. Stearns, was born April 17, 1842. Walter Frederick, born Jan. 18, 1856, in Fall River, Mass., was married April 6, 1882, to Lucy Maria Cargel, and resides in Bristol, Conn., where he is a butcher; he has three children, Lucy E., Abby Olive and Steadman William. Edwin Wright, born in March, 1858, married Elizabeth P. Barrows Nov. 24, 1823, and resides in Woodbridge, Conn., where he is engaged as a farmer; he has four children, Robert S., Richard A., Benjamin B. and Olive E.

Mr. Stearns was a Republican, but is now a Prohibitionist; and he represented Mansfield in the State Legislature in 1881. He is a member of Francis E. Long Post, No. 30, G. A. R., of Willimantic. Mr. Stearns, his wife and their son are all consistent members of the Mansfield Congregational Church, and the family are among the most highly respected people of Mansfield town.

WILLIAM L. HIGGINS, M. D., a noted physician of South Coventry, Tolland county, comes of an old family of the state of Massachusetts.

Jacob Higgins, the grandfather of Dr. William L., was born in Chesterfield, Mass., Dec. 1, 1811, and died May 6, 1894, at Cummington, Mass. He was twice married, first to Eliza Moore, and afterward to Miss Julia Prentice. He was a tanner by trade, and owned a farm property near the William Cullen Bryant place, in Cummington, Mass. His children were: Orlando, of Illinois; Lorenzo, of Kansas; Judson A., deceased, who was a prominent member of the Baptist Church, and a very devout man; Martin L., the Doctor's father; and Nelson, Amy and Eugene, all three deceased.

Martin L. Higgins was born in Chesterfield, Mass., June 15, 1845, and was married there to Elizabeth S. Hayden, a native of Westhampton, Mass., who was born Sept. 3, 1843, daughter of John and Eliza (Wetherell) Hayden. Mr. Higgins has always remained in his native town, where he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits up to the present time, having farmed on his present place for thirty years. He is a careful, conservative man, and has met with deserved success. A Republican in politics, he has taken a leading part in local movements, serving as selectman for three years and town treasurer for four years. He attends the Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. Higgins have had the following children: William L., whose name appears above; Minnie L., now the wife of George L. Blanchard, of Montpelier, Vt.; Helen Jane, wife of Milo E. Sylvester, of Springfield, Mass.; and Harry E., M. D., a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York, 1896, and since a practitioner of Norwich, Connecticut.

William L. Higgins was born in Chesterfield, Mass., March 8, 1867. His education was begun in that district, and was continued in the city schools of Northampton, and at Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass., where he took an elective course. He finished his academic work when about eighteen, working on the farm in summer, and teaching school winters. For three terms he taught school in Hinsdale, Mass., and for one term in Westhampton, after which he took up the study of medicine under the direction of Dr. Charles H. Curran and of Dr. A. M. Belden, at Holyoke and Chesterfield, respectively. His studies at the Medical Department of the University of the City of New York were completed and he was graduated with the class of 1890. At the close of his course he located at Willington, Conn., where he remained until September, 1891, when he removed to South Coventry, to take the place of Dr. E. P. Flint, who at that time was removing to Rockville. Since his arrival Dr. Higgins has continued steadily at his work, winning many friends, and making himself recognized as the leading physician of the town. He has been very successful in practice, and is called frequently in consultation, considerable for a young man.

Dr. Higgins was married at Northampton, Mass., Oct. 8, 1890, to Annah J. Clapp, daughter of James and Juliette A. (Miller) Clapp, of Williamsburg, Mass., and they have had two children: Ruth A., born Nov. 20, 1891, and Ruby Elizabeth, born March 6, 1894. Both the Doctor and his wife are members of the Congregational Church, in the work of which he takes an active part, and he has been Sunday-school superintendent in both Willington and Chesterfield. For seven years he has been on the parish committee, and upon the incorporation of the church, in the fall of 1901, was elected to the board of trustees for three years from Jan. 1, 1902.

The Doctor is a staunch Republican, and has been interested in local politics ever since his removal to South Coventry. However, he has confined his public services to offices of a professional nature, having acted seven years as health officer, and for eleven years as medical examiner for the towns of Coventry and Andover. He was elected justice of the peace several times, but each time felt that other duties prevented him from qualifying, though so far as his professional duties permit he has directly interested himself in public enterprises and given his fellow townsmen the benefit of his ability and judgment in such matters. He was one of the original promoters of the South Coventry Water Supply Company, one of its largest stockholders, and became a director and vice-president thereof. In 1897 he organized what is known as the Village Improvement Society, of which he has been a director ever since, and has served one term as president. This company has expended about three thousand dollars in improvements during the five years of its existence. The Doctor has always been interested in agricultural matters, is a member of the Grange, and is vice-president and one of the directors of the Horse Shoe Park Agricultural Association, which was organized in April, 1902.

In addition to attending to his private practice the Doctor acts as medical examiner for all of the old line insurance companies, and for Lodge No. 15, A. O. U. W., at South Coventry. He was president of the Tolland County Medical Association in 1897-98, and the same year was vice-president ex-officio of the State Medical Society. Dr. Higgins is a self-made man, and enjoys high standing in his community.

ANDREW JACKSON GURLEY, a representative of an old, and at one time numerous, family of that name, of whom but few now remain, is retired from active business life and resides on Spring Hill, in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county.

All the Gurleys, Gourleys and Gurlays in Scotland, Ireland, England and America descend from one Ingleram de Gurley, who accompanied "William the Lion" from Normandy, France, to Scotland, in the year 1174, and who for his sage counsels and good advice to King William was given a grant of land in Kincraig, Fifeshire, Scotland, which is supposed to be yet in the possession of the family. The name Gurley implies bravery, honesty and religious character. The Gurley family history is taken from the Gurley genealogy, compiled by Albert E. Gurley, of Willimantic, Conn., a brother of Andrew Jackson Gurley.

(I) William Gurley, the American ancestor, was born in Inverness, Scotland, in 1665, and came with the family of Rev. Solomon Stoddard from England to Northampton, Mass., in 1679, at the age of fourteen years. In this family he was brought up and educated. In 1684 he married Hester Ingersoll, a daughter of John and Abigail (Bascom) Ingersoll, the latter a daughter of Thomas Bascom, from England. Hester Ingersoll was born Aug. 3, 1663. William Gurley was accidentally drowned in the Connecticut river on May 1, 1687, when but twenty-two. He is reputed to have been a truly pious and sincere Christian. He left one child, Samuel, born May 17, 1687. His widow afterward married Benoni Jones, of Northampton, Mass., on Jan. 23, 1689, and the following children were born of this union: Jonathan, Jan. 4, 1695 (died young); Benjamin, 1696 (settled in Coventry); Ebenezer, Nov. 12, 1698; Jonathan, March 12, 1703. The two last named, together with their father, were slain by the enemy at Poscumuck, north end of Mount Tom, Northampton, Mass., on May 13, 1704.

(II) Samuel Gurley, only child of William and Hester Gurley, was married in 1712 to Experience Rust, born Nov. 1, 1693, daughter of Nathaniel Rust, of North Coventry. Samuel Gurley died Feb. 23, 1760, and his widow on July 10, 1768. He was distinguished for piety, and was eminently useful in the cause of religion and humanity; was a farmer by occupation, and was prominent in the political affairs of his day. His children were: Esther, born Feb. 24, 1713; Jonathan, April 2, 1715; Samuel, June 30, 1717; Lois, Jan. 17, 1720; Eunice, June 14, 1722; Experience, Jan. 16, 1725; Margaret, May 4, 1727 (died April 12, 1737); Morey and a daughter, twins, March 7, 1729 (the former lived until Jan. 1, 1746, the latter dying the day of birth); Abigail, June 30, 1731.

(III) Deacon Jonathan Gurley, son of Samuel, was one of the most prominent men of his town and State, and filled many of the town offices with honor. Several times he was called upon to go to Hartford to confer with the governor and other high State officials in relation to the best course to be pursued with regard to the impending war with England. For many years he was deacon of the North Parish Congregational Church, of which he was one of the most useful members. By calling he was a farmer. On Aug. 4, 1737, he married Hannah Baker, who was born at Windsor April 9, 1709. She died May 16, 1796, while Deacon Gurley died Nov. 1, 1778. Their children were as follows: William, born June 4, 1738; Hannah, Aug. 9, 1740; Jacob Baker, July 28, 1742; Jonathan, April 10, 1744; Daniel, Nov. 2, 1745; Ebenezer, May 25, 1747; Esther, June 16, 1749; Titus, May 15, 1752.

(IV) Jacob Baker Gurley, son of Jonathan, was a farmer, and a very prominent man of his day, serving his town in nearly every office within the gift of his fellow townsmen, as the records show. Like his father, he was a consistent member of the North Parish Congregational Church, and gave largely toward its support, dying much lamented by the church and the people of the town. His name is among the soldiers who served in the war for American independence. He died of smallpox on Feb. 20, 1804. On May 19, 1766, he married Hannah Brigham, daughter of Uriah Brigham, and she died April 6, 1813, aged sixty-seven. The children of these worthy people were: Lydia, born June 6, 1767; Artemus, April 9, 1769; Jacob Baker, April 17, 1771; Uriah, May 30, 1774 (died Oct. 4, 1775); Ebenezer, July 25, 1776; Abigail, Feb. 1, 1778; Uriah Brigham, Nov. 19, 1780 (died Oct. 1, 1783); Mercia, March 24, 1782 (died in December, 1783); Lucia, Nov. 14, 1784 (died unmarried March 20, 1864); Hannah, May 5, 1791.

(V) Ebenezer Gurley, son of Jacob, and grandfather of Andrew J., passed all his life in his native town, receiving his education in the district schools. For some years he engaged as clerk in several of the town stores, but the major portion of his life was spent in farming. During his latter years he became totally blind, and he and his wife made their home with their son, Ebenezer R. Gurley. On Jan. 1, 1800, he was married to Sally Balcom, a daughter of Joseph Balcom, and she died April 21, 1864, aged eighty-nine. Mr. Gurley passed away July 3d of the same year, aged eighty-seven. Mrs. Gurley was a consistent member of the North Parish Congregational Church. Their children were: Jacob Baker, born Sept. 26, 1803, married (first) Ann Clark and (second) Widow Armina Smith; he was a merchant, and resided in Mansfield, where he died Feb. 13, 1857. Emily, born May 26, 1806, was a school teacher; she married Charles Lestor, and died Nov. 5, 1840, in Capac, Mich. Ebenezer R., born Oct. 17, 1808, was the father of our subject. Joseph Balcom, born April 9, 1811, died aged fourteen. Sarah, born Aug. 17, 1815, married (first) Edwin R. Thurston, and resided in Indiana, where he died; she later married Porter Mason, of Mansfield, and died Oct. 16, 1872.

(VI) The following sketch of the life of Ebenezer R. Gurley, son of Ebenezer (1) and father of Andrew Jackson Gurley, appeared in the Hartford Courant, announcing his death, which occurred Feb. 22, 1887:

"In the death of Ebenezer R. Gurley, which occurred on Tuesday night, Feb. 22, Mansfield lost one of its most prominent and best known citizens, and, it may be added, its most wealthy resident. Few men in eastern Connecticut were more extensively known outside their immediate bailiwick than was Mr. Gurley, and to none was the appellation 'honest, square business man' more frequently applied. Mr. Gurley was the second son of Ebenezer Gurley, who resided in the North Parish, and was born on Oct. 17, 1808, thus being in the seventy-ninth year at the time of his death. He sprung from illustrious stock, the family name being among the most honored in Mansfield's history. Mr. Gurley was a direct descendant of Judge Jacob B. Gurley, of New London county, and Judge Artemas Gurley, of Windham county, both eminent jurists of their time; while, going back a generation, we find Deacon Jonathan Gurley, a stirring patriot, and who was selected as one of the delegates from the town of Mansfield to a convention called at Hartford on Sept. 13, 1774, to take council and action on 'the interesting concerns of the day,' a subject the nature of which we, who are 'on deck' a hundred years later, can readily surmise, and easily imagine the kind of man who would be selected as counsel in the perilous days preceding the American Revolution. This, then, was the character of Mr. Gurley's ancestry, and so far as patriotism, honesty of purpose and fidelity to trust are concerned, it must be admitted that Mr. Gurley's life bore abundant and satisfactory evidence that the stock had not deteriorated in any essential particular.

"Spending his boyhood on his father's farm, he accepted when a young man the offer of a position as clerk for a cotton manufacturing company at Eagleville, and remained there several years, or until his marriage to a daughter of the late William Gardiner, of Mansfield. From Eagleville he moved to the Oak Tree farm, in North Mansfield, now the site of the Connecticut Agricultural College, and a half a dozen years later bought the Uriah Hanks farm, where he resided a few years, and afterward exchanged the property for the Gurleyville mills, a gristmill and a sawmill combined. In this connection it may be mentioned, as showing the business enterprise of the man, that he was the first in this section to buy corn by the cargo, in New York, ship it by boat to Norwich, thence transport it by teams to his mills at Mansfield, where it was ground into meal and sold to the farmers for miles around.

"He subsequently disposed of the mills to a kinsman, Lucius Gurley, and Samuel Cross, and commenced turning his attention to the silk business, which at that time was a prominent manufacturing industry in Mansfield. It had been his custom for several years, after the spring work on his farm was well in hand, to take a quantity of sewing silk and make a peddling expedition through Vermont, New Hampshire and other New England States, and these were attended with the pecuniary profit which seemed to follow in the wake of the Yankee peddler. He made one trip through the South as a book agent, and made a financial success of this. The experience gained in these peddling tours doubtless suggested the idea of engaging in manufacturing, for a few years later we find him engaged with P. W. Turner in manufacturing silk at Tolland. About 1861 he went to New York City, where a shrewd manipulation in raw silk, with Stephen Goodrich, a well-known importer, which involved the purchase of all grades of raw silk in the market, and to arrive, enabled him to clear a very large amount, and he took rank among the wealthiest men of his section. For many years he was a director in the Chatham National Bank, of New York City, and served several terms as a director of the Willimantic Savings Institute. For the past few years his health had been failing, but his last illness covered a space of less than a day."

Mr. Gurley was a kind, benevolent man, very unostentatious in dress and manner, was neither a society man nor a politician, but did what he could to promote good government, and it is said that he wrote Abraham Lincoln, advising him to issue his Emancipation Proclamation. Mr. Gurley was a man of strict integrity in his business, and if he loaned money would never accept more than legal interest. Mr. Gurley was the recipient of the first medal ever given in the United States for silk manufacture, and was one of the first to engage in that line of manufacture with power and machinery, beginning in 1848, in Tolland; later he was engaged at Mansfield Hollow, and afterward at Turnerville, in the town of Hebron, Conn., in company with his cousin, P. W. Turner.

The first marriage of Ebenezer R. Gurley, on July 8, 1829, was to Julia Ann Gardiner, a daughter of William Gardiner; she died Nov. 12, 1852, of quick consumption, at the age of thirty-nine years. His second marriage, on June 19, 1853, was to Mary M. Jennings, whose death occurred Dec. 19, 1891, when she was aged seventy-eight years. His children were all by the first marriage: (1) Julia Ann, born on Feb. 22, 1830, married (first) Joshua B. Bosworth, and (second) George W. Mason, and died Jan. 10, 1881. (2) Andrew Jackson was born Jan. 18, 1834. (3) John Richard, born May 2, 1836, died Nov. 10, 1841. (4) Albert Ebenezer, born April 15, 1838, married (first) Adaline L. Y. Abell, and (second) Charlotte E. Barrows. For many years he was located in the Western States, carrying on various occupations, engaged in farming, in silk manufacture in Mansfield, and later was a merchant there; since 1889 he has lived retired in Willimantic; he compiled the Gurley genealogy. (5) Mary Adalaide, born Oct. 21, 1841, married Judge Ralph W. Storrs, of Mansfield, where she died Nov. 19, 1896. (6) Eugene Orrin, born in 1846, died Sept. 23, 1848. (7) Ellen, born Feb. 16, 1848, died June 18, 1867.

Andrew Jackson Gurley was born Jan. 18, 1834, in Mansfield, Conn., and as a boy attended the district schools and enjoyed the advantages of three terms at Wilbraham Academy, in Massachusetts. When a boy he worked on his father's farm and in the saw and grist mill at Gurleyville, and was also employed for about a year in the general store of George Moulton, at Willimantic, going from there to New York City, where he was employed in the New York office of P. W. Turner, a silk manufacturer of Tolland, Conn. There he remained about two years, and then began work in the silk factory at Atwoodville, in the town of Mansfield, for Dimock & Sanders, at "throwing silk," and later was employed for a short time in a machine shop at Atwoodville, for Goodrich Holland. Later he was employed in a silk factory in Mansfield Depot for P. W. Turner. At that place his eyesight began to fail, and in the fall of 1860 he went to London, England, for a vacation, making the voyage on a London packet vessel, the ocean voyage consuming twelve weeks. But he did not remain long in London, as he did not like the country. After his return to America he went to Lake Winnebago, Wis., where, in company with his brother Albert E., he attended to and managed the property owned by their father. Later Mr. Gurley went to Denmark, Iowa, and assisted on the farm of Rev. Mr. Turner, a Congregational minister there, and then returned to New York for a time, coming then to Conant-ville, in Mansfield, where he was employed for a while. In 1876 he went to Stonington, Conn., and was employed for some time by the Atwoods, who were manufacturers of silk machinery there, remaining in Stonington twelve years, during which period he was engaged in several capacities, such as caring for the street lights, assisting the railroad agent, carrying the mail, etc., and was spoken of as the "busiest man in Stonington." In 1888 he returned to Willimantic, where he resided until 1895, when he moved to Spring Hill, in Mansfield, where he now lives retired, being fond of a quiet, rural life.

Mr. Gurley was married, Jan. 5, 1866, to Rachel Tift, born May 3, 1835, in Rhode Island, a daughter of Sanford and Elizabeth A. (Smith) Tift, the former, of whom, a farmer, died in Mansfield. Two children came to Mr. and Mrs. Gurley: Ella Jennette, born Jan. 21, 1873, married Norman G. Blake, of Westerly, R. I.; they reside in Worcester, Mass., and their only child is Vera G., born Jan. 5, 1901. Emma Tift, born June 6, 1875, married Elmer A. Gore, and now lives in Worcester, Mass., where he is engaged in the clothing manufacturing business; they have one child, Erma W., born Sept. 18, 1896.

Mr. Gurley is a liberal-minded man in politics and also in religion, contributing generously to the Baptist Church of Mansfield, of which Mrs. Gurley is a consistent member. Mr. Gurley is not only a traveler, but also a great reader, and one of the most intelligent and best informed citizens of his locality. For many years he has taken a deep interest in the maintenance of good roads in his vicinity.

JOSEPH PARKER ROOT was born in Berlin, Conn., Dec. 27, 1831, son of Joshua Root, who was born in Marlboro, Conn., July 22, 1787.

Joshua Root, Sr., the grandfather of Joseph P., was born in 1753, probably in Marlboro, where he followed farming. His death occurred in Hebron, and he was buried in Gilead cemetery. In 1777 he was married to Sarah Chapman, of Hebron, and their children were: Elizabeth, Sarah, Lucy, Polly, Rhoda (who died in childhood), Joshua, Rhoda (2), Benjamin, Ira, Solomon and Jerusha Ann.

Joshua Root, son of Joshua, Sr., and father of Joseph P., was a farmer, and was extensively engaged in teaming. About 1829 he came to Berlin, and followed farming until 1832, when he returned to Hebron to take charge of his father's place, where he remained until his death in 1871. Joshua Root was a Democrat until 1856, when the Republican party was formed, and he at once united with it. He held several minor offices in the town, but he was not a man to seek political preferment. In the work of the Methodist Church, to which he belonged, he was very active. In the war of 1812 he had enlisted, but was excused from service on account of serious sickness at home. On Nov. 8, 1810, Joshua Root was married to Esther Ingraham, who was born June 8, 1792, in Marlboro, Conn., and who died Oct. 13, 1852, in Hebron. Mr. Root was married to his second wife, Dolly Hough, April 3, 1853. She was born in Middletown, Nov. 12, 1815. To the first marriage were born: (1) Stephen, born in Marlboro, March 12, 1812, died in Colchester, March, 1875. In his early years he was employed in various factories, but in his maturer life was a farmer, and operated a saw mill and grist mill. On Nov. 9, 1835, he was married to Lucinda B. Clark, a daughter of Dr. Clark, of Ledyard, Conn., and their children were Dwight, who died in early manhood; Clarissa, who married J. H. Butler, and is now living in Catskill, N. Y.; and Mary, who is the wife of Edward W. Bull, of Hartford. (2) Eliza, born Sept. 7, 1813, in Marlboro, married Samuel Finley, June 10, 1839, and died in Tolland, Nov. 27, 1893. She was mother to Ransom J., of Missouri; Annis J., wife of M. V. B. Pierson, of Norwich; and Esther, the wife of George P. Lewis, of Norwich. (3) Austin, born Jan. 3, 1816, in Marlboro, Conn., was a farmer and a wood dealer in early life. In 1860 he purchased the store of Reuben Allen, and conducted it for ten years, at Tolland. After disposing of it to Charles Young, he removed to Rockville, where he died June 11, 1884. On Dec. 9, 1839, he was married to Betsy M. Post; in 1880 he wedded Mrs. Frances (Metcalf) Edgerton. The first wife was the mother of Esther A., a widow living in Stafford; Ellen E., widow of Rev. F. W. Colver, of North Manchester; Henry A., a lumber merchant of Michigan City, Ind.; and Emma M., the wife of Rev. W. F. Latham, of Michigan, now deceased. (4) Esther, born Aug. 5, 1818, in Hartford, Conn., died Sept. 30, 1824. (5) John, born Dec. 30, 1820, was a machinist in Hartford, and died Oct. 22, 1846, in Hebron. (6) Jerusha A., born March 31, 1824, in Hartford, married Peter S. Smith, of Montville, and died Sept. 27, 1889. (7) Joseph P. is mentioned below. (8) Benjamin S., born July 6, 1838, in Hebron, was a carpenter by trade, and died in Tolland, July 26, 1893. On May 18, 1862, he married Emily E. Brooks, and two children were born to them: Arthur E., a merchant of Boston; Edward I., a broker and patentee in Denver, Colorado. To the second marriage of Joshua Root came one child, Samuel M., born Nov. 19, 1854, in Hebron, Conn., and now living in Moodus, where he follows the work of a mason and brick-layer.

Joseph Parker Root was taken by his parents when but a few months old to Hebron, where he received his education in the public school, and for three winters under Rev. Charles Nichols in a private school. After leaving the school room he worked in a sawmill with his brother, Stephen, for three winters, devoting the summer season to farm work. When he was twenty-one he secured a position in the Colchester Rubber Works, but a few days after beginning in the factory the works burned down. The young man was somewhat versed in the carpenter trade, and was employed in the rebuilding of the plant, and when that was completed so enjoyed the carpenter life that he continued to follow it. He remained in Colchester a year, and then removed to Montville, where he presently began to do contract work, having in charge the erection of a number of buildings in that town. Mr. Root was also connected with the Uncasville Manufacturing Co. as a carpenter for nine years. In 1872 Mr. Root removed to the city of New London, where he worked for Russell Burrows, a contractor and builder, and in 1874 he came to Tolland to take a place in his brother's store, which he held for several months. When it was sold to Charles Young he remained with that gentleman for about six months, and then bought the general store of Daniel E. Benton. For the whole period since 1888, this establishment has been the only general store in Tolland. One other store ran for a time only. It has proved a remunerative enterprise to Mr. Root, who has become one of the substantial men of the town. Mr. Root is a director in the Savings Bank of Tolland, and president and director of the Aqueduct Company of Tolland. Strongly attached to the basic principles of the Republican party, he has served as selectman and as treasurer of the school deposit fund, and was appointed postmaster during Gen. Grant's first term, continuing until the advent of President Cleveland when he was removed for the installation of a Democrat. Mr. Root is an active and devoted member of the Methodist Church, which he has served as steward and treasurer for a number of years. He has also been superintendent of the Sunday-school many years. Mr. Root has been very successful in business. He is a careful conservative man, still progressive enough to be always interested in public matters.

On Nov. 21, 1853, Mr. Root was married to his first wife, Elizabeth Goff, who was born in Easthampton, Oct. 22, 1834, and who died May 23, 1877, the mother of the following children: (1) John Herbert, born Feb. 1, 1855, in Montville, is a painter and a decorator in New London, and deals in supplies for the trade; he married in October, 1878, Lucretia Hobron, of New London. Of their two children the daughter died in infancy; the son Herbert Jackson, born July 14, 1884, is living. (2) Ira Wesley, born Nov. 11, 1860, died June 18, 1861. (3) Annie Elizabeth, born Jan. 21, 1862, in Montville, died Jan. 6, 1870. (4) Hattie Eliza, born Jan. 26, 1864, in Montville, died April 9, 1864.

On May 29, 1879, Mr. Root was married to his second wife, Lucy Catherine Marvin, a daughter of Ira K. and Julia (Young) Marvin.

THE MARVIN FAMILY was first represented in Connecticut by Reinhold Marvin, who came to Hartford among the earliest settlers, and was given a share of the farming ground, but he, however, established himself in the town of Lyme, where he died in 1662, and where his descendants flourished for more than two centuries.

Ira K. Marvin was born in Hebron Sept. 6, 1796, son of Elihu and Clarissa (Kilbourn) Marvin. When he was about four and a half years old his parents removed to Pennsylvania with their three children, all sons, and established themselves on what was then the frontier line of civilization. For several years they did well, when misfortunes attended the family thick and fast. The father was killed in an accident in his mill, when he was only thirty-four years old; a young daughter was burned to death; young Ira broke his leg. The afflicted widow took Ira and his younger brother to Hebron, Conn., where they were taken into the home of their grandparents, and she returned to Pennsylvania, there only to lose the remnant of her little property. She was soon after married to Daniel Lamb, of Mansfield, Pa., a very estimable gentleman, and her married life with him, though happy, was cut short by her untimely death, at the age of thirty-two, leaving him with an infant daughter. All her children by her first marriage are now dead.

Ira K. Marvin, though somewhat advanced in years, was sadly behind in his education. Schools had been wanting, and in Hebron his natural diffidence prevented him from making that progress he desired. His lack of an education made him willing in after years to spare no pains to give every opportunity to his children. In Hebron he early learned the carriage-maker's trade. When he was eighteen years of age he went to Pennsylvania and brought back with him his younger brother Harvey, and his sister Lucinda. In 1820 he came to Tolland and went into business for himself, and as he began upon a platform of honest work without regard to price he soon commanded a fine trade. In 1842 he had a severe illness, from which his recovery was so slow that he gave up his business and purchased a farm in Tolland. This was a great disappointment to him at the time, but his health gradually recovered its tone, and from the time he was sixty years of age until after seventy he could do as much out of door work as those accustomed to it from boyhood. Some time before his death he became totally blind. His earnings were not so great on the farm as in the shop, but he could support his family, and care for those he loved.

On Oct. 21, 1824, Mr. Marvin was married to Miss Julia Young, only daughter of Eliphalet and Sybil (Lathrop) Young, and the great-granddaughter of William Young, who, with three brothers, came to America from Scotland, by way of Londonderry, Ireland, in 1720, and they all settled on the Willimantic river, in Windham county. To this union were born: (1) Maria, the wife of William Butler, of Rockville; (2) Julia Ann, the wife of G. W. Bartholomew, of Bristol, Conn.; (3)

Sybil Lathrop, the wife of E. B. Cole, of Cromwell; (4) Harriet, who died at the age of four months; (5) Edwin Eliphalet, who married Cynthia P., the daughter of Hon. Loren P. Waldo; (6) Lucy Catherine, the wife of Joseph P. Root; (7) Clara Kilbourn, wife of Chas. Hawkins; and (8) Samuel Harvey, an insurance agent, living in Columbus, Ohio. The integrity and upright character of Mr. Marvin commanded the respect and confidence of his fellow townsmen, and he was called by them to local positions of trust and responsibility, and in 1851 was sent to represent the town in the General Assembly. A sincere and devoted Christian gentleman, his religious life began very early, but it was not until the Nettleton revival of 1822, that he united with the Congregational Church. In 1829 he transferred himself to the Baptist Church of Tolland, then a weak and feeble band, and when, in 1831, it was determined to build a house of worship, none were more ready to give and sacrifice than Mr. Marvin and his wife. Mr. Marvin early espoused the temperance cause, and through his long life was always a ready worker in any undertaking to reclaim the lost. It is doubtful if there was ever another man who did as much for religion, temperance and liberty in Tolland as Deacon Marvin. In 1851 he was chosen a deacon of the Baptist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin lived to celebrate their golden wedding, and her unexpected sickness, alone, prevented the reunion of all the children with their venerated parents to celebrate a beautiful half century. She survived a little over four months after that interesting anniversary, closing her useful and noble life, Feb. 24, 1875. By his death Tolland lost one of its most beloved and useful citizens.

SALMON FRANCIS PEASE, a well known farmer and prominent citizen of Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., has his home in the Hall Hill District of Somers, where he is much respected for his sterling character and industrious habits.

Deacon Isaac Pease, a remote ancestor of Salmon F., was in the third generation of the Pease family in this country, being a son of John Pease, Sn., and a grandson of Robert Pease, the emigrant. Deacon Pease was born in Salem, Mass., July 15, 1672, and was married to Mindwell Osborne in 1691. They located in Enfield, not far from the present Shaker Village, where he was among the first to hold the office of deacon in the Congregational Church, and was an extensive landowner. He died July 9, 1731, and was buried in the old cemetery north of the Center of Enfield. His children were: Isaac; Abraham, born in 1695; Mindwell; Abigail, who died when a young woman; Israel; Ann, wife of Nathaniel Prior; Benjamin; Ezekiel; Timothy; and Cummings, born in 1715.

Isaac Pease, the eldest member of the above family, was born at Enfield May 2, 1693, and was married to Amy French in 1722. They lived in Enfield, where he died in 1757. To them came: Emma, born in 1724; Isaac; Phoebe; Jacob; Abner; Ann, wife of Ebenezer Hall; Noadiah; and Luana, who married John Gains.

Isaac Pease was born at Enfield, Conn., Aug. 12, 1727, married Rachel Hall, and was a farmer in Enfield. Their children were as follows: Jehiel, born in 1750; Solomon; Isaac; Rachel; Rufus; Abigail; Sybil; and George, born in 1776.

Rufus Pease, the grandfather of Salmon F., was born May 17, 1757, in Enfield, where all his life was spent in the cultivation of his extensive property and where he died in 1801. Ruth Cooley, who became his wife in 1782, bore him the following children: (1) Rufus, born in 1783, married Bathsheba Pease, was a farmer and shoemaker in Tolland, and died Jan. 7, 1854. (2) Alpheus, who married Lois Dwight, was born in 1785 and followed farming in Enfield, where he died. (3) Enos, born in 1786, married Lucy Adams, of Stafford, Conn., was a farmer and lived in Enfield during his earlier years, but later removed to Somers, where he died. (4) Ruth, born in 1789, married Thomas Pease, a farmer of Ellington, but later of Enfield, where they both died. (5) Dorothy, born in 1790, married William Hills, a farmer and hunter in Enfield, where they died. (6) Cooley, the father of Salmon F., is mentioned below. (7) Augustus, born in 1794, married Maria Knight, and was a farmer in Enfield.

Cooley Pease was born in Enfield June 12, 1792, and during the earlier part of his life was employed in farm work in that vicinity. In 1829, after his marriage, he moved to Somers, and purchased a tract of thirty acres of Mary Hall, where he built and spent the remaining years of his life, dying March 2, 1853; his ashes repose in the West cemetery at Somers. In politics he was a Whig in early life, but later became a Democrat. He was never an office seeker.

Cooley Pease was married June 27, 1820, to Sallie Pease, a daughter of Thomas Pease, of Ellington, and to them were born: (1) James C., born Nov. 22, 1821, never married, but resided on the homestead, where he died Oct. 21, 1878; in the local affairs of the day he took much interest, and was called on to fill important positions, such as justice of the peace, selectman, and deputy sheriff. (2) Salmon Francis is mentioned below. (3) Simeon A., born Dec. 23, 1825, died in infancy. (4) Sarah E., born Aug. 28, 1827, never married, but spent her life on the family homestead, where she died April 22, 1894.

Salmon Francis Pease was born in Enfield, Conn., Nov. 8, 1822, and came to Somers when quite young. The only schooling which the financial condition of his parents permitted him to receive was obtained from the district school, and he was early reared to hard work. When a young man he was employed by the neighboring farmers, and all his life has been spent in the cultivation of the soil. To the original farm, which he purchased in 1866 from his brothers and sisters, he added more land until he owned a fine and well kept place of 170 acres, which he has recently sold to F. M. West, of Springfield. The house in which Mr. Pease's parents lived was removed and rebuilt, being converted into a modern structure, owned by William Hildge, of Thompsonville, Conn. The house in which Mr. Pease now lives was formerly owned by Henry I. Fuller, and here he is spending his last years, having earned by his long life of industry surcease from toil.

Mr. Pease is a staunch Democrat; he has never sought or been willing to accept public position. When the Somers Methodist Church was in existence he was an active member of its board of trustees. An extensive reader and a close student of passing events, he is well posted on all questions of the day, and is an intelligent gentleman.

JAMES MARTIN, one of the old and highly respected citizens of Willimantic, comes from one of the old and noted families of Windham county. He was born on Parish Hill, in the town of Windham, Nov. 16, 1827, a son of Erastus and Lydia (Ashley) Martin.

The Martins are descended from Christopher Martin, the ninth signer of the "Mayflower Compact." George Martin lived at Ipswich, Mass., and his son George (2), was born in 1710, and he married Sarah Durkee.

George Martin (3), youngest son of George (2), was born Nov. 16, 1753, and lived on what was known as Parish Hill in the present limits of Chaplin, Conn. On May 7, 1778, he was married to Sarah Simmons, by whom he had the following children: Cyril, born March 8, 1779, removed to Lockport, N. Y., where he died; Laura, born in 1782, died in 1786; Erastus, born Sept. 11, 1785, died in infancy; Erastus (2), born Dec. 14, 1786, was married Jan. 11, 1816, to Lydia Ashley, of Chaplin, and died Aug. 24, 1868; Elijah, born Feb. 11, 1789, married and lived in Scotland, Conn.; Zalmon, born June 14, 1789, went West with his brother Cyril; Ralph, born Oct. 11, 1793, died in childhood; and Sally, born Jan. 9, 1797, married George Welch, and died in Hartford. Mr. Martin was a farmer, and had his home on Parish Hill. A man of much more than ordinary intelligence, he was influential in the community. In his religious faith he was a Universalist, and was an exhorter in that denomination along with such men as Roger Bingham. After his death the ministerial comment was that "the only thing against him was his religious belief." His character was above reproach, he was a kind neighbor, and a man of generous heart. His death occurred in Windham, Oct. 24, 1830.

Erastus Martin was born on the old farm, and his wife Lydia Ashley, was born in Chaplin, June 18, 1790, the daughter of Jonathan Ashley. She was a descendant in the sixth generation from Robert Ashley, of Springfield, Mass., her line being as follows: Robert Ashley, of Springfield, Mass.; Jonathan, Samuel, Abner and Jonathan Ashley. Mrs. Lydia Martin died Jan. 25, 1875, and was buried in Bedlam Cemetery, by the side of her husband, who had died Aug. 24, 1868. The children of Erastus and Lydia Martin were as follows: Lora A., born March 4, 1817, married Seth Stowell Chapman, of Mansfield, Conn., and died Sept. 1, 1855, in Chaplin; Jane E., born June 4, 1818, married Allen Cortis, of Chaplin, where she died Sept. 3, 1849; George, born Jan. 22, 1820, died May 9, 1831; Cordelia, born Sept. 29, 1821, married Elisha Grant, of Mansfield, and was the mother of W. D. Grant, mayor of Willimantic; Edwin, born Jan. 5, 1824, died March 27, 1841; Harriett N., born Jan. 2, 1826, married William Greenslit, of Hampton, where she is still living; James, born Nov. 16, 1827, married Emily Grant, of Mansfield, and resides in Willimantic; Lydia M., born Nov. 28, 1829, married Henry Bancroft, of Worcester, Mass., and died June 13, 1852, in Chaplin, at the home of her parents, where she was buried; and Sarah, born June 9, 1833, is the widow of James E. Hayden, of Willimantic, whose career forms the subject of a sketch that may be found in another place. Erastus Martin was a farmer and lived on the old home farm in Chaplin until about 1842, when he moved to the farm in Chaplin, where he died, leaving a good patrimony. Of Universalist faith in early life, he died a Spiritualist. In politics he was a Democrat until the slavery controversies, when he joined the Republican party at its organization, always being thereafter a staunch supporter of its principles. A man of influence and standing in his native town, he was at one time its representative in the General Assembly. Upright and straightforward himself, he abominated deceit and trickery, and his reliability was never questioned. His health and vigor were unusual, and until he passed the age of seventy years he had never required the services of a physician.

James Martin attended the Parish Hill school after the custom of farmer lads of his time, as soon as he was old enough, spending the summer in farm work and attending only in winter. His home was with his parents until his marriage, March 7, 1855. Emily Grant, his wife, was born in Mansfield, Dec. 4, 1832, youngest of the ten children of Dennison and Sally (Byles) Grant.

James Martin and his wife located on the old Martin homestead which they farmed until 1879. In that year they moved to Willimantic, where Mr. Martin bought in company with James E. Hayden all the land on the north side of Bridge street, from the bridge to Pleasant street, there being at that time but one house on the entire tract, standing at the corner of Bridge and Pleasant streets. In the fall of that year Mr. Martin completed his present home. For many years he followed the trade of a carpenter, which he picked up through his mechanical ability. In 1897 his failing vision compelled him to retire from active work, and he has since led a retired life.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin have one son, George Sumner, born Feb. 15, 1857, who is a ranchman at Freeland, Wyoming; he married Anna Atkinson, a native of Ohio, and they have one son, James Grant. Mary A., a foster child, has lived in the home of the Martins since she was five years old; at the age of fifteen, having graduated from the Westfield Normal, she began teaching school, and after a number of years as a successful teacher, is now a stenographer in Hartford. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are members of the Unitarian Church. Mr. Martin was a member of the Building committee when the Windham county court house was built.

LEGRAND JOHNSON (deceased). The intelligent visitor at West Willington cannot avoid seeing and admiring a well-kept home, which is located upon a commanding elevation near the station. The farm upon which it stands is one of the most picturesque and best-kept properties in Tolland county. This beautiful spot was the home of Legrand Johnson, a prominent farmer and business man of West Willington.

Mr. Johnson was born in that town, near his late attractive residence, June 24, 1844, son of Abel and Sarah G. (Holt) Johnson. The Johnsons are one of the oldest families of Tolland county. Elisha Johnson was the great-great-grandfather of our subject, and his son Caleb was the father of Abel, the grandfather of Legrand Johnson.

Abel Johnson was born in Willington, and he died in April, 1872, in the faith of the Baptist Church. He was a farmer by occupation and a Whig in politics. His disposition was genial, but he was a man of quiet, unassuming manners. He married Deborah Preston, and their eight children were: Elisha, Truman, Sophronia, Marcus, Abel, Eliza, Eunice and Merrick.

Abel Johnson, son of Abel and father of our subject, was born Dec. 15, 1819, at Willington. He was there reared and educated, and upon reaching man's estate adopted the agricultural pursuits of his forefathers, in connection with which he also conducted a butcher's business. On April 25, 1843, he married Sarah G. Holt, who was born Nov. 6, 1819, daughter of Ryal Holt, of Willington, and five children were born to them, namely: (1) Legrand is the subject of this sketch. (2) Elisha, who was born Aug. 25, 1845, enlisted at Rockville in Company D, 14th Regiment Conn. V. I., and died in Providence, R. I., July 13, 1863, from disease contracted while in the army. (3) Frederick E., born June 5, 1847, is a physician at Mansfield, Conn.; for his first wife he married Bessie Fisk, of Willington, and for his second Emma L. Jacques, of Rockville. (4) Grace, born Aug. 1, 1852, married first, Roger Frisbie, of New Haven, and second, George Huntington, of Mansfield, and she is now living at Sharon, Mass. (5) Truman, born Sept. 28, 1854, married Jennie Bixby, of Providence, R. I., is a Baptist clergyman and for several years has been a missionary in India. Abel Johnson, the father, was possessed of more than ordinary intelligence and judgment, and was fairly successful, although handicapped by ill health. Becoming a victim of consumption he died July 28, 1861, aged forty-one years. He was a devout member of the Baptist Church, and in politics was a stanch Whig and Republican. Public-spirited and enterprising he was active in town affairs, filling various local offices. In manner he was gentle and quiet, but nevertheless of forceful character.

Legrand Johnson received his education in the common schools of Willington until he was eleven years of age, when for two terms he attended the schools of Providence. His school days ended, he settled on the old homestead, where he remained until 1874. In that year he removed to Wethersfield, where for three years he conducted a seed farm as foreman for Silas Robbins. Returning to Willington he purchased the Whitford farm of 267 acres, and there he afterward resided, becoming one of the most successful and prominent agriculturists in Tolland county. Besides general farming he established a seed and dairy business, keeping as many as twenty-two cows at one time. Various other successful business enterprises also occupied a part of Mr. Johnson's time and attention. For a number of years he engaged in the lumber business, operating steam mills. He was connected with the Southern New England Telephone Co., the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Cos., in construction work, from about 1880, having built their lines all over Connecticut and neighboring States. He was also an extensive contractor, furnishing the above named companies with poles, and various railways with ties.

On April 5, 1866, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Louisa Manning, born May 21, 1840, daughter of Lathrop and Asenath Stone (Whitford) Manning, who were born, respectively, Aug. 21, 1811, and Aug. 4, 1813. Lathrop Manning died Dec. 16, 1898, and his wife July 15, 1902.

In religious faith Mr. Johnson was a Baptist and he ever took an active interest in church work. For several years he served as clerk and treasurer, and he also conducted the Sunday-school of Willington Hill for a number of years as superintendent. In politics he was a stanch Republican, but his active business life stood in the way of his acceptance of political office. He was president of the Willington Cemetery Association from its organization in March, 1900. Few if any farmers in Tolland county took a keener interest and pride in the attractiveness of rural homes, and by the results he showed in his own property he established a high standard for beauty and won recognition among his fellow townsmen as a leading citizen in business, in social, religious and political affairs, and as a pioneer in the establishment and development of progressive farming. His death occurred Jan. 25, 1902.

CHARLES SETH BILLINGS, who has been foreman of the spool department of the Willimantic Thread Co. for the last thirty-five years, is an excellent type of the honest and straightforward New England citizen. Mr. Billings is one of the best known men in Willimantic, where he has filled creditable public positions involving ability and responsibility, and is prominent in the Masonic fraternity. His paternal ancestry is of New England, and his maternal of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Billings was born April 16, 1840, at Windham, Conn., and is the son of Charles and Hannah (Clator) Billings. The father was born in Montville, Conn., a son of John Billings, a seafaring man, who was once a resident of Windham. Charles Billings learned the stone mason's trade in his native town when a young man, and went to Eastern Pennsylvania. In the neighborhood of Easton, he met and was married to Miss Hannah Clator, a native of that portion of the State. For some years he was engaged at his trade in and about Easton, and then brought his family back to his native State, locating at Windham. In his early days he was a hatter, at that time a popular and profitable calling. Charles and Hannah Billings both died in their seventy-second year, and were buried in Windham. They were Christian people, and the mother was a member of the Congregational Church. Mr. Billings was a Jacksonian Democrat, and took much pride in the great party leader. They became the parents of seven children—five sons and two daughters. Two are now living, Charles S., and his sister, Mrs. James Hanna, of Willimantic.

Charles S. Billings was the second son and fifth child of his parents, and had his rearing in his native town. His first schooling was in the public schools, but later he attended a private school taught by Father Horton, of the Episcopal Church, at Windham Green, following this a district school taught by Porter B. Peck. When he was about eighteen years of age he attended his last school, which was taught by the well-known teacher, William Folly. From his earlier years Mr. Billings was accustomed to do such work as a stone mason as his age would permit, under his father's eye, and by the time he reached maturity he was a fairly competent stone mason himself. The trade, however, did not prove congenial, and in October, 1863, he entered the employ of the Willimantic Linen Co. For some two and a half years he was employed in the finishing room, and in 1866 he was put in charge of the spool shop, a position he has held to the present time, being one of the oldest department heads in that great institution.

Mr. Billings was married in Willimantic to Miss Caroline E. Harris, youngest of the five children of Nathan and Mary (Hall) Harris. Nathan Harris was accidentally killed while on a hunting expedition several years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Billings have one daughter, Louise B., who is now Mrs. H. A. Bugbee, of Willimantic, and the mother of two children, Florence and Alice B. Mr. Billings cast his first vote for William A. Buckingham, and his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. For five terms he was Burgess of Willimantic, and for two terms was warden of the borough, and for fifteen years he was on the town board of relief. For eleven years he was a member of the Willimantic Fire Department, being assistant to the chief for six years, and four years being chief of the department himself.

Mr. Billings became a member of Eastern Star Lodge, F. & A. M., in 1868, and has taken the various degrees that would admit him to Sphinx Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and Radiant Chapter, O. E. S. In these various branches of the order, excepting the Temple, he has passed through the official chairs, and is known as one of the most capable and popular Masons in the State. Mr. Billings was a charter member of the Royal Arcanum at Willimantic. Mrs. Billings is Past Grand Matron of the O. E. S. for Connecticut, being a member of Radiant Chapter, in which she has passed through the official chairs, and is widely known as one of the workers in that order. Mr. Billings has attained his present creditable and enviable position through his own energy and character. One of two heirs to his father's estate, he voluntarily passed over all that was coming to him for the support of his mother. His fine home on Pleasant street is the center of many devoted friendships, and he and his good wife are very much respected in the community in which their useful and well-ordered lives are passing.

HENRY AUGUST STEPHAN. Early in August, 1864, there arrived in Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., a young German, a blacksmith by trade, who but a few days previously had first set his foot on American soil, and who was unable to speak a word of the English language. This was a trying position for the willing and energetic young stranger, and he failed to find work at his trade, but fortunately some one needed to have a cellar dug, and he was able to understand a kind of sign language by which he obtained the job, and thus earned his first money in the United States. This honest and industrious young man is today one of the substantial citizens of the city of Rockville, and the owner of much valuable property in that vicinity. He was born in Prussia, Sept. 2, 1838, a son of Gottlieb and Maria (Schmidt) Stephan, and was one of a family of six children, of whom Henry A. and a sister, who married and died in Providence, were the only ones to locate permanently in the United States. The father came to America and lived in Rockville for four years, but returned to Germany, so that Henry A. Stephan is the only one of his family on this side of the Atlantic.

Mr. Stephan's school days were over at the age of thirteen. A year later he was apprenticed to the blacksmith's trade, under hard conditions, serving three years without wages (working from 4 A. M. to 7 P. M.), and three months more without wages after he was considered a full-fledged mechanic. In travel through Germany, on foot, from the Oder to the Rhine, he followed his trade as a journeyman, often with little to eat but the black bread of his country, but always cherishing the hope that he would be able to save enough to engage in business for himself. For nine years he followed this strolling life, and at length decided that he would follow the example of many of his countrymen and make his way to America. His money by this time amounted to $72, and of this $50 had to be paid for a ticket on the steamer "Germania," from Hamburg to New York. He landed in the latter city Sept. 2, 1864, a stranger in a strange land. Rockville was his objective point, as acquaintances had come to that place, and soon after his job of cellar digging he found work in Ellington at his trade. For six months he worked for Albert Heiser, at the end of that time returning to Rockville, where he entered into a pleasant engagement with Horace Treat, which lasted for almost twelve years, or until April 1, 1877, when he decided to open up business for himself. Renting a small place on Grove street, Mr. Stephan began business, and for the first time in his life was his own master. Less than two years later he bought from E. N. Stickney a tract of rough land on East Main street, at a time when there was not a building there, and on it erected a shop, a few years later building a home on his property, where he has resided ever since.

Mr. Stephan was married in July, 1865, in Rockville, to Miss Harmina Wagner, a native of Germany, who came to the United States when she was twelve years old. The two surviving children of this union are Bertha and Anna. The latter, Mrs. Alfred Markert, of Rockville, has three children, Gertrude, Agnes and Ethel.

Although a good Republican, Mr. Stephan takes only a voting interest in politics. Socially he is connected with the A. O. U. W. of Rockville, and he is a valued member of the German Lutheran Church.

By industry and economy Mr. Stephan has become a successful man of business. As his means accumulated he invested in real estate, and has built a number of the tenement houses in the city, some of which he has sold, and all of which rent without trouble, being well located and carefully built.

In 1895 Mr. Stephan revisited his native coun-

Henry A. Stephan

ry and viewed the scenes of his boyhood, finding fewer changes in the people and locality than in himself, after an absence of thirty-one years. Leaving there a poor, discouraged boy, he returned a prosperous and happy citizen of a great country, where success waits upon those who bravely seek for it. Although still quite able to do a day's work in his business, he has long since retired from activity, and enjoys the respect of the community where he has lived an honest and industrious life for so many years.

WILLIAM DURAN HOLMAN, deceased. Members of the Holman family emigrated from Wales to the Bermuda Islands between 1670 and 1690, the party including three brothers, all born in Wales. Two of the brothers, Solomon and John, were seized by a press gang, and brought to Newbury, Mass. They succeeded in escaping from the British ship, and John, the younger, settled in North Carolina, while Solomon settled in Newbury, and married Miss Mary Barton, of Old York. Coffin, in his history of Newbury, says: "Solomon Holman and wife came to Newbury, Mass., about 1693 or 1694." Their children were: Mary, born Feb. 24, 1695; Solomon, born Nov. 25, 1697; Edward, born Jan. 26, 1700; Elizabeth, born Oct. 24, 1701; Thomas; Rachel, who married Nov. 13, 1729, Samuel Waters; Anne, who married July 12, 1732, Richard Waters; Sarah, who married Abel Chase; and John. According to the Proprietors' Record, Solomon Holman, Sr., of Newbury, divided, on June 6, 1732, land which he had purchased in Sutton between the above named sons.

(II) Thomas Holman, Sr., son of Solomon, was born in Newbury, Mass. His first wife's name was Lydia. On April 30, 1759, he married, for his second wife, Sarah Cooper. His children were: Abigail, born Sept. 14, 1740; Thomas, Jan. 13, 1743; Mary, June 31, 1745; William, Feb. 5, 1747; Judith, September, 1749; William, April 12, 1751; Sarah, June 18, 1754; Deborah, Aug. 21, 1757; John, Feb. 16, 1760; Huldah, May 10, 1763; Anna, Jan. 25, 1765; Abram, Nov. 25, 1774.

(III) Thomas Holman (2), son of Thomas (1) was born Jan. 13, 1743, in Sutton, Mass., and was married Oct. 17, 1771, to Lydia Bates, daughter of David Bates, of Union, Conn. They came to Union April 13, 1778. Later they removed to Sutton, but after a few years returned to Union. Their children were: Zilpah, born Oct. 16, 1772, who married Wymen Morris, of Woodstock, Conn., and died soon after; Thomas, born May 19, 1774; Abraham, born July 30, 1776; John, born in 1778; Rufus, born Oct. 20, 1780; and Jeremiah, born Feb. 27, 1789.

(IV) Abraham Holman, the grandfather of William D., was born July 30, 1776, in Sutton, Mass., and married Polly Converse, a daughter of Benjamin Converse. He moved from Union to Ashford, and later to Mansfield, where he lived with his daughter Caroline, and where he died in 1855. His children were: Hannah; Mary; Caroline; David, who became a physician in Oxford, Mass.; Abram, who lived in Mansfield, Conn.; Justin; and William.

(V) William Holman, son of Abraham, and the father of William D., was born Oct. 24, 1811, in Ashford, Conn., and from there came to Tolland in 1833. He taught school in Union for some years through the winter seasons, and attended to the farm in the summers. After coming to Tolland he located in the eastern part of the town, near the place to which he moved one year later (and which became the home of his son William D.), there building his home in 1859. This estate comprises some 300 acres, where he carried on farming until his death, on Oct. 8, 1887. Mr. Holman was prominent in public affairs, and served in many of the local offices, and later became identified with much of the legislation of the State. As judge of probate he was well and favorably known, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1858 and again in 1866. His political belief was in Democracy, and he was always active in the party councils. He faithfully served the county as commissioner for four years, and his rigid uprightness as well as his agreeable personality won him many friends, in both public and private life.

William Holman was married March 24, 1833, to Anna Nye, who was born in Tolland, on the farm owned by William Duran Holman at the time of his death, and was a great-granddaughter of Ebenezer Nye, who was one of the first settlers of Tolland, taking up his residence there in 1713. William Holman first met his future wife when he came to Tolland to teach school. Theirs was a happy union, and their children were: Merrick, born May 18, 1834, was a conductor on the Illinois Central railroad at the time of his death, in St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 17, 1867; Elizabeth, born March 12, 1837, married Henry Young, of Tolland, Feb. 23, 1860, and died Dec. 16, 1891; Samuel, born Aug. 1, 1839, was at the time of his death a railroad conductor in Texas; Sarah J., born April 22, 1844, married Aug. 23, 1865, William Meacham, of Tolland, and died Dec. 24, 1866; William Duran is mentioned below; Harriet, born March 7, 1848, married for her first husband Henry Yost, of Rockville, Conn., and her second husband was F. R. Tucker, a farmer of Vernon, Connecticut.

William Duran Holman was born in Tolland, Feb. 24, 1846, and received his schooling in the common schools of that locality, leaving the same at the age of seventeen, when he took up the duties of the farm, in which he was engaged all his life. As a successful agriculturist he became widely known, and the farm is considered not only one of the largest, but also one of the best and most valuable, in eastern Connecticut. For twenty years Mr. Holman successfully raised tobacco, in addition to other products of the land, in great abundance, and he also prospered in stock raising, for over thirty years making a specialty of thoroughbred cattle. His blooded Devon cattle took prizes at local fairs, and at Brattleboro, Vt., and Hartford, Conn., both State fairs, for many years. The farm on which Mr. Holman was born and passed his life was owned by him and his maternal ancestors from the time Tolland was first settled, being first in the possession of the Nye family, to which his mother belonged. Mr. Holman was called away in the midst of a useful and active career March 21, 1902. He was laid to rest in the family lot in the East Tolland cemetery, more commonly known as the Skungamung cemetery.

A staunch Democrat, and a most intelligent and public-spirited man, Mr. Holman was honored many times by the confidence of his fellow citizens, and held every office of importance in the town. In 1876 he ably represented the town in the Legislature, serving on the committee on Agriculture. Local affairs always claimed his attention. He was first selectman, chairman of the board of relief for three years, assessor and also constable, and from 1892 to 1896 served as chairman of the board of county commissioners. In 1888 he was elected judge of probate for the District of Tolland and Willington, which is normally very strongly Republican, by a handsome majority, and was elected at each successive term thereafter by a continually increasing majority until the last election before his death, when he was elected unanimously by both parties, his last term not having expired at the time of his decease. He was also serving as trustee and treasurer of the Connecticut Agricultural College, Vice President of the Stafford Springs Agricultural Society, trustee of the Tolland Savings Bank, and director of the Tolland County Fire Insurance Co., of which latter he had long been president. In 1899 he was appointed a trustee of Storrs Agricultural College, at Mansfield, and was also elected treasurer of same; the Legislature changed the name the same year to the Connecticut Agricultural College. He was elected president of the Tolland County Mutual Fire Insurance Co. in January, 1888, and had served as one of its directors for some time previously. From 1886 to 1890 he was a member of the State Board of Agriculture. He was Vice President of the Judges of Probate Association of Connecticut. Mr. Holman was almost as well known in Willington as in Tolland, and closely identified with social and public affairs. The following is taken from an article which appeared in the Willington news column of a local paper at the time of his demise:

The deceased was a likable man, a model husband, father and a neighbor—with the same true neighborly spirit. His ready hand and open purse will be missed by many. From early manhood to the day of his death "Duran Holman" was the synonym of purity, honesty, capacity and good judgment, and the antonym of meanness, selfishness and duplicity, and his fragrant, beautiful memory is a legacy to his children and grand-children more precious than gold. Besides his widow and two children—Alice May, wife of ex-Senator and Constitutional Delegate W. H. Hall, and Charles William, Manchester—he is survived by one sister of a family of seven children, Harriet, wife of Selectman Romaine Tucker, Vernon, and four grandchildren. Judge Holman was a lifelong Democrat, though not an ultra one, and a member of the Tolland Congregational Church, although he often attended the Baptist Church in this town, of which his wife was a member.

Another article contained the following eulogy:

Mr. Holman's death is very keenly felt by the people of Tolland, and he will be sincerely mourned, not only in business and political circles, but in church and society. His responsibilities and activities extended in so many directions that his place will be scarcely filled by another. He was a man whom none knew but to love and praise, a loyal friend and Christian gentleman. The true worth and excellence of his character will be more and more appreciated as time goes on.

On May 12, 1870, Mr. Holman was united in marriage with Emma J. Morrison, a native of Willington, Conn., daughter of Edward Morrison, wagon and plow manufacturer. They had children as follows: (1) Charles William, born May 30, 1871, is now assistant superintendent of the Boston Ami Co.'s factory at Manchester, Conn. He married April 10, 1895, Harriet Wing Cowles, daughter of Clinton W. Cowles, of Manchester, Conn. and they have one child, William Duran Holman (2), born June 25, 1896, in Bridgeport, Conn. (2) Alice May, born Oct. 18, 1873, married June 14, 1894, William H. Hall, a thread manufacturer of Willington, Conn. Their children are Doris Elizabeth, born Jan. 30, 1897; Gardiner Holman, born April 9, 1899; and Clara Alice, born Feb. 18, 1901. Mr. Holman was one of the leading men of Tolland, and was prominent in the Congregational Church. He was chairman of the Society's committee for more than ten years, and was highly valued in every branch of the church work.

AUGUSTUS STORRS (deceased), for years a most successful business man of Brooklyn, N. Y. and the founder, at the old Storrs homestead, of the well-known agricultural school bearing his name in Mansfield, Conn., was born there June 4, 1817.

Mr. Storrs came of good New England stock. His father, Royal Storrs, was of a family that has been in America since 1663, and in Mansfield since 1798. His mother, Eunice Freeman, was descended from the Otises of Massachusetts, and was a granddaughter of the Rev. John Russell, of Hadley, who secreted the regicides.

Augustus Storrs attended the local schools and was taught to work on his father's farm. In 1830 he went into business under the firm name of A. Storrs & Co., in Gurleyville, part of his native town, opening a country store. Others furnished the capital, and he conducted it on shares, and also became agent of the Mansfield Silk Manufacturing Co., the first of its kind in the United States. New to the business as far as concerned experience he nevertheless filled both positions successfully. In September, 1839, he married Antoinette Abbe, who died in the spring of 1888. Two children were born of this marriage: One daughter, who died some years ago, and Mrs. B. E. Valentine, of Brooklyn.

Mr. Storrs remained in his Gurleyville home for about six years, and in 1846 opened a store in Willimantic, but the same year removed to Hartford. In 1851, he went to New York, residing in Brooklyn, and in 1854, with his brothers, Charles and Royal Otis Storrs, he organized the commission house of Storrs Brothers. Royal soon retired, but Augustus and Charles were in business and very successful for over twenty-five years. In 1875, Mr. Storrs bought back from his brother, R. O. Storrs, the old homestead in Mansfield, and improved the property by intelligent methods. Having acquired about 500 acres, by studying the best use to which the various portions of it had best be put, by preparing the land and putting in a complete system of drainage, he came before long to own a model farm. Everyone who visited the farm, was attracted by the fertile fields and excellent buildings. What was his pleasure, developed some very practical views, and he concluded that if such results could be brought about by care and study, it would pay to start an agricultural college. That idea was the foundation of the now well-known Storrs' Agricultural School at Mansfield. In 1881, he deeded the farms, aggregating 170 acres, to the State of Connecticut for this purpose, and his brother Charles contributed several thousand dollars towards the school's outfit. How it has since developed is known to all Connecticut; and the pupils have ever before them as a model, the Storrs' farm.

While in Brooklyn, Mr. Storrs was a member of Mr. Beecher's Plymouth Church; was one of its trustees, president of the board for six or eight years, and also treasurer, and all his life was a consistent Christian and a worthy, good man. In his death Mansfield lost one of its best citizens, and not only on account of the excellent college which bears his name is he remembered, but by reason of his generous, kindly character and the many good deeds, of which the outside world knew nothing, which live after him.

GEORGE L. ROSEBROOKS, superintendent of the H. F. Dimock farm of Coventry, Tolland county, is a thoroughly practical farmer, and his administration of his present responsible position is attended with much credit to himself and satisfaction to his employer.

Walter L. Rosebrooks, his father, was born in Union, Tolland county, and when a small child was taken by his parents to Holland, Mass., where he remained until he was about seventeen years old. He became a practical farmer, infused with a love of the soil, a love that he has transmitted to his children. For over fifty years he was a resident of Oxford, Mass., where he owned property, and was known as a wealthy farmer and lumberman, being worth at the time of his death, when almost seventy years old, some twelve thousand dollars. He was buried at Sutton, Mass. He was first married in Oxford, Mass., his bride being Beulah Freeman, who was killed by lightning. By her he had two children: Walter Freeman, who married Augusta Johnson, and died in Oxford, Mass. (where he had carried on a livery business), in 1870; and Mary, who married Joseph E. Partridge, of West Upton, Mass. (where he was overseer in a factory), and died there in April, 1899. For his second wife Mr. Rosebrooks married Betsy Torry, a native of Massachusetts, and to them were born: Eleanor R., who married Erastus Whiting, and on his death John S. C. Smith, of Brookfield, Mass., where she lived (she died Feb. 14, 1902); Augusta, who is the widow of Otis Larned, and is living in Philadelphia (she lived in Oxford, Mass., later in Charleston, S. C.; Mr. Larned served as a sutler in the Confederate army); George L.; Alfred, who died young; Charles, of Mansfield; Lucian, who died young; Louisa C., who was three times married, first to James White, second to John Pepper and third to John Smith, of Westfield, Mass.; Clara L., widow of John Peters, residing in Sutton, Mass.; and Willis L., who married Alice Kingsbury, and who has his home on the old homestead of 300 acres in Oxford, Mass. The mother of these children died in November, 1871, at the age of sixty years. Mr. Rosebrooks died in February, 1877. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and although never an aspirant for office, he represented his town in the General Assembly of the State with credit. In the Baptist Church, of which his wife was a member, his was a familiar and regular presence.

George L. Rosebrooks was born in Oxford, Mass., Sept. 8, 1841, and received his education in the local school. Remaining at home until he reached the age of twenty-one years engaged in farm work, his first employment away from home was on the farm of John Rich in Sutton. For a short time he did factory work, and was also employed in the express service, as well as a hat shop at Upton, Mass. For four years he was employed on the farm of George Hodges, and then in 1868 came to Mansfield, to take charge of the Augustus Storrs farm, one of the finest and most complete in the State. When it came under his charge it was not self-supporting, a condition of affairs that did not long continue under the charge of Mr. Rosebrooks. A herd of 150 cattle was established, and still the place has been able to sell fifty tons of hay after all the stock was fed. New buildings were put up, the appearance of the place radically changed and the place converted into an educational institution under the name of the Storrs' Agricultural College, and in 1900 it became the Connecticut College of Agriculture. Mr. Rosebrooks continued as manager of the farm six years after the death of the original owner, Augustus Storrs. In March, 1898, he came to Coventry to take charge of the H. F. Dimock farm, of which he now has the entire charge, even designing the new barns, the owner only suggesting the color of the paint to be employed. Mr. Dimock wants an ideal farm, and under the administration of Mr. Rosebrooks it is rapidly becoming such a property. It consists of 400 acres, and here Mr. Dimock spends his summers.

Mr. Rosebrooks is a strong Republican, and in 1880 and for nearly ten consecutive years was first selectman in Mansfield, being a selectman when he came to Coventry. In 1883 he represented that town in the General Assembly, and served on the committee on Agriculture. In religion Mr. Rosebrooks is a supporter and an attendant of the Congregational Church. The Grange of South Coventry carries him on its rolls, not only as one of its members but as one of its most active and energetic workers. He was one of the charter members of Grange No. 64, Mansfield.

On Jan. 1, 1872, Mr. Rosebrooks married Miss Louisa J. Chase, a daughter of Jeremiah and Margaret (Fisk) Chase, and to this union were born: Fred, born Oct. 26, 1872, and now operating his father's farm in Willimantic, married Edith Gardner, by whom he has two sons, Ward (born March 15, 1896) and Harold (born Sept. 8, 1900); Walter L., born Sept. 21, 1874, owns a hardware store in West Medway, Mass., and is unmarried; Louisa J., born July 20, 1876, lives at home; George L., born Sept. 21, 1879, lives at home; and Hattie, born July 8, 1881, married William Small, Feb. 28, 1900, and lives in Coventry.

Jeremiah Chase, the father of Mrs. Rosebrooks, was born Nov. 22, 1808, in Topsham, Vt., a son of David and Sally Chase. On Dec. 19, 1838, he married Margaret Fisk, who was born in Groton, Vt., Feb. 1, 1814, a daughter of Eben Fisk. To this union were born: Louisa J., wife of Mr. Rosebrooks, born Dec. 25, 1839; Mary Elizabeth, born Oct. 6, 1841, married Allen Farr, of Dickinson, Franklin Co., N. Y., and died Aug. 13, 1890; Horatio Merrill, born Jan. 2, 1844, died in the service May 16, 1863; Nathaniel, born Dec. 2, 1845, married Ora Terral, and died Dec. 9, 1898; David, born April 25, 1849, died Feb. 21, 1857; Eben, born April 23, 1851, married Joanna Hazen and died Jan. 27, 1888; George S., born Feb. 17, 1853, married Florence M. Gear, Oct. 17, 1883, and lives at Parishville, N. Y.; Phoebe A., born July 28, 1855, was a teacher in Waterville, Conn., and married Harry J. Griswold; Emma M., born March 29, 1859, was a teacher until her marriage to Samuel K. Coe, which occurred Dec. 21, 1880. Jeremiah Chase died March 19, 1895, and his wife passed away July 16, 1892.

CHARLES ROSEBROOKS is the proprietor of one of the best cultivated farms of Mansfield, and is one of Tolland county's most representative agriculturists. He was born at Oxford, Mass., where his father was a farmer.

Charles Rosebrooks was born in Oxford, Mass., Oct. 6, 1844, attended the district schools, and was reared in the school of toil also. Until the age of twenty-three years he remained at home, engaged in farming and lumbering, in April, 1869, coming to Mansfield, where he was employed on the farm of Otis Storrs, which is now a part of the land occupied by the Connecticut Agricultural College. Mr. Rosebrooks remained on this farm for the three succeeding years, and then went to Upton, Mass., where he followed farm work two years. Then he returned to Mansfield, was married, and located on his present farm, consisting of 160 acres. Mr. Rosebrooks has purchased other lands, and now owns 225 acres. He has engaged in general farming and in the raising of thoroughbred cattle, his stock being well known through the county, and to be depended upon. It is quite a usual thing for his cattle to carry off the prizes at the fairs and cattle shows through this section.

Mr. Rosebrooks is acknowledged to be one of the very best and most thorough farmers in Mansfield. He has erected all of the buildings on the farm except the house, putting up the commodious barns in 1875, and has also altered the house to modern style, altogether making a very decided change in the appearance of the farm. His property adjoins the land belonging to the Connecticut Agricultural College, with its finely cultivated land and splendidly kept buildings, and does not suffer from the contrast, being just as attractive, and the crops as plentiful, as if no fence was between. Mr. Rosebrooks is a hard worker, and has always been a leader, his example in farming and stock-raising finding many followers. His judgment on agricultural matters is constantly sought.

Mr. Rosebrooks was married, April 8, 1874, to Miss Julia Chapman, of Mansfield, a daughter of James and Abigail (Moulton) Chapman, and their children are: Abbie, born March 26, 1879, who attended Storrs' school and the Manchester high school, and resides at home; Bessie, born Oct. 3, 1880, at home; and Laura, born Sept. 5, 1882. In politics Mr. Rosebrooks is a Republican, but his life is too busy to permit him to accept office. He is, and for several years has been, the sexton of Mansfield cemetery, which is near his home. The family attend the Congregational Church, of which Mr. Rosebrooks is a liberal supporter. His acquaintance is large, and he is universally esteemed.

James Chapman, the grandfather of Mrs. Rosebrooks, was born in 1775, and was brought up in Ashford, Conn. In 1831 he located in Mansfield, on our subject's present farm, and resided there the rest of his life, dying in 1860. He married Lucy Whitney, who was born in Eastford, Conn., and died March 3, 1879. The children of this marriage were: Mary Ann, born in 1807, married John

Charles Rosebrooks

Whitmore, and died in Ashford, Conn., Feb. 1, 1853; Lucy, born July 8, 1812, married (first) Warren Fuller and (second) Horace White, of Manchester, and died Jan. 10, 1890; James was the father of Mrs. Rosebrooks; Tabitha, born in 1816, died Dec. 25, 1820; Emily Maria, born in 1818, is the widow of George Gilbert, and resides in North Attleboro, Mass.; Sarah Ann, born Aug. 1, 1820, is the widow of Samuel Stanton, and resides in Hartford, Conn.; Phila, born July 7, 1822, married John Sibley, and died in Norwich, N. Y.; and Harriet, born May 5, 1824, died Jan. 15, 1896, unmarried.

James Chapman, son of James, was born Oct. 30, 1814, in Westford Society, Ashford, Conn., but his parents moved to Brooklyn when he was but a small boy. He attended school in Brooklyn, and later, when his parents moved to Monson, Mass., he was employed at farm work there. When he was seventeen his parents moved to Mansfield, where he has resided ever since, with the exception of the year following his marriage. His occupation has been that of farming, but he has about retired from active exertion and resides with our subject. On Nov. 22, 1837, in Mansfield, he married Abigail Moulton, who was born Dec. 14, 1811, in Mansfield, daughter of Daniel and Hannah (Hovey) Moulton, and died Feb. 20, 1888.

ISAAC SANDERSON, a retired citizen of Willimantic, and a conspicuous member of the board of selectmen of the town of Windham, Windham county, is one of the representative men of the city, and is a well-known horseman throughout New England. As such Mr. Sanderson enjoys the distinction of having bred, raised and owned the only 2:10 performer ever produced in Connecticut. As a self-made man he has won his way to prominence purely through his own exertions, and that today he is one of the substantial men of Willimantic is largely due to his persistent spirit and industrious habits.

Mr. Sanderson comes from an old family in Lunenburg, Mass. Abraham Sanderson settled there early in the eighteenth century. Of his sons, Jacob was a minute man in the war of the Revolution; while Samuel served in the Colonial wars and also in the Revolution.

Jonathan Sanderson, son of Jacob and grandfather of Isaac, was a prominent and wealthy farmer, and made his home on the old family estate in Lunenburg. He married Mehitable Spafford, who was descended from John Spafford, who came to New England from Yorkshire, England, with the company of the Rev. Ezekiel Rogers, in 1639, and was one of the first settlers of Georgetown, Mass. The Spafford name, which years ago had various spellings, among others that of "Spofford," comes from the Earl of Spafford. John Spafford, the emigrant married Elizabeth Scott, of Ipswich, Mass. John Spafford (2), son of the above John Spafford, born in 1648, married in 1675, Sarah Wheeler, of Rowley, Mass., and died in 1697; his widow then married Caleb Hopkinson, Sr., and she died in 1732. Jonathan Spafford, son of John (2), born in 1684, married Jemima Freethe, of York, Maine. David Spafford, son of Jonathan, born in 1710, married in 1735, Hannah Cheney. Abijah Spafford, son of David, born in 1736, married Sarah Towne, and their daughter, Mehitable, born in Boxford, N. H., in 1771, married Jonathan Sanderson, of Lunenburg, Mass.

Jesse Spafford, son of Abijah and brother of Mehitable Spafford, carried on a pottery in Willimantic in the early days, becoming prominent and wealthy. His influence was marked in the community and many delicate and important trusts were confided to his care.

Abijah Sanderson, the father of Isaac, was a native of Lunenburg, Mass., where he kept his home until 1840, when he removed to Lowell, Mass., to become a member of the police force of that city, a position he held for eleven years. At the expiration of that period he returned to Lunenburg, resuming his residence on his native homestead, where he followed farming the remainder of his life, dying at the age of sixty-six years, and receiving interment in his native place. He married Chastina Davis, who survived him some years, and died at the home of her daughter in Boston; her remains were laid to rest in Mt. Auburn cemetery, a beautiful city of the dead in the center of New England thought and enterprise. To Mr. and Mrs. Abijah Sanderson were born: Ann, who married Augustus Wyman, and died in Lowell, Mass., leaving one son, Louis, now a resident of Lynn, Mass.; Henry, a soldier of two wars—the war with Mexico and the Great Rebellion—died in Maine; Chastina became the wife of Rev. Alex. Hichborn, a minister of the Universalist Church, and died in Bridgewater, Mass.; George lived for some years in Waltham, Mass., and then located in New London, Conn., where he was engaged in manufacturing confectionery, and where he died; Maria married Edwin Sylvester, and died in Waltham, Mass.; Calvin, who was a soldier in the Civil war, died in Fitchburg, Mass.; Carrie married George W. Thayer, and died in South Braintree, Mass.; Hattie, who died in Boston, Mass., was three times married, died in Boston, and was buried in Mount Auburn; Frank E. was a wool broker and a merchant in Boston, where he died; and Isaac. Abijah Sanderson was a lover of a good horse and was a citizen of public spirit and good standing. A Democrat in politics, he was no office seeker, and preferred to devote his time and attention to his own business.

Isaac Sanderson was born in Lunenburg, Mass., April 7, 1840. He had but a limited opportunity at school, as the school house was two miles from his home, and but two terms of twelve weeks each were held each year. Deep snows made the way difficult in the winter season, and many winters passed with but a few weeks' schooling. Under these hard conditions Mr. Sanderson completed his course at the district school, and took up the work of his life. Until he was eighteen years of age he lived at home, but after that was at work for himself, first among the neighboring farmers, and then in Cape Cod, Mass., as a farm hand for Chipman Weldin, where he was employed for a season. Mr. Weldin was an uncle of young Sanderson, having married Berintha Davis, a sister of Mrs. Abijah Sanderson.

Mr. Sanderson spent the winter of 1859 and 1860 at the home of his parents, and was married April, 7, 1860, in Lunenburg, Mass., to Esther Adams, who was born in that town Sept. 6, 1839, a daughter of Abel and Nancy (Wyman) Adams. Her father was a brickmaker in his earlier years, but became a farmer later in life. Mrs. Sanderson attended Lunenburg Academy, and prepared for teaching, being employed in that work at Townsend, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson began their married life on the farm of his father, which he leased and cultivated for several years. In 1863 they removed to his father's farm in Athol, Mass., which Mr. Sanderson cultivated for a year, and then made his first business venture as the proprietor of a livery stable at Townsend, Mass. When this business was nicely under way. Mr. Sanderson was taken sick with typhoid fever, and the new enterprise, lacking his personal care and attention, was ruined, the proprietor being compelled on his recovery to begin again. As he was plucky, full of push and energy, and thoroughly versed in the value of horses, it was not long before he was once more on his feet, his most fortunate stroke being the buying of a horse for one hundred dollars, which so developed under his hands that he was able to trade it for a livery stable in Groton Junction. Later he disposed of his establishment for $2,500, and for a year from Sept. 1, 1869, conducted the "Chelsea House," at Hampton, Conn., at a time when railroad construction brought considerable to the place. Mr. Sanderson's next location was at Danielsonville, Conn., where for a year he was the proprietor of the "Atawagan House." For a time he was in the restaurant business in Norwich, Conn., and in 1876, he came to Willimantic, buying the furnishings of the "Brainard House," on the northwest corner of Church and Main streets. For six years he was the popular and successful landlord of this establishment, when he sold out to S. C. Hooker, soon, however, acquiring the property, subject to the lease of Mr. Hooker. In the meantime he was in charge of "Young's Hotel," on Main street. In 1887 Mr. Sanderson reopened the "Brainard House," after thoroughly refitting it, furnishing it new throughout, and generally improving the stand. Some two years later he sold the equipments to Mr. Garvey, retaining, however, the ownership of the building until 1893. That year the building passed into the hands of H. C. Murray, and was soon supplanted by the Murray Block. The hotel career of Mr. Sanderson terminated with his transfer of the "Brainard" to Mr. Garvey, and he retired to his home at No. 75 High street, which he had bought some years previously.

Mr. Sanderson began the breeding of fine horses as a business and "Alcyo," a speedy animal, was foaled in 1887, becoming the head of Mr. Sanderson's stable. This horse made a record of 2:10 at Rigby Park, Maine, and was as noted above, the first Connecticut-bred horse to strike that gait. "Lady Alcy S.," a daughter of "Alcyo," holds the yearling record of 2:37, and the two-year-old record of 2:19, in all New England-bred horses. This famous stallion is now at the head of a large stock farm in California. Mr. Sanderson was engaged in the horse-business up to 1898, when he disposed of all his stock, with the exception of two fillies, at Hedges & Seaman's Sale in Madison Square Garden, in New York, and retired from the breeding business. The last of his stock was disposed of to parties of Berlin, Germany, in March, 1901, under somewhat interesting circumstances: Lady Alcy S., which had been sold to Mr. May, a noted horseman in Berlin, Germany, had developed into a wonderful performer, and Mr. May wrote to Mr. Sanderson asking if he had any more of the same breed for sale. Mr. Sanderson replied that he had two full sisters of the horse he had, and named his price at $1,500. This was at once accepted, and the last of his horses has passed from the hands of Mr. Sanderson, and it is expected by good horsemen that these two fillies will surpass any of the product of "Alcyo" and "Annie Rooney."

Mr. Sanderson is a horseman by nature, loves to handle the ribbons, and is a thorough sportsman. Much money has passed through his hands, and he treats gains and losses with the same calm and even spirit. A man of fine personal qualities, he has a host of friends all over New England, and is beloved for his genial nature and unaffected humor. Making his way upward, he has found his kind-hearted and capable wife a great help to him in his effort to escape from the poverty of his boyhood.

To Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson have come two children: (1) Fred A., born Feb. 15, 1863, in Athol, Mass., has been twice married, his first wife being Hattie Gordon, and his second Sadie Walker; he is city clerk of Willimantic, and is one of the well-known Democrats of that place. (2) Herbert A., born April 7, 1865, in Lunenburg, Mass., married Ruth Miller, of Pawtucket, R. I., and lives in Worcester, Mass., where he fills the position of local manager for the Grand Union Tea Company.

Isaac Sanderson is a prominent member of the Democratic party in Willimantic, and was Burgess when Willimantic was a borough. For some time he was a member of the board of relief, and is at present on the board of selectmen. Mr. Sanderson is one of the oldest members of Natchaug Lodge, No. 22, K. of P., and his wife belongs to the Rathbone Sisters. For many years Mr. Sanderson has been a director of the Willimantic Fair Association, and for five years was superintendent of the grounds of the Association.

CAPT. BENJAMIN TURNER LOOMIS, an honored veteran of the Civil war, and an inventor of note, is now living retired at Tolland, Tolland county, in the same house in which he was born, March 7, 1838.

Sylvanus Loomis, the grandfather of Capt. Loomis, lived in Mansfield, Conn., where he followed the occupation of a farmer. Both he and his wife, who in her maidenhood was Olivia Turner, of Mansfield, lived unusually long lives, and she drew close to the completion of ninety-five years. They were both devoted members of the Congregational Church. Two of their children lived to mature years: Leonard, mentioned below; and Stephen T., who went West and located at Painesville, Ohio, where he died (he was quartermaster in the same regiment with James A. Garfield, and was always a staunch friend of that eminent Ohio statesman).

Leonard Loomis, son of Sylvanus and father of our subject, was born in Mansfield, Conn., in 1798; he died in Tolland in 1862, and was buried in the Mansfield cemetery. He was a man of good education, and when he was only eighteen years old published an arithmetic which was received with much favor by school teachers, and which was widely used for many years in a number of States in the Union. He served as a fifer in the American army during the war of 1812, though he was only thirteen years old at the time he entered the service, and he participated in the campaign around New London. Mr. Loomis was a good stump speaker, and was well known as a deep thinker and a logical reasoner. In 1836 he removed to Tolland where he taught school, and had a large business as a house and sign painter. Mr. Loomis was established at first at Tolland Center, and a year later the Turnpike Company built a house where Capt. Loomis now lives, and there the father kept the toll-gate for ten years. Mr. Loomis was married to Mary Turner, the daughter of Benjamin Turner, of Mansfield. Her father was an extensive farmer, and made combs on a large scale when comb making was the principal industry. To this union were born: (1) Mary D. married first, Charles Moore, of Tolland, and second Dr. Wilder, of Boston. (2) Jane was twice married, first to George W. Hanover, of Willimantic, the second, to Lorenzo G. Winter, of Tolland. (3) Henry was drowned in Tolland when ten years old. (4) Stephen died in infancy. (5) Ann Z. married Francis King, of Vernon, Conn., and is now living in Washington, D. C., where he holds a government position. (6) Andrew W., born Oct. 13, 1835, married Sarah Jacobs. He was the first man in Connecticut to enter the Union army in response to the first call for soldiers. He enlisted for three months in the 1st Conn. V. I., and in the summer of 1862 re-enlisted in the 18th Conn. V. I., going out as second lieutenant, returning as first lieutenant, Taken prisoner by the Rebels, he was confined for eleven months in Libby prison, and about ten months in Macon and Charleston. Returning to Tolland he bought a farm on which he made his home for two years only, and then moved to Willimantic, where he is now living. (7) Benjamin T. is our subject. (8) Caira I. married Lester D. Phelps, who served in the war of the Rebellion, and is now judge of probate of Rockville.

Capt. Benjamin T. Loomis received his education in the Tolland schools, continuing there until just before his sixteenth year, when he began to paint with his father. In 1855 he began teaching, his first school being in Willington, the following winter in Coventry, and the winters of 1857-58 and of 1861-62 in Tolland, working during the summer time at painting. Early in the spring of 1858 he went to Meriden, to learn the burnisher's trade and the following year removed to New York to work at burnishing solid silver for Wood & Hughes, where he remained until Jan. 1, 1861.

As Woods & Hughes sold their goods very largely in the South, they were compelled to shut down, and Mr. Loomis returned to Tolland to resume the occupation of teaching for a time. In 1862 he raised a company in Tolland, and went into the nine months' service as captain of Company K., 22nd Conn. V. I. The regiment was largely engaged in picket and guard duty around Washington, and in Virginia, and saw but little actual fighting. Nevertheless the service was very exhausting, and when Capt. Loomis was mustered out with his command at Hartford, after being in the war about a year, his health was greatly impaired. When he had somewhat regained his strength he again sought work with friends in New York, and was engaged for a time with William Gale & Sons, silversmiths, and then entered the offices of the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Co., where he was employed for five years as shipping clerk and overseer of the export trade, having full charge of the out-put of the factory and the firm's dealings with the custom house. After his connection with the Grover & Baker Co. had ceased, Mr. Loomis was employed for two years with F. A. Ross, manufacturer of sewing machine wood-work, and when that gentleman died his business was given up. Mr. Loomis then came back to Tolland, and for about one year was engaged with Lorenzo Winter in the hotel business. In the fall of 1879 he went to Baltimore to put on the market a valuable water filter, which he had invented. Mr. Loomis has had peculiar success as an inventor. While in New York he thought out and perfected and invented a "tap" for cutting threads on castings, which invention he sold. He also invented a fire escape and a self-adjusting caster. Mr. Loomis was engaged in the manufacture of his water filter in Baltimore until 1896. In April, of that year, he sold out his business to the Loomis-Manning Filter Co., who have their main office in Philadelphia, and branches all over the world. The United States Government makes large use of this filter, and it is regarded as a very valuable invention, and has proven most profitable to the inventor.

Capt. Loomis retired in 1896, and made his home on a farm in Tolland, which he bought in 1893, and which is known as the old "toll-gate place." He has been very successful in his business life and is a self-made man. In 1859 he joined the I. O. O. F., in New York, and the F. & A. M. in 1870. A Jeffersonian Democrat, he has never been a politician or an office seeker. Capt. Loomis is a pleasant and genial gentleman, and his hospitality is but one of his many good traits. A firm believer in cremation, he has built a splendid mausoleum on his farm in which is deposited the ashes of his deceased daughter. It is made to receive his own ashes when the time shall come for his incineration, as well as those of other members of his family. A beautiful grove on his farm is improved with swings, stands, tables, and other conveniences for picnic parties, which is at the free command of the community.

NATHAN M. STRONG. The history of the Strong family in New England begins with Elder John Strong, who was born in Taunton, England, in 1605, and sailed for New England in the company under Rev. John Wareham, in the ship "Mary and John," in 1630. In 1635, after having assisted in developing Dorchester, he became an original proprietor of Taunton. He was at Windsor, Conn., and in 1659 at Northampton, Mass., where he was noted as one of its foremost citizens. For forty years he resided in that town. His first wife died on the voyage to New England.

John Strong (2), son of Elder John, born in England in 1620, married (second) 1664, Elizabeth Warriner. He was a tanner, and lived at Windsor, where he died in 1697. His second wife died in 1684.

John Strong (3), son of John (2), born in 1665, was married in 1686 to Hannah, a daughter of Deacon John Trumbull, of Suffield, Conn. He made his home in Windsor, where he died in 1749.

Deacon David Strong, son of John (3), was born in 1704, and was married in 1732 to Thankful Loomis, a daughter of Moses Loomis, of Windsor. When eighty years old he married for his second wife a girl of eighteen. He was a farmer in Bolton, and died at the age of ninety-six. For sixty-five years he was a deacon of the Congregational Church.

Ebenezer Strong, son of Deacon David, born in 1754, was married in 1779 to Lucy (Kilbourne) Lawrence, daughter of Benjamin Kilbourne. Her husband, David Lawrence, was killed in the massacre at Wyoming, Pa. Mr. Strong was a farmer in Bolton, and built the house in which Nathan M. was born. He died in 1824, his widow passing away in the following year.

Daniel Strong, son of Ebenezer, born Nov. 18, 1784, was married in 1825 to Sabra, daughter of Nathan and Sarah (Capron) Morgan, who was born in 1797. To this union came the following children: (1) Nancy married Elisha Miner, of Groton, Conn., became the mother of four children, and is now deceased. (2) Daniel, born in 1828, died in New London in 1899, where he had been engaged in farming and railroading. (3) Nathan Morgan is mentioned below. (4) Emeline married George Burdick, of Nyack, N. Y., and is the mother of five children. (5) Lucy married (first) William Salters and (second) William Nye, was the mother of two children, and is now deceased. (6) Amanda became the wife of George Birch, of Waterbury, Conn. Daniel Strong, the father, was a farmer in Bolton. He erected a distillery on the Blackledge river in the south part of Bolton, below the Strong homestead, about 1824. Ira Bliss, his foreman, a most worthy man, was murdered some years ago at Burnside. Mr. Strong was a man of fine character and generous disposition, and his closing years were shadowed by large losses incurred through his generosity and trusting disposition. He died in Bolton, in 1870, and his widow died the following year.

Nathan Morgan Strong, son of Daniel, was born March 24, 1829, and married in Glastonbury, March 12, 1856, Abbie Louise Hollister, who was born in that place May 30, 1830.

THE HOLLISTER FAMILY, to which Mrs. Nathan M. Strong belongs, traces its history back to Lieut. John Hollister, who is said to have been born in England in 1612, and came to these shores about 1642. In Wethersfield, Conn., where he settled, he became a noted man, and was deputy a number of times to the General Court. Johanna, his wife, was the daughter of Hon. Richard Treat. He died in Wethersfield in 1665, his widow surviving until 1694.

John Hollister (2), son of Lieut. John, was born in 1644, and was married in 1667, to Sarah Goodrich, daughter of William Goodrich. Mr. Hollister held a leading position in Glastonbury, where he died in 1711; he lost his wife eleven years before.

Thomas Hollister, son of John (2), was born in 1672, and married Dorothy, daughter of Joseph Hills, of Glastonbury, who was born in 1667. Mr. Hollister was a deacon in the church. He died in 1741, his wife the same year.

Josiah Hollister, son of Thomas, was born in 1696, and was married to Martha, a daughter of

Matthew Morgan Storry

William Miller, in 1718. They lived in Glastonbury where he was buried. In 1742 he bought and in Sharon.

Elijah Hollister, son of Josiah, born in 1729, (first) married Mehitable Judd, in 1752 and (second) Mary Pratt. He spent his last years in Glastonbury, and represented that town in 1775 in the General Court. He also served in the same position in 1776 and 1780. His death occurred in 1785. His first wife died when only twenty-six years old, and his second wife died the same year as he died.

John Hollister, son of Elijah, born in Farmington, in 1756, was married to Mary, daughter of William Wells, of Glastonbury, in 1781. She was born in 1757. John Hollister passed his life in Glastonbury, where he died in 1835, and his widow in 1838.

Horatio Hollister, son of John, born in 1786, in Glastonbury, married Polly Tullar, Aug. 29, 1809. She was born in 1786, and died in 1841, his death occurring in 1851. They had the following family: Mary Tuller, born June 17, 1810; Martin, May 13, 1812 (died April 8, 1878); John June 7, 1814 (lives in Glastonbury); Charles, March 28, 1816 (died Dec. 14, 1883); Norman West, 1818 (died May 8, 1853); Julia Ann, June 10, 1820 (died Nov. 14, 1849); Andrew, May 13, 1822 (died Sept. 7, 1846); George, March 29, 1824 (died Feb. 5, 1887); Robert, April 14, 1826; Jane Eliza, March 17, 1828 (wife of George Dean); Abbie Louise, wife of Nathan M. Strong; Elisha, Sept. 23, 1833.

Rev. Jonathan Strong, D. D., one of the distinguished representatives of the Strong family, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1786, and was ordained pastor at Randolph, Mass., Jan. 28, 1789. Dr. Strong had superior ability, and was a man of fine spiritual zeal and temper, meeting with large success in the ministry.

Nathan M. Strong, who was born in Bolton, went to live with a cousin in Glastonbury when he was only six years old, and there he made his home until he was twenty-one. His education was obtained at the local schools and in the academy at East Glastonbury, that part of the town now bearing the name of Buckingham. Mr. Strong inherited principally from his parents a strong constitution and unbounded energy. He began farming, but spent a winter in the Cheney Mills at South Manchester, and a second winter in the silk mill. Later he took up the carpenter's trade, at which he spent six years, working for David Hubbard.

After their marriage Mr. Strong and his wife lived for a time on a rented farm in Glastonbury. In 1859 they came to Vernon, where he bought a farm near the Centre which he held for a time, and then sold to buy another. Mr. Strong has bought and sold a number of farms, and has moved twelve times since his marriage. In 1878 he built his present home near the Centre, one of the modern homes of the town, having steam heat and other up-to-date conveniences. Mr. Strong engaged in carpentry and farm work for a time after coming to Vernon, but for the last twelve years has devoted himself strictly to farming, gardening being his specialty. For two years he raised tobacco.

Mr. and Mrs. Strong have two children: (1) Nathan Hollister, born April 26, 1857, was married Nov. 27, 1878, to Ella M. Dart, a member of the old Dart family of whom a sketch may be found on another page. They have two children, Nathan Morgan, born Sept. 17, 1889, and Edna L., born Feb. 20, 1896. (2) Mary Jane, born July 14, 1859, was married in 1889 to Capt. Ebenezer Morgan, who died in 1881. She is now the widow of Prof. Alonzo Williams, a professor of languages for twenty-seven years in Brown University, whose career was phenomenal. At twelve years of age he was working in a factory and began his education by studying nights. Entering the service during the Civil war as a private, he was promoted to major for signal bravery and conspicuous ability. After the war he went to Europe, studied languages and received a degree.

Mr. Strong cast his first vote for the Democratic party, but since then has voted with the Republicans. The family are members of the Vernon Center Congregational Church, where Mr. Strong rendered valuable and important service as a member of the building committee. Mr. Strong is a well preserved old gentleman, and represents a high type of citizenship. Beginning life with energy and enterprise as his most valuable assets, he has won success by such methods as retained for him the highest respect and esteem of his fellowmen, and has made a name to leave to his posterity of which they will have just cause to feel proud.

NATHANIEL WALES, JR. (deceased), a noted man in Windham county during the Revolutionary war, and as prominent a man as the town of Windham had during that stormy period, was born in March, 1722, in Windham. He was a grandson of Deacon Nathaniel Wales, from Milton, Mass., who came to Windham in 1716. Ebenezer Wales, the father of Nathaniel, married Esther Smith, daughter of Elisha Smith.

Nathaniel Wales, Jr., was, strictly speaking, a son of old Windham. He was prominent in town affairs, and was held in high esteem, retaining the trust and confidence of his townsmen to the day of his death. He was married in March, 1741, to Mary Wetmore, daughter of Izrahiah and Sarah (Booth) Wetmore, of Middletown, Conn. Mr. Wales lived at intervals in Middletown, Norwich and Windham until 1761, after which period he lived in Windham until the time of his death.

Tradition has it that when Mr. Wales was married, his wife expressed a hope that if any children were born to them, God in his infinite mercy would not let them live to maturity. However true or false the tradition, there is a headstone or monument erected in the old Windham cemetery to the nineteen children of Nathaniel Wales and his wife Mary, all of whom died in infancy.

The Colonial records of the State abound in references to the public career of Mr. Wales. He appears in these records many times as Nathaniel Wales, and more times as Nathan'l Wales, Jr.; both refer to the same person, as appears from the fact that the records show that Nathan'l Wales, Jr., was appointed by the Colonial Assembly of Connecticut as a member of the Council of Safety, and is recorded as present at the first meeting of the Council as Nathaniel Wales. At the second meeting of the Council, the same day, his name appears as Nathan'l Wales, Jr. Mr. Wales attended almost every session of the Council of Safety, especially those held in Lebanon from 1775 to 1780. Many delicate and difficult missions were entrusted to him by the General Assembly and the Council of Safety. In those "days that tried men's souls," when it seemed as if those loyal men would be obliged to abandon in despair the glorious cause of Freedom and Independence which they were striving so hard to attain, Mr. Wales was close to Gov. Trumbull, who bravely and cheerfully discharged the responsibilities of his high office, meeting its duties with a faithfulness and tenacity of purpose characteristic of those men who made it possible for this nation to attain its present greatness. When the clouds were the darkest, and the resources of the Colonists almost exhausted, "Brother Jonathan" leaned heavily upon this son of old Windham, and profited much by his aid and advice.

Mr. Wales was for many years a member of the General Assembly, representing the town of Windham, and was a justice of the peace in Windham county from 1761 until the day of his death, in 1783. In 1781, 1782 and 1783 he was a Justice of the Quorum, otherwise known as the Court of Common Pleas, and at his death John Felch was appointed to his place.

The town records mention Nathan'l Wales, Jr., as at one time a lister of the town, and a surveyor; from 1761 to 1772, inclusive, he was one of the selectmen of the town, most of the time being first selectman; and from 1758 to 1774 was moderator of nearly all the town meetings; from 1766 to his death he filled the position of town agent. In 1774 Mr. Wales was appointed on a committee with Col. Jedediah Elderkin, to attend a meeting in Hartford, where they were to assist in forming such a non-consumption agreement as might be deemed best. That year he was correspondent for the town and served on many important committees.

The Colonial records show that Mr. Wales was appointed in 1764 on a committee with Jonathan Trumbull and Joshua West, to adjust a suit which had been rendered in favor of the Colony against Richard Davenport of Coventry. In 1770 he was appointed on a committee to investigate the acts of Joseph Talcott, late treasurer of the Colony. In 1772 Eleazer Fitch, Jr., a resident of Windham county, reported to the General Assembly that he was indebted to the treasurer of the Colony, and it was ordered that he give a bond that should meet the approval of Eliphalet Dyer, Jedediah Elderkin and Nathan'l Wales, Jr. Mr. Wales was appointed in 1773 on the Committee of Correspondence for the Colony, to take into consideration the letter from the Speaker of the House of Burgesses of the Colony of Virginia.

In May, 1775, the first Committee of Safety was appointed to assist Gov. Trumbull when the Assembly was not in session, and the name of Mr. Wales appears on the records as one of the members of the Committee. In the same year the Council ordered that fifty men be enlisted at New Haven, to be under the command of such persons as should be nominated by William Williams and Nathan'l Wales. In December of the same year the General Assembly granted Jedediah Elderkin and Nathan'l Wales, Jr., liberty to erect a mill in the town of Windham for "the manufacturing of gunpowder," and the following year a premium of £30 lawful money was voted to Elderkin and Wales, for having "manufactured 1,000 pounds of gunpowder at their powder mill in Windham." This mill was very likely located on or near the site of the Willimantic Linen Co.'s No. 2 Mill.

The Continental Congress had resolved that the expenses for and in support of the great struggle for American liberty should be defrayed by the United Colonies in just and proper proportions. Connecticut had advanced large sums of money for the cause in excess of her just proportions. The Council of Safety, being in great need of funds, selected William Williams and Nathaniel Wales as the proper persons to apply to the "Congress as Phila" to "request and receive" the sum of £6 500 currency, due the Colony of Connecticut. When we consider the manner of transportation of those days, and the dangers that would be likely to attend men in the performance of a mission of this character, it is evident that much confidence was felt in the courage and integrity of Mr. Williams and Mr. Wales. The Colonial records mention that March 26, 1777, the Council of Safety ordered the payment of the bill of Nathaniel Wales for "hiring teams from Windham and transporting cannon, on account of Col. Stewart, to Canaan, on their way to Albany." In May of the same year Col. Elderkin and Mr. Wales were directed "to prepare and mount a field piece now in Windham, on a proper field carriage for use at the earliest possible date."

The year of 1776 was one of great activity for Mr. Wales, as he had many duties put upon him. He was called upon to care for and transport Continental prisoners; to adjust and liquidate accounts between the Colonies and "Elisha Paine, Esq., late King's Attorney for the county of Windham;" to visit New London and Groton and examine the ground where fortifications were to be placed; to forward supplies and hasten the departure of the ship "Oliver Cromwell," on its cruise in the interests of the cause; and to visit New York and investigate the truth of a representation that one Kennedy, captain of a ship loaded out from New York and bound for France, was a suspected character, as it was feared that the vessel would be betrayed into the hands of the enemy. In May, 1775, just before the battle of Bunker Hill, Mr. Wales visited the lead mines at Middletown for the purpose of quickening the industry and making Connecticut prompt in providing the munitions of war. On this journey Mr. Wales was accompanied by Thaddeus Burr and Pierpont Edwards, the three going as far as New York to procure intelligence and impart correct information concerning Colonial measures.

In October, 1775, during the siege of Boston, the conviction was strong that the Continental army should be put on a more permanent basis. The militia of the several Colonies had rendered excellent service, but there was a demand for a more combined effort. The Continental Congress sitting at Philadelphia appointed Benjamin Franklin, Mr. Leach and Col. Harrison to personally visit Gen. Washington, then at Cambridge, Mass., and there meet the delegates from the several New England Colonies. Connecticut entrusted her interests to Dep. Gov. Griswold and Nathaniel Wales. This Conference was held Oct. 18, 1775, and after four days of deliberation a plan for a Continental army was formed, and the re-organization of the army followed. That Mr. Wales was placed in so important a position shows the estimation in which he was held by Gov. Trumbull and his compatriots. In December of the same year Mr. Wales was appointed on a committee for the consideration of the expediency of raising and appointing an army for the immediate defense of the New England States. This was the beginning of the ever-famous Connecticut "Line" of the Revolution, an organization that gave honor and renown to the Colony in whose defense it went forth.

A person eminently qualified to speak wrote thus Deacon Nathaniel Wales: "Deacon Nathaniel Wales was a gentleman of noted piety, strong powers of mind, and was one of the Council of Safety at a time in the Revolution, and held many offices of trust in Windham."

The patriotism of Mr. Wales was heavily drawn upon during the Revolution, and the story of his life has never been told. Certainly he was the confidant of Washington and Trumbull, and his services were held by them as vastly important. "Not an old man when he died, his services during the Revolution were profound and efficient. It was not his to serve his country on the tented field but it was his to counsel with great minds and give his judgment in the direction of the affairs of state."

These barest outlines of the career of Nathaniel Wales show him to have possessed a character full of manliness and worthy of study. The offices which he held required clear judgment, and in trying times he was a leading man among strong men. The positions which he held in his home community show the high esteem in which he was held by his own people; and the fact that while a member of the General Assembly he was entrusted with many commissions of trust and honor shows that he possessed the confidence of the leading men of the Colony. The Council of Safety found in him a trusty patriot. As a member of the Committee of Correspondence he corresponded with the foremost men of Connecticut and the other Colonies. Associated with Col. Elderkin in many important enterprises, he enjoyed an intimate acquaintance with that eminent patriot. When the Revolution broke out he was fifty-three years old, and while his health forbade his participation in the struggles of the battlefield, he was promptly called into council, and where clear judgment was required he was found.

The militia of the early months of the Revolution was little better than a patriotic mob. The militia of each Colony had little to do with that of any other, but under Washington, the Continental army was organized. Mr. Wales was one of the committee to reorganize the militia of Connecticut into the several "Lines" of service. During the entire siege of Boston he was alert in strengthening the fortifications of New London and Groton, and in sending artillery to points where it was needed, and in directing the commissaries in their transportation of supplies for the camps.

SAMUEL L. FRENCH. The French family has long been established in Connecticut. John French was a resident of Coventry, where he was married in 1736 to Mehitabel, a daughter of Thomas Root, a deacon of the First Church. They removed to South Windsor, where he died, leaving two sons, Aaron and Nathan.

Nathan French, the great-grandfather of Samuel L., was the father of Eleazer, who was the father of Eleazer W., the father of Samuel L.

Eleazer French was born in Coventry, and was reared to a farmer's life. Fanny Woodward, his wife, was also a native of Coventry, where they both died and were buried in the North Yard. They were the parents of the following family: Eleazer Woodward is mentioned below; Oliver B. married Jane French, a daughter of Aaron French, and moved to Michigan in the forties, and to Geneseo, Ill., in the fifties; John Butts married Jane Porter, and lived in Coventry; Daniel A. married Dorcas Bissell, of Bolton; Nathaniel Woodward, now of Glastonbury, Conn., married Catherine Brown, of Coventry; Mary E. married Charles Lee, of Vernon, Conn., and is now deceased; Ann married Henry Goodwin, of Coventry; and Abbie Sophia married Rollin Clark, of Mansfield, Conn., and is now living with her son Charles, in Coventry.

Eleazer Woodward French, who was born July 30, 1807, married Aug. 20, 1835, Amanda Rosenkrans Brundage, who was born Sept. 12, 1812, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Brundage, the former of whom was born May 30, 1785, the latter in 1795, and they died Dec. 8, 1827, and March 20, 1824, respectively; they had their home in what is now Mountainville, Orange Co., N. Y.

To Mr. and Mrs. French were born: Daniel, born May 9, 1837, died May 18, 1862; William Henry, born Sept. 27, 1841, resides in Coventry; Samuel Linneas, born March 17, 1844; and George Nathaniel, born April 5, 1848, resides at Bridgeport, where he is a conductor on the Consolidated Railroad (he is married and has two children).

Eleazer W. French lived in Coventry all his life, with the exception of a short time spent in New York, where he was married. A cooper by trade, he followed that occupation somewhat extensively, though he owned and carried on a farm. Many tierces for the Willington Glass Works were made by him, and the cooper trade was only given up by him when ill health compelled him to retire from the shop a few years before his death, June 15, 1868, which followed that of his wife, July 5, 1864. An active Republican, he served as selectman some six or seven terms, first taking that office in the fall of 1858. In 1858 he represented his town in the General Assembly.

Samuel Linneas French was born in the Northeast School District, of Coventry, in a house now owned and occupied by a Mr. Skilton. When he was nine years old, the family moved to Geneseo, Ill., where they remained six months. Reared in his native town, he attended the local and select schools, the latter being taught by college teachers. In 1856 the family removed to Ellington, but spent only a short time there, soon returning to Coventry, where they made their home on Pond Hill. In 1862, through the efforts of Deacon Lillie, Mr. French was given a position at the Wethersfield State Prison, which he held for three and a half years. In 1865 he was employed for six months in the Penitentiary at Albany, then coming back to make his home on the parental estate in Coventry. In 1867 Mr. French came into possession of the family homestead on Pond Hill, consisting of 105 acres, which he cultivated until April, 1896, when he removed to Andover, where he occupies a pleasant and attractive home. His Coventry property still receives his close attention. In politics he is a Democrat, and takes a leading part in local affairs. For seven years he was a selectman, and was a member of the General Assembly in 1887, serving on the Fisheries committee during the time of the troubles on the Sound. Lesser offices have been filled by him, and at present he is town Health officer, and a member of the school board.

On Dec. 20, 1866, Mr. French was married to Ellen Caroline Loomis, a daughter of Samuel Tracy and Caroline Eunice (Fitch) Loomis. The father of Mrs. French was born Nov. 11, 1819, and died in her home Jan. 16, 1896; the mother was born Feb. 14, 1824, died Nov. 6, 1896, and was buried beside her husband in the Center Cemetery of Coventry. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Loomis were: Ellen Caroline, born on Silver street, in Coventry, Jan. 28, 1845; Fanny Fitch, born Jan. 8, 1848, married Alexander H. Pomeroy, March 5, 1867, in North Coventry; and Carrie Elizabeth, born Dec. 11, 1861, married Robert W. Hamilton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and is the mother of three children, Charles Tracy (born Sept. 20, 1880), Clifton Loomis (born Oct. 1, 1881) and Mabel Grace (born April 5, 1883). Mr. Loomis was a Republican, and a member of the North Coventry Congregational Church.

Samuel Tracy Loomis, noted above, was the son of Samuel Loomis, and the grandson of Daniel Loomis, who was a Revolutionary soldier. Daniel Loomis was born in 1758, and married Sarah Fields, by whom he had the following children: Russell, Eleazer, Ariel, Anna, Sarah, Timothy, Clarissa, Samuel, Polly and Daniel.

Samuel Loomis, grandfather of Mrs. French, was born June 2, 1790, died Jan. 2, 1858. He married Irene Tracy, by whom he had the following children: Mary E., Anna W., Calista, Samuel Tracy, Henry H., Charles E. and Fidelia M.

Samuel Tracy Loomis received a common and select school training, and at an early age began teaching in the winter and farming during the summer. At the age of twenty-four he bought a farm in Coventry, and twenty-four years later moved to the farm where he was living during the later years of his life, and where he also kept hotel. Mr. Loomis was a Republican, and in 1865 was sent to the General Assembly from his town. In 1869 he was appointed postmaster in Coventry, a position he held until his removal to Andover in May, 1891.

CHARLES BACKUS POMEROY has an ancestral line notable for the strong character, industrial worth and intellectual activity that have marked its various representatives, and he is in the seventh generation from Eltwood Pomeroy, the emigrant ancestor of the family in the New World. The line is as follows: Eltwood, Joseph, Noah, Joshua, Samuel, Charles B., Sr., and Charles Backus.

(I) Eltwood Pomeroy was born in England, and died in Windsor, Conn., in 1662. In 1630, under the auspices of Gov. Winthrop, he came from England, and landed at Nantucket, Mass., in March of that year. Very shortly he went to Dorchester, Mass., where he quickly rose to prominence in local affairs. In 1633, when the town government was established, he was made chairman of the board, and five years later, with his family and many others from England, he removed to Windsor, Conn., where he owned two houses, one on the Palisade, and the other on the Sandstone road. His was a large family, and Joseph Pomeroy, who was born in 1652, was his twelfth child.

(II) Joseph Pomeroy, who died in 1734, married Hannah Lyman, who was born in Northampton, July 20, 1658, a daughter of Richard Lyman, and died in 1736. Joseph Pomeroy was one of the eight original owners of Colchester, Conn., under a grant from the crown. He was a farmer, contractor and builder, and was prominent in the business world of his time. His was also a large family, and his twelfth son, Noah, was born in 1700.

(III) Noah Pomeroy, who was born in Colchester, Conn., died in Somers, in 1779. He married Elizabeth Sterling, of Lyme, Conn., who was born there in 1700, and who died in Somers in 1779. Noah Pomeroy lived in Coventry, but in 1752 removed to Somers, where he owned a large tract of land in the east part of the town, and was extensively engaged in farming. Both Noah Pomeroy and his wife were buried in the North Cemetery in Somers.

(IV) Joshua Pomeroy, born in 1737, in Coventry, lived until 1823, in Somers, where he married Mary Davis, who was born in Somers in 1736, and died in 1815. They were farming people of much character and industry.

(V) Samuel Pomeroy was born in 1767, and he died in 1847. Born and bred a farmer, he followed that occupation all his life, although in early life he taught school several winters. The house in which he lived on the "mountain road, towards Stafford," is still standing. Both himself and wife belonged to the Congregational Church, and were buried in the North cemetery, in Somers. Katharine Day, the first wife of Mr. Pomeroy, was born in West Springfield, Mass., in 1772, and died in 1838. She was the mother of the following children: Charles B., the father of Charles B., whose name appears at the opening of this article; Samuel, who married a Miss Fuller, of Somers, Conn., and had one son, Samuel; Katy, who died unmarried in Somers; Lucinda, who married Orrin Pomeroy, who was fifty years a deacon in the Somers Congregational Church; and Mary D., who died, unmarried, in Somers.

(VI) Charles B. Pomeroy, Sr., was born in Somers in 1806, and was reared as a farmer boy in his native town, where he was known by his middle name, as Backus Pomeroy. Mary A. Hurlburt, his wife, was born in Somers in 1810, daughter of Capt. Job and Lucinda (Collins) Hurlburt, and the granddaughter of Jabez Collins. When about twenty-five years old Mr. Pomeroy had a severe sickness, never entirely recovering his health, and remaining somewhat frail to the end of his life. About 1840 he removed with his family to what was then known as "Sixteen Acres," near Springfield, Mass., where he followed farming as his health permitted. His death occurred in Ludlow, Mass., in September, 1846, and he was buried at Somers, Conn. His good wife survived until Nov. 18, 1878, when she died in New Haven, at the home of her daughter, Sophronia H. Willis. Their family were as follows: (1) Sophronia H. married Stoddard Willis, a carpenter, and died in New Haven, the mother of five children: Clarence B. (the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., at Milwaukee), Ashley (a resident of Fair Haven, Conn., for a time secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at New London, and now a traveling salesman), Fred Lucas (secretary of the Y. M. C. A., at Omaha, Neb.), Edward Morton (financial secretary of the general department of the Y. M. C. A. in New York), and Eugene S. (for several years secretary of the Y. M. C. A., at Brooklyn, and now at South Bend, Ind.); (2) Charles B.; (3) Edward Payson went to the Southwest many years ago, and when last heard from was a resident of Galveston, Texas; and (4) William S. is a mechanic at Wethersfield, where he has reared a family of children. Mr. Pomeroy was a Whig, and belonged to the Congregational Church. In the old Connecticut militia he served as Captain, and was a man very generally respected.

Charles Backus Pomeroy, a dealer in real estate and a prominent farmer in the town of Willimantic, has filled the office of Sheriff of Windham county, and is a well known and prominent citizen, descending from an old New England family, with connection by marriage with many prominent names in the old Colonial and early days of New England, among whom is the Bradford family, of which he is in the ninth generation from Gov. William Bradford.

Mr. Pomeroy was eight years old at the time of the removal of his parents to "Sixteen Acres," where, as the oldest son of the family, his days at school were cut short, and he early applied himself to the help of his father, who at that time was in very poor health. This was the reason why he had such limited advantages at school, a fact that caused him in later years to take much interest in popular education, and inspired him to the better education of his children. From a boy of twelve years, Mr. Pomeroy was practically thrown on his own resources, and being industrious and pushing, soon made a place for himself as a worker. The lack of education, however, he has felt all his life as a handicap, and yet it may be doubted if more schooling would have made him more successful in life, or given him greater influence in the community, where his sound character and honest nature have won him universal respect. After the death of his father, he accompanied his mother to Somers, and they made their home with her father, Capt. Job Hurlburt, for some time. While still a boy, Charles B. Pomeroy went to Rockville, and began an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, under Augustus Truesdale. As he possessed much more than the usual mechanical skill, the young man was able after working ten months at the trade, to earn journeyman's wages. For some years Mr. Pomeroy worked at this trade, always with much success.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Pomeroy settled in New Haven, where he followed the carpenter trade for several years, and then removed to Webster, Mass., where he was engaged in farming as well as at his trade for three years. At the end of that time he bought a farm at Long Meadow, Mass., where he did both carpenter and farm work. Later he bought a country store at Willington, Conn., in connection with which he filled the position of agent for the New London and Northern Railway at West Willington, being also postmaster. Mr. Pomeroy was next located at Tolland where he had bought a farm, and became a deputy jailer, serving under Sheriffs Pease and Falk, of Tolland county. From Tolland, Mr. Pomeroy removed to Stafford, where he bought the "Springs House," which he conducted for a year and a half. At the expiration of that period, he disposed of this property, and in 1875 came to Willimantic, where he entered the real estate business. In 1877 Mr. Pomeroy was made deputy sheriff of Windham county, and served under Sheriff Osgood, and nine years later was elected Sheriff by a plurality of 936 votes. For twelve years he filled that responsible position and retired in 1899, leaving a record of efficiency seldom equalled or surpassed. Mr. Pomeroy was elected a representative to the General Assembly from the town of Tolland, being one of the first Republicans elected in that town. In the same town he filled the position of first selectman very acceptably. His first presidential vote was cast for Gen. Fremont, and he has always been a prominent Republican, being regarded as one of the leaders of the party in Willimantic.

On May 27, 1852, Mr. Pomeroy was married to Mary E. Palmer, who was born June 18, 1832, a daughter of Harris and Amelia Ann (Starr) Palmer, of Webster, Mass., the latter of whom was born in Thompson, Conn., May 12, 1805, a daughter of Darius and Sarah (Wilson) Starr, a sister of William Starr (now the actuary of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co.), and a granddaughter of Jonathan Wilson (born Dec. 25, 1747, served in the Continental army, and died in 1837). Harris Palmer was in the seventh generation from Thomas Palmer, of Rowley, Mass., the line being through Thomas (2), Samuel, Samuel (2), Samuel (3), and Parker, to Harris; he was reared a farmer, and died March 14, 1835, at the untimely age of thirty-eight years, his burial occurring in Webster, Mass., where he was living; his wife died June 18, 1870, in Tolland, Conn., while making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Pomeroy. Mr. and Mrs. Palmer were the parents of two children, Mary E., Mrs. Pomeroy; and William Harris, a corporal in Company I, 15th Mass. V. I., who was killed in the Battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864, leaving a widow, Jane E. Hoyle, and one son, William F., the latter now a resident of Dorchester, Mass. Mrs. Mary E. Pomeroy was but a child of three years of age when her father died. After that sad event her mother with her two children went to Tolland, Conn., to make their home with her grandfather Darius Starr. She was reared in Tolland, where she went to school, going at a later period to Ellington Academy, and also attending school in Worcester, Mass. When she was only sixteen years of age, she taught school in Tolland, and received a dollar and a quarter a week, being "boarded round." In 1902, surrounded by children and grandchildren, Mr. and Mrs. Pomeroy celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

Mr. Pomeroy belongs to Eastern Star Lodge, F. & A. M.; Trinity Chapter, No. 9, R. A. M.; Council No. 10, R. & S. M.; St. John's Commandery, No. 11, K. T.; Sphinx Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford; and Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., of Willimantic. He also belongs to the S. A. R., and is eligible for membership in many of the Colonial Societies. Mr. Pomeroy has filled the position of a director in the Willimantic Building and Loan Association. He and his family are prominent members of the Congregational Church, and his wife is active in the Sunday School and the Ladies' Society, as well as in the W. C. T. U.

Mr. and Mrs. Pomeroy have had the following family: (1) Lizzie A., born April 14, 1853, in New Haven, was married Nov. 7, 1872, in Tolland, to John Bliss Fuller, who died in 1883 in North Carolina; to this marriage was born one son, Lucius P., who is a graduate of the Yale Law School. Mrs. Fuller has since become the wife of L. L. Litchfield. She belongs to the D. A. R. and the Mayflower Society. (2) Minnetta J., born March 27, 1858, at Long Meadow, Mass., was married Nov. 20, 1878, to Theron M. Cooley, who died June 27, 1890. She is living in Willimantic with her two sons, Norman P. and George Marion. (3) Mary Eliza, born Nov. 28, 1860, in East Long Meadow, lives at home; she belongs to the D. A. R. (4) Alice Catherine, born July 8, 1865, in Tolland, was married March 13, 1884, to C. A. Everst, of Willimantic, and they are the parents of four children: Florence Gould, Mary Starr, Alice Catherine and Charles P. (5) Charles B., Jr., born Nov. 17, 1871, in Stafford Springs, is a dairyman and farmer in Willimantic. (6) Harris Starr was born June 30, 1875, in Willimantic, was educated in the schools there, and at the Academy in Bristol, Mass., where he prepared for Yale, spending two years in that institution, and finishing his education in the University of New York, graduating from Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1900; he is now located as a physician at Peabody, Mass. In Taunton, Mass., Oct. 3, 1900, he was married to Adelaide Irene Crawford.

Mr. Pomeroy owns large tracts of real estate in and around Willimantic, where his energetic and enterprising spirit has wrought out much good to the city. Starting in life with little or no resources save his own ability, he has won a very comfortable competence, and has received many evidences of his standing in the public mind. His suburban home, on South street, where he located in 1884, has been transformed from a tract of wild land on which he has made all the improvements from the beginning, making it one of the most attractive residences in Willimantic.

JABEZ LOOMIS WHITE. One of the most highly esteemed and substantial citizens of Bolton, Tolland county, who resides on a farm which has been in the possession of the family for generations, is Jabez Loomis White, who was born here Jan. 1, 1830.

Dr. Jabez L. White, his father, was born in Bolton, Conn., June 18, 1792, and received his primary education in this locality, afterward preparing for Yale College, finally graduating from there with the medical degree in 1828. His first location was in Tolland, Conn., and here he remained in practice for some time, later removing to Bolton, his native place, where he practiced his profession for forty years. For two years the Doctor was the efficient State Treasurer of Connecticut. Some time near 1830 Dr. White and his family made a driving trip as far south as Cape May, N. J., and there the good Doctor located and soon built up a large and lucrative practice, remaining some two years. His father was becoming advanced in years, and as he owned a large amount of property in the vicinity and in Bolton, Conn., he prevailed upon his son, the Doctor, to return and take charge of these interests. The friends Dr. White had made in New Jersey opposed the plan, but in the end his father's wishes gained the day, and the family returned to the old home in Bolton, and there his last days were spent.

Jabez Loomis White, son of Dr. Jabez, was born in the old family home Jan. 1, 1830, and was only one year old when he went with his parents to Cape May, where a happy childhood was passed, although before he was old enough to go to school the old farm was again his home. His parents gave him excellent educational advantages, sending him to a good private school in East Hartford, which was conducted by Solomon Phelps; later he was a student in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., and then enjoyed scholarly instruction from Rev. James Ely, at Bolton. In the spring of 1847 he went to Buffalo, N. Y., and there accepted a position as teller in White's Bank, which position he held for a period of six years. Following this he engaged in the brokerage business in the same city, successfully conducting it for a period of four years. Like many another loyal son of Connecticut, Mr. White decided to take up his permanent home in the State of his birth, and some time after closing up his business in Buffalo, he returned to locate on the farm which has been in the possession of the family since 1717, even the residence being historic, being only the fourth one since first settlement was made, the same cellar being used for each erection.

Among the many old and interesting relics of his family, Mr. White has in his possession an old chair, still in a good state of preservation, which was made for and was used by Gov. Trumbull. Associations cling about many of these relics and the stories recalled concerning them by Mr. White are most interesting and instructive, these articles being some which would be most gladly received by any historical society. A life-long Democrat, Mr. White has been called upon to serve his party in many positions. At three different times he represented the town in the Legislature, and in 1876 was sent to represent the 23d District in the Senate. For twenty years he was a member of the board of selectmen and for eleven years was assessor for Bolton. A long service of thirty years—during which time he was trial justice—as justice of the peace, was terminated by the time limit, but he is still active in all that pertains to the progress and the establishment of law and order through his neighborhood.

In February, 1871, Mr. White was married to Miss Ella M. Sumner, who was a daughter of John and Mary (Gleason) Sumner, and a sister of ex-Lieut. Gov. G. G. Sumner; she died in 1876. In June, 1878, in Bolton, Conn., Mr. White was married to Miss Ida E. Gay, of this place. One son has blessed this union, Jabez L., Jr., born in Bolton, Conn., Jan. 7, 1884, and he is the fourth generation to bear the name; his assistance is given his father in the management of the farm.

Although Mr. White has reached his seventy-third year he is so active physically and mentally that he has the appearance and manner of one of much fewer years. His interests still are many, and he is socially connected with the Masonic fraternity, having joined Manchester Lodge, No. 73, A. F. & A. M., where he has long been most highly regarded. His standing in his community is high where he is known as a reliable, upright and useful citizen, and a worthy representative of one of the old families of Bolton.

JOHN BRIGHAM KINGSBURY was born Oct. 1, 1826, at the parental home on the Rockville road, Tolland, Conn., and there makes his home. The land has been in the possession of the family for 175 years.

Nathaniel Kingsbury, Jr., great-grandfather of John B., was born in Coventry, a son of Nathaniel Kingsbury, Sr., who settled in Tolland about the time of his marriage, on land deeded to him by his father-in-law, and on this land his posterity still reside. Nathaniel Kingsbury, Jr., was a deacon in the Presbyterian Church at Tolland. His wife, Sarah, daughter of Capt. Samuel Chapman, died July 14, 1794, the mother of the following family: Hannah, born in 1738; Sarah, born in 1739; three who died in infancy; Ruth, born in 1750; Nathaniel, born in 1753; Jabez; and Samuel, born in 1763.

Deacon Jabez Kingsbury, son of Nathaniel, Jr., was born March 10, 1756, and died March 25, 1844. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary army, entering when twenty-one years of age, and he drew a pension for his meritorious services in that struggle. Born in Tolland, he lived here all his life, and built the house where his grandson, John B., was born, and which is still standing. He was an active and public spirited man, and held the office of justice of the peace many years. A man of deep religious feeling, he served as a deacon in the Congregational Church many years. Deacon Kingsbury was married Aug. 15, 1776, to Anna Hatch, who was born Sept. 18, 1759, and died June 12, 1842. They had three children, Sarah, Mary and John.

Col. John Kingsbury, son of Deacon Jabez, and father of John B., was born Oct. 28, 1782, on the old farm. He was an officer in the State Militia, appointed in 1821, and was a man of ability and character. In his adult life he was a Whig, but became a Republican before he died. A prominent man in the community, for many years he filled various local offices, and was selectman. In the Presbyterian Church he was an active member and persistent worker. His death occurred in Tolland, March 2, 1861, when he had reached the age of seventy-eight years. In 1804, Col. Kingsbury was married to Sally Dimock, who was born Oct. 12, 1782, in Tolland, and died Dec. 11, 1819, at the age of thirty-seven years. To this union were born a son and a daughter, twins, who died in infancy. On Nov. 1, 1821, Col. Kingsbury married Sally Edgerton, who was born April 5, 1782, and died April 20, 1824. Her only child died in infancy. Col. Kingsbury married for his third wife, Mary Brigham, born Feb. 12, 1794, daughter of Don Carlos Brigham, and his wife, whose maiden name was Greenleaf. Mrs. Kingsbury died in November, 1871. To this marriage were born the following family: (1) John Brigham was the eldest. (2) George Henry, born Nov. 22, 1828, was a farmer and engineer, and died Dec. 26, 1893; he married Mary Ora Crane (born July 11, 1829, died Jan. 2, 1894), by whom he had the following children: Adalaide E., Jennie Ann, Lizzie Howard, George Lockwood (who died when ten and a half years old), and Mary Crane. (3) and (4) Two children died in infancy.

John Bingham Kingsbury was born in Tolland, and received his education in District School, No. 5, and in a private school in Tolland Center, under Prof. Benton and William Starr. When he was eighteen years old, he left school and devoted himself to farming on the home farm, which is still his residence. During his more active years Mr. Kingsbury was an industrious farmer, and had under his management at one time a farm of 164 acres. During the last few years he has practically retired from labor, and, as is said, is living on borrowed time, being now (1902) over seventy-five years old. He is in good health, and he and his wife are genial companions. Mr. Kingsbury is a member of the Masonic fraternity, where his kindly spirits and simple and unassuming manhood are very highly appreciated. Mr. Kingsbury attends the Union Congregational Church at Rockville, of which his wife is a member. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has been selectman, also filling various local offices. In 1889 and in 1890 he served in the General Assembly, where he served on the Towns and Probate Districts committees.

In 1850 Mr. Kingsbury was married to Mary Ann Kellogg, who was born April 9, 1825, daughter of Horace Kellogg, of Tolland. To this union came a daughter, Mary Brigham, born Oct. 5, 1855, who died June 2, 1856. Mrs. Kingsbury died Feb. 23, 1858, and Mr. Kingsbury was married April 17, 1861, to Caroline Ann Rogers, who was born April 15, 1829, daughter of Ariel and Judith (Towne) Rogers, of Monson, Mass. Mr. Kingsbury is widely known for his kindly charities and his humane spirit. His good deeds are numerous and his heart is full of sympathy for the needy and the afflicted. With a large fortune at his command, his sympathetic disposition has had full play, and great good has been done by him in his own community.

SAMUEL G. ADAMS, a venerable citizen of Willimantic, Windham county, commands the respect of the community in which his long and useful life is passing, not more by his advanced age than by his manly character and strict integrity. In his special line of work, that of house-moving, he is known all over the eastern part of the state, where he has been engaged in his business since 1862. He was born in Lebanon, Conn., June 24, 1829, on a farm, which is now near the city line of Willimantic, and which was then the home of his parents, Samuel and Jemina (Gardner) Adams.

Ebenezer Adams, the grandfather of Samuel G., held a commission in the Revolutionary army as Major, and in after years was known as Col. Adams. His remains were interred on the old Adams homestead near West Kingston, R. I. Col. Adams was a volunteer from Rhode Island under Arnold, and became a captain of the artillery. One of the originators of, and captain in, the expedition under Col. Barton, he took a conspicuous part in the capture of Gen. Prescott in 1777, where he served as captain under Col. Barton (for this act Lieut.-Col. Barton was breveted Colonel, and a sword was voted him by Congress). This exploit was the capture of Gen. Prescott by thirty-eight men on the night of July 12, 1777. They crossed Narragansett Bay in four whaleboats under the command of Col. Barton, and passing unobserved three British frigates, landed and made their way to a farm house, five miles above Newport, R. I.,

Samuel G. Adams

here Gen. Prescott had his headquarters. The guards were surprised, the door of Prescott's room broken in by a negro of the party, who used his head as a battering ram, and the British commander was hurried away, half dressed, to Warwick Point, and afterward to the headquarters of Gen. Washington in New Jersey. "This exploit, though certainly one of the most hazardous attempted during the entire war, is just casually mentioned in history, accidentally brought in as it were, and yet it was very important in its results."

Col. Adams was twice married, and his second wife, who was a Miss Fanning, was the mother of Samuel Adams, and the grandmother of Samuel G.

Samuel Adams was born in the town of Richmond, Washington Co., R. I., and was a life-long farmer. His first marriage occurred in Rhode Island, when Penelope Card became his bride. They removed to Lebanon, Conn., to settle on a farm, and there his wife died. Mr. Adams then wedded Jemima Gardner. He lived to the age of seventy-four years, and his remains are resting in the Cemetery at Willimantic. To his first marriage came one child, Mary Ann, who married Dunbar Loring. The children of the second marriage were: John Quincy, who learned the carpenter trade in Willimantic, and died there when about sixty-four years old; Samuel G.; and Elsie, who married William Bailey, and died in Willimantic. Mr. Adams was a Democrat, but when he had cast his vote according to his best judgment he felt that his political duties were very largely discharged, and he never had aspirations for official honors. From his sixteenth to his twenty-seventh year he followed the sea, and having saved his money was able while still a young man to retire from the water, and engage in the cultivation of his own farm at Lebanon, which he bought with his savings. At first it consisted of only ten acres, but he added to it from time to time as his circumstances permitted until he had a choice farm of seventy-five acres. His start was from his own resources and from his modest savings, which by thrift and industry grew into a very handsome competence.

Samuel G. Adams received his education in what was known as the Village Hill District School in his native town of Lebanon, and had among his teachers a Mr. Abell, Joseph Foster, John Maxwell, Asaph Kingsley, and the Hon. Silas F. Loomer, late of Willimantic. Mr. Adams had but a limited opportunity at school as he lived three miles from the school house, and could as soon as he was able to do any of the work on the farm, attend only in the winter season. When fourteen years of age he began to work in the stone quarry, and two years later shipped from New London on the whaler, "Columbus." For some three years he was several times at sea, but a sailor's life did not prove to his liking, and when he was about nineteen he gave it up entirely. For the ensuing two years he was employed in the bridge building department of the New London, Willimantic & Palmer Railroad, then building, and which is now a part of the Central Vermont system. Mr. Adams was engaged for a number of years in getting out ship timbers, and shipping his products to the coast by the new railroads, which had penetrated regions hitherto inaccessible to the dealer in ship material. In 1862 he began the business of house-moving, which has been his occupation to the present time, and in which he has gained a creditable reputation for himself all over the eastern part of Connecticut.

On Feb. 18, 1850, Mr. Adams was married in Greenville, Conn., to Miss Mary E. Bailey, a native of North Stonington, and a daughter of James and Emily (Green) Bailey. The young couple made their home on Village Hill in the town of Lebanon. A year or two later they settled on the old farm where Mr. Adams was born, and in February, 1881, removed to Pleasant Street in Willimantic, where they are found at the present time. This Pleasant Street home has been greatly remodeled since it passed into the possession of Mr. Adams, and is now one of the most attractive on the street. To Mr. and Mrs. Adams have come the following family: Albert C., a farmer of Lebanon, lives on the old Adams place; Julia is Mrs. Alvin Lyman, of Lebanon, Conn.; William J. lives in New Haven; Mary Ann is the wife of Philip Bowen, a deputy marshal of New Haven; Nelson B. is associated with his father in business in Willimantic; Samuel is a market man in Willimantic; and three daughters died in childhood.

Samuel G. Adams is a Democrat, and served as a Burgess while Willimantic was a borough, but has never been an office-seeker. In the I. O. O. F. and the K. P. he is an active and influential member, and the local division of the Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Pythias bears his name as a token of the respect the brethren bear for him. Mr. Adams has extensive real estate holdings in Willimantic, where he has built six houses, and owns several others. His start in life was a tireless energy and a boundless ambition to get ahead, backed up by an iron constitution and most industrious habits. All his life he has been a hard-working man, but today he is remarkably well-preserved and active. His heavy head of dark hair, hardly streaked with gray, gives no evidence of his age, and his keen perceptions, quick decisions and retentive memory bespeak a wonderfully rugged frame. Throughout his long business career his personal standing has been beyond question, and he has met his every obligation without hesitation. Mr. and Mrs. Adams have had a wedded life of over fifty-three years, and in that time they have made a host of friends, being highly esteemed in the community where they have lived so long and well.

CHARLES P. BACKUS, cashier of the Windham County National Bank, at Danielson, is one of the rising young financiers of eastern Connecticut. His present standing in banking circles, and the esteem and confidence that he commands, he has earned by his individual effort.

The Backus family is of English origin and was founded in America by three brothers, two of whom located in Canterbury, Conn., the third settling in Norwich. Stephen Backus, one of the emigrants, located first in Canterbury, but later moved to Eastford, which at that time was called Ashford, and there followed farming for many years. Prior to his decease he returned to Canterbury, where he died at the age of eighty-four years, and there his remains lie. At one time in his life he was possessed of ample means, but misfortune caused the loss of a considerable portion of it. The first marriage of Stephen Backus was to Miss Susan Welch, daughter of a minister. She left two children, Eunice and George. The second marriage of Mr. Backus was to Mrs. Esther (Jennings) Chapman, who died at the age of seventy-two years. By her first union she had children as follows: Lewis, who died in Pennsylvania; Dilla, who married Stephen Wood, removed to Pennsylvania, and died in that State; Cynthia, who married William Mathews and also moved to Pennsylvania; Tryphena and Irena, twins, the former of whom died young, and the latter of whom married Gurdon Withey, and died in Woodstock, Conn.; Eli and Levi, twins, the former of whom was a cooper in early life, and later became a wealthy farmer, living near Hartford, where he died; Levi died while young, from the effects of falling into a kettle of hot water. One child was born to the second marriage of Mr. Backus, Timothy Jennings, who became the grandfather of Charles P. Backus, of Danielson.

Timothy Jennings Backus was born in Eastford, then Ashford, Conn., June 17, 1811. Like other lads in the vicinity, he attended the winter schools, but was early put to work at the shoe-making trade, a most excellent one in those days, before the establishment of the great factories. Later he became a peddler of Yankee notions, his stock including also silks and gingham. With his wagon he covered almost all of the eastern part of Connecticut and western Rhode Island, his employers belonging to the latter State. For several years, until his marriage, he followed this business, locating then in Eastford where he bought a small farm in the south part of the town and engaged in tilling the soil for a number of years, also supplying the demand for shoes in his vicinity.

In 1884 Mr. Backus removed to Eastford Center, the home of his second wife, and resided there until her death. After a few years of boarding, he made his home at Eastford Center with his daughter, Mrs. Susan Smith, and there he died, Jan. 3, 1901, and was interred at Phoenixville. Although almost ninety years of age, Mr. Backus was remarkably vigorous and possessed a very retentive memory which made him a pleasant companion. His early political sympathies had been with the Democratic party, but later he became identified with the Republicans. He was a man of good business ability and had accumulated ample means.

The first marriage of Timothy J. Backus occurred July 15, 1838, to Sally Hill Wilson, born in Plainfield, Sept. 12, 1811, daughter of Nathaniel and Zilphia (Wheeler) Wilson; she died May 10, 1880, and was laid to rest at Phoenixville. Of the children of this marriage, (1) Susan Jane, born Aug. 19, 1839, married Samuel H. Smith and resides in Eastford. (2) Zilphia Wheeler, born June 21, 1842, married Henry Whittaker and died Sept. 25, 1877, in Phoenixville, her five children being: Charles W., who married Jennie Beebe, and resides in Springfield, Mass.; Henry J., who married Lillie Stone, and resides in Worcester, Mass.; Zilphia Ellen, who died single; Susan Jane, who married Q. V. Ball; and Abel E., who resides in Worcester, Mass. (3) Eli Nathaniel, the youngest son of this family, became the father of Charles Palmer Backus, of this sketch.

Eli Nathaniel Backus was born Jan. 11, 1845, in Eastford, and remained on the home farm until he was about twenty-two years of age. Going then to Willimantic, he learned the butcher trade and followed this business at various locations in the State, being for a long time a resident of New Britain. His death occurred in Putnam, May 31, 1899, and he was buried at Phoenixville. Mr. Backus returned to the old traditions of the family in his political opinions, and was a staunch Democrat. He took an interest in several secret organizations, and was a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 20, A. F. & A. M., of New Britain; was an Odd Fellow, and belonged to other orders.

On May 11, 1869, Eli N. Backus was united in marriage with Annie Elizabeth Palmer, born June 14, 1848, a native of Willimantic, daughter of Amos Burrows and Elizabeth (Freeman) Palmer. The children born to this union were two sons and one daughter, viz.: Charles P., of this sketch; Harry Burr, born Nov. 22, 1873, who died Feb. 8, 1882; and Annie Elizabeth, born Nov. 15, 1875, wife of Olean T. Babcock, of Hartford.

Charles Palmer Backus was born July 16, 1870, in New Britain, Conn., and was six years of age when his parents removed to Willimantic, where his education was received in the public schools. In the winter of 1886-87 he left school to accept a position as clerk in the Windham National Bank, at Willimantic, where he remained for six and one-half years, during four years of that time being teller of the bank. In August, 1893, he resigned this position in order to accept that of cashier of the Windham County National Bank, at Brooklyn, succeeding John P. Wood, who died in the previous month of June. In September, 1894, the bank was re-organized, and in May, 1895, it was removed to Danielson.

In 1894, Mr. Backus was elected treasurer of Windham county, an honor which had never before been bestowed upon so young a man. He has efficiently held the position ever since. Since 1894 he has been one of the directors of the Windham County National Bank, and is also the president of the Incas Knitting Company, at Danielson, having been one of the organizers of the company. Fraternally he is prominent both in Masonic circles and in the order of Knights of Pythias; in 1896 he became a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M.; he belongs also to Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Columbian Commandery, K. T., of Norwich; Connecticut Sovereign Consistory, of Norwich; and Sphinx Temple of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford. In the Knights of Pythias he belongs to Orient Lodge, No. 37, and Charles H. Bacon Company, Uniform Rank. While a resident of Willimantic, he attached himself to the Congregational Church, later transferring his membership to Danielson.

On Dec. 30, 1893, Mr. Backus was married to Bertha M. Adams, of Wethersfield, Conn., daughter of George W. Adams. A son and daughter have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Backus, namely: Harold Adams, born April 4, 1895; and Pauline, born Sept. 27, 1898.

Mr. Backus is a man who has a wide circle of both business and personal friends. His upright methods, as well as his business sagacity, have won him the confidence of investors, while pleasant manners and generous good fellowship have made him personally popular.

PALMER. The American ancestor of the Stonington Palmers was Walter Palmer, a native of London, England, where he was born about 1585. He was first married in England, and as early as 1628, with his brother Abraham, a merchant of London, and others, came to New England. For a time he was at Salem, Mass., then with others founded the city of Charles-town in 1629. In 1643 he removed to the Plymouth Colony, thence, with others, went to Rehoboth, of which town he was a number of times selectman, held other public offices, and was the first representative from the town, to the General Assembly or Court. Finally in 1653 he removed to Stonington, Conn. He married (second) in 1633, Rebecca Short, who came to New England in 1632. Mr. Palmer died Nov. 10, 1661. Six children were born to his first marriage and seven to the second.

Amos Palmer was a native of Voluntown, or North Stonington, Conn., where he became engaged in farming. He removed to Willimantic when his son, Amos B., was about seven years old. There he became possessed of property and "Palmer Hill" was named for him. That was his residence for the rest of his life and there he died at the age of eighty-one years. He was buried at Willimantic. Mr. Palmer was a member of the Baptist Church. His first marriage was to a Miss Lewis, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Mary, who married Courtland Whitehead, and died in Willimantic; Emily, who married Henry Benchley, and died in Willimantic; Sarah, who married Edon Seaman, and died in Norwich, Conn.; Charles, who went West in pioneer times, and all trace of whom was lost; Amos B., who became the grandfather of Mr. Backus, of this sketch; and Lucy, who married John Smith, and died in Willimantic. By a second marriage he had two children, namely: Courtland, who married Harriet Upton, and was a farmer in Willimantic; and Melissa, who married James Benchley and resides in Providence. A third marriage was without issue. His fourth wife was Julia Harris, who survived him several years. Their one child was Amanda, who died at the age of eighty years.

Amos Burrows Palmer was born Dec. 30, 1820, in Voluntown, and he came to Willimantic when a mere boy, at a period when but few houses had been erected in the present flourishing industrial city. He was reared in a school of labor and when but eight years old went to work in the cotton mill. From the lowest position he became at length superintendent of the great Willimantic Cotton mills, serving for a long period. When he resigned that position it was to enter into a partnership with W. L. Harrington, under the firm name of William L. Harrington & Co., in the operation of a clothing store in Willimantic. He was also interested with Charles M. Palmer & Co. (his son) in the dry-goods business, in which he continued until his death, Dec. 5, 1887. He was buried in Willimantic; as he was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, his obsequies were conducted by that order. During his whole life he had advocated the principles of the Republican party, and represented Windham in the Legislature in 1886.

Mr. Palmer was married in Willimantic to Elizabeth Freeman, born in Colchester, Conn., in November, 1823, who died in Willimantic in September, 1887. Their family consisted of but two children. Charles M., born Aug. 6, 1844, married Emma Chaffee. At the age of eighteen he was overseer in the mill and followed factory life for a number of years. Later he went into the dry-goods business, in which he continued until his death in March, 1895. His widow and a son, Clarence C., reside in Willimantic. The second child was Mrs. Backus, the estimable and beloved mother of Charles P. Backus, of Danielson.

HON. WILLIAM AUGUSTUS AGARD. Few men in Tolland county, Conn., have come so rapidly to the front in public affairs as has Hon. William Augustus Agard, one of the representative citizens of this part of the State.

Mr. Agard comes of honorable ancestry. His grandfather, Nathan Agard, who was born in 1778, married Hannah Hall, this family also being a distinguished one in New England history.

Ransel Hall Agard, the father of our subject, was born Jan. 9, 1815, in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., and during his early youth attended the common schools in his neighborhood. Then for two terms he was a student at Wilbraham Academy, leaving there at the age of twenty to engage in teaching. After following this profession for some three years, he and his brother, Isaac, went to Marshall, Mich., where the latter bought a large farm, and he engaged in teaching school for several years. Upon his return to the East, Mr. Agard taught school for two years in Stafford. In 1844, in partnership with a party by the name of Woodruff, Mr. Agard opened up a grocery business on Asylum street, in Hartford. Several years later the firm name was changed to Sumner & Agard, his brother-in-law, William Sumner, having become his partner. The business prospered and a few years after, Mr. Agard became the sole proprietor. Then he rented his business property in Hartford and bought a store in Vernon, Conn.; in 1866 he removed a stock of goods from Hartford, and until 1871 conducted the largest general store in Vernon. At that time he sold the business and settled in Tolland, retiring from activity and spending his last days in comfort and enjoyment in his pleasant home, dying here on Jan. 27, 1889. Mr. Agard was a staunch Republican, having borne testimony all his life in favor of the abolition of slavery. No inducement could be offered to cause him to accept political office, although he supported the standard bearers of his party with characteristic vigor. In the Methodist Church he was a leader, and was one of its faithful stewards at the time of his death.

On May 3, 1846, Mr. Agard was married to Maria A. Sumner, who was born March 26, 1819, and who died May 25, 1898. She was a daughter of Deacon William A. and Anna (Washburn) Sumner, of Hebron, Conn. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Agard were: William A.; Edwin Sumner, who was born Nov. 12, 1851, in Hartford; and two that died young.

William Augustus Agard was born in Hartford, Conn., Dec. 13, 1848. Here he attended the excellent common schools and later entered the high school, one and one-half years later taking an academic course in the East Greenwich Academy, at East Greenwich, R. I., graduating with honors from this noted school in 1869, at the age of twenty years. Until the next year Mr. Agard remained at home, going then to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was called to become the bookkeeper for William Sumner & Co., who were in the sewing machine business, and with this firm his pleasant and profitable connection lasted until 1875. That year he resigned and in September, 1876, he accepted the position of secretary of the Capital City Gas Light Co., of Des Moines, Iowa, of which four years later he was made superintendent and general manager, which position he filled until 1887. Resigning this responsible position, Mr. Agard then returned to his Connecticut home where he remained for two years. In 1889 he was elected to the position of manager of the Underwood Manufacturing Co., of Tolland, Conn., the business being the manufacture of belts and belting. This company is now known to the commercial and industrial world as the William Sumner Belting Co., of which Mr. Agard has been the president since its formation, in 1898.

On Sept. 15, 1874, Mr. Agard was married to Miss Catherine Bissell, a daughter of Sanford Bissell, of South Windsor, and the children borne to this marriage are: M. Lucille is at home; Katherine M. is a graduate of Mt. Holyoke College in South Hadley, Mass.; William H., connected with Ames & Co., of Jersey City, manufacturers of railroad supplies, resides in New York; and Marian B., graduated at Mt. Holyoke in 1902. Mr. Agard is one of the leading men of Tolland, and is President of the Savings Bank of Tolland, being elected to that position in 1902, and he is financially interested in many lines. For many years he has been a leader in the Congregational Church and since 1896, has been one of its deacons, and is also a member of the Society's committee of this church. In politics he has been a life-long Republican, but has declined political honors for many years, serving now only on the school board.

DAVID ALDRICH. The old Bay State has contributed most graciously to the population of Connecticut from the very earliest days, many of the good people of this state claiming nativity in her borders, or being descendants of those who were born there. Mr. Aldrich, one of the most substantial citizens of Woodstock, Windham county, a man who is held in the highest esteem by his friends and neighbors, is a native of Uxbridge, Mass., where his family has for long years resided.

David Aldrich was born Sept. 15, 1848, son of Nathan Aldrich, who was born in the same town Dec. 12, 1794, in the same house which sheltered our subject. He died Oct. 22, 1873, in Woodstock, whither he had come Nov. 4, 1857, and where he purchased the Thomas Lyon farm of 157 acres, spending the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits there. In his early life Nathan Aldrich was engaged in freighting, that being the day when there were few railroads, even prior to the building of the Providence & Worcester canal. He was long engaged in this business successfully between Slatersville and Providence, R. I., transporting much of the brick and lime and supplies used in building the canal. Although of rather frail build, he was very robust and a very industrious, hard-working man, which, together with fine business judgment, brought him to a state of comparative affluence. He was in the best sense of the term a self-made man, having begun life as a poor boy. Politically in his earlier life he favored the Whig party, and in the formation of the Republican party became one of its staunchest supporters. It is remembered of him that he was one of the first six voters who supported that ticket in Uxbridge, Mass. In his native town he served as overseer of the poor for twenty-one consecutive years, as assessor for seven years, and was a member of the selectmen's body in Northbridge, Mass., where he lived for three years, from 1854 to 1857. He was a man of masterful traits of character, able, shrewd and tactful, and was held in high repute for his discriminating judgment. He was reared in the faith of the Friends, of which Society he was a member, but after coming to Woodstock attended the services of the Methodist denomination, of which he was a liberal supporter. Mr. Aldrich was first married, in 1830, to Maria Fowler, a popular school teacher in her day, and the daughter of John Fowler, of Northbridge, Mass. She died in Uxbridge, Aug. 16, 1844, aged forty-seven years, the mother of one son, Henry Clay, born Aug. 25, 1832, who died in 1877; he married Rebecca Robbins and conducted the old homestead farm. On July 8, 1846, Mr. Aldrich was united to Eunice Gaskill, born Oct. 22, 1807, in Uxbridge, where she died Oct. 23, 1892. She was a daughter of Ezekiel Gaskill, of Uxbridge. She was of a bright and sunshiny temperament, a loving and faithful wife and kind mother. Her children were: Maria Fowler and David (our subject). The daughter, born May 11, 1847, in Uxbridge, where she now lives with her children, is the widow of Albert Adams.

Passing back one generation, Obadiah Aldrich, father of Nathan, was a native also of Uxbridge, born in about 1762. He died in that village at a comparatively early age, in 1808, when his son Nathan was but fourteen years old. By occupation he was a farmer, and a hard-working and industrious man. He married Judith Chase, of Killingly, Conn., a member of the time honored family of that name in that village, and to them were born in Uxbridge Nathan, Phila, Elizabeth and David. Obadiah Aldrich and his wife assisted materially in the building of the Friends meeting-house in Uxbridge five years before Lexington's cry brought forth the hosts of "embattled farmers" to avenge her insult, and the building still stands, a fitting monument to the self-sacrificing souls who gave their time and labor to its erection.

David Aldrich passed the first five years of his life in Uxbridge, and remembers his first teacher there, Miss Kate Pond. The next four years he attended school in Northbridge, whither his parents had removed, and finished his elementary training in the schools of Woodstock. At sixteen he entered the Nichols Academy at Dudley, and his education was further supplemented by a course in the Woodstock Academy. His school life ended when he was twenty years of age, at which time he entered upon his agricultural career on a farm purchased for him by his father some eleven years previously, and which he now deeded to the son. To this original body of land Mr. Aldrich has added now owning 171 acres, comprising one of the most valuable and highly cultivated farms in the county. As is usual in his part of the State, Mr. Aldrich diversifies his crops, and makes somewhat of a specialty of dairy products. It is his pride that for a period of twenty-two years he furnished butter to patrons in Webster, without a break in his regular weekly trip. However, he is at present shipping his milk to the Boston market.

Mr. Aldrich has always exerted his manifold talents in lines having for their object the uplifting of society, and his influence has been widespread in his section of the State. Fraternally he is affiliated with Putnam Lodge, No. 46, A. F. & A. M., of Woodstock, of which he is a past master, has also served a term as treasurer of the lodge, and has acted as its delegate in the Grand Lodge of the State. For over twenty years he has served as treasurer of the Society for the Prevention of Theft, an organization established in Woodstock in 1793. The Grange movement also enlisted his interest, and has profited by his intelligent support. He is a past master of Woodstock Grange, No. 150. When the movement for greater activity in temperance circles culminated in the organization of the Good Templars lodges, Mr. Aldrich was one of the first to initiate the work in his local community, being a charter member of a lodge established in that village in 1868. Politically Mr. Aldrich was for long years a tower of strength in the party of Jefferson, and it was with the most sincere regret that he witnessed the desertion of its time honored principles in the great contest of 1896. He felt that a vote cast for the Republican ticket would more nearly voice his sentiments, and with his usual courage of conviction he so acted. He lives in the hope that the party will yet be weaned from its false leadership. In the local affairs of his town he has taken a helpful part, having served as assessor and justice of the peace, and in the jury box many times. His fine administrative and executive ability has been frequently called into service as executor of estates in his community, in which work his faithfulness has been uniform.

For a life companion Mr. Aldrich chose a most estimable lady, who has contributed largely to his success by her advice and assistance. She has been a faithful wife, and a loving mother to her children, of which she has had two: Nellie Josephine, born Sept. 7, 1876, died in girlhood, Sept. 23, 1884. Mary Eunice, born Sept. 13, 1883, has been given an excellent education, being well grounded in the elementary branches in the district school and at Woodstock Academy where she graduated with honor in June, 1901; she is now attending Wheaton Seminary, at Norton, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Aldrich and their accomplished daughter are leaders of thought and movement in their local community, where they receive the kind offices of a host of friends, which they delight to return in kind in their commodious home.

In this connection it will be of interest to note the salient points in the history of the family of Mrs. Aldrich, she having been a granddaughter of Samuel Wilkinson, a member of an illustrious family in New England.

Lawrence Wilkinson, a native of the County of Durham, England, and son of William and Mary, with his wife and child came to America and settled in Rhode Island colony about 1650. In the mother country he had been a lieutenant in the King's Guards, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Newcastle by Cromwell. His estate was thereupon confiscated. In New England he took a leading part in King Philip's war. He was a deputy to the General Court in 1659 from Providence; owned some thousand acres of land; married Mary Smith; both died in 1692. His son Samuel, born probably in England, died in Providence in 1727. He married Plain Wickedon, daughter of William. He was a surveyor; justice of the peace; administrator; deputy from Providence to the General Court in 1693 and many other times. Joseph Wilkinson, next in line, was born June 22, 1683, in Smithfield, R. I.; married Martha Pray, lived in Providence and Scituate, being one of the first settlers of that town, about 1700; became an extensive owner of land; held nearly all of the town offices; was prominent and influential; was justice, member of town council, deputy to the General Court in 1731; lieutenant in the militia; died 1740. His son, Benjamin Wilkinson, born Oct. 9, 1713, was a farmer of large possessions; married in 1740, Mary Rhodes; lieutenant of the Trainband of Scituate, 1742; lived in Killingly, where he was a man of prominence; in 1775 bought of Samuel Morris the George Dudley farm, on the Quinebaug, in Killingly, price £20,000, where he lived ten years; then established the village of Wilkinson, forty miles southeast of Boston; returned to father's homestead, where he died, aged ninety, in 1803. Of his nine children, one became grandmother of Commodore Morris of the United States Navy. Another, Rhodes, was the next in line to our subject.

Rhodes Wilkinson, born in Woodstock, married Clarine Marcy, also a native of Woodstock. Children: (1) Hannah, who married Danforth Lyon, of Woodstock, died in Providence lacking fourteen days of being 101 years old. (2) Mary never married. (3) Rhodes. (4) Clarine became Mrs. Olverson Sumner, of West Woodstock, and died in Providence while on a visit. (5) Samuel is the next in line. (6) Esther married William Eliakim Sessions, of Abington, Connecticut.

Samuel Wilkinson married Mary Maria Bradford, of Woodstock. He was a successful farmer and a prominent member of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Universalist Church. He and his wife had two children, of whom Mary Rhodes, born Feb. 7, 1826, married Nov. 10, 1847, Thomas L. Phillips, of Woodstock Valley, and Mary E., Mrs. Aldrich, was their only child.

FRANK EUGENE GUILD, M. D., one of the leading physicians and surgeons of Windham county, and a well-known and popular citizen of Windham Center, was born Aug. 14, 1853, in the Brandy Hill District, of the town of Thompson. He is a son of the late Rev. John B. Guild and his wife Julia A. (Griggs).

His father's family is one of the oldest and best known in New England. It was planted in America by John Guild, who was born about 1616, and is supposed to have been a native of England. In 1636 he came to the New World with his brother Samuel and his sister Ann. On July 17, 1640, he was admitted to the Church at Dedham, Mass., and on May 10, 1643, was made a freeman. He owned land in Dedham, Wrentham, Medfield and Natick. His death occurred Oct. 4, 1682. On June 24, 1645, he married Elizabeth Crooke, of Roxbury, who died Aug. 31, 1669. Their children were: John, born Aug. 22, 1646, died young; Samuel, born Nov. 7, 1647, married Mary Woodcock; John (2), born Nov. 29, 1649; Elizur, born Nov. 30, 1653, died June 30, 1655; Ebenezer, born Dec. 21, 1657, died April 21, 1661; Elizabeth, born Jan. 18, 1660; and Benjamin, born May 25, 1664, is supposed to have died young.

On May 22, 1677, he married Sarah Fisher, who was born Oct. 29, 1658, a daughter of Anthony and Joane (Faxon) Fisher, of Dedham. John Guild (2) died at Wrentham, Jan. 24, 1722. He was ordained a minister of the Baptist Church at Willimantic, and preached in that town, and also at Clinton, Parkersville and Thompson. In the last named town he was pastor of the Brandy Hill Church to which charge he was called in April, 1853; after five months labor he died, Sept. 11, 1853, and is buried in Putnam cemetery. He was a staunch Abolitionist, and ever outspoken in defense of his theories. He was twice married. On Oct. 27, 1839, he wedded Sophronia Barlow, who was born Oct. 27, 1811. Four children blessed this union: John Good, born June 27, 1840, died Sept. 1, 1863; Rollin Henry, born Dec. 17, 1841, married Feb. 13, 1867, Maggie E. Applegate, of Cranberry, N. J.; Mary Eliza, born July 1, 1843, married Charles H. Spafford, of North Windham, and died June 21, 1875; and Harriet Almira, born Dec. 29, 1844. For his second wife Rev. Mr. Guild married, Sept. 3, 1849, Julia Ann Griggs, who was born March 26, 1822, in Pomfret, Conn., daughter of Nathan and Sarah (Marcy) Griggs. Two children were born of this union: Sarah Frances, born July 24, 1850, was a teacher in the public schools until her marriage with Elisha Maguire, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Frank Eugene.

Frank Eugene Guild was only a month old when his father died, but he was reared and watched over by a loving mother, who educated him to fill a worthy place among men. He attended the district schools of Woodstock, Willington, Killingly and Putnam, in which places he resided with his mother, at different times. At the age of seventeen years he started out to make his own living, at first entering the shop of the Stanley Rule & Level Co., of New Britain, where he spent a year. Having a strong desire to pursue a professional life, he entered the State Normal School at New Britain, graduating from this institution in 1874. In August of the same year he went to Matawan, N. J., where seven years of his life were spent in teaching, after which he taught one year at Grosvenor Dale, in his native town. Having saved enough of his earnings to carry him through college, in the fall of 1882, he entered Long Island College Hospital, from which institution he was graduated in the class of 1885, with the degree of M. D. While at College he was assistant demonstrator of anatomy, and vice-president of the class. In the fall of 1885 he received the appointment of assistant physician at Kings County Hospital, Long Island, where he spent a year. From there he came to Windham, where he has since resided, and began the practice of his chosen profession. He maintains a branch office in Willimantic, where he attends to a lucrative office practice every day. Dr. Guild is a member of the County and State medical societies, and of the American Medical Association, and he is justly popular with his professional contemporaries. He is not only respected and admired professionally, but occupies an enviable position in the social, religious and political life of the community. He is identified with the Baptist Church, and is a Republican in political principles. He takes a keen interest in the progress of public education, and has been a member of the town school board for the last ten years.

Dr. Guild was married April 28, 1897, in Putnam, to Miss Harriet Exton Clarke, a daughter of Edgar Clarke, a venerable and highly respected citizen of Putnam, where Mrs. Guild was born. A complete genealogy of the Clark family will be found in the biography of Mr. Clarke, elsewhere. Dr. and Mrs. Guild are the parents of three children, namely: Alan Clarke, Harriet Griggs and Julia Exton. Mrs. Guild is a member of Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, D. A. R., in Willimantic, and the Doctor is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

In maternal lines Dr. Guild traces his ancestry to early settlers of Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Thomas Griggs came from England to Roxbury, Mass., in 1639, and brought with him his son Joseph.

Joseph Griggs, son of Thomas, grew to manhood, and was twice married. His second wife, Hannah Davis, bore him eight children, as follows: Samuel, Benjamin, Ichabod, Mary, Joseph, Joanna, Hannah and Mary (2).

Benjamin Griggs, son of Joseph, was born in Roxbury Dec. 2, 1668, and he died in Woodstock Aug. 17, 1724. By his wife Patience he had eight children, as follows: Joseph, Benjamin, Solomon, Mehitabel, William, John, Ephraim and Hannah.

Solomon Griggs, son of Benjamin, was born in Woodstock May 30, 1707, and on March 10, 1737, he married Hannah Albin, and their children were: Benjamin, Esther, Stephen, Solomon, Daniel, Benjamin (2), Mary and Hannah.

Stephen Griggs, son of Solomon, became an ensign in the First Company, Eleventh Regiment, under Capt. Caleb Clark. He married Sarah Chandler (born June 21, 1742, died Oct. 15, 1786). Their children were: Benjamin, Chloe, Chester, Nathan, Chester (2), Lucinda and Nathan (2).

Nathan Griggs (2) was born June 12, 1779, and he died in 1831. He married Sarah Marcy, daughter of Elisha and Sarah (Marcy) Marcy. Four children were born to them: Stephen, Sarah, Julia Ann and William, of whom Julia Ann married John B. Guild, and became the mother of Dr. Frank Eugene Guild.

The Marcy family trace their ancestry to John Marcy, who was born about 1662, a son of the high sheriff of Limerick. He joined Elliott's Church in Roxbury, March 7, 1685. In April, 1686, he with Benjamin Griggs and eleven others took possession of Quotasset, Woodstock, Conn. (Granted 1663 by the Colony of Massachusetts to the town of Roxbury). These thirteen men and their families were the first settlers of Windham county. John Marcy married Sarah Hadlock, of Roxbury, who bore him the following children: Anna, John, James, Edward, Joseph, Benjamin, Moses, Samuel, Sarah, Ebenezer and Elizabeth. John Marcy died Dec. 23, 1724.

James Marcy, son of John, was born Feb. 26, 1691, and he died Jan. 29, 1765. He married Judith Ainsworth, and they became the parents of eight children, namely: James, Uriah, Reuben, Elisha, Judith, Anna, Loviah and Gerniah.

Elisha Marcy, son of James, was born Sept. 16, 1734. He married his cousin, Sarah Marcy, and their children were: Alvin, Zuriah, Uriah and Sarah, of whom Sarah, born Dec. 29, 1790, married Nathan Griggs, and became the mother of Mrs. Julia Ann (Griggs) Guild.

ROSCIUS BACK. Among the prominent and prosperous citizens of Union, Tolland Co., Conn., is Roscius Back, born Feb. 4, 1837, in Holland, Mass., a son of Lucius and Sophia (Moore) Back.

Judah Back, his paternal grandfather, was born Sept. 21, 1765, in that portion of Windham, now the town of Chaplin, Conn., and he died Sept. 21, 1828, in Holland, Mass. He lived a few years in Vermont. By calling, he was a farmer and extensive land holder. In stature, he was small, but he was very energetic and became successful. He married Elizabeth Abby of Windham, who died when over ninety years of age. To himself and wife were born: Lucius, born May 26, 1803, died Sept. 18, 1879; Harding Gates, born Oct. 6, 1816, who married, May 15, 1842, Elizabeth Colburn, of Stafford, Conn., was a farmer, later becoming a night watchman in the Dell Mill, in the village of Walès, Massachusetts.

Lucius Back was born while his father was in Vermont, but came to Holland, Mass., with his parents when only four years old. He was a very extensive farmer for his time, and being industrious and energetic, and blessed with good health, he attained success. His death occurred in an accident in Union, his horse running away from him, throwing him from the wagon and injuring him so that he lived but four days. In politics, he was a Democrat, but never was an office seeker. He was grand juror for his town of Holland several times. His probity and good judgment were so universally recognized that he was frequently called upon to settle estates. His home was in Holland, Mass., just across the line from Union, Conn. On Jan. 27, 1835, Lucius Back was married (first) to Sophia Moore, who was born Jan. 12, 1803, a daughter of Samuel Moore, and who died July 15, 1852. To this marriage were born the following children: (1) Martin Van Buren, born Nov. 13, 1835, in Holland, Mass., is a good machinist, now living in Webster, Mass., and he has been active in politics there; he married (first) on Nov. 6, 1860, Mary Elizabeth Upham, of Sturbridge, and (second) in March, 1870, Jane Bruce, of Sturbridge. (2) Roscius and (3) Rosetta were twins; the latter married, on June 10, 1862, Nathaniel W. Plimpton, and (second), on April 19, 1899, William H. Harris, a farmer living in Florence, Mass. (4) Albert, born March 6, 1839, in Holland, Mass., married, on Nov. 2, 1865, Julia Butterworth, and is now a farmer of Southbridge, Mass. (5) Elizabeth, born June 6, 1841, died July 11, 1842. (6) Adna, born March 26, 1844, married, March 10, 1869, Mary E. Young, of Mansfield, Conn., and died Dec. 20, 1887; he was superintendent of Florence (Mass.) Silk Mill for a number of years. (7) Charles, born Oct. 12, 1845, married Aug. 7, 1876, Sibyl Zulette Marcy, of Holland, Mass., and is now living in Florence, where he is a mechanic and farmer. (8) Marietta, born Aug. 10, 1847, married on Dec. 26, 1871, Freeman A. Brown, of Storm Lake, Iowa, where he has been a wholesale and retail grocer, and now is the editor of the Storm Lake Gazette.

Lucius Back married (second), on Sept. 3, 1855,

Roscius Back

Harry E. Back

Sarah Richardson, who was born March 31, 1821, a daughter of Levi Richardson, of Willington; she died Oct. 2, 1879. Their children were: Ellsworth, born Sept. 17, 1858, married, Dec. 16, 1884, Ellen F. Vinton, of Holland, Mass.; he was a farmer, and died in Woodstock, Conn., April 16, 1900. Grant, born Aug. 9, 1863, married, on Feb. 26, 1885, Mary Morarty, of Woodstock, where he is engaged in farming.

Roscius Back, who is the immediate subject of this biography, was educated in Holland and the Mashapaug district, in Union, remaining at his books until he was twenty-one years of age, assisting his father after that both in his agricultural and lumbering interests. In early life he worked at Colt's Armory in Hartford. On March 27, 1862, he came to Mashapaug, a village and school district in the town of Union, and purchased an interest in the mattress factory and grist mill in association with Albert E. Weld, the firm name being Weld & Back, the former gentleman having previously been the proprietor of the business for some time. The business was the making of excellent mattresses, and the conduct of a grist mill, this business continuing in a flourishing condition until it was destroyed by fire, in October, 1864, entailing loss to its owners and to the industrial interests of the little community.

Since his retirement from the mill, Mr. Back has been actively engaged in farming and managing his lumber business, for the past thirty years being one of the leaders in this line in his town, which is a pine lumber section. He owns hundreds of acres of timber both in Connecticut and Massachusetts, and has conducted his lumbering mostly during the winters, his farming and dairying interests occupying his attention in the summers. He has about seventy-five acres under cultivation and in pasture. In 1865 he erected his present residence.

In politics Mr. Back has long been a prominent Republican, and represented his town in the Legislature in the term of 1891-2, serving through the noted dead-lock session. He was a member of the Agricultural committee. He was constant in his attendance, and stood faithfully by his party through all the continual contests of that exciting two years' session. His services have also been given as assessor, constable, tax collector and upon the board of relief. Since 1890, he has continuously served as clerk and treasurer of the Union Congregational Church, of which he is a consistent member. Mr. Back is a member of Mashapaug Lake Grange, No. 101. He has shown a public-spirited interest in all matters pertaining to the progress and advancement of his section.

On Aug. 31, 1863, Mr. Back was married to Harriet Cutler Robbins, of Holland, Mass., who was born June 2, 1840, a daughter of William A. and Mary (Wallace) Robbins, of Holland, Mass. By trade Mr. Robbins was a carpenter, and was a man of ability, a school teacher and also a teacher of music. For a number of years he was town clerk, holding also other local offices, and in 1861 served in the Massachusetts Legislature. Mrs. Roscius Back has since "the sixties" been a leader in the social, religious, and musical life of the town. She has been organist of the Congregational Church at Union for nearly forty years. The two children born to this union are: (1) Roscius Harlow Back, born May 28, 1865, in Union, Conn., attended the district schools of Mashapaug, and in 1885 graduated from the Hitchcock Free High School, of Brimfield, Mass., taking a post-graduate course there the following year. In the fall of 1886, he entered the Boston University Law School, graduating in June, 1889, taking the degree of LL. B., after which he opened a law office at No. 24 Congress street, Boston, where he practiced for eight years, and was there attaining a good standing when he was obliged to leave that city on account of ill health. He was attorney for the Executor in the famous litigation over the will of the late Elvin Dean Hall, once treasurer of the Standard Sugar Refining Company. He lived for nearly a year in Stafford Springs, Conn., and when his health was restored he opened an office at Athol, Mass., in 1898, where he is now carrying on a large practice. He has come to be one of the most reputable, reliable and leading lawyers of Northwestern Worcester County. On Dec. 1, 1888, he married Katharine Elizabeth Hart, born on May 3, 1865, in Manchester, England. Their children are: Roscius Harlow, Jr., born March 17, 1894; and Helen Robbins, born July 30, 1896. Roscius Harlow Back, soon after becoming of age and before he removed his residence from his native town, was elected school visitor in Union, and served very acceptably. While in Boston he became one of the active forces in Republican politics in Ward 10. In Boston and Athol his political efforts have been in placing others in office, seeming to prefer to name the office holders rather than to take offices himself. He is a member of the Grange, the Odd Fellows and the Masons. (2) HARRY EUGENE BACK, second son of our subject and wife, born July 8, 1869, in Union, Conn., attended the district schools of Mashapaug, and graduated from the Hitchcock Free High School, Brimfield, Mass., in 1888, and from Boston University, College of Liberal Arts, in 1892, taking the degree of B. A. At the close of his college course he took a temporary position as city editor of the New Hampshire Republican, published at Nashua, N. H., and later became one of the editors on the Worcester Evening Post, where he remained but a short time. In the fall of 1893 he entered the Boston University Law School, and worked upon the Boston Daily and Sunday Globe to pay his expenses. Here he stayed until the close of the college year in 1895. He then worked for a year as an editor upon the Lowell (Mass.) Mail. In the fall of 1896 he returned to Union and was elected to the Connecticut Legislature, where he served during the 1897 session. In May, 1897, he opened a law office in Danielson (Killingly), Conn., and was then appointed prosecuting attorney for the town of Killingly, a position which he held until May 1, 1901, since which time he has been judge of the Town court of Killingly. In August, 1897, he was appointed prosecuting agent for the County of Windham for two years. In 1898 Gov. Lounsbury appointed him labor commissioner for the State of Connecticut, to serve for four years. During his term in the Legislature he was father of the bill creating the office of Attorney-general. On Jan. 8, 1902, he was married to Ella Davenport Hutchins, born Aug. 1, 1869, a daughter of Samuel and Ellen M. (Weatherhead) Hutchins, of Danielson (Killingly), Conn. By profession Samuel Hutchins was a physician, and he became one of the most skillful surgeons of his day in the State. He was very influential in the church and political life of the town, and served as selectman of the large town of Killingly for many years. These two sons are a credit to the parents, who, during their early years, implanted in their hearts the seeds of honesty, integrity and uprightness of living, and gave them advantages for obtaining excellent educations.

No man stands higher in the community than does Roscius Back, as he has proved himself a man worthy of highest esteem in every particular. As a business man his honorable dealings are unquestioned; as a citizen his patriotism and public spirit are firmly established; while in his home life, with his wife, he has well brought up and highly educated his two sons.

SAMUEL EXPERIENCE AMIDON. In tracing the old and honorable New England family of Amidon, the biographer finds it necessary to go back to the early days in Colonial settlement. The first of this name found recorded in America, was Roger Amidon (as the name was then written), who lived at Salem, Mass., in 1637, and later removed to Rehoboth, where his sons were born.

(II) Roger Amidon (2), son of Roger, was born in Rehoboth, Mass., in 1640.

(III) Philip Amidon, son of Roger (2), was born Jan. 26, 1669, in Rehoboth.

(IV) Henry Amidon, of the fourth generation, son of Philip, was born in Rehoboth (probably) Feb. 8, 1698.

(V) Capt. Henry Amidon, son of Henry, was born May 3, 1727. His home was at Ashford, Conn. He served in the Revolutionary war, and his commission as Captain of the Third Company, 22nd Regiment, was signed by Jonathan Trumbull, March 21, 1777. This document is in the possession of G. E. S. Amidon, of Ashford, and is highly prized by his descendants.

(VI) Capt. Jedediah Amidon, son of Capt. Henry, participated in the battle of Bunker Hill, and while engaged in a hand-to-hand fight with the British, he was seen to fall and as for a time he was missing, it was feared that he was killed. It developed later that he received a slight wound in the foot, and his motive in falling was to deceive the enemy, who would think him dead instead of disabled. Capt. Jedediah built the house in Ashford, which is the present residence of G. E. S. Amidon, it being in course of construction at the time he left to join the Revolutionary forces. Capt. Jedediah married Hannah Walker and they had these children: Experience Johnson; Ebenezer, who died young; Jedediah, who died young; Abigail and Hannah, who both died unmarried; Henry, who married Clarissa Smith, and moved to Michigan as a pioneer and died there; Horace and Horatio, twins, the former of whom died young, the latter became the father of G. E. S. Amidon, of Ashford; Mary and Sarah, twins, the former of whom became the wife of Lyman Strong and accompanied him to the West, while the latter became the second wife of David Wright, and lived and died in Ashford; Wealthy, who died young; Ebenezer (2), who died young; and Jedediah (2) who became a practicing physician in Paxton, Mass., and died July 3, 1836, at the home of his brother Horatio, in Ashford, when but thirty-six years old.

(VII) Experience Johnson Amidon, son of Capt. Jedediah, was born April 10, 1779, and died Aug. 24, 1850. On Jan. 5, 1809, he married Elizabeth Walker, who was born Nov. 8, 1786, and who died Jan. 3, 1872. He was long remembered for his many estimable qualities, and as a man of powerful build, towering above the greater number of his fellow-citizens in Westford Parish, in Ashford. His children were as follows: Louisa, born Oct. 3, 1809, died April 18, 1812; Wealthy Matilda, born April 13, 1811, married Hosea Vinton, and died in Woodstock; Experience Johnson; John, born July 12, 1817, was a successful merchant at Wethersfield, Conn., married Nancy Holmes Southworth, and died in 1891; Hannah, born May 10, 1815, a maiden lady of Ashford, Westford Parish; and Daniel, born Feb. 14, 1825, died Aug. 10, 1864, unmarried.

(VIII) Experience Johnson Amidon (2), father of Samuel E. Amidon, of Willimantic, was born May 10, 1813, on the old Amidon homestead, and was reared in his native town, a farmer boy. On April 5, 1840, he married Prudence Webster, born Oct. 14, 1811, in Sturbridge, Mass., who died March 23, 1884. He located first in Woodstock, Conn., then resided for a short time in Massachusetts, and in 1851 removed to Ashford, Conn., where he became a highly respected and well-known citizen. For some time prior to his decease, on Jan. 10, 1896, he was debarrd from his usual activity by failing eyesight, but rounded out eighty-two years of life. Like the greater number of his family, he was a man of generous proportions, dignified and manly in bearing. Both he and his wife were buried n Westford Society cemetery, in the town of Ashford. The political strife between factions did not disturb him, as he had fixed opinions and confined his interest simply to voting first the Whig and, later, the Republican ticket. His religious connection was with the Baptist Church. The children born to Experience J. and Prudence Amidon, who survived infancy, were: Mary Etta, who is Mrs. Albert Jacobs and resides at Dudley, Mass.; Samuel E., of this biography; Ellen A., who is the widow of Charles Cummings, of Mansfield, Conn.; Miss Hannah Josephine, who is traveling abroad in company with her cousin, Mrs. Charles H. Havens; and Jennie P., who died Sept. 19, 1854, aged two years and eight months.

Samuel E. Amidon was born July 24, 1844, at Sturbridge, Mass., and was but a child when his parents removed to Ashford, Conn., and located on the old Amidon homestead. His education was the best afforded in the district schools of his time, in his locality, and he enjoyed one term in an Academy at Dudley, Mass. Reared on the farm, he became thoroughly acquainted with all of its trials as well as rewards, and remained assisting his father, until August, 1865, when he accepted a position in Columbus, Kentucky, as the manager of the distribution department for the northern office of a news company, which owned that privilege on the old Mobile & Ohio railroad. Those were yet stirring times. The effects of the Civil war were visible on every hand, and martial law prevailed when Mr. Amidon first went to Kentucky. At that time the business of the railroad was such that but one train went through every three days, although, of course, traffic was soon after resumed to its usual amount. Mr. Amidon spent four years in various parts of the South, immediately succeeding the war, and during one year engaged in the sale of agricultural implements. Wherever money was plentiful, these implements were readily sold, as those in use prior to the war were crude and entirely inadequate.

Mr. Amidon considers that the four years spent at that time, under the conditions then existing, gave him a keener sense of public responsibilities and business experience than he could have acquired in double the time in the ordinary routine. All his knowledge and self-confidence were soon after needed, as, through his employers, he lost all the money he had accumulated during this time. Under these conditions he decided to return to the North, where capital awaited investment, and where he knew that a man of ability could soon forge his way to the front. In 1869, after a short visit to his home, he went to Providence, R. I., and took employment at running a stationary engine, in the meantime looking about for a good opening. It soon came, and he embarked in the grocery business, in Providence, where he remained until 1872, at that time removing to Quinebaug, Conn. In this pleasant village he conducted a general store for twelve years, in 1884 removing to Willimantic. Here he purchased from George M. Harrington what was formerly the Windham Co. store, and assumed sole management of it, a few years later buying also, the business of the Willimantic Linen Co.'s store at the lower end of Union street, conducting the two as separate establishments until February, 1892, when the completion of the Hall block on the corner of Walnut and Main streets gave him sufficient room to consolidate the two stores. Here Mr. Amidon built up a large and prosperous business, displaying excellent taste in purchase and arrangement, and at the same time adopting methods of fairness and honesty which gained him the confidence of the best and most fastidious trade of the city. This establishment was sold in 1902, and he retired from mercantile life.

In politics Mr. Amidon is a staunch supporter of Republican principles, and while a resident of Quinebaug, served as assessor. In Willimantic, his integrity and general fitness have caused his selection for various offices of responsibility; he served as burgess when Willimantic was a borough, and as first selectman in Windham. Mr. Amidon has business membership with the Board of Trade and the Merchants Exchange. In 1867 he joined Columbus Lodge, No. 173, A. F. & A. M., at Columbus, Ky., and was made a Royal Arch Mason at Willimantic. He is also a member of Olive Branch Council, and of St. John's Commandery, K. T. at Willimantic.

In December, 1870, Mr. Amidon was married in Providence, R. I., to Miss Amy Josephine Keach, a native of Plainfield, Conn., born in December, 1845, daughter of Daniel and Sarah M. (Kenyon) Keach. She was one of a family of four children, two sons and two daughters. In 1888 Mr. Amidon completed one of the best and most attractive houses in Willimantic, its excellent location being on Prospect street, at the corner of High street, where he and Mrs. Amidon hospitably entertain their many friends. Mr. Amidon has had an honorable business career and is one of the substantial men of this city. His success is all his own, his accumulation of ample means having come through legitimate trade. Quiet and unassuming in manner, devoted to the welfare of his family and city, he is a man of whom Willimantic is justly proud, as one who has always held the standard of business honor high and lived up to it.

ALEXANDER STEWART HAWKINS, an honored and successful representative of the agricultural interests of South Coventry, Tolland county, has made for himself a creditable position in the community by his thrift, industry and genuine worth.

John Hawkins, his father, was born in Exeter, R. I., in 1808, and came to Griswold, Conn., when a young man. When he was but eight years old he had worked on a farm for his board and clothes, and the cultivation of the soil was his life work, in which he was more than ordinarily successful. When he first located at Griswold he worked on a farm, and in time became possessed of landed property, owning at one time over two hundred acres in the town of Griswold. He was always identified with the Democratic party, but he never sought office, and was content to be a good citizen. At the services of the church in which he was reared he was nearly always present, and proved himself on every occasion its generous supporter. He was married in South Kingston, R. I., to Sally Crandall, who was born in South Kingston, R. I., in 1809, daughter of William and Sally (Tucker) Crandall, and a descendant of a family long settled in that section; she died Feb. 13, 1894. Mr. Hawkins died in February, 1865, and they were both buried in Rixtown Cemetery, in Griswold, Conn. Their children were as follows: Lucy Burrows, the widow of Hial Hull, lives in Willimantic, where her two children are located; John Crandall is a farmer in Griswold, and has one son; William Henry lived in Willimantic, and died at the age of sixty-three; Alexander Stewart is the subject proper of this sketch; Julia Reynolds, widow of Clark Reynolds, lives in Willimantic; Sarah Jane is the wife of Frank Bentley, and lives in Preston, Conn.; and Mary Emma married Joseph T. Hull, of Griswold, and died at the age of twenty-six. The old homestead in Griswold on which these children passed their youth is still in the possession of the family.

Alexander Stewart Hawkins was born Dec. 25, 1838, in Griswold, Conn., and as his days are drawing slowly to a close it is his privilege to look back over a useful and creditable career. His education was obtained in the local schools of Griswold, and in an academy at Preston, Conn., in which he had three terms of instruction. Becoming a teacher, he attained a good reputation in the profession, and was employed in Voluntown, Lebanon, Stonington, Norwich, East Greenwich and in Coventry, continuing in this profession until 1890. In the summer season he was engaged in farming. From 1866 to 1868 Mr. Hawkins was engaged in a mercantile enterprise at Liberty Hill, in the town of Lebanon, coming to Coventry in the fall of the latter year.

On March 18, 1869, Mr. Hawkins was married to Mary Eliza, a daughter of Capt. Ogden and Mary (Turner) Kingsley, an old Coventry family, her father having been a captain in the militia service. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins located on the Turner homestead in Coventry, which has been their home to the present time.

Mr. Hawkins is a Democrat, and has for many years taken a decided interest in political affairs, having been a selectman seven years—1880, 1881, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1891—and he was first selectman for many years. In 1875 he was elected school visitor and has served in that capacity continuously to the present time. Every alternate year he has been chosen assessor since 1879; as justice of the peace he is now serving his third term; and he has been grand juror and on the board of relief. In 1879 he was elected to the General Assembly from Coventry and did service on the committee on Manufactures; in 1883 he was again elected and served on the committee on Railroads; in 1898 he was elected a third time, and was placed on the committee on Constitutional Amendments, and in 1901 was elected a delegate to the Constitutional Convention at Hartford. In his religious proclivities Mr. Hawkins is usually classed as a free thinker. For thirty-five years he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, having united at Willimantic Feb. 8, 1865, with Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44. Both himself and wife belong to the Order of the Eastern Star.

MATHEWSON FAMILY. This family, of whom Philip Mathewson, of Central Village, Windham county, is a most worthy representative, is one of the oldest in New England, and traces its line to (I) James Mathewson, who came from England to the Colonies, and located at Plymouth, Mass. In 1635 he accompanied Roger Williams and his party to Providence, R. I., where he afterward made his home. He died in 1682. His wife, Hannah Field, daughter of John Field, died in 1703. Their children were: Ruth, James (1666), John, Isabel, Thomas, Lydia, Zachariah, Mary and Daniel.

(II) Thomas Mathewson, son of the emigrant, was born April 1, 1673, and he died Oct. 23, 1735. He married Martha Field, who died in 1735, daughter of Thomas and Martha (Harris) Field. Their children were, Thomas and Amos. Thomas Mathewson resided in Providence, and later Scituate, R. I.

(III) Thomas Mathewson (2), son of Thomas, married and became the father of Philip.

(IV) Philip Mathewson, born Sept. 7, 1736, died at Scituate, R. I., May 1, 1796, aged fifty-nine years. On June 22, 1760, he married Lydia Angell, and to this union were born six children, as follows: Jeffery, born Nov. 26, 1761; Anne, June 24, 1763; Philip, March 26, 1765; Angell, Dec. 7, 1769; Mary, April 30, 1772; and Lydia, Oct. 6, 1777.

(V) Jeffery Mathewson, son of Philip, was born in Scituate, R. I., Nov. 26, 1761, and died in Lisbon, Conn., Nov. 10, 1833. On March 31, 1791, he married Almy Knight, who was born Sept. 9, 1770, and died Dec. 30, 1846. This union was blessed with the following children: Knight, born June 28, 1793, died May 10, 1795; Bucklin, born June 20, 1795, mentioned below; and Robey, born May 23, 1800, married first Chancey Bacon, and second Isaac Knight, and died in Canterbury, Conn., Oct. 14, 1876, leaving two daughters, Lydia

M. and Maria S., by her first marriage, and one, Phoebe G., by her second.

(VI) Bucklin Mathewson, son of Jeffery, was born in Scituate, R. I., and when a child of six years accompanied his parents to Lisbon, Conn. In early manhood he engaged in mercantile business at Norwich, Conn., and for a time entered into the coasting trade, carrying goods in a chartered vessel, to the South Atlantic States and returning with southern products. Later in life he located on the home farm in the town of Lisbon, and followed agricultural pursuits. In politics he was a Whig and later a Republican, and twice represented the town of Lisbon in the State Legislature. On Nov. 17, 1825, Bucklin Mathewson married in Wickford, R. I., Cifuentes Battey, who was born Nov. 13, 1802, and who died in Lisbon, June 18, 1852, aged forty-nine years and seven months. Her given name Cifuentes is of Spanish origin, and was taken from a novel which her father was reading about the time of her birth. She was a daughter of General William Battey, who served through the war of 1812 with a Major's commission, and was later a General of the Rhode Island State Militia. Gen. William Battey was a son of Joseph and Aney (West) Battey, and a grandson of William Battey, a Colonial resident of Warwick, R. I., and he married Sarah Harris. To Bucklin and Cifuentes (Battey) Mathewson were born three children, as follows: Sarah Harris, born June 2, 1826, is the widow of Dr. Elijah Baldwin, and she resides in Canterbury, Conn.; Robert Knight, born Sept. 22, 1827, died April 4, 1860; and Philip is the subject of this sketch. Bucklin Mathewson died in Lisbon Nov. 16, 1882, when he was aged eighty-seven years and five months.

(VII) PHILIP MATHEWSON was born in Lisbon, Conn., Dec. 26, 1828. He first attended the home schools and later a select school at Jewett City, and attended Bacon Academy, Colchester, Conn. When he began life for himself, it was as a bookkeeper at Albion, R. I., and there he remained two years, at the end of which time he entered a mercantile establishment at Providence as a clerk, but later returning to Connecticut, he located in Canterbury and for three years engaged in farming. In 1859 he came to Central Village, and became proprietor of a general store. This business he sold to Grover & Battey in 1872, since which time he has lived a life of retirement, and considers Central Village his home, though for a number of years he lived in Providence, R. I., and Medfield, Massachusetts.

In politics Mr. Mathewson is a black Republican, and is interested in local politics, though not an aspirant for public office, in spite of the opportunities that have offered themselves. In 1885 he consented to represent the town of Plainfield in the State Legislature, and he there served on the Railroad committee. Since the early '60s Mr. Mathewson has been connected with the Masonic fraternity.

He is a member of Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar, of Norwich; and he also belongs to the American Mechanics of Moosup.

On March 7, 1855, Mr. Mathewson was united in marriage with Helen Walcott, a daughter of Arnold Fenner of Central Village. To this union were born: (1) Arnold B., in the insurance business and resides at Central Village, married Miss Elizabeth Bird Sampson, of Massachusetts, and they have three children, Helen, Ruth Standish and Pauline. (2) Philip Augustus is superintendent of King Philip Mills at Fall River, Mass. (3) Robert Knight, born March 24, 1860, died May 28, 1860. (4) Helen Louise, married J. Arthur Atwood, manufacturer at Wauregan, Conn.

ARNOLD FENNER. The Johnston, R. I., records say that one Arthur Fenner was the first settler within the present limits of that town. It was in that town that Arnold Fenner was born March 21, 1794. About 1825 he came to Central Village, and in company with a Mr. Richards operated a machine shop. This partnership continued for a comparatively short time. In 1828 Allen Harris, one of the pioneer manufacturers of Central Village, and Arnold Fenner built the upper brick mill. Mr. Harris was born in Smithfield, R. I., May 16, 1790, and came with his parents to Plainfield in 1800, and for a while the village was known as Harrisville. During the '30s Mr. Fenner and Holden Borden began cotton manufacturing and the venture proved successful. After Mr. Borden's death Tully D. Bowen became interested, and the firm was then known as the Central Manufacturing Co. After the death of both owners the business was for a time carried on by the heirs, and in July, 1881, the most modern mill (built in 1845) was sold to Leavens Brothers. The property was christened Kirk Mills, and was operated for a number of years. Of all the mill properties once owned and operated by Arnold Fenner, and his various associates, the last, the Kirk Mill, has been dismantled and on the same site is built the Plainfield Woolen Company Mill. Arnold Fenner also owned property at Kennedy City which he purchased of John Kennedy about 1835. There for a short time he carried on a small cotton factory. He died suddenly April 8, 1871.

On April 15, 1833, Arnold Fenner was united in marriage with Adeline Walcott, a native of Pawtucket, R. I., and a daughter of Otis and Relief (Walker) Walcott. The Walcott family has for generations been identified with Pawtucket, and one of the handsome residence streets of that city bears that name. Adeline (Walcott) Fenner was born April 10, 1806, and died June 21, 1871. She was the mother of the following children: Helen, born April 14, 1835, is Mrs. Mathewson; Adeline, Sept. 9, 1836, died Oct. 24, 1883; Sarah W., born Nov. 3, 1837, died Aug. 4, 1839; Susan, born Jan. 17, 1840, married Jeremiah Shepard, of Fall River, Mass.; Arnold, born June 21, 1843, of Providence, R. I., married first Mary Rigney, and second Cora James. In politics Mr. Fenner was in early life a Whig, and afterward a Republican. He twice represented the town of Plainfield in the State Legislature, first in the early '40s at New Haven, and in the latter '60s at Hartford. In his later years he united with the Congregational Church at Central Village, which he assisted to build.

HENRY A. SPAFARD, a well-known resident of Hebron, Tolland county, belongs to a family, whose ancestry runs back to John Spafford (Spafard), who came from England and settled in Massachusetts.

Thomas Spafford, one of the several children of John, was born in Rowley, Mass., June 6, 1678. He came to Connecticut and settled in Lebanon in the early part of the 18th century. In December, 1701, he married Bethial West, and they had a large and intelligent family.

Thomas Spafford (2) son of Thomas and Bethial, was married in 1735 to Sarah West, and had one son, Nathan, and several daughters.

Nathan Spafford, son of Thomas (2) and Sarah, was a farmer in Lebanon. He married Ann Cole, by whom he had many children.

Ebenezer Spafford, son of Nathan and Ann, was born in Lebanon, and there passed his life. He held several town offices, and was one of the substantial citizens. He died in 1861, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. In 1798 he married Lydia Wells, and to this union were born: Lucy, who married Jesse Wilcox, a farmer, carpenter and joiner, and resided in Lebanon, where he died; Samuel, who died when a young man; Augustus, the grandfather of Henry A. Spafard; Polly, who married Henry Porter, and moved to Choconut, Penn., where he died, and she then returned to her father's home in Hebron, and died there, but her remains were interred at Choconut beside those of her husband.

Augustus Spafard was born Sept. 9, 1802, in Lebanon, where he attended the district school. When a young man he learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed in addition to farming. In 1831 he bought a farm in Choconut, near the home of his sister and her husband where he remained until 1836, when he removed to Hawleyton, N. Y., and there kept a hotel for many years. Later in his life he was a farmer near Binghamton, that State. In 1852 he came back to Lebanon to engage in farming, and there he died March 5, 1873, of gangrene of the foot. Esther Porter, his wife, was born in 1804, daughter of Amos and Sarah (Webster) Porter; she died March 22, 1870. Amos Porter was a weaver, and was a son of Amos Porter, who died of smallpox contracted in the Revolutionary army. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Spafard were: Albert P., a farmer in New York, where he has many descendants, married (first) Ann Eliza Meeker, and (second) Mrs. Polly (Finch) Watson; Henry Augustus is mentioned below; Amos, a soldier in the war of the Union, lived in Lebanon, Conn., where he died in 1887, ten days after the death of his wife, Catherine E. Leonard, by whom he had two children, Hattie E. (wife of Charles M. Holbrook, of Willimantic, and the mother of Ella S.) and Adelaide L. (unmarried); Harriet married Thomas A. Carpenter, a farmer, and died in Lebanon a month after her marriage.

Henry Augustus Spafard, noted above, was born June 5, 1831, in Lebanon, and was about three months old when his parents removed to Pennsylvania, where he attended the district school at Choconut a short time. His parents then removed to Broome county, N. Y., where he attended school until he was eighteen, working during the summer season on the farm. When he was twenty-one he accompanied his parents on their return to Lebanon. For a year or more he worked on a farm, and then settled on the Porter homestead, consisting of 175 acres, which belonged to his wife, and which had been in the Porter family since it was secured from the Indians. Mr. Spafard has been engaged all his life in general farming. Although a Democrat before the war, that struggle made him a Republican. For several terms he has been on the board of selectmen, serving part of the time as first selectman, and he was assessor many years. For over thirty years he was justice of the peace and only retired from that position when he reached the limit of age. All the minor offices of Lebanon have been held by him, and he represented the town in the General Assembly of 1868. The family belongs to the Exeter Congregational Church, of which he has been a deacon for over twenty years.

Mr. Spafard was married April 3, 1853, to Mary E. Porter, who was born in Lebanon, May 24, 1830, in the house they now occupy, the only child of Elisha P. and Mary C. Porter. To them have been born the following children: (1) Elisha Pratt, born Jan. 17, 1854, was educated in the high schools of Hebron, Columbia and Lebanon, and graduated from Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1874. After teaching school in Staten Island, and farming and teaching in Lebanon, Conn., he managed a store for P. W. Turner, at Turnerville, Conn. In 1889 he entered the employ of the J. B. Williams Co. at Glastonbury, and is now head bookkeeper in their employ. He was married Dec. 25, 1874, to Ida S. Abel, by whom he has three children: Lottie M., born June 14, 1876, is now a school teacher; Henry P., born April 30, 1878; and Carrie B., born July 26, 1887. (2) Emily Porter, born Jan. 26, 1857, was a teacher in Lebanon, and married Joel Tucker in 1874. She died Sept. 27, 1891, in Columbia, where he was engaged in farming. Their children were: Eugene, born Nov. 1, 1879, died Feb. 23, 1892; and Florence Emily, born Sept. 15, 1887, now deceased. (3) Henry Augustus, Jr., was born Nov. 13, 1860.

(4) Mary Elizabeth, born Jan. 22, 1865, married Horace Foote, a farmer, and they have their home in Exeter Society, in the town of Lebanon. (5) John Avery, born Aug. 21, 1874, attended the district school and the Bacon Academy at Colchester, graduating from the Yale Law School in 1900, and was admitted to the Bar the same year. He is now a practicing attorney at Bridgeport, Conn. On June 30, 1898, he married Nettie E. Phillips, in Bridgeport. Mrs. Spafard descends from one of the oldest families in Lebanon, her remote ancestor, John Porter, settling in Lebanon in an early day. He was the father of three sons, of whom one was John, who settled in Exeter on a large tract of land near the North Pond. Another was Reuben, whose son, Ashe, married Mary Pratt, of Coopers-town, N. Y., by whom he had five children, three of them reaching maturity: Elisha P., born Oct. 24, 1794, died April 4, 1853, married Mary C. Porter, born in September, 1802, died June 27, 1830, by whom he had one daughter, Mary Elizabeth, the mother of Henry A. Spafard; Mary, a maiden lady, died unmarried April 29, 1881, at the age of seventy-five years; and Betsy died in early womanhood. All the Porters were farmers, and six of them resided on the farm now owned and occupied by the father of the gentleman whose name introduces this article.

Henry A. Spafard was born Nov. 13, 1860, on the farm now occupied by his parents in Lebanon, and was reared to manhood there. His education was obtained in the district school and the school taught by his brother Elisha P. in Staten Island. Until he was twenty-seven he lived at home and assisted in the care of the farm. In 1888 he came to Hebron, and purchased the present home farm of forty acres, which was known as the "Bascom Place." The house was thoroughly remodeled by him, and extensive improvements effected. Twenty-five acres have been added to the original forty, and here he carries on farming and lumbering, getting out railroad timber, and other material from his wooded lots.

On March 29, 1881, Mr. Spafard was married in Columbia, Conn., to Mary Louisa Steadman Breed, who was born Sept. 18, 1853, in Chester, Mass., a daughter of Rev. David and Caroline (Lyman) Breed, natives of New Haven, and Woodstock, Conn., respectively. To this union were born: Leroy Lyman, Aug. 25, 1886; and Albert Cleveland, June 18, 1888. Mr. Spafard is a Republican, and was sent to the General Assembly from Hebron in 1893, where he served on the committee on Forfeited Rights. For several terms he was a member of the board of selectmen, has also been on the board of relief and the board of assessors, and for several years past he has been on the school committee. Mr. Spafard is a member of the Hebron Lodge, A. O. U. W., and for the first five years of its organization was its secretary, and he also belongs to Wooster Lodge, F. & A. M., at Colchester. Both Mr. and Mrs. Spafard belong to the Congregational Church.

DEACON CHARLES N. LOOMIS is a well-known farmer at Bolton Center, Tolland county, Conn., and comes of an old and honored family.

Thomas Loomis, the great-grandfather of Deacon Loomis, lived in the eastern part of the town of Bolton, and there built a house near the location of the present home of William H. Loomis. This place was in the family name for several generations. Thomas Loomis was an extensive farmer, and owned and operated a distillery, at that time a leading industry in Bolton.

George Loomis, son of Thomas, was a native of Bolton, but when he was but three months old his parents removed to Lenox, N. Y., where he was reared, and where he became a farmer, owning land in Lenox. He was married in Columbia to Anna Driggs, who died, and he married again in Lenox. Politically he was a Democrat, and religiously, with his family, was connected with the Congregational Church.

George Loomis, son of George and father of Deacon Loomis, was born in a house across the street from the old homestead built by his grandfather. After the death of his father, George Loomis returned to Connecticut, to make his home with his grandfather in Bolton. On the death of the latter he came into possession of the estate, a farm consisting of a hundred acres on which the greater part of his life was spent.

In his politics Mr. Loomis was a Democrat, and held various local positions, including that of selectman, member of the board of relief and other offices. In Colchester he married Sally Maria Northam, daughter of Charles and Sally (Harvey) Northam. They attended the Congregational Church, of which she was a member. Mrs. Loomis died in 1879, and on her death Mr. Loomis was married to Mrs. Clarissa (Hunt) Fitch. To the first marriage were born the following children: George T., a joiner and builder at Westerly, R. I., married for his second wife, Frances Davis; Charles Northam; and William H., a farmer in Bolton.

Charles Northam Loomis was born on the old Loomis homestead in Bolton Sept. 17, 1840, and was there reared to manhood, having his education in the local school, and in Westchester, continuing in attendance at school more or less constantly until he was twenty years old.

On Nov. 28, 1866, Mr. Loomis was married to Elizabeth C. Hickman, a daughter of William and Eliza (Davis) Hickman. William Hickman was born May 22, 1801, in southern Delaware, and died March 7, 1873; his father was a native of Delaware, of English parentage, and married Mary Bennett. Eliza Davis was born Jan. 22, 1804, daughter of Manlove and Mary (Wilkbank) Davis, and she died March 10, 1886. The Davis family in Delaware were of Finnish descent, and an account is given of them in "The History of Delaware." In 1850 the father moved to Philadelphia, where he was engaged in the grocery business for a number of years, and where his death occurred. Mr. and Mrs. William Hickman had the following family: Mary died at the age of six years; William (deceased) lived in Philadelphia; Miriam, living in Medina, Ohio, is the wife of John W. Massey; Mark D. is of Ocean Grove, N. J.; Joseph lives in Cambridge, N. J.; Margaret married Thomas Lillagore, of Philadelphia, and died at the age of fifty-two years; Job T. lives in Pennsylvania; John F. died in 1890, at the age of fifty years; Elizabeth C., born Feb. 10, 1844, is the wife of Deacon Loomis; David T. lives at Stratford, N. J.; and three others died in infancy.

To Deacon Loomis and wife have come the following children: Adelia Nelson, born Jan. 8, 1868, is at home; Charles Northam, Jr., born Aug. 22, 1872, who received his education at home and in Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford, is bookkeeper for the Vernon Woolen Company, and has become a prominent man in the town, having held a number of town offices and having served as representative in the General Assembly in 1899; and Eliza Maria, born Oct. 28, 1876, married William Stetson, a farmer of Andover, Conn., by whom she has two children, Catherine Elizabeth (born Feb. 14, 1897) and Clarence Loomis (born March 2, 1900).

When a young man Deacon Loomis was employed at farm work, both at home and on the neighboring farms. After his marriage he lived on the old homestead thirteen years, and was engaged in its cultivation. In 1881 he bought his present home farm, which was then known as the Henry Alvord homestead. His farming is carried on extensively, and has proved very successful. Deacon Loomis has always been a Democrat, and was a member of the General Assembly of 1885, where he served on the committee on Railroads. For eight years he was treasurer of the town, as well as of the Deposit Fund, and was on the board of relief some ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Loomis and their daughters are members of the Bolton Congregational Church, in which he has been a Deacon for the last twenty-four years, and has often served on prominent committees. This church was organized in 1725, and is one of the historic churches of the State. Its first two houses of worship had no chimneys, nor spires, and no means of warming them in winter for more than a hundred years. The present house of worship was dedicated Nov. 14, 1848. The entire family belong to the Bolton Grange, of which Deacon and Mrs. Loomis are charter members. He has been chaplain of the Grange much of the time since its organization, also filling a similar office in the Pomona.

HON. DAVIS ARNOLD BAKER, a leading merchant of Warrentville, is also one of Windham county's most astute politicians, as well as one of its most successful educators and broad-minded, public-spirited citizens. Owing to the fortunate environments created by his father's success, Mr. Baker found it possible to pursue a higher development, untrammelled by those unnatural demands upon his youthful energies which temporarily retard and discourage. Yet he comes from a family of earnest and practical agriculturists, and his own experience upon the broad expanse of his sire's well-tilled acres inculcated ideas of thrift, economy and wholesome ambition, later expressed in his mercantile success and in the numerous political responsibilities with which his name has been associated. He is a native son of Ashford, born Oct. 28, 1834, fourth oldest of the seven children born to Enoch E. and Mary Elizabeth (Webster) Baker, the latter of whom was born in Southbridge, Mass., and died at the home of her son in Mansfield, Conn., Nov. 6, 1895, at the age of ninety years.

John Baker, the paternal grandfather of the Hon. Davis A., was born in Douglass, Mass., in January, 1780, and during his active life made a distinct success as a farmer and stock raiser. While still in Douglass he was for many years chief farmer for the Slaters, and after his removal to Ashford, in 1830, his savings permitted the purchase of a tract of land comprising 250 acres, in the western part of the town. This property remained in the family until 1885. John Baker was a man of force of character and honorable intent, and his word and bond were alike respected and considered. As a staunch adherent of Democratic principles he held a number of minor offices, and although he started out in life with little, he died, Sept. 9, 1867, the possessor of a fair share of worldly possessions. His wife, formerly Lois Eddy, who was born in Douglass, Mass., and who died March 31, 1857, aged eighty-one years, bore him four children: Enoch E., the father of Davis A.; George, who married Mary Chaffee, and was a farmer near Marietta, Ohio; John, who married Betsey Wheaton, and died on his farm in Ashford; and Laura, who died unmarried in Ashford.

Enoch E. Baker was born in Douglass, Mass., in October, 1801, and was educated in the district schools of his neighborhood. He remained on the home farm until the family's removal to Ashford in 1830, at which time his father gave him one hundred acres of land and built him a house, his brother George receiving the same generous treatment. More roving in his disposition, George eventually took to the West, but Enoch remained on the farm up to the time of his death, Dec. 2, 1876. His last years were full of suffering, occasioned by a malignant cancer. He was a Democrat in politics, as had been his father before him, and he was a member of the old militia. When the Baptist Church was located at West Ashford, he was one of its most active members and generous supporters, and reared his children to God-fearing ways and manly tendencies. His oldest child, Eddy, died at the age of two years; John Webster married (first) Sarah White, and (second) Jane Brown, and died in Ashford March 12, 1890, at the age of fifty; Emily is the widow of Leander Walbridge, a farmer of Staffordville; Hon. Davis Arnold; Lanthia Amelia is the wife of Chester Corbin, a farmer of Stafford; Mary Jane married Lyman Quire, a farmer of Ashford; and George H., who married Janette Shurtliff, and later Sarah Waldo, by occupation a carpenter and stone mason of Mansfield, where he is a man of some prominence, having served as a member of the board of selectmen, while during his residence in Ashford he represented the town in the Legislature during one term, and also served as constable.

From earliest youth Hon. Davis A. Baker was inspired with an ardent desire for a good education, and when the opportunity presented itself he proved a apt scholar and thoughtful student. After completing the course in the district schools he entered Ashford Academy, then under the management of that able instructor, Edwin Keyes, and thereafter attended the State Normal School at New Britain. Until the age of eighteen his home continued to be his headquarters, and the scene of active farm labors, but he then turned his attention to learning the carpenter's trade, which he followed until beginning to teach at the age of twenty-one. He then devoted his summers and vacations to carpentering, and for seventeen consecutive winters taught school, beginning in his native district for $20 per month, at that time the highest price paid instructors in the town. After two terms he went to East Willington, then to Westford, West Ashford, and lastly to Warrenville. He was very successful and educated many of the men who to-day hold prominent positions in this part of the State. It was his pride and good fortune always to have the largest schools in the places where he taught, and he devoted much thought and attention to perfecting and improving his methods of imparting knowledge.

In 1874 Mr. Baker entered upon a mercantile career in Warrenville, at which time he formed a partnership with Everett M. Durkee, who later was of the firm of E. A. Buck & Co., in the grain business in Willimantic, and still later of the firm of Durkee, Stiles & Co., wholesale grocers of Willimantic. For three years Mr. Baker continued his partnership with Mr. Durkee, under the firm name of Baker & Durkee, but at the end of that time he purchased the business of John A. Murphy at Warrenville, continuing in same for three years. He then disposed of his interest in the business, and purchased the store of Mathewson Brothers, since building up the largest and most satisfactory business of the kind in the town. His interests, however, have been by no means self-centered or confined to mercantile affairs, and perhaps more intelligently and wisely than any other in his locality he has entered into the political needs and exigencies of his adopted town. Like his sire and grandsire, he is a Democrat, and from the beginning of voting days has considered political activity one of the highest duties of citizenship. His first office in Ashford was that of school visitor, which he maintained for seventeen years, and during a portion of this time was acting visitor. He has served five years on the board of selectmen, and a part of the time was chairman of the board. For more than twelve years he was a justice of the peace, and tried all of the cases in the town, and he has served as town clerk and treasurer, with a few intermittent breaks, ever since his first election to the combined offices in 1867. In 1878 he was elected judge of the probate court, and after resigning a couple of years later, was re-elected the following year and has held the position ever since. In 1867 he was sent to the State Legislature, and during his second term, in 1877, served on the committee on School Funds. He was re-elected to the Legislature in 1887, and served on the committee on Humane Institutions. From 1894 until 1898 he was a member of the board of county commissioners, and during his service the new Windham county jail was erected at Brooklyn. He was appointed a trustee of the Connecticut School for Boys at Meriden, by Governor Luzon B. Morris, to fill the unexpired term caused by the resignation of Mr. Thatcher. For three years Mr. Baker served as a jury commissioner. During the first administration of President Cleveland he was appointed postmaster of Warrenville, and when he resigned in 1887, to go to the Legislature, his place was filled by his son, Oscar D. Mr. Baker was again postmaster during the second Cleveland administration. In 1902 Mr. Baker was again elected to serve his town in the State Legislature by a very large majority. He is a trustee of the Stafford Savings Bank, and he is an attendant of the Baptist Church. In all matters pertaining to the well-being of the community Mr. Baker's advice is readily sought, and as readily and gladly followed, and his great good sense, practical views of life and affairs and his unquestioned integrity render him a conspicuously strong and commanding figure against the background of his time and place.

In March, 1859, Mr. Baker married Eliza H. Walbridge, a native of Ashford, and daughter of William and Elizabeth (Shurtliff) Walbridge. Of this union there have been born four children, viz.: Eldora, deceased at the age of two and a half months; Oscar D., who is identified with his father in the mercantile business, and who married Anna Buell, of Eastford, and has two children, Raymond O. and Norman O.; Lewis A., unmarried and in business with his father; and Julia A., deceased at the age of two and a half years.

EVERETT GAYLORD BARROWS, the proprietor of the oldest grocery house in Willimantic, Windham county—an establishment whose name has not been changed for thirty years—comes from one of the oldest families in the town of Mansfield, whose progenitors have been long settled in New England. He was born in the Chestnut Hill District of the town of Mansfield, Feb. 15, 1843, and in the course of his industrious and useful life has won for himself a character and standing far beyond the usual order.

Jabez Barrows, the grandfather of Everett G., was a farmer in Mansfield. He was a cripple for many years as the result of an accident to his foot. In the community where he was well known he was highly esteemed and considered one of the very best citizens of the day. His wife was Abigail Palmer.

Amasa Palmer Barrows, son of Jabez, was born in Mansfield, where his life was passed, with the exception of a brief period when he resided in Willimantic. His wife was Anna Maria Williams, of Mansfield, the daughter of Elisha Williams, who was a farmer and school teacher in that town. In his latter years he lived in Willimantic, where he taught school and was a prominent citizen, filling numerous local offices; he settled estates, and did much legal work. Mr. Barrows worked at what was then a popular trade, in his early days—that of shoemaking—and died when only thirty-five years old, in Mansfield. His widow lived to be sixty-five, and died in Willimantic.

Everett G. Barrows was the only son of his parents, and he attended the Chestnut Hill District School in Mansfield at a time when it was the custom to have the pupils, both boys and girls, learn to use the needle, a most useful accomplishment in after years to all. Mr. Barrows remembers very gratefully the district school, from which all his instruction was received, before the age of ten years, as at that time his father died, making it necessary for him to go to work. Handy with tools from his earliest youth, young Barrows took up the work of a shoemaker, and although in earlier manhood his health was not good, he found light work and kept employed. Mr. Barrows remained in Mansfield until about 1870, when he removed to Willimantic, where some two years later he opened a grocery store in a small building that stood on Milk street, between his present place and Union street. After some years, when he had prospered sufficiently to do so, he built his present building at No. 16 Milk street, and here he has done business to the present time. He has been a grocer since 1872, with an unbroken career in business making a most honorable and creditable record, and his establishment is by a number of years the oldest unchanged grocery in Willimantic.

On Oct. 10, 1882, Mr. Barrows was married in Putnam, Conn., to Miss Rebecca E. Dickinson, of Willimantic, who was born in Montreal, Canada, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Hannah) Dickinson. Her parents were both English born, her father being a native of London. They had nine children, all but one of whom were girls. Three of this family came to the United States: Mr. Barrows; A. N. Dickinson, a prosperous business man of Stockton, Cal.; and Nettie, who married L. R. Britton, of Milford, Mass., where he is extensively interested in a granite quarry and manufacturing. Mrs. Barrows is the third oldest of the family, and was the first to come to the United States. As a young woman she was full of energy and ambition, and leaving a good home of her own accord, came to Florence, Mass., where she secured work in a silk mill, and then coming to Willimantic, was employed for seven years by the Willimantic Linen Co. She is a woman of more than ordinary business tact, and has been of little help to her husband. In the Congregational Church, of which she is a member, she belongs to the Ladies' Aid Society, and is counted one of the most efficient and capable ladies associated with it.

In the Ladies' Benevolent Society of that church she also takes an active part, and for ten years and more she was a teacher in the Sunday School.

Since their arrival in Willimantic Mr. and Mrs. Barrows have had their home at the corner of Milk and Union streets, in a house which they have greatly improved, and generally remodelled. They have bought another residence and the business block on Milk street. Mr. Barrows cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1864, and since that time has always been a Republican. He has never cared for office, nor has he sought political honors, preferring to attend to his own business. With his wife he belongs to the Congregational Church, and is known as one of the substantial men of the city. Of the strictest integrity, he is also a man of kind heart and generous spirit, and possesses many friends, not only among his patrons but throughout the city, who recognize his worth and respect his character.

CAPT. GEORGE KEENEY, one of the highest esteemed citizens of North Coventry, whose life has been full of adventure, is a native of Waterford, Conn., where he was born Jan. 6, 1838, a son of Ezra and Catherine (Chapman) Keeney, the former of whom was a farmer, although in early life a sea-faring man.

Until he was sixteen, George Keeney attended school at Waterford and Willimantic, but at that age left home and engaged in fishing along the coast, selling his fish to the New York market and to local dealers. He continued in this line for two years, and then, at eighteen, shipped on board a whaler, and was gone thirty-seven months. He had a very successful voyage, although but eight returned out of the original crew of thirty-five. Mr. Keeney was then made second officer of the "Hannibal" of New London for Benjamin F. Brown Sons. The ship sailed March 21, 1860, but was wrecked Oct. 9, 1863, in ice floes, and Mr. Keeney came home in the "Black Eagle," of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

His next voyage was made as first officer of the "Tymore," formerly of Sag Harbor, under the command of Capt. Dexter E. Bellows, and he was later on the bark "Newburyport," of Boston. He remained on these vessels but a short time. Both vessels were used for blockading purposes during the Rebellion. On May 9, 1862, he shipped under Capt. Benjamin F. Rogers on the brig "Georgiana" on a whaling expedition, and returned home at the end of nineteen or twenty months, having been quite successful. After a short time spent at home, Mr. Keeney, on April 12, 1864, sailed as master of the same vessel, and was gone eighteen months, arriving home Oct. 7, 1865, having made a voyage worth $114,000, or his cargo sold for that sum. After twenty days at home, Capt. Keeney sailed as first officer of the schooner "S. B. House," under command of Capt. John O. Spicer, to the coast of Labrador, looking for new whaling ground, and after eight months, he returned, May 8, 1866. This time he remained at home only twenty-one days, and then sailed as master of the same schooner on an Arctic voyage, returning in October, 1867, as usual being successful. On May 18, 1869, he sailed as master of the schooner "Franklin" of New London, and met with good luck, although on Sept. 19th, in company with the schooner "Quick Step," he experienced a severe cyclone, and the latter went down with all hands on board, but Capt. Keeney's ship only lost its bulwarks. On May 28, 1871, he sailed as master of the brig "Isabella" for the Arctic Ocean, and made a good voyage. Only remaining at home a short time, on May 25, 1873, he again set sail for the northern waters, as master of the same vessel, but this time was not able to penetrate the ice and reach the whaling grounds. On May 5, 1875, he sailed as first officer, Capt. John O. Spicer, on the bark "Nile," and made a short voyage, returning on Jan. 11, 1876. Remaining at home until June 10, 1876, he again sailed as first officer, going to the Arctic whaling grounds to take command of the brig "Isabella," in which he finished the incomplete voyage. On June 1, 1880, he sailed as first officer of the ill-fated bark "Trinity" of New London, bound to the Antarctic waters, which was driven by the fierce gales ashore Oct. 17, 1880, in longitude 73-23 E., latitude 53-6 S. An excellent swimmer managed to carry a line to land, and the entire crew were safely brought to shore. The last to leave the sinking ship were the Captain and his brave first officer, Mr. Keeney, who by dint of hard work managed to land three months' provisions. The situation was not very encouraging. They were cast upon an island thirty miles north and south by nine wide, altitude 6,000 feet, upon which were three volcanoes and nine extinct craters, and but three months' provisions. At first there were plenty of wild cabbage roses, which the officers and men ate gladly. They all devoted their time to hunting the game found in Antarctic regions, seals, penguin, eggs, and occasionally the brave men, thirty-five in number, were forced to gather dead fish, which, though killed in heavy surf, were most excellent eating. Two of the crew, a carpenter, George W. Watson, and a young man named Kelly, lost their lives while in search of food upon the icebergs. The government sent the sloop-of-war "Marion" in search of the party, commanded by Capt. Silas Terry, Jan. 13, 1882, which rescued them and carried them to Cape Town, whence they took passage by steamer to England and thence home. No words can express the sufferings of these men, and the memory will ever linger with them. While on the island, Capt. Keeney killed a sea elephant which measured twenty-three feet in length, as well as other big game, but he lost his entire outfit and finally reached home April 5, 1882.

On July 16, 1882, Mr. Keeney took charge of the U. S. schooner "Alice," which was in the engineer service. In March, 1885, he purchased the schooner yacht "Brander" for the government, and sailed to make experiments in the St. John's river, Fla., in exploration and preparation for the mining of Hell Gate, arriving home on June 15, 1885. After this he re-fitted and made surveys along the coast between Stonington and the head of Long Island Sound in the Third District, during 1886 and 1887 being engaged in the same work in the rivers and harbors survey of the government in the New York District. In 1888, after his life of great adventure, he located in North Coventry, and is now engaged in farming, displaying the same ability in cultivating his acres as he once did upon the deck of his vessel, and keeping his property in the same neat order.

On Dec. 31, 1870, Capt. Keeney was married to Minnie E. Chipman, a native of New London, a daughter of Nathaniel S. Chipman, also of New London, and to this union have been born: Catherine, born Aug. 26, 1873, is the wife of H. C. Lathrop, of Windham, Conn.; Charles, born on Oct. 9, 1875, married Ida Goss, and is in the meat business in New London, Conn.; Leolin, born June 1, 1878, in the employ of Corbin Bros., New Britain, Conn.; Marion (named after the ship of that title) and Arthur (named after President Arthur) twins born Dec. 4, 1884; and Mary Josephine, born Feb. 26, 1895. The gratitude of Capt. Keeney and his wife for the action of President Arthur in sending a relief party to the rescue of those so sadly in need of help, induced them to name one of their twins for him, and the other was named after the ship which was sent to the rescue.

Since attaining his majority Capt. Keeney has always cast his vote for Republican candidates, and since locating in North Coventry has taken an active part in civic affairs. In 1897 he most creditably represented the town in the Legislature, and served with distinction upon the committee on Fisheries and Game, few men being better fitted by experience and knowledge to give valuable information upon these and kindred subjects. For three years he served on the board of relief, and has held other minor offices, although he prefers to exert his influence as a private citizen, and therefore has refused more honors than he has been induced to accept. Upon several occasions he has further done his duty as a citizen by serving upon the grand jury, and has brought to bear in the discharge of the duties pertaining thereto mature judgment, wide knowledge, and almost unlimited experience. Social by nature, a man who has traveled the world over, well-posted in current events, Capt. Keeney is a very entertaining companion, and a man of wide influence in the community.

HENRY R. WOODWARD. The splendidly equipped and well managed farm of Henry R. Woodward, the fertile acres of which stretch into Ashford, Willington and Mansfield towns, and upon which are to be found in their most modern aspect those intelligent aids to agricultural science appreciated by the most cultured exponents of soil production in Connecticut, has a twofold interest, in that it has no superior in its special environment, and because, in its completeness, individuality, air of finish and solidity, it is suggestive of one of the oldest and most honored families in Windham county. Upon this farm, purchased by his paternal grandfather in 1813, the present owner was born Dec. 21, 1854, and has developed, from the attributes of a noble ancestry, a career of unusual merit and large accomplishment, fortified by unswerving integrity, and devotion to the general welfare of the community. No more honored name is included among the history makers of New England, nor does any indicate a more typical eastern citizenship.

The progenitor of the Woodward family in America was one Richard Woodward, who was born in England in 1589, and at the age of forty-five embarked, Oct. 10, 1634, in the vessel "Elizabeth," bound for the shores of Massachusetts. Accompanying him to the New World were his wife, Rose, aged fifty, and his sons, George and John, aged thirteen. The family settled in Watertown, Mass., where the father was made a freeman in 1635, being one of the first settlers of the town. After the death of his wife, in 1662, he married Anna Gates, and thereafter resided in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

George Woodward, son of Richard, was born in England in 1621, and after coming to America with his father settled in Watertown, where he became a freeman May 6, 1646. After the death of his first wife, Mary, he married, Aug. 17, 1659, Elizabeth Hammond, of which union there were born thirteen children. He died May 31, 1676.

John Woodward, son of George and Mary Woodward, was born in Watertown, Mass., March 28, 1649, and married in 1686, Rebecca Robbins, of Cambridge; his second wife was Sarah Bancroft, of Reading. This family lived in New town. John Woodward was the father of eleven children.

Joseph Woodward, son of John, was born in Newtown, Mass., Nov. 26, 1688, and was married, June 24, 1714, to Elizabeth Silsby. After his marriage he settled in Canterbury, Conn., where he bought land in 1710, locating thereon with his brothers, John and Richard. This farm was probably close to the Windham line, as the doings of the family are recorded in both towns. Mr. Woodward died May 30, 1727, his wife having preceded him on the twenty-second of the same month.

Joseph Woodward (2), son of Joseph, born Jan. 21, 1726, in Canterbury, Conn., died in Ashford, July 8, 1814, in his eighty-ninth year. He was a very prominent man in Windham and Ashford, and for twenty-six years held the most important offices within the gift of his fellow-townsmen. He served in the Revolutionary war, and was in Boston at the time of its evacuation by the British, which fact is substantiated by a letter still extant, and which was penned to his wife at the time. On May 19, 1748, he married Elizabeth Perkins, born May 19, 1733, and died in 1823, aged over ninety years. The children of this union were as follows: Elizabeth, born May 22, 1749 (died Jan. 18, 1814); Joseph, born May 26, 1751; Jason, born July 19, 1753 (died July 15, 1821); John born June 10, 1755; Martha, born Aug. 13, 1757 (died Jan. 8, 1847); William, born Nov. 14, 1759 (served in the Colonial army during the Revolution, was taken prisoner at Fort Washington, Nov. 16, 1776, and died in prison Dec. 30th of the same year); Abner, born Jan. (or July) 10, 1762; Phineas, born June 3, 1764 (died in 1776); Othniel, born Sept. 8, 1766; Perkins, born Aug. 17, 1770; and Levi, born Aug. 19, 1773. All were born in Windham, save the last two children, and those were born in Ashford, whither the family removed in 1767.

Abner Woodward, son of Joseph (2), was born in Ashford, July (or Jan.) 10, 1762, and in the same region became an extensive and successful farmer; he died Jan. 28, 1840. He was twice married, (first) April 15, 1789, to Miriam Knowlton, daughter of Abraham Knowlton, a relative of Col. Knowlton, of Ashford, and a descendant of Miles Standish. Mrs. Woodward, who died Aug. 14, 1793, in her twenty-seventh year, was the mother of two children, of whom Hial was born Sept. 20, 1790, and married Anna Higgins Andrews. He located in Hartford county, and started the first United States mail coach on the east side of the Connecticut river, between Hartford, Conn., and Walpole, Mass. He was identified with the coach for seven years, and later devoted his time to farming in Enfield, where his death eventually oc-irred, March 23, 1857. He was a soldier in the ar of 1812. The other son, Joseph, was born Dec. 2, 1792, and died Oct. 17, 1793. For a second wife Abner Woodward married Eunice Fuller, who was born July 1, 1769, daughter of Rev. Daniel Fuller, the first pastor of the Willington Congregational Church. To this marriage came nine children: Joseph, born Nov. 17, 1795, married first) Laura Davis and (second) Submit Dunham, and was a merchant in different parts of the county, principally in Mansfield and Four Corners, in which latter place he died Aug. 31, 1851; Jonathan, born Sept. 23, 1797, married Mary Freeman, was a successful merchant in Cazenovia, N. Y., and died Dec. 10, 1875; Jerusha, born June 26, 1799, married Dexter M. Leonard, a merchant, and died in North Hadley, Mass., Oct. 27, 1847; Jelina, born Sept. 8, 1802, died young; Ashbel, born June 26, 1804, married Emeline Bicknell, and was a successful physician at Franklin, Conn. (he was the father of P. H. Woodward, of Hartford); Otis, born Aug. 10, 1807, was the father of Henry R.; Henry, born in 1808, died the same year; Elizabeth Perkins, born in Aug. 1811, died Feb. 26, 1814; and Royal, born Nov. 13, 1815, married Minerva Smith, was successfully engaged in the silk business, and died in Albany, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1882. According to "Connecticut in the Revolution," page 657, Abner Woodward was a pensioner of the Revolutionary war, in which momentous struggle he served through several campaigns. He resided for many years in Willington, but about 1813 removed to the newly purchased Hale farm, in Ashford, upon which his grandson now lives, and where he resided for the remainder of his life.

Otis Woodward, the father of Henry R., was born in Willington, Conn., and was but a child when his parents removed to the farm in Ashford. He was reared to a life of toil and responsibility, and although he attended the district schools for a few weeks each winter, his summers were devoted to the most exacting duties on the home farm. He continued to live amid the old surroundings, and to care for his parents until their respective deaths, after which he bought out the interest of the other heirs, and continued to work the farm until his own death, May 26, 1894. He was a man of vast energy and progressiveness, and he continued to add to the acreage of the farm, and reduced it to a high state of cultivation. Through economy, thrift, sound business judgment and untiring application he accumulated the present fine property owned by his son, and to the improvement of which he was devoted up to a few days before his demise, when he was attacked by apoplexy while working in a field. He was politically a Republican, and while he had numerous chances to serve his party officially he invariably declined such honor. He was a constant and prolific reader, and had a good memory, so that he was at all times a remarkably well informed and companionable man. He could hold his own in arguments requiring the greatest acumen and quickness of perception, and he possessed a ready wit, being ever ready to crack a joke or take one at his own expense. The high sense of honor which he showed in all his dealings with others demanded, and usually got, a return fairness of dealing. As a member of the Congregational church at Storrs, he contributed liberally toward its charities and general support, and was ever foremost in furthering any wise and important effort for the general improvement of his section. So fully did he value the advantage of a good education, that he gave his children every chance within his power, and inspired them by his own research and enthusiasm for learning. On May 28, 1835, he married Eliza Freeman, who was born Sept. 16, 1811, a daughter of Edmund and Esther (Dimmick) Freeman. Her death occurred Dec. 12, 1883. Ten children were born to Otis Woodward and his wife, viz.: Eliza Jane, born March 15, 1836, married Robert S. Brittain April 3, 1861, and is now a widow living in Worcester, Mass.; Mary Freeman, born Jan. 8, 1838, married Edward Knowlton Oct. 22, 1856, and died in Ashford April 29, 1895; William Abner, born Feb. 10, 1840, was blind from boyhood because of an accident, and died May 27, 1895; Abigail Maria, born Nov. 7, 1841, married John Coolbaugh Jan. 18, 1870, and died in Lincoln, Neb., Feb. 17, 1898, leaving two children, May Otis (born Sept. 8, 1873) and Melville Fuller (born Feb. 8, 1879); Harriet Mather, born April 3, 1844, died unmarried, Oct. 15, 1864; Martha Fuller, born April 6, 1846, married Charles M. Smith, March 26, 1879, lives in Worcester, Mass., and has three children, Pauline Alice (born Feb. 21, 1881), Anna Freeman (born Oct. 30, 1882) and Eunice Woodward (born Jan. 24, 1887); Elizabeth Perkins, born April 21, 1848, is unmarried and lives in Willimantic; Ellen Sophia, born June 4, 1850, married Dec. 17, 1873, John Wilkins, who was born in England, and was an expert stone-cutter and extensive marble dealer, and died in Pennsylvania, Feb. 20, 1881, leaving one daughter, Eliza Gregory (who was born Nov. 10, 1877, graduated from the Northfield Seminary in 1896 and from Wellesley College in 1900, and has since been a successful school teacher); Sarah Louisa, born July 1, 1852, married, Aug. 10, 1881, Henry H. Eldridge, who graduated from La Fayette College in 1880, and died Aug. 18, 1889, and she now lives in Colorado Springs, Colo., with her children, Mark (born May 18, 1882), Fay Otis (born April 2, 1884, died April 18, 1900), and Robert Brittain (born Aug. 9, 1886); and Henry R.

Henry R. Woodward is the youngest child in his father's family, and he was reared on the farm upon which is still his home. He attended the district schools and the high school at Willimantic, graduating from the latter in 1872. The same year he entered Amherst College, from which he was graduated in the class of 1876. The unfortunate blindness of his brother made it imperative that the only other son in the family should stay at home and care for the paternal farm, and this Mr. Woodward did to the satisfaction of himself and his parents, and the ultimate good fortune of himself. He has thus passed his entire life in his present surroundings, and for many years has owned every acre comprising the large property. He is engaged in general farming and dairying, and is by far the most extensive agriculturist in this part of the State. Although his father was progressive and constantly instituting improvements that came to his knowledge, the younger man has gone much further. In many important capacities Mr. Woodward has served the most intelligent interests of Ashford, his political career carrying special weight, because of his far sighted understanding of the needs of the community. He represented Ashford in the Legislature in 1897, and during his term of office served on the Agricultural committee. His unusual business ability has extended beyond the confines of his large estate, and has received constant recognition from outside sources. He has an infinite capacity for hard work and close application to his many sided interests, and not a man in his employ applies himself more assiduously to whatever he starts out to do. Withal he is quiet and unassuming, possessing potential strength and dignified reserve, all of which inspires and retains the utmost respect and confidence. He is a member and active worker of the Congregational church at Storrs, as is also his wife, formerly Eva M. Hobby, whom he married Aug. 13, 1901, and who is a daughter of Charles H. Hobby, of Willington. Mr. and Mrs. Woodward have had one child, Sarah Louisa, born May 3, 1902, died Jan. 12, 1903.

The FREEMAN family from which Mr. Woodward is descended in maternal lines, is traced to one Edmund Freeman, who, at the age of forty-five, came from the county of Oxford or Devonshire, England, in the sailing vessel "Abigail." Accompanying him on this memorable voyage in 1635 was his wife, Elizabeth, and their children, Alice, Edmund, Elizabeth and John, aged respectively seventeen, fifteen, twelve, and eight years. Mr. Freeman lived in Lynn, Plymouth and Duxbury, and was active in establishing the town of Sandwich, the first English settlement on the Cape. He was several times assistant to the governor, and continued to hold public office and exert a wide influence up to the time of his death in 1682.

Edmund Freeman (2) was born in England, and married first, April 22, 1646, Rebecca Prence, daughter of Governor Thomas Prence, and his wife Patience Brewster, daughter of Elder William Brewster, who came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620. Thomas Prence came from Lechdale, England, and located in Plymouth in 1621, he having missed the "Mayflower," and sailed in either the "Fortuna" or the "Anne." He was for more than twenty years governor of the Plymouth Colony, and figured conspicuously in the history of that early time. The second marriage of Edmund Freeman occurred July 18, 1651, Margaret Perry, becoming his bride. They moved to Sandwich and beginning with 1669, he was for seven years a deputy to the General Court from that town.

Edmund Freeman (3) was born Oct. 5, 1655, and married Sarah Skeffe, with whom he lived in Sandwich, where all of their children were born. Late in life he removed to Yarmouth, and in 1702 purchased one thousand acres of land in Mansfield, Windham county, Conn., in partnership with a friend. He died May 18, 1720, his widow surviving him until Nov. 12, 1742.

Edmund Freeman (4) was born Aug. 30, 1683, married Keziah Presbury, and with his large family removed to Mansfield, Conn., where he died June 1, 1766. His wife died April 20, 1764.

Edmund Freeman (5) was born Sept. 30, 1711, and on Aug. 7, 1736, married Martha, daughter of Nathaniel Otis, of Sandwich. He was a cultured and accomplished gentleman, and a graduate of Harvard College, class of 1733. For many years thereafter he taught school in what is now North Dennis, Mass., and removed to Mansfield, Conn., in 1741, where he engaged in farming, and where he died Feb. 11, 1800.

Frederick Freeman was born Oct. 8, 1755, married Abigail (daughter of Samuel) Thompson, born in Mansfield Oct. 26, 1758, and died July 2, 1794. For his second wife Mr. Freeman married March 17, 1795, Abigail Dimmick, of Mansfield, who was born June 14, 1755.

Edmund Freeman, born Oct. 20, 1782, married April 12, 1807, Esther Dimmick, daughter of Eliphalet and Anna Dimmick. Mr. Freeman inherited the old home farm in Mansfield, upon which he died March 9, 1867, at the age of eighty-six years.

Eliza Freeman, born Sept. 16, 1811, married, May 28, 1835, Otis Woodward.

CHARLES SMITH, late senior member of the firm of Smith, Winchester & Co., manufacturers of machinery for making paper at South Windham, was, at the time of his death, one of the oldest and most influential citizens of Windham county. He was a native of Windham, and passed away at his home in South Windham April 6, 1896, full of years and honors for his good deeds.

Jacob Smith, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a resident of Colchester, Conn., at the time of his death, and was buried there. He had three sons, Simon, Frederick and Joshua. Frederick Smith was an organ-builder, and it is supposed that his father's occupation was the same.

Joshua Smith was born in Lebanon, near the Windham line, and became a resident of Windham in early manhood. He was a weaver by trade and also engaged in farming. During the War of 1812, made cloth for soldiers' uniforms. He represented the town of Windham in the General Assembly in 1818. His first wife, Laura Allen, daughter of Amos and Anna (Babcock) Allen, bore him two daughters, Myra and Lora. After her death, he married her sister, Anna Barodell Allen, who became the mother of Mary, Emily, Lydia, Charles and Chandler. The Allen lineage is traced to William Allen, of Salem, Mass., who died in 1666. Amos Allen served three years as a corporal in the Revolutionary army, and died in 1778; he was a son of Amos and Anna (Dennison) Allen, both of whom died in 1770. Anna (Dennison) Allen was a direct descendant of Col. George Dennison who served in Cromwell's army, and was afterward a noted Indian fighter of Stonington; his second wife was Anna Barodell, daughter of John Barodell, who nursed him back to health after being severely wounded at the battle of Naseby. The following is a brief account of the children of Joshua Smith: Myra married Col. George Spafford, and became the mother of Marvin, Charles and Laura Spafford; Lora died in youth; Mary became the wife of Alfred Kinne, and was the mother of Alfred Kinne, who settled in South Windham; Emily married Harvey Winchester, and was the mother of Arthur S. and Edgar C., both of whom are now interested in the Smith & Winchester Co., successors to the firm of Smith, Winchester & Co., of South Windham; Charles is mentioned below; Lydia died, unmarried, at the age of eighty years; and Chandler married Jane Robinson, lived in South Windham, and left a son, George.

Charles Smith was born Sept. 14, 1807, in Windham, and received his education in the district school there. At the age of thirteen years, he was left an orphan, and was thus early called upon to exercise self-reliance, and to practice habits of industry in order to maintain himself. After this he lived three years with his uncle, Frederick Smith, an expert mathematician, under whose instruction he made good progress in practical learning. He learned the trades of wheelwright and millwright in Windham, with George Spafford, and in 1835, he was placed in charge of a force of men employed at Stafford, by Mr. Spafford and James Phelps, in building a machine for making paper. This was a duplicate of a machine imported for paper-making and set up at North Windham. Mr. Smith soon demonstrated his ability, and this machine proving a success, was sold to Amos Hubbard, of Norwich. Phelps & Spafford established a factory at South Windham, and Mr. Smith was retained to superintend its operation. The panic of 1837 crippled the owners, and Mr. Smith and Harvey Winchester purchased it and continued to operate it under the title of Smith, Winchester & Co. until the death of Mr. Smith. Since that time, it has been operated by the incorporated concern known as the Smith & Winchester Company,

Mr. Smith was always a very active and energetic business man, and continued in personal charge of his affairs and the works up to a few years before his demise. When advancing years compelled him to retire from active life, he was succeeded by his son, Guilford Smith, who is mentioned below.

Charles Smith attended and aided in sustaining the Episcopal Church at Windham Center, and was a leading citizen in every way. He was one of the incorporators of the Windham National Bank at Windham, and continued to be a director after its removal to Willimantic and until his death. Upon the formation of the Republican party, he was among his faithful adherents and so continued through the balance of his life. He served as first selectman, and was ever ready to fulfill every duty of the patriotic citizen. He was essentially a business man, and did not seek public honors, but was universally respected for his industry, sound judgment and upright character.

Mr. Smith was married at North Windham, Nov. 3, 1835, to Mary Abbe, who was born Aug. 14, 1816, in Windham, and died April 10, 1901. She was a descendant of a family long noted in Colonial annals, and was the mother of two children: Guilford, mentioned elsewhere; and Mary, who became the wife of P. H. Woodward, of Hartford, and has two children, Helen and Charles Guilford, the former now the wife of Rev. Stephen Henry Granberry, rector of St. Barnabas' Episcopal Church at Newark, N. J. Mrs. Granberry is the mother of two children, Helen and Mary Emeline.

The Abbe genealogy is traced to Mrs. Smith as follows: John Abbe a resident of Salem, Mass., as early as 1637, had two wives, both of whom bore the name Mary. The first died in 1672, and he was married to the second in 1674. He died at Wenham, Mass., about 1690.

Samuel Abbe, son of John Abbe, married Mary Knowlton in 1672, and died in 1698, having made his home at Wenham.

Ebenezer Abbe, son of Samuel Abbe, was born in Salem, Mass., in 1683, and was at Norwich, Conn., in 1705, and at Windham the following year. His home was near North Windham, in the town of Mansfield. In 1725, he united with the Hampton Church. He married Mary, a daughter of Joshua Allen, in 1707, and she died in 1766.

Joshua Abbe, born in 1710, married Mary Ripley in 1736. She was a daughter of Joshua Ripley, of Willimantic. Mr. Abbe had an extensive farm near the Chaplin line, which he called his "kingdom," and owing to the influence which he exercised in the community, was often called "King Abbe." He died in 1807, and his wife in 1769.

Phineas Abbe, son of Joshua Abbe, was born Nov. 22, 1746, and in 1767, married Marv, daughter of Gideon Bingham, Sr. She died, and in 1778 he married Susannah Brown. Mr. Abbe was a prosperous farmer of Windham, his homestead being south of Windham Center, where he died in 1800, his widow, who was born in Windham May 15, 1752, surviving until April 26, 1804.

Moses Cleveland Abbe, son of Phineas, was born Nov. 16, 1785, and married Feb. 1, 1809, Talitha Waldo, daughter of Zaccheus Waldo, of Windham. Mr. Abbe lived two miles south of Windham Center. His daughter, Mary, became the wife of Charles Smith, as above related. The other children are thus briefly noted: Susan married Andrew Frink, of Windham, and was the mother of a son, Edwin; George went to New York City, where he married Charlotte Colgate; Eliza Taintor is the widow of Henry S. Walcott, who was at one time president of the Windham bank, and died in Windham; Mary was fourth; Joshua G., now deceased, married Sarah Fuller, of Windham, who bore him a son and two daughters, Jessie, Waldo and Susan; and John Randolph, who was twice married, first, to Lucy Avery, of South Windham, and, second, to Josephine Robbins, resides in Providence, R. I. (Lucy A. Abbe was the mother of Charles S. Abbe, now a citizen of Pittsburg, Pa.).

GUILFORD SMITH, president of the Windham National Bank of Willimantic, and secretary and treasurer of the Smith & Winchester Co., of South Windham, is descended from a long line of worthy ancestors. He is the successor of his late father, Charles Smith, in the business connections above mentioned, and is a straightforward and successful business man. He also succeeds his wife's father as a director of the New London & Northern Railway. As the leading citizen of South Windham, he is active in church and civil affairs, and has represented his town in the General Assembly and filled various local official stations. Both he and his wife are among the valued members of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Congregational Church of South Windham, whose house of worship was built chiefly at his expense, though many others contributed according to their means.

Mr. Smith was born May 12, 1839, in South Windham, and received his mental training in the public schools of his native place and in Hall's School at Ellington, Conn. At the age of nineteen years he entered the office of Smith, Winchester & Co., as a clerk, and passed through all the departments. Upon the death of his father, he succeeded to the responsibilities of that gentleman, and has ever manifested good business abilities. The history of the manufacturing business with which he is identified is given above. The product is shipped to all parts of the world.

On Dec. 16, 1863, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Mary Ramsdall, of Windham, who was born Sept. 5, 1837, a daughter of Thomas and Mary Elizabeth (Lathrop) Ramsdall. Thomas Ramsdall was one of the ten children of Isaiah and Clarissa (Collins) Ramsdall, the former a son of Abijah Ramsdall, of Salem, Mass. Thomas Ramsdall was an active business man, was president of the Windham bank and a director of several enterprises, and reached the great age of ninety-one years. Besides Mrs. Smith he had a daughter, Anna, born May 18, 1834, who is the wife of Richard Goodwin Watrous of Hartford, and has children.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the Society of Mayflower Descendants, and the latter is also identified with the Daughters of Colonial Governors and Daughters of the American Revolution. Mr. Smith is in the ninth generation from Gov. William Bradford of the "Mayflower" Colony, and Mrs. Smith's line is traced back to the same ancestry. Mr. Smith's line runs as follows: (I) Gov. William Bradford. (II) Deputy Gov. William Bradford. (III) Hannah, daughter of William Bradford (2), was among the first settlers in Windham. She was a physician, and the wife of Joshua Ripley, of Windham, whom she married in 1682. (IV) Joshua Ripley, Jr., born May 13, 1688, in Windham, was married in December, 1712, to Mary, daughter of John Backus. (V) Mary Ripley, born Nov. 18, 1716, was married, April 14, 1736, to Joshua Abbe, of Windham. The Abbe line receives extended mention above. (VI) Phineas Abbe, born in 1746, married Susannah Brown in 1778, and died June 18, 1800. (VII) Moses C. Abbe, born Nov. 16, 1785, married, Feb. 1, 1809, Talitha Waldo. (VIII) Mary Abbe married Charles Smith, and became the mother of Guilford.

Mrs. Guilford Smith traces her descent from Gov. Bradford through John, Jr., a brother of the Mary Backus, who was Mr. Smith's ancestress. John was a son of John Backus, Sr., who, with his brother, William, was among the first sixteen settlers of Windham, coming thither from Norwich. John Backus, Jr., married Sibyl Whiting, daughter of Rev. Samuel Whiting, first pastor at Windham, and a son of Rev. John Whiting, a pastor of the first church at Hartford. Sibyl, daughter of John and Sibyl Backus, married John Lathrop. Mary Elizabeth, daughter of John and Sibyl Lathrop, married Thomas Ramsdall, as before related, and became the mother of Mary, wife of Guilford Smith.

John Lathrop, father of Mary Elizabeth Ramsdall, was a direct descendant of John Lathrop, who was the second pastor of the first Congregational Church in England, and was imprisoned for seceding from the Established Church. The church edifice in which he and his followers worshipped is still standing, at Lowthorpe, County of Kent, England. He came to New England in 1634, and was the first minister at Scituate, Mass. He is the common ancestor of the Lathrop family in this country. Rev. Benjamin Lathrop was a Baptist minister, who located early in Windham, and was noted for his charity and kindness to the poor. He bought the house built by John Cates, the first settler in Windham, in which he lived many years. John Lathrop, his son, whose name opens this paragraph, died in early manhood, leaving a large family. His ancestry included many noted clergymen of New England, and others of the sturdy physique and character peculiar to New England, which have made their impress upon the whole history of the United States.

WILLIAM IRVING BARTHOLOMEW is one of the most prominent farmers of Windham county residing in the town of Pomfret. His farm is known as "Sabin Hill Farm."

William Bartholomew, supposed to be the second son of William and Friswede Bartholomew, of Burford, England, born in 1602-03, married Anna Lord, and resided in London, where at his home he entertained prior to September, 1634, the famous Mrs. Anne Hutchinson. Mr. Bartholomew came to Boston in the ship "Griffin," which landed Sept. 18, 1634. He was a well educated gentleman, and took a leading part in the affairs of the Colony. He was made a freeman in 1634-5, served as deputy to the General Court a number of times from Ipswich, and was town clerk. He was engaged as a merchant much of his life. He died Jan. 8, 1680, and his wife Jan. 29, 1682-3, at Charlestown.

(II) William Bartholomew (2), son of William the settler, born in 1640, probably in Ipswich, married in Roxbury, Dec. 17, 1663, Mary, daughter of Captain Isaac and Elizabeth (Porter) Johnson, and granddaughter of John Johnson, who held the title of "Surveyor of all ye King's Armies in America." Captain Isaac Johnson was killed Dec. 19, 1675, at the famous Narragansett Fort fight, while leading his men into the Indian fort. Mr. Bartholomew was a carpenter and millwright, and was connected with mills in that and other localities. He was at Deerfield, Mass., before King Philip's war; and at the time of the raid on Hatfield by the Indians, he was there with his family, and his daughter Abigail, aged four years, was taken prisoner by the Indians and carried into Canada where she remained a captive for eight months, and was then ransomed. Mr. Bartholomew died at the age of fifty-seven years. He also lived in Branford, Conn., and at Woodstock, where he served as selectman and as deputy to the General Court.

(III) Joseph Bartholomew, son of William (2), born about 1682, in Branford, Conn., married Nov. 12, 1713, Elizabeth, daughter of Nathaniel Sanger, of Woodstock. Husband and wife both died on the same day, Oct. 15, 1724. He was a farmer.

(IV) Benjamin Bartholomew, son of Joseph, born June 23, 1723, in Woodstock, married there March 17, 1747-48, Martha Carpenter. Both were members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Bartholomew was a farmer and resided in Woodstock. He was a soldier in the French and Indian war, and also in the war of the Revolution. His death occurred Oct. 30, 1801, and his wife passed away the same day.

(V) Leonard Bartholomew, son of Benjamin and grandfather of our subject, was born in 1758, in Woodstock. He was a farmer by occupation and resided in the southeast section of the town. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Woodstock. He died Feb. 16, 1814. He was married, in 1796, to Sarah Perrin, born in Pomfret. She died Feb. 20, 1830. Leonard Bartholomew served in the Revolutionary war during the Lexington alarm. His children were: (1) William, father of our subject, born June 23, 1797. (2) Margaret, born March 8, 1799, married Jan. 21, 1816, to Zacheus Aldrich, a farmer living in Pomfret. He died Oct. 25, 1833, and she survived until Feb. 1, 1852. (3) Mary married Benjamin Underwood, a carpenter, and removed to the state of Illinois, where they died.

(VI) William Bartholomew, father of the present "Sabin Hill" farmer, was born on the adjoining farm located in Woodstock, as mentioned above, and owned by his father. He had the kind and amount of schooling provided by the district school, and was brought up to farm work. While he was still in his minority his father died. As a boy he had been employed by his Uncle Jedediah Perrin for a short time at farm work, and after his marriage he bought a small farm near the homestead, and lived on it until 1830, when he disposed of it and purchased of Noah Sabin the farm now owned by his son, which had been until that time in the possession of the Sabin family from the first settled days of the country. The house standing on this farm when Mr. Bartholomew bought it was the first frame house erected in Pomfret, and it stood directly across the road from the present home. Mr. Bartholomew made extensive improvements on the farm, among them the erection, in 1835, of the house now standing. A hard-working and careful farmer, he made his farm a very productive one. In early years he found his market in Providence and Boston, whither his produce was sometimes transported by ox teams, and he was successful in his business. Politically he was an old-line Whig, and one of the early advocates and enthusiasts in Anti-slavery agitation, but at the time of his death he was a Republican, and had held a number of the town offices of Pomfret. He was an active member and liberal supporter of the West Thompson Methodist Church, and served on the committee during the erection of its present edifice. His wife was also a member of this church. Mr. Bartholomew died May 28, 1864, after a short illness, and is buried at Woodstock Hill cemetery. On April 2, 1820, he married Abigail Gorham Buck, born May 8, 1798, in Killingly, daughter of Captain Joseph and Dorcas (Fairbanks) Buck. Mrs. Bartholomew died Feb. 26, 1864. The children born of this union were: (1) Edwin Leonard, born July 9, 1822, married (first) Abigail E. Scott, and (second) Mrs. Frances Thayer. He was a musical instructor in Thompson for many years and later moved to Keene, N. H., where he was engaged as a locksmith. He died in June, 1901. (2) Simon, born Sept. 28, 1824, married Mandana M. Warner. He is a farmer residing in Putnam. (3) Annis Buck, born Sept. 23, 1826, married George A. Barlow, of Woodstock, a musical instructor and dealer, who died in Trenton, N. J.; she died in Pomfret May 16, 1863. (4) William Irving.

William Irving Bartholomew was born Feb. 7, 1831, in Pomfret, in the old frame house mentioned above as the first ever built in that town, and which stood on the farm he now owns. He attended the district schools, the Pomfret High school under Prof. Roswell C. Park, the Seminary at East Greenwich, R. I., and the State Normal school at New Britain, Conn. He was reared to the hard work of the farm boys of his time. For twelve years after his own schooling was completed, Mr. Bartholomew was engaged as a school-teacher in the towns of Pomfret, Thompson and Southington, Conn., during the winter sessions, and in the summer months worked on the home farm. He began teaching at $16 a month with "board around," and had to sweep out, build fires, etc., in the school, and also to write the copies and sharpen the quill pens for the pupils. "Board around" often meant that he had to walk as far as two and a half miles from his temporary boarding place to the school.

As a young man Mr. Bartholomew had a strong desire for a college education, but as his parents wished him to remain with them, his brothers having gone, he repressed his intellectual yearning and remained at home. He gave up teaching shortly before his marriage, and assisted his father in the management of the farm, of which, after the death of his parents, he came into full possession, by buying out the interests of the other heirs. The farm contains about 150 acres, and is a fine property and a good producer, having always been well kept since it came into the Bartholomew family. Over a score of years ago Mr. Bartholomew established in Putnam a milk route which he has ever since operated. Previously he used to do a considerable business in the making of butter and cheese. In all the many years that his milk wagon has been running in Putnam there have been only four times when it failed to "get there" in the early morning and on every one of these occasions it was snow-bound. Mr. Bartholomew ministers to his patrons by means of a fine herd of thoroughbred and high grade Ayrshire cattle. The attention of Mr. Bartholomew was early drawn to the science of chemistry in its relation to agriculture; and he made a special study of the analysis of soils and the food of plants. The knowledge he acquired in these important subjects very soon established him as a local authority on all matters connected with scientific agriculture. He ardently embraced the idea of discovering the ingredients of soils and the needs of crops, and of ministry to these by the use of chemical fertilizers; and he became a careful student of these subjects. He instituted, under the auspices of the State (counseling with that well-known scientist and investigator, Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Wesleyan University), a series of experiments each year for several years to verify the truth or falsity of prevailing theories. Accounts of some of these experiments have occupied considerable space in the Reports of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station and other periodical publications. An eminent authority alluded to them "as decidedly the most valuable ever made to his knowledge in this country by a private individual." They were translated into the German language and appeared in the station reports of Germany. Mr. Bartholomew has frequently been called upon to address farmers in all parts of the State on subjects pertaining to agriculture.

Politically Mr. Bartholomew is a staunch Republican, and he has been active and prominent in the affairs of that party in Pomfret. He has served several years on the boards of school visitors and of selectmen and one year as chairman of the latter. He served for over thirty years as a justice of the peace, until age exempted him from further service. In 1870 he represented Pomfret in the State Legislature, and served on the committee on Roads and Bridges; and in 1871 he was re-elected and served on the committee on Incorporations. In 1887 he was appointed a member of the State Board of Agriculture, and served two terms. He became a member of the Woodstock Agricultural Society a few years after it was organized and he has been very active in its affairs, having served for a number of years as secretary, several years as vice-president, and two years as president. In 1901 he was serving as an auditor, and he has been a director for many years. He has held some office in the society ever since he joined it. He was for many years secretary and treasurer of the Connecticut Dairymen's Association, and was largely instrumental in rebuilding and increasing the membership of, and interest in, this organization. It was during his occupancy of these offices that the bill was passed in the Legislature to appropriate $1000 annually to the Dairymen's Association, and Mr. Bartholomew was very active in promoting its passage. He was also very active in the passing of the "Oleomargarine Butter Bill" by the Legislature. He is a charter member of Senexet Grange, No. 40, of Woodstock, and is a member of the County Pomona. His two youngest daughters are seventh degree Grangers. He became a member of the West Thompson Methodist Church when a young man. On April 29, 1858, Mr. Bartholomew was married to Mary J. Hassard, who was born in Killingly, Sept. 14, 1837, a daughter of Joseph S. and Alice (Johnson) Hassard. Her father was a native of Rhode Island, and a descendant of some of the best families of that State. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew: (1) Ada Louise, born April 19, 1860, attended Woodstock Academy, and previous to her marriage she taught music. She married Dr. Arthur H.

W. I. Bartholomew

Strahan, a successful and leading dentist of Putnam, by whom she has three children, Beatrice, Ethel and Marjorie. (2) Annie Hassard, born April 5, 1865, attended Woodstock Academy and Putnam High school, and married David Chase, a woolen manufacturer at Dayville, by whom she has two children, Lillian and Julian. (3) Abbie Alice, born July 2, 1867, attended Woodstock Academy, taught school for several years, and married, June 26, 1901, Dudley Welles (2), a farmer of Wethersfield, Conn. (4) Mary Maude, born Sept. 4, 1873, attended Woodstock Academy, and now lives at home with her parents.

Mr. Bartholomew has always been a diligent worker, and he is a very pleasant and courteous gentleman—a generous man of kindly disposition and of the highest integrity. His intellectual habits and attainments are added to a capacity for business and affairs, and he has settled many estates. His family is a most creditable one.

EPHRAIM J. WILCOX, one of the representative citizens of the town of Hebron, Tolland county, is one of the most highly respected and popular men of the town.

The Wilcox family is an old one in Connecticut, and in Hebron its history begins with that of Ephraim Wilcox, who came from Lebanon, and located in the town many years ago. His death occurred Sept. 24, 1834, when he was past eighty years of age. His wife, Dorcas, whom he married June 9, 1773, died Oct. 29, 1847, when she was ninety-one years old. To them were born: Ephraim, the grandfather of Ephraim J.; Lucy; Polly; and Erastus.

Ephraim Wilcox, the grandfather of Ephraim J., was born July 13, 1779, and in addition to his life work as a farmer, he also made hand rakes. For this purpose he had a small shop near his house and for many years he and his sons were engaged in this business. In the old days the Ephraim Wilcox rake had a wide reputation as an entirely hand-made implement carefully put together and absolutely reliable in every respect. The employment of machinery in the making of rakes finally cut off the profits of his business to such an extent that the little shop was closed, and Mr. Wilcox devoted all his time to farming. Prominent and prosperous, he was influential in the community, and was a captain in the militia, being generally known as Captain Wilcox. At New London, Conn., he had command of his company when that town was threatened by the English in the War of 1812. His death occurred Sept. 3, 1868, and his ashes were interred in St. Peter's Cemetery, at Hebron. An active and devoted member of the Hebron Congregational Church, he was much respected by all who knew him. On Nov. 24, 1803, Ephraim Wilcox was married to Rachel Tarbox, a native of Hebron, and a daughter of Godfrey and Rachel (Wright) Tarbox. Mrs. Wilcox died June 26, 1853, the mother of five children: (1) Ephraim, born Sept. 5, 1804, was engaged in the foundry business in Bernadot, Ill., and died Sept. 5, 1838; he was a noted marksman, and made his own rifles. (2) George, born Dec. 28, 1805, in early life was engaged in the rake business with his father, and in later years was a farmer on the old homestead, and died of heart failure in Buell's store in Hebron, Nov. 9, 1867; Frances, his wife, was the daughter of Judge Ralph Gilbert, of Hebron. (3) Rachel Maria, born Jan. 18, 1808, married Benjamin Bliss, and lived in Hebron. (4) Phoebe, born April 8, 1811, died unmarried April 19, 1834. (5) Joel, born Oct. 20, 1814, was the father of Ephraim J. Wilcox.

Joel Wilcox was born on the old homestead, which is now known as the Glen Dale farm, and attended district school. When he was twenty-one he learned the carpenter's trade under Benjamin Bliss, with whom he worked for three years. He became well known as an expert carpenter, and was given much work in Hebron and the adjoining town, at times giving employment to many men. The factory at Turnerville was put up by him, and he always had all the work he was willing to undertake. During his later years he was devoted to the cultivation of his farm, which at one time consisted of more than 450 acres. His death took place, after a short attack of pneumonia, in the house he had built, and in which he had lived many years. A prosperous and successful man, he had made his own way in the world, and whatever he had, he had hammered out in the struggle of life for himself. In his early life Mr. Wilcox was a Whig, but in his later years was a Democrat. Both husband and wife were devoted and beloved members of the Hebron Congregational Church. Mr. Wilcox was married to Lucy Ann Burnham, who was born in 1817, in Hebron, a daughter of Capt. Joseph Burnham and his wife Violetta Mann, nee Phelps. Mrs. Wilcox died Nov. 9, 1854, having become the mother of one son, Ephraim J., born Jan. 11, 1843. Mr. Wilcox married for his second wife, Ann E. Strong, who was born Aug. 27, 1827, and who survives her husband.

Ephraim J. Wilcox, whose name introduces this article, was born in Hebron, and educated in the district school. Reared on a farm, he was strong and vigorous, and when he was eighteen set himself to learn the carpenter's trade under his father's instruction. The Wilcox blood seems to carry with it a talent for mechanical labors, and Mr. Wilcox became a very expert wood worker, having a gift for such high-class carpenter work as stair building and ornamental wood work. For eight years he worked exclusively as a stair builder, at Middletown, Conn., and Chicago, Ill., and he has been engaged in general building in Connecticut. Mr. Wilcox is an expert wood worker and cabinet maker, and in his home are to be seen interesting specimens of his skill, among other pieces a fine black walnut set. About six months after the burning of the Hubbard factory Mr. Wilcox came back to Hebron, and settled on the "Phelps place," which he bought, and where he has since been engaged in farming. It comprises 175 acres, and is an interesting and charming home. Among the buildings which Mr. Wilcox has erected in Hebron are the public library and the Congregational Church. The old Gov. Peters homestead was altered and modernized by him.

On Nov. 19, 1874, Mr. Wilcox was married to Fannie E. Brown, who was born Nov. 5, 1850, in Haddam, Conn., a daughter of Cephas and Emeline (Selden) Brown. To this union have been born two children: Della Eugenia, born Oct. 8, 1875, married Oct. 15, 1901, Roger Fuller Porter; Herbert Joel, born March 19, 1877, graduated from the Stillman Russell College at Danbury, Conn., and the Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford, and is now employed as a bookkeeper at Waterbury. Mr. Wilcox is a liberal man in his politics, and was elected by both parties to the Legislature in 1884, where he served on the committee on Incorporations. Mr. Wilcox and his family are among the leading members of the Congregational Church at Hebron, where he is on the Society's committee, and where his daughter is organist.

The Tarbox genealogy, which touches Mr. Wilcox through his paternal grandmother, is interesting. John Tarbox, born in England, came to Lynn, Mass., in 1639, with his wife Rebekah, and he died, May 26, 1674. Samuel Tarbox, his son, born in 1647, married Rebecca Armitage, and their son, Godfrey, born in 1670, married Eleanor, and was a captain in the Indian War.

Godfrey Tarbox, the son of Godfrey and Eleanor Tarbox, born in 1695, married Hannah Laughton, and moved to Hebron in 1739. Their children, all of whom were born in Lynn, Mass., but were married in Hebron, were as follows: Lydia, born in 1722, married John Porter; Jonathan, born in 1724, married Abigail Bartholomew; Thomas, born in 1726, married Deborah Skinner; Hannah, born in 1730, married Joshua Phelps; and Solomon, born in 1733, married Asenath Phelps.

Godfrey Tarbox, a son of Solomon and Asenath Tarbox, married Rachel Wright, and their daughter, Rachel, married Ephraim Wilcox, the grandfather of Ephraim J. Wilcox.

BRADLEY M. SEARS, town clerk of Mansfield, Tolland county, and a resident of Spring Hill, that town, is a gentleman who enjoys the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends, and is popular with all classes.

Mr. Sears was born Dec. 19, 1846, on Spring Hill, in Mansfield, a son of Myron and Emeline (Seagrave) Sears, but when still an infant was taken to Norwich, Conn. Here he grew up upon the farm, attending the common schools, and when he attained his majority, returned to Mansfield and remained for several years. Later, he removed to Rockville, Conn., where he lived for twenty years, ten years of which he was superintendent of the Poor Farm, and under his charge that institution was conducted in a highly satisfactory manner. Still feeling that his native town was the best place of residence, he returned to it, locating upon the farm of his maternal grandfather, and has since engaged in agricultural pursuits, bringing his land to a high state of cultivation. In addition to his farming, Mr. Sears is extensively engaged in dairying, and the products of his establishment find a ready market throughout the vicinity.

On Sept. 13, 1869, Mr. Sears was married to Clarissa A. Combs, a native of Madison county, N. Y., and she died on Sept. 20, 1898, aged fifty years. One child was born of this union, Florence Viola, now the wife of Arthur B. Cummings, of Staten Island, N. Y., by whom she has two children, Mildred and Myron, who are the pride of their grandfather's heart. In politics, Mr. Sears is independent, adhering to no party, feeling that it is better to put a good man in office, regardless of party ties. For the past six years he has held the office of town clerk, and his long tenure of office demonstrates without any question of doubt the favor in which he is held by his constituents. Some thirty years ago, he also held the same office, and for several years has been town treasurer. Being of a pleasant, genial nature, he naturally has affiliated himself with several fraternal organizations, and is a member of Warren Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of South Coventry, Trinity Chapter, No. 9, of Willimantic, K. T., and of Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Hartford.

COL. GUSTAVUS D. BATES. A prominent and masterful figure in the business life of his State and city, a gallant defender of the flag in the dark days of the sixties, and a worthy representative of an old and honorable New England family, Col. Gustavus D. Bates, of Putnam, merits and receives the esteem of a very large clientele of friends all over the New England States. The early record of the family is "writ in the books," and is as follows:

Clement Bates, written also Bate and Batte, aged forty years, with Ann, his wife, of the same age, and five children, embarked at London for New England April 6, 1635, in the ship "Elizabeth." Mr. Bates came to Hingham, Mass., where on Sept. 18, 1635, he received a grant of five acres of land. He was the American ancestor of the family. Ann Bates, the wife of Clement, died in Hingham, Mass., Oct. 1, 1669, aged seventy-four years. Clement Bates died Sept. 17, 1671, aged seventy-six years. Their six children, all born between 1621 and 1639, were James, Clement, Rachel, Joseph, Benjamin and Samuel.

The name "Bate" was a common one in England for nearly two centuries before the Puritans took their departure for New England, and the ancestors of Clement Bates are traceable for five generations prior to that period, the lineage running from Thomas Bate, of Lydd, parish of All Hollows, and who died in 1485, through John, who died in 1522; Andrew, who died at Lydd in 1533; John, of Lydd, who died in 1580; and James Bate, father of Clement, who died at Lydd in 1614.

Joseph Bates, son of Clement, born about 1630 in England, married in Hingham, Jan. 9, 1657, Esther, daughter of William Hilliard. Mr. Bates was a bricklayer. He served as constable from 1675 to 1678, inclusive, and as selectman in 1671, 1677, 1684 and 1692. He resided at the paternal homestead on South street. His death occurred in Hingham April 30, 1706, and his widow died June 3, 1709. Their children, all born in Hingham between 1660 and 1680, were: Joseph, Esther, Caleb, Hannah, Joshua, Bathsheba, Clement, Eleanor and Abigail.

Joshua Bates, son of Joseph, born Aug. 14, 1671, married Jan. 15, 1695, Rachel Tower, daughter of Ibrook and Margaret (Hardin) Tower. She was born in Hingham March 16, 1674. Their children, all born in Hingham between 1696 and 1710, were: Rachel, Joshua, Bathsheba, Elizabeth, Solomon, Isaac, and Jacob.

Jacob Bates, son of Joshua, born in 1710, married in 1730 Mary, daughter of John and Rebecca (Lincoln) Clark. Jacob Bates served as constable in 1745. Late in life he removed to Attleboro, and thence to Dudley, where he died in advanced age. His children, all born in Hingham, were: Mary, born July 19, 1732; Simeon, March 21, 1737; Obadiah, May 7, 1741; James, April 19, 1743; Lydia, July 10, 1744; Elijah, Dec. 2, 1746; John, Dec. 4, 1748; Jacob, April 15, 1751; Israel, April 15, 1753; and Elizabeth, May 3, 1761.

Elijah Bates, son of Jacob, and the great-grandfather of Gustavus D., was born as stated, and died Jan. 22, 1821, in Thompson, Conn. In 1766, he married Chloe Tyler, and they became the parents of: Mary, born July 25, 1768, married a Mr. White; Patience, born Dec. 21, 1769, married John Martin, of Thompson; Tyler, born June 5, 1772, is mentioned below; Elizabeth was born Jan. 8, 1774; Chloe, born May 12, 1775, married Hezekiah Rhodes; Moses was born April 10, 1777; Reuben was born April 25, 1779; Fannie, born May 11, 1781, married Stephen Brackett; William, born Jan. 9, 1784, married Sallie Joslin; George was born Jan. 4, 1786; and Jacob was born May 2, 1790.

Capt. Tyler Bates, born June 5, 1772, died in Thompson. He married Polly Kimberlee, of Thompson, who also died in that town. His occupation was that of a farmer. He was honest and industrious, and was greatly interested in the welfare of the Baptist Church. His title was gained by service in the militia as captain of a company. His children were: (1) Erastus, born in Thompson, married (first) Sophronia Clapp and (second) Mrs. Dunbar. His three children were George, Frances, and Henry. (2) William, born in Thompson, married Delinda Grow, daughter of Rev. James Grow, and had five children, James G., Harriett N., Adoniram J., Jerome P. and Eveline D. (3) Welcome receives further mention below. (4) Holman married Caroline Hall. (5) George T. married Julia Matthews, and they had two children, Frances and Georgiana. His second wife was Renew Bixby, by whom he had one son, Olin. (6) Ann, born in Thompson, died in Wisconsin. She married Dutee Mowry, but they had no children. (7) Chloe, born in Thompson, died in Worcester, Mass. She married Zenas Robbins, and their children were Welcome, Lois, Addie, Emma, George, Orin, Carrie, Jennie, William and Wealthy. (8) Betsey married Benjamin Carlton, and had one son, Albert. (9) Sally married Ira Jenkins, and their children were George, Charles, Martha, Mary, Addie, Lucy, Sarah and Emma.

Welcome Bates was born May 2, 1804, in Thompson, and died Aug. 8, 1882, in the same place. He married Jemima Elliott Grow, who was born in Thompson, where she died Oct. 18, 1851, aged forty-five years. She was the daughter of Rev. James and Elizabeth (Edmunds) Grow, of St. Johnsbury, Vt. Welcome Bates was in his younger days engaged in teaching, and in later years became a farmer. Of his children, Elizabeth Grow, born in Thompson, died there, unmarried; Hannah Augusta married Horatio H. Hutchins, of Putnam, and they had one child, Ida; Sarah Jane, born in Thompson, died there; Marvin Grow married Emily Day, of Webster, Mass., and had two children, Byron and Minnie; Gustavus D. is mentioned below; Sarah Jane, born in Thompson, died there unmarried; Welcome Elliott was born May 8, 1848. The last named studied at Suffield, Conn., and at Colgate University, N. Y., and was ordained to the Baptist ministry Feb. 8, 1876, in Norwich, Conn. His pastorates have been Norwich and Waterford, Conn., Concord, N. H., Haverhill, Mass., and he is now pastor at Amherst, Nova Scotia. Rev. Mr. Bates was married Dec. 27, 1876, in Windsor, Conn., to Sarah Frances Hester, and they have had six children: Roy Elliott, born Jan. 20, 1881, in Waterford, Conn.; Harry Eli, June 6, 1884, Concord, N. H.; Ralph Fleming, July 3, 1888, Haverhill, Mass.; Carl Hester, Sept. 24, 1889, Haverhill, Mass. (died in the same place, April 20, 1894); Philip Welcome, July 9, 1892, Haverhill, Mass.; Earl Kenneth, Oct. 28, 1895, Haverhill, Massachusetts.

After the death of his first wife Welcome Bates, Sr., married March 20, 1854, Charlotte Gleason, of Thompson, daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Ross) Gleason. To this union was born one child, Ella Janette, who married Deacon Calvin Munyan, of Thompson. Originally a Democrat in political faith, Mr. Bates became a "Lincoln Democrat" in 1864, and after the Civil war and until his death he was a staunch Republican.

Col. Gustavus Davis Bates, whose name opens this review, was born Oct. 2, 1839, in Thompson, Conn., where he remained until his twentieth year. He was educated in the public schools and at Thompson Academy, and applied himself so industriously to his books that at the early age of seventeen years he was able to enter the school room as an instructor, and for four terms taught at Burrillville, R. I., and at Thompson, his native town. His time out of the school room was employed either in working in a factory or on a farm. At the age of eighteen he entered the store of William S. Arnold, at Masonville, now Grosvenor Dale, as a clerk, and was thus engaged until he attained his majority. He had watched with grave solicitude the conditions which led up to the Civil war, and his patriotism early prompted him to offer himself for service under the flag he loved. He was the first to enlist in Grosvenor Dale, but his discharge was obtained by his father, who was opposed to the war. He made a second attempt to enter the service, with like result, but finally, on July 29, 1862, was enrolled as a private in Co. E, 7th R. I. V. I., and saw nearly three years of active service in the field. His promotion for meritorious service was rapid. In August, 1862, he was made corporal; in the same month sergeant, and on Oct. 2d of the same year was advanced to the first sergeant's place. In March, 1863, he became second lieutenant, the same month first lieutenant, and in June, 1864, was made acting quartermaster. In July, 1864, he was advanced to the captaincy of his company, and later he was recommended for brevet lieutenant colonel. In September, 1864, he was granted a leave of absence on account of failing health, which fact finally occasioned his resignation. His regiment participated in the engagements of Fredericksburg, Vicksburg, Jackson, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Bethesda Church, North Anna River, Cold Harbor, Petersburg and Weldon Railroad, after which it went into winter quarters in Fort Sedgwick, generally known as "Fort Hell."

At the close of the struggle Col. Bates turned the implements of war into the "pruning hooks of peace," and having in a measure regained his health embarked in the manufacture of flannel shirts in Worcester, Mass., in partnership with H. H. Hutchins. This venture resulted in heavy financial disaster. It is worthy of note, as an instance of the integrity of character that has always characterized the Colonel, that in time he paid every dollar of the firm's obligations thus incurred, together with interest on the same. For a period of ten years thereafter Col. Bates represented Boston houses as traveling agent in the line of furnishing goods, being two years with Simons Bros., and the balance of the time in the service of Bates & Aldrich, the senior member of which firm was his uncle. In 1878 he assumed the management of the New York office of the business of George B. Cluett & Co., large shirt and collar manufacturers of Troy, N. Y., with which firm he spent twenty years of his life, during which time he was also interested in different industries at points in Connecticut. In 1884 he established the Connecticut Clothing Co., in Putnam, with a branch at Southbridge, Mass., the firm name being Bates & Lindsey. In 1893 they sold out the Putnam store, and that in Southbridge in 1895. In 1886 Col. Bates, in company with John O. Fox, now deceased, established the Putnam Cutlery Co. he having secured a patent on a support to the blade which makes it impossible to break or loose the blade from the shank. Of this company Col. Bates became secretary and treasurer, in which capacity he managed the business. After the death of Mr. Fox, in 1890, Col. Bates purchased all of the stock, assigning one share to his wife and another to a relative, thus making them directors of the company. Under his efficient management this establishment grew from a very small beginning to a plant employing a number of hands, and producing all kinds of knives, such as bread, carpet, banana, paper, gilder, pruning, lemon, putty and rubber knives which were all equipped with the patent handles heretofore spoken of. This plant was sold in 1895 to Landers, Frary & Clark, of New Britain. The product of this cutlery has been christened the "Old Put" knife, and his trade mark has been a decided talisman for success. For three years, in company with Frederick J. Daniels, under the style Daniels & Bates, Col. Bates was interested in a very successful coal business in Putnam, which was sold in September, 1901.

It may well be supposed that a man of Col. Bates' ability would not be allowed to deprive the public of his valuable services. He has been prominently identified with the Republican party, and has represented his fellow citizens two terms in the Legislature in 1887 and 1888. During his services in that body he took high rank as a valuable worker, and was chairman of the committee on Cities and Boroughs, an honor which few new members have ever attained. In 1888 he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention, which convened at Chicago, and which nominated Benjamin Harrison for the Presidency. He was honored in that convention by being appointed a member of the committee on Resolutions. In local affairs Col. Bates has taken a lively interest, serving as selectman in 1899, at which time he was chairman of the board.

In addition to his various business enterprises, for a period of twenty years, Col. Bates kept close to nature in the cultivation of a fine farm, giving special attention to the breeding of blooded stock. In 1899 he sold out his farming interests, but still retains an interest in a large farm. In 1902 he began the erection of a fine barn and stables, on his Groveland property, on Mechanics street, Putnam.

The Colonel is a gentleman of genial and social temperament, which finds delight in association with his fellow citizens in the different fraternal organizations. He is a member of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., and is now past department commander of the State. He is also a member of the Army & Navy Club of the State of Connecticut. The Grange movement has profited by his intelligent and helpful efforts, he having served as master of Quinnatisset Grange, No. 65, of Thompson. His religious views are in harmony with the creed of the Baptist Church, of which he is a member.

Col. Bates was married June 17, 1867, to Ellen A., daughter of Benjamin Franklin and Laura (Holbrook) Hutchins, of Putnam, Conn. She died May 1, 1897, leaving no children. The Colonel was again married, Dec. 23, 1898, to Cora Whittemore, daughter of Albert E. and Luella (Hutchins) Johnson, of Southbridge, Mass. To this union has come one daughter, Sarah Elizabeth, born Aug. 13, 1901.

CHARLES HENRY TOWNSEND, long and favorably known in Willimantic, Windham county, as an artistic photographer of more than the usual excellence, as a genial and courteous gentleman devoted to the gentle art of fishing, and withal a broad minded and patriotic citizen, was born in Athens, Ohio, Dec. 23, 1847, a son of John R. and Mary B. (Bougher) Townsend. The father, who was born in Andover, Conn., was killed in 1850, leaving two children, Ada L., who is a resident of Chicago, and Charles H.

Mr. Townsend lived in Ohio until the breaking out of the Civil war, having but little schooling, and in fact received the most of his education after the end of the Rebellion. He enlisted in his sixteenth year, June 25, 1863, in the 129th O. V. I., serving until March 8, 1864. At this time he enlisted in the 141st O. V. I., for 100 days, and was mustered out Sept. 3, 1864. His third enlistment was on Oct. 20, 1864, and he was assigned to the 65th O. V. I., with which command he remained until his final discharge Oct. 19, 1865, at Victoria, Texas, his regiment doing duty in the more disturbed regions of Texas long after the closing of the War. When he was released from his military obligations, which had now grown somewhat irksome, and as peace had come to all the land, Mr. Townsend returned to his native town, where he attended school for a time. He had an uncle in Springfield, Mass., A. C. Townsend, who was an expert photographer, and at his invitation the young man went to Springfield, and there learned the rudiments of the art he has since so successfully followed. This was thirty-five years ago, and though photography has made many and rapid strides he has kept pace with it. In 1868 he opened a studio in Willimantic, and with the exception of five years spent in Southbridge, Mass., his home has been in this city to the present time. About 1880 Mr. Townsend established his present studio at the corner of Main and Railroad streets. This was in its earlier days a modest affair, and from time to time it has received many additions and enlargements, until now nearly all the rooms on the third floor are devoted to the needs of the business. It is a thoroughly modern studio, and everything new and novel in the photographic art is quickly brought into play for the benefit of the Willimantic public. The work of Mr. Townsend will compare very favorably with that emanating from the most noted studios of the great cities, and he has patrons who come from a distance, so highly is his work regarded. For a few seasons Mr. Townsend controlled, in this vicinity, the sale of the Columbia bicycle. As a fisherman he has a reputation which would do credit to any disciple of Izaak Walton.

On March 7, 1871, Mr. Townsend was married to Miss Rhoda Taft, a native of Chaplin, by whom he has one son, Fred C. Townsend, now an architect, employed in New Haven. Mr. Townsend is an ardent devotee of Republican principles, and is a member of Francis S. Long Post, G. A. R., at Willimantic.

BEZALEEL SEAGROVE is a farmer and an honored citizen of the town of Coventry, Tolland county, whose name is regarded as that of an industrious and thoroughly reliable man.

Bezaleel Seagrove, his grandfather, was born in Uxbridge, Mass., and died there. He was twice married, both his wives being cousins of the Aldrich family, and of Scottish extraction. To the two marriages were born nine sons and nine daughters. Mr. Seagrove was a farmer and teamster.

Selvanius T. Seagrove, the youngest child by the first marriage, was born in Uxbridge, Mass., Aug. 26, 1800, and died at South Coventry, Conn., Nov. 29, 1852. He learned the spinning trade at Jewett City, where he met and married, Oct. 29, 1825, Caroline Slack, daughter of Samuel and Anna (Leeds) Slack. The Leeds were connected with the English nobility. Mrs. Seagrove was born in Stonington Aug. 4, 1805, and died at Mansfield, in September, 1886.

When Mr. Seagrove started out for himself he remained away a month, and came home with forty dollars, which he had earned by spinning. Upon seeing that amount his sister cried out, "Selvanius, did you get that money honestly?" Such an incredible sum for only a month of work it seemed to them! For some years Mr. Seagrove carried on manufacturing in Thompson, Conn., where he built and operated a mill, which he later sold; he then came to South Coventry to engage in selling honey, and here he died. Mr. Seagrove was an Abolitionist in political faith, and the first to espouse that cause in the town of Coventry. Deeply interested in the effort to free the slaves, he felt the wrong done them, and predicted the great conflict which came after his death. Both he and his wife attended church, and brought their children up in the habit of church going.

To Mr. and Mrs. Seagrove came children as follows: (1) Wellington, born Sept. 24, 1826, died Aug. 3, 1877. He served in the 25th Conn. V. I. He lived in East Hampton where he had a wife and five children. (2) Sylvanus was born Jan. 24, 1828. (3) Sarah Jane, born Nov. 4, 1829, married Dwight Barrows, of Beesley's Point, N. J. (4) Samuel, born March 20, 1831, died Oct. 13, 1853. (5) One son died young. (6) Bezaleel, whose name introduces this writing, was born Nov. 14, 1836. (7) John S., born Sept. 12, 1838, was drowned Sept. 20, 1857. (8) Walter, born March 1, 1842, lives in New London, Conn. (9) Harriet Augusta, born Feb. 5, 1846, died in January, 1900. She married Alfred Cour, of Beesley's Point, N. J. (10) Mary Ellen, born July 23, 1848, died Feb. 15, 1866. When Mr. Seagrove came to Coventry he bought 300 acres at the upper end of South street, and a road in that neighborhood bears the family name.

Bezaleel Seagrove was reared in Coventry, where he attended the common schools, and when his father died he took upon himself the burden of the family support, though only sixteen years of age. At the age of twenty-one he hired out at farm work, receiving $150 for the season's toil. For a time he worked at Bolton, and then came to Mansfield, where he began hatmaking with two assistants, following that business for a year. Then he was a traveling agent for a Hartford book house, covering North Carolina and other portions of the South. This enterprise was undertaken about the time of the John Brown raid, and the bitter feeling growing out of it exposed Mr. Seagrove to some very grave perils, and necessitated his abrupt return to the North. After coming home Mr. Seagrove followed farming for a time, and then spent a year in the service of the Willimantic Thread Company. After his marriage he established himself at farming, which has really been his life work, though for a time he was overseer of the silk factory of James S. Morgan. He owns a very pleasant and well kept place of forty acres. He has been careful and thrifty, and has accumulated quite a fair competence.

Mr. Seagrove has been twice married, first to Clarissa Greenman, of Lebanon, and second to Mrs. Sarah M. (Sweet) Webler, daughter of Studley M. and Roxanna M. Sweet, of West Greenwich, Rhode Island.

Mr. Seagrove enlisted Sept. 24, 1861, at Manchester, under Capt. Hudson, as a member of Company B, 10th Conn. V. I., and was discharged March 5, 1862, for disability. He saw service at Roanoke Island, and though his time at the front was short, has some very stirring memories of the old war days.

Mr. Seagrove is a Republican, but has never sought official honors. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and both his wives have been members of the same communion. Mr. Seagrove has filled most of the offices in Nathan Hale Post, No. 28, G. A. R., and is a splendid member of that noble order.

JUDGE CHARLES HENRY CHESEBROUGH (deceased). Among the many citizens whose interests long were identified with those of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., the late Charles H. Chesebrough took a prominent position. After 1864 his business interests centered there, his political friends and admirers gathered around him there, his church and home were there and it was in that city that his genial nature was best known and appreciated in many a social circle.

The family from which descended the late Charles H. Chesebrough is recognized as one of the oldest in all New England. His line of ancestry placed him in the eighth generation from William, the founder, as follows: William, Nathaniel, Samuel, Col. Amos, Samuel, Amos, Henry D., and Charles H.

William Chesebrough, the first white man who made what is now known as Stonington, Conn., his permanent abode, was born in Boston, Lincolnshire, England, in the year 1594. On Dec. 6, 1620, he married Anna Stevenson. By trade he was a gunsmith and that he followed in his native land, and also in America until his settlement in Stonington in 1649. The town of Pequot, now New London, had given him large grants of land, and he immediately turned his attention to their improvement, and soon stocked them with cattle. In the early part of 1630 William joined a large party of immigrants who came to America with John Winthrop, and with them located in Boston, Mass., soon after becoming a member of the first church there. In May, 1631, he was admitted a freeman of the Massachusetts Colony, and after this took an active part in public affairs. In 1632, Mr. Chesebrough was elected as "one of two" from Boston, to unite with two from every plantation to confer with the Court about raising a public stock, and Prince, in his "Annals" says that this movement seems to have paved the way for a house of representation in the General Court. In 1634, Mr. Chesebrough was elected constable of Boston, where he continued to reside for several years, but it is known that previous to 1640 he removed to Braintree and that year was elected deputy to the Massachusetts General Court. Soon after this he removed his residence to Rehoboth, Plymouth Colony, where in 1643, his financial listing was 450 pounds. The next year lots were drawn for a division of the woodland near the town, and Mr. Chesebrough received lot No. 4.

C. H. Chesebro.

During that year the planters of Rehoboth drew up and signed a compact by which they agreed to be governed by nine persons, "according to law and equity until we shall subject ourselves to some other government." Mr. Chesebrough was a party to that transaction, which was participated in by thirty of the planters of the new settlement. He had taken an active and prominent part in organizing the town of Rehoboth, and at a public meeting, held July 12, 1644, his services were recognized by the town in ordering that he "should have division in all lands of Seakunth, for 153 pounds, besides what he is to have for his own proportion, and that in way of consideration for the pains and charges he hath been at for setting off this plantation," thus in quaint phraseology giving him only what was his due.

In 1645, at the General Court in Plymouth, he was propounded for freedman, but was not admitted until 1648. The records tell of ingratitude and harshness to this estimable citizen, showing very clearly that human nature was very much the same in those far-off days as we find it in these. Notwithstanding his valuable services in the establishment of the plantation, and their recognition by the town of Rehoboth, he was called before the General Court of the Colony, was arrested for an affray with an Indian, named Vassamequine, and was harshly treated in other ways. This unexpected ingratitude and hostile treatment, led Mr. Chesebrough to consider leaving this town and looking further for a permanent abode. About this time Mr. John Winthrop, Jr., acting under a commission from the Massachusetts General Court, commenced a settlement at Nameaug, afterward called Pequot, and later New London. Mr. Chesebrough visited the place in 1645 for the purpose of making it his future home, being kindly treated by Mr. Winthrop, and urged to settle there. However, finding the place in several respects unsuited to his expectations, he concluded to look farther, and subsequently he examined the Pawcatuck region, finally deciding to settle at the head of Wequetequock Cove. He shared the friendship of Roger Williams, and was encouraged and assisted by him in removing his habitation to Pawcatuck. He did not, however, remove his family there until he had provided a comfortable abode for them.

It was during the summer of 1649 that the family came to Wequetequock and occupied their new house in the wilderness. He brought his entire family with him, consisting of his wife and four sons, namely: Samuel, Nathaniel, John and Elisha. The two eldest and the youngest subsequently married and had families, and after the death of each, their widows married again. John died unmarried in 1660.

In January, 1652, a large tract of land was given him by the town of Pequot, which was afterward liberally enlarged until it embraced between 2000 and 3000 acres. Mr. Chesebrough succeeded in drawing around him a sufficient number of "acceptable persons" to satisfy the General Court; and the settlement of this town was begun and continued in a flourishing condition until 1654, when the planters here desired a separation on account of religious views as well as for civil purposes. This measure was resisted by the planters of Pequot. In the meantime, Massachusetts laid claim to the settlement, and the controversy went up to the Court of Commissioners of the United Colonies, and terminated in 1658 in awarding all the territory east of the Mystic River to the Massachusetts Colony, under the name of Louthertown, and it so remained until 1662, when it was included in the new charter and again became a part of the Colony of Connecticut. In 1665 the name of Louthertown was changed to that of Mystic, and in 1666, it was again changed to that of Stonington.

Mr. Chesebrough was a man of more than ordinary ability, and held positions of trust not only in the Massachusetts Colony, but was, as noted, most prominent in the settlement of the town of Rehoboth in the Plymouth Colony. After his place at Wequetequock was included in the township of Pequot, he was elected deputy thereof to the General Court of Hartford, in 1653-54 and 1656, and on one occasion was rate-maker, or assessor. In 1658, when the Massachusetts General Court asserted jurisdiction over this town, Mr. Chesebrough, with others, was appointed to manage the prudential affairs thereof, and was made one of the commissioners to end small causes and deal in criminal matters. He held the office of selectman until Louthertown was annexed to Connecticut, and was the first man elected deputy after the reunion, holding the office in 1653, 1655, 1657 and 1664, and he succeeded in restoring amicable relations with the Court, which had been seriously disturbed by the jurisdictional controversy. After his return he was elected first selectman of the town, and was re-elected every year up to the time of his death, on June 9, 1667.

On Dec. 6, 1620, Mr. Chesebrough was married in Boston, England, to Anna Stevenson, who was born in England in 1598. Their children, baptized in Boston, England, were: Marie, Martha, David, Jonathan, Samuel, Andronicus, Junice and Nathaniel. Those baptized at Boston, Mass., were: John, Jabez and Elisha. The youngest, Joseph, was born at Braintree, now Quincy, Mass., and died young.

Nathaniel Chesebrough, son of an illustrious father, was baptized in Boston, England, Jan. 28, 1630. In 1659, he married Hannah Dennison, of Stonington, Conn., where he resided and from which place he went to serve in the Colonial Indian war. His children were: Anna, Sarah, Nathaniel, Bridget, Hannah, Samuel, Margaret and Mary. The first six children were born previous to the organization of the church in the town of Stonington. Nathaniel Chesebrough was one of the first nine members of the church there. His death took place

Nov. 22, 1678, and on July 15, 1680, his widow, Mrs. Hannah (Dennison) Chesebrough, was married to Capt. Joseph Saxton, of Stonington.

Samuel Chesebrough, son of Nathaniel, was born Feb. 14, 1674, in Stonington, Conn., and on Jan. 4, 1699-1700, married Priscilla Alden, who was a native of Duxbury, Mass., and a great-granddaughter of Hon. John Alden and Priscilla Mullins. Their children were: Mary, Priscilla, Nathaniel, Amos, Hannah, Sarah and Prudence.

Col. Amos Chesebrough, son of Samuel, was born Feb. 2, 1709, in Stonington, and on Dec. 2, 1729, he married Desire Williams also of Stonington. Their children were: Amos, Desire, Lydia, Esther, Priscilla, Mary, Samuel, Hannah, John, Joshua and Elizabeth. Col. Chesebrough obtained his military title from his position in the State militia.

Samuel Chesebrough, son of Col. Amos, was born April 3, 1743, in Stonington, and on April 26, 1772, he married Mary, daughter of William Slack, also of Stonington. His death took place Oct. 11, 1825, and that of his wife Aug. 25, 1814. Their children were: Amos, Abigail, Desire, Elizabeth, Mary, Priscilla and George.

Amos Chesebrough, son of Samuel, was born Dec. 14, 1773, in Stonington, and on July 13, 1801, was married to Phebe Dennison, also of Stonington, who died Oct. 9, 1846, his death occurring Aug. 3, 1846. Their children were: Grace, Edmund, Henry D., Richard C., Samuel, Amos and Gideon.

Henry Dennison Chesebrough, son of Amos, was born Dec. 5, 1807, in Stonington. On Nov. 10, 1831, he married Sophia Williams, born Dec. 9, 1803, in Stonington, daughter of Thomas E. and Abigail (Hempstead) Williams.

Charles H. Chesebrough was born Dec. 16, 1832, in Groton, Conn., son of Henry Dennison and Sophia (Williams) Chesebrough. His education was acquired in the schools of his native town, both public and private, and several years were spent as a teacher in that vicinity. In 1851 he took advantage of an opportunity to see something of the world, making the trip from New York to California in a clipper ship. After three months he started home by the same route in a clipper under the command of his cousin, Capt. Rowland. Mr. Chesebrough determined to return to the Golden State by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and this trip very nearly was his last, as the vessel was wrecked off Cape Hatteras and he narrowly escaped with his life. After reaching California on this second visit, Mr. Chesebrough embarked in the grain and feed business, in association with his brother-in-law, Charles H. Davis, but two years later lost heavily by fire. He then tried his fortune as a miner, and remained in California with excellent results for four years. In 1858 he returned home, and with his father embarked in the shoe business, the firm name being Henry D. Chesebrough & Son, located at Mystic, Conn. In 1864 he sold his interest and came to Putnam, Conn., starting here in the boot and shoe business, conducting the same very successfully until 1870, when he sold the business to T. P. Leonard.

Mr. Chesebrough now perfected his plans, and engaged soon in an insurance business, which he managed with ability until the time of his death. As agent he represented some fifteen of the largest and best-known insurance companies in existence. His office was located in the Chesebrough Block, a building which he had purchased when it was the old Congregational Church. This he changed into a very desirable business block by altering, remodeling and making additions to it.

During the progress of the Civil war Mr. Chesebrough made several trips to the South, in company with his brother-in-law, C. H. Davis, of Norwich, with army shoes. Until 1896 he was firmly identified with the Democratic party, but the issues of that campaign induced him to change his allegiance to the Republican party. In religious faith he was an Episcopalian, loved his church and was one of its most liberal supporters. In public affairs the town of Putnam recognized the usefulness of a man like Mr. Chesebrough, and he was called upon to serve both as assessor and as justice of the peace for twelve years. For a number of years he was the incumbent of the office of fire warden, and in 1896, when the city charter was granted, he was made the deputy judge and clerk of the City court, holding the same until his death. Thoroughly reliable, careful and conscientious, no public official of Putnam ever gave better satisfaction.

On April 12, 1860, in Hanover, Conn., Mr. Chesebrough was united in marriage to Mary Nevins Lord, daughter of Henry and Sally (Brooks) Lord, of Norwichtown, Connecticut. Fraternally Judge Chesebrough was prominent in several organizations. He was a chapter Mason, at one time was Grand High Priest of the State of Connecticut; was a charter member of the Putnam Lodge, Knights of Pythias; and was also a member of the Royal Arcanum of Putnam. In these bodies he was valued for his interest in the business and work, and also as one of the most genial and agreeable of comrades. Of wide reading and liberal culture, he was a fine conversationalist, and his comments upon notable books, pictures and plays were listened to with profit, interest and admiration. Always an enthusiastic fisherman, in 1866 he found an ideal spot in the depths of the Maine woods, and every succeeding summer, with a party of congenial friends, a few happy weeks were spent in that favored locality, his sportsman tales rivaling those of other noted raconteurs.

Judge Chesebrough was eminently qualified to fill a much wider sphere than he did. His clear, strong judgment and unbiased outlook, combined with his rare personality, would have made him a successful statesman or diplomat. The qualities which characterized him—sturdy integrity, manly honor and a wide-reaching sympathy—were not lost, however, on his fellow-citizens of Putnam. In their hearts he remains enshrined. Judge Chesebrough was especially fond of children, although none had come into his own home, and his instincts were always to advance and promote their innocent pleasures. His pleasant smile and hand extended in friendship are well remembered, as well as his ready sympathy and, when necessary, his material assistance. That the news of the sudden death of so highly esteemed a citizen as Judge Chesebrough should have shocked his community and plunged them into grief is not remarkable. For several years his health had been failing, but not even his nearest friends imagined the end near. The day previous to his death he had seemed unusually well. On the morning of April 18, 1901, he started as usual to his office, but Death came on his own door-step, quietly, kindly.

Mrs. Chesebrough still resides in Putnam, where she is the center of a wide circle of friends. She is a lady of cultivated tastes and is a well-known member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Her credentials came through the Waldo family and also through her great-grandfather, John Bingham, who was a captain for one day, at the Battle of Lexington.

JOHN K. NORTHAM (deceased) was, in his lifetime, one of the most substantial and highly respected citizens of Hebron, Tolland county, at which point his death occurred Dec. 24, 1894.

The history of the Northam family in this part of Tolland county begins with John Northam, the grandfather of John K., who lived in the south part of the town of Hebron, where, in addition to his work as a cooper, he carried on business as a blacksmith, saddler and a general trader, giving employment in various ways to a number of men. He had a shop for his work at coopering and saddlery, and there was also a blacksmith shop on his premises. An active and energetic character, he was at the time of his death, July 29, 1838, eighty years old. A good property had been accumulated by him, and he stood well in the esteem of those with whom his life had passed. Elizabeth White, his wife, who died Sept. 23, 1826, at the age of seventy-two, was a descendant of Peregrine White, of the "Mayflower." To John and Elizabeth Northam were born: David, the father of John K. Northam; John, who married Polly Wilcox, and followed farming at Greenbush, where he died; Betsy, who married Benjamin Strong, a merchant in Hebron, where both died.

David Northam, son of John and Elizabeth, was born on the farm where his life was spent. In his early years he rendered valuable assistance to the many enterprises in which his father was engaged, and is remembered as an honest and industrious man, of the best of habits and of a clean and wholesome character. He died, Nov. 7, 1839, aged fifty-nine years. Mary Kellogg, his wife, was the daughter of John and Mary (Day) Kellogg. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Northam carried on the farm, and proved herself a shrewd and hard-working business woman, leaving an ample competence to her children at her death, Dec. 5, 1883, being at that time of the venerable age of eighty-nine. To David and Mary Northam were born: Mary Elizabeth, who married William T. Jones, a very successful farmer and mason of the town of Hebron; and John K., whose name introduces this article.

John Kellogg Northam was born Sept. 8, 1817, on the Northam homestead, and attended the district school and the Colchester Academy. On the farm he was inured to hard work, and when he attained his majority learned the trade of a mason, at which he worked for many years in Hebron and the surrounding country. He was employed in the building of several of the large factories at Glastonbury, and for a time worked in the Portland stone quarry. After the death of his father he returned home to assist his mother in the care of the farm, and occasionally he worked at his trade, but devoted the most of his years to the tillage of the home place. His death, which was quite sudden, came as a result of heart trouble brought on by over exertion in fighting a great fire a year previous.

John K. Northam was an all-around mechanic and could work in wood as well as in iron and stone. As he owned 260 acres of good land he was extensively engaged in farming, devoting himself to that work with industry and judgment, determined to make and keep his farm among the best of the town. His remains rest in St. Peters cemetery at Hebron. In politics he was a Democrat, and in his religion a member of the Episcopal Congregation at Hebron.

On Nov. 24, 1846, John K. Northam was married to Harriet G. Briggs, who was born Feb. 20, 1824, in Goshen, Conn., a daughter of Phillip and Grace (Chamberlain) Briggs, the former of whom was a farmer, born in Rhode Island. To Mr. and Mrs. Northam were born: (1) Sarah Jane, born Jan. 27, 1848, was married Nov. 29, 1865, to Flavel N. Gillette, and their child, Mary Northam, born Oct. 17, 1866, was married March 2, 1889, to William H. Harris, a resident of New Haven, by whom she has two children: Clarence P. (born Jan. 17, 1890) and Claude G. (born July 8, 1893). Mr. Gillette was born June 5, 1838, in Hebron, where he secured his education in the district school. When he was nineteen he taught school in Monmouth county, N. J., but when he married he purchased the farm known as the "Benjamin Bliss place," a tract of fifty-three acres, on which he is still residing. This farm has been his home with the exception of five years following 1878, when he had a fruit and confectionery store in New London. A Republican in political belief, he was in the General Assembly of 1886, and he served on the committee on New Towns and Probate Districts. Mr. Gillette has also been assessor and has served on the board of relief. With his family he belongs to the Hebron Congregational Church, of which for many years he was treasurer, but he resigned in 1900. (2) Emily De LaZerne, born March 24, 1850, married Walter S. Hewitt, of Hebron, who is mentioned elsewhere. (3) Grace B., born Nov. 14, 1853, was married to George S. Bestor, a merchant of Hebron, and on his death to William B. Chamberlain, of East Hampton, Connecticut.

Mrs. John K. Northam makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Gillette, in Hebron, and bears herself marvelously well, considering her age and her laborious life.

JOHN ASHBEL CONANT, one of the venerable citizens of Willimantic, Windham county, is one of the oldest silk workers of New England, his connection with that industry dating from 1844, when he was first employed in the silk mill at Gurleyville, in the town of Mansfield, Connecticut.

The Conant family is one of the oldest in New England, and dates its beginning in this country from the arrival of Roger Conant, who was baptized at All-Saints' Church in the parish of East Budleigh, Devonshire, England, April 9, 1592. He was the youngest member of a family of eight children born to Richard and Agnes (Clark) Conant, and he came to America on the ship "Ann" in 1623, landing at Plymouth, but where his stay was brief on account of religious differences. Roger Conant was known as a "pious, sober and prudent gentleman." In 1625 he was chosen to take charge of the Cape Ann settlement, located on several islands near Stage Head in Gloucester Harbor. Although not universally recognized as the first governor of Massachusetts, this distinction fairly belongs to Roger Conant, for the settlement of which he was the head made the first permanent home in Massachusetts, and was the germ from which sprang the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Roger Conant was the most prominent man of those early days, and historians pay glowing tribute to his character and ability. He was a member of the second representative assembly that ever convened in America (the first being in Virginia), representing the town of Salem, where he held many important offices during his life, and with his wife was a member of the First Church of Salem, both signing the Covenant in 1637. Mr. Conant died in Salem in 1679. His wife, Sarah Holton, whom he married Nov. 11, 1618, was a native of the Parish of St. Anns, Blackfriars, London. The line of descent to the subject of this article is as follows: Roger the emigrant; Exercise; Caleb; Malachi; Sylvanus; Lucius; and John Ashbel Conant.

Exercise Conant, who was baptized Dec. 24,

1637 (Salem First Church Records), bought a house and lot at Windham Center, from which he later removed to Lebanon, Conn., being one of the earliest settlers of that place. In or about 1700 he sold his property in Lebanon and went to Boston, returning about 1718 to Windham, where he died in 1722. His wife, Sarah, bore him children as follows: Sarah, born Feb. 14, 1668, married John Moulton; Abiah, born June 21, 1672, married Joshua Wallis; Jane, born June 20, 1675, married William Moulton; Elizabeth, born July 29, 1677, married Richard Hendee; Josiah, born July 4, 1680, married Joanna Dimmick; Caleb was born in April, 1683.

Caleb Conant settled in Windham, where he purchased a right of land of his brother, Josiah, in 1703. He was a member of the First Church of Windham, and died in April, 1727. Hannah Crane, who became his wife Aug. 23, 1714, was a daughter of Ensign Jonathan Crane, and she died Oct. 11, 1726. To them were born the following children: Malachi; Benajah married Jemima Bosworth; Sarah died unmarried; Ruth married Shubael Conant; Mary died in childhood; Josiah married Ann Ames; and Hannah.

Malachi Conant, who was born June 12, 1715, settled in Windham, about a mile and a half southeast of the present site of Gurleyville, and followed farming all his life. His death occurred Jan. 23, 1783. Sarah Freeman, who was born in Sandwich, Mass., Jan. 18, 1720, a daughter of Edmund and Keziah (Presbury) Freeman, became the wife of Malachi Conant, Feb. 15, 1738-9, and she died May 7, 1791. She was the mother of a large family, of whom the seventh child and third son was Sylvanus.

Sylvanus Conant, who was born Feb. 10, 1750, in Mansfield, lived on the homestead of his father, and died Sept. 2, 1843. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was engaged in the battle at Bunker Hill. His first marriage was on Oct. 22, 1778, when he became the husband of Anna Royce, the daughter of James Royce. She died May 5, 1802, at the age of forty-two years. On April 12, 1807, he married Elizabeth Utley, of Ashford, who died Jan. 5, 1836, at the age of seventy-two years. To the first wife were born: Abigail; Sarah; Sylvanus; James; Abiah; Kezia; Chester; Joseph; Edmund; Lucius; and Lois. To the second wife was born Roxa. Sylvanus Conant was a member of the Congregational Church.

Lucius Conant was born Sept. 29, 1799, in Mansfield, Conn., where during the earlier part of his life he followed the business of manufacturing steelyards and augers. In his later years he operated a grist mill in Gurleyville, and in 1845 he went into a silk mill as an overseer. His connection with the silk industry continued during the remainder of his active life, and his death occurred in Mansfield, Conn., Nov. 10, 1869. Mr. Conant was a modest man of reserved disposition, and was much respected for his substantial qualities and terling worth. His religious associations were with the Methodist Church, of which he was a member. Mr. Conant was married Dec. 6, 1821, to Marietta Eaton, who was born in 1801, at Mansfield, Conn., a daughter of Jeduthan and Lydia (Campbell) Eaton. She died in November, 1859, and was buried in the Gurleyville Cemetery. Mr. Conant married for his second wife Mrs. Julia (Hanks) Conant, the widow of John W. Conant and daughter of Rodney Hanks. Lucius Conant was the father of the following children, all born to the first wife: Harriet Marilla, born June 30, 1823, married William H. Atwood, who died in Mansfield in 1878, and she now lives in Stonington, Conn.; Lydia Amanda, born Feb. 27, 1825, is the wife of John E. Atwood, a member of the Atwood-Morrison Co., of Stonington, Conn.; Mary Jane, born April 25, 1827, married Asa P. Squires, and died March 24, 1860; John Ashbel, born Aug. 16, 1829; David Philo, born Aug. 29, 1833, resides in Canton, Mass., where he was several years in charge of a silk mill (he has one son, Lucius); William L. died in infancy; Hiram Ellsworth, born Sept. 13, 1839, was a silk throwster, and died in Contoocook, N. H., in August, 1883, leaving two sons, Frank E. and Dwight E.; and Juliette, born Dec. 7, 1843, married James L. Merrick, and lives in Springfield, Massachusetts.

John Ashbel Conant was born in what is now the village of Chaffeeville, in the town of Mansfield, Conn., and was but a child when his parents removed to Gurleyville, where he attended the district school. Sally Barrows (who afterward married Nelson Conant) and Jabez and Myron Sears were among his early teachers. When he was a lad of about ten years of age he went to Tolland to live with his uncle, George Eaton, a farmer, and attended the Furnace District School during winter months. After living with his uncle some four years young Conant returned to Mansfield, where in winter months he attended school taught at different terms by Isaac Freeman, Samuel Hovey and Leonard Dunham until he was about seventeen years old, working during the summer season on the farm or in the silk mill. In the spring of 1844 Mr. Conant entered the Gurleyville silk mill, when Augustus Storrs was agent. One year later he was employed on a farm by O. S. Chaffee, and also in his mill. In 1847 Mr. Conant went to the silk mill of George R. Hanks as an overseer, and the year following, after being employed for a short time by Mr. Chaffee, he went to work in the silk mill of Atwood & Russ at Atwoodville. In June, 1849, owing to a depression in the silk industry, Mr. Conant engaged at jack spinning in the American Mill at Rockville. In the summer of 1851 his health compelled him to give up that work, and he spent a short time at home, when he secured a position with Cheney Brothers, at Mansfield Hollow—where they had leased a silk mill—which he held until the mill was closed. He again tried jack spinning in Broad Brook, but his health could not endure that work.

In the spring of 1852 Mr. Conant became overseer in a silk mill at Gurleyville, for James Royce, with whom he remained about two years, and in 1854 engaged with Cheney Brothers at Hartford. In 1856 Mr. Conant bought a small farm in West Hartford and retired from mill work, only to resume it after about a year, taking charge of the silk mill of the Watertown Manufacturing Co. at Watertown, Conn. When this company went out of the silk business some two years later Mr. Conant became overseer of a hoop-skirt factory in Watertown, remaining with the company as long as they made hoop skirts, and when they went out of business he entered the employ of Holmes, Booth & Haydens, at Waterbury, and was in charge of their packing room for about a year and a half, when his wife's health became so poor that he left Waterbury and removed to Ellington, Conn., where his wife's mother lived, and for some time was not in any active business, devoting himself to the care of Mrs. Conant, who died in Tolland after a lingering illness, in October, 1863, and was buried in Ellington.

Shortly after this Mr. Conant was briefly in the employ of the Hemingway Silk Co., at Watertown, afterward assisting his brother, D. P. Conant, in starting a silk mill in Mansfield. In 1864 Mr. Conant entered the mill of J. H. Holland & Co., in Conantville, Conn., where he had charge of the cleaning and winding room. Charles L. Bottom bought this plant the same year, and Mr. Conant remained with him about a year in charge of the mill. The Holland Silk Co. put up its first mill in Willimantic in 1865, the firm being J. H. & G. Holland, and on the first of January following Mr. Conant was given charge of their throwing department, a position he has retained to the present time, a length of service in one capacity hard to match in the State.

On May 11, 1852, Mr. Conant was married in Ellington, to Miss Caroline A. Chapman, a daughter of Deacon Simon and Jerusha (McKnight) Chapman. Two children were born to them: John Winslow, born Aug. 30, 1854, now a silk throwster at Westerly, R. I., married Alice Burlingame, of Canterbury, and has two children, Carrie and Julia; and Henry Wilbur Deloraine, born in July, 1861, died at the age of nine months. The second wife of Mr. Conant, whom he married Nov. 18, 1864, was Marietta (French), the widow of Andrew H. Brown, a soldier in the Union army, and who was killed in battle. Mrs. Conant was the daughter of James and Mary (Lamphear) French, and was born in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 27, 1835. Her father was a stone mason by trade, and died in Willimantic when she was but a child. She made her home with George B. Armstrong, with whom she lived until her marriage to Mr. Brown. By this marriage she became the mother of one son, Frank W. Brown, now superintendent of a silk mill in Petaluma, California. To Mr. and Mrs. Conant were born: George Andrew, born April 21, 1866, in Willimantic, married Josephine F. Smith in June, 1888, was employed in a silk mill, and died Feb. 24, 1889, leaving no children; Julius Deloraine, born Oct. 28, 1869, in Willimantic, married Edith, daughter of Joseph M. and Maria (Barnes) Avery, and is overseer of the doubling department in the Holland Silk Mills.

Mr. Conant cast his first presidential vote for John P. Hale in 1852, and was among the first to unite in the formation of the Republican party. In 1856 he was in a conference with J. R. Hawley and a few others at Hartford, considering the best means of resisting the aggressions of slavery, and out of it grew the organization of the Republican party in Connecticut. Mr. Conant was a Republican until 1872, when he assisted in the organization of the Prohibitionist party. In 1884 he was the candidate of the American party for vice-president, Ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, being the candidate for president. Mr. Conant generally acts with the Prohibition party, except when such action would conflict with the anti-secret society principles. George Eaton, of Tolland, the uncle with whom a part of his boyhood was spent, was a strong advocate of temperance and a pronounced opponent of slavery; he was one of the organizers of the Tolland Wesleyan Methodist Church, with which Mr. Conant united. While living in Hartford Mr. Conant transferred his church relation to the Fourth Congregational, and remained a member of that denomination until 1881, when he united in the formation of the First Berean Church at Willimantic. He has always been a strenuous worker in every reform, and has been especially conspicuous in the temperance movement, from boyhood observing with horror the evil of intemperance. Mr. Conant was a member of three secret societies, two of which are now extinct, and the third of which he abandoned many years ago on account of its clanish and idolatrous tendency. He has come to look upon all secret societies as dangerous to the State and a hindrance to the work of the Christian Church. For several years he was president of the New England Christian Association, formed for the purpose of exposing the evils of the lodge system.

Mr. Conant is a man of great courage, and a reader of wide range and much enthusiasm. With his retentive memory and rare intelligence, he is well informed as to all the questions of the day, and knows the world around him. He started in life a poor boy, and has made his way in the world by integrity and industry. While his views on certain subjects are not in harmony with the world around him, yet he commands the respect and confidence of all who know him.

JARED GORTON FREEMAN, now residing on the old Freeman homestead on Spring Hill, in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county, is one of the most highly respected and venerable citizens of that vicinity, and is the last male member of an old and once numerous family.

Edmund Freeman, the first of the name to come to America, settled at Sangus (Lynn), Mass., in 1635; was made a freeman at Plymouth Jan. 2, 1637; and was one of the first ten men to establish a town on the Cape, it being in the county of Barnstable and named Sandwich. The grant from the king for the above settlement was dated April 3, 1637. Edmund Freeman was a man of unblemished character, a leader among his fellow-citizens, of sound judgment and integrity. He died in 1682, aged ninety-two, and was buried on his own land on the hill in the rear of his dwelling. His wife was Elizabeth (maiden name supposed to be Bennett) and they had the following family: Alice, born in England, married Deacon William Paddy, Nov. 24, 1639; Edmund, born in England, married Rebecca Prence, April 22, 1646, and second, Margaret Perry, July 18, 1651; Elizabeth, born in England, in 1625, married John Ellis; John, born in England, probably in 1627, married Mercy Prence, Feb. 13, 1649; Mary married Edward Perry about 1653.

Edmund Freeman (2), son of Edmund (1), was deputy to the General Court from the town of Sandwich, in 1669, and for seven years thereafter. His first wife, Rebecca, was the daughter of Gov. Theodore Prence and Patience (Brewster) Prence, the latter being the daughter of Elder William Brewster, who came over in the "Mayflower." Mr. Freeman married second, July 18, 1651, Margaret Perry. The first wife died after the birth of her only child, Rebecca, in Sandwich, and this daughter married Ezra Perry. The children born of the second marriage were: Margaret, born Oct. 2, 1652; Edmund; Alice, born March 29, 1658; Rachel, born Sept. 4, 1659, married John Landers; Sarah, born Feb. 6, 1662, married Jan. 6, 1665, Richard Landers of Falmouth; Deborah, born Aug. 9, 1665, married Thomas Landers.

Edmund Freeman (3), son of Edmund (2), was born Oct. 5, 1655, and during the greater portion of his life resided in Sandwich, where all his children were born and settled, but later in life made his home in Yarmouth. In 1702 he, in company with John Nye of Sandwich, purchased one thousand acres of land in Windham, Conn., lying in that part of the town since known as Mansfield. The Indian name of the tract purchased was "Nawkesetuck," and was set off from Windham a distinct town the next year. Edmund Freeman married Sarah (surname not known), and they had the following children: Edmund; Benjamin, born Jan. 6, 1685, married Patience Nye Jan. 30, 1712; Mary, born March 13, 1687, married Timothy Nye Aug. 7, 1716; John, born June 12, 1693, married Deliverance Lawrence July 20, 1720, and second, Maria Bourne Jan. 3, 1722, and third, Mary Perry, Aug. 4, 1726; Thomas, born March 26, 1696, married Kezia Hoxie Nov. 23, 1742; Joseph, born July 18, 1698, married Tabitha Tobey May 9, 1726; William, born Dec. 4, 1700, married Mary Bodfish, Dec. 6, 1726; Sarah, born Dec. 6, 1703, married Isaac Nye, Feb. 1725; and Isaac, born Oct. 20, 1706, married Deborah Foster, Nov. 22, 1733.

Edmund Freeman (4), son of Edmund (3), as born on Aug. 30, 1683, and removed with his parents to the State of Connecticut, settling at Mansfield. His wife died April 20, 1764, aged twenty-seven, and he died June 1, 1766. Their home was in the South Parish of Mansfield. His children were: Edmund, born March 14, 1708, died March 27, 1709; Lydia, born April 8, 1710, married Benjamin Nye; Edmund, born Sept. 30, 1711, graduated from Harvard College in 1733, married Martha Otis, Aug. 7, 1736; Prince; Stephen, born Aug. 14, 1714, married Hannah Jenkins, Oct. 3, 1736; Silvanus, born Sept. 7, 1716, married Mary Dunham; Nathaniel, born March 31, 1718, married Martha Dunham; Keziah, born July 7, 1719, married Jane Snow, and second, Elizabeth Shaw; Sarah, born Jan. 17, 1720, married Malachi Conant, of Mansfield; Deborah, born April 17, 1722, married Zachariah Paddock; Skeffe, born Dec. 28, 1723, married Anna Sargeant; Thomas, born Aug. 17, 1725, died May 21, 1726; Abigail, born Feb. 20, 1726, married William Johnson, and died Feb. 22, 1782; Margaret, born Aug. 21, 1729, died Sept. 10, 1729.

Prince Freeman, son of Edmund (4), was born on March 13, 1713. By occupation, he was a farmer, and his name, Prince, is a common one among his family, being derived from that of Governor Prentice. He was thrice married: On Dec. 6, 1739, he was married to Ruth Hall, who was born July 28, 1722, a daughter of Theophilus Hall; she died May 19, 1740, leaving no children. On Sept. 15, 1742, he wedded Elizabeth Stetson, who was born Jan. 8, 1721, a daughter of Deacon Samuel Stetson of Mansfield, and she died March 10, 1744, leaving no family. The third marriage of Mr. Freeman took place Dec. 12, 1745, when Rebecca Johnson became his wife. They had ten children: Azariah, born Sept. 28, 1746, was the grandfather of our subject; Prince, born March 5, 1747, removed to New Hampshire; Rebecca, born June 14, 1749, married Noah Upham March 26, 1771, and went to New Hampshire; William, born Oct. 14, 1751, married Miss Hanks, and resided in Norwich, Conn.; Enoch, born April 11, 1754, married first Elizabeth Eldridge, Feb. 17, 1774, and second Lucy Forbes, and removed to New Hampshire; Experience, born March 26, 1756, married Jane Upham, and went to New Hampshire; Elijah, born Nov. 3, 1757, married Olive Hovey, Dec. 27, 1781; Roger, born March 11, 1760; Elizabeth, born in 1762, married John Durkee; Ruth first married Abijah Durkee, and second Calvin Topliff. Prince Freeman, the father of these children, removed to New Hampshire, about 1760, where he died June 25, 1781.

Azariah Freeman, son of Prince, spent the greater part of his life upon the farm now owned by our subject, and was a successful farmer. In politics, he was a Jeffersonian Democrat. His death occurred Aug. 11, 1828. On March 31, 1768, he was married to Anna, daughter of Samuel and Jerusha (Abbe) Wood; she was born April 1, 1747, and she died in 1816. The children born of this marriage were: Ruby, born April 15, 1770, married Josiah Hall, and removed to Cattaraugus county, N. Y., where they died; Enoch is mentioned later; Anna, born Dec. 9, 1779, married Nov. 1, 1803, Luther Kingsley, who died April 13, 1837; Azariah, Jr., born Sept. 6, 1785, married Nov. 24, 1812, Clarissa Thompson, and was a farmer of Mansfield, where he died; Samuel Dudley, born Feb. 6, 1787, married Feb. 9, 1809, Mrs. Nancy Boutwell, and resided in Mansfield, where he owned a farm.

Enoch Freeman, father of our subject, was born in Mansfield, where his entire life was spent. His calling was that of a farmer, and after his marriage, he located on a farm, near his father's, after whose death, he came into possession of the property and made his home upon it, until he, too, passed away, Dec. 16, 1855. During his lifetime, he was a Democrat, and held many of the town offices. He was a consistent member of the Baptist Church. On Jan. 7, 1808, he was married to Laura Huntington, a native of Norwich, Conn., who survived him for many years, dying at the homestead at Mansfield. Their children were: Azariah, born May 23, 1809, married Amanda Crane Oct. 11, 1831, then removed to Valparaiso, Ind., where he engaged in farming, held many public offices, and where they both died; Philury, born July 15, 1811, married Oct. 20, 1834, Morgan Crosby, and lived in Valparaiso, Ind., where he was a flour mill owner, and both are now deceased; Lorenzo, born September, 1813, married (first) Harriet G. Eaglefield, (second) Harriet Cheney, (third) Harriet Bush, and was a silversmith, but died retired in Los Angeles, Cal., in 1902; Enoch H., born Nov. 1, 1815, married Mary Ann Crane March 4, 1838, and was a farmer, residing on the home farm in Mansfield, where he died; Truman, born Nov. 17, 1817, married, Jan. 16, 1845, Mary Cheney and lived in Valparaiso, Ind., where he engaged in farming and died; and Jared Gorton.

Jared Gorton Freeman was born July 7, 1820, in what was the Baptist parsonage, on Spring Hill, in the town of Mansfield, and was but a few months old when his parents removed to the home he now occupies. During his boyhood, he worked upon the farm, attending the district schools, and when he attained manhood's estate, found plenty of employment upon his father's farm, and among the neighboring farmers. For one year, he worked upon his brother Azariah's farm in Cattaraugus county, N. Y. After his marriage he resided with his wife's parents and assisted on their farm for twenty years. During this time, his brother, Enoch, who had been living upon the home farm, died, and in 1869, Mr. Freeman bought the interest of the other heirs, and since that time has lived on the homestead which is endeared to him by so many associations. The property consists of 140 acres, and is in a high state of cultivation, while the buildings are in excellent condition.

On Jan. 22, 1843, Mr. Freeman was married in Mansfield, to Eunice W. Seagrave, who was born Sept. 16, 1825, at Ashford, Conn., a daughter of Samuel and Polly (Fuller) Seagrave, the former a successful farmer of Mansfield, where he died. Their children are: Philura S., born Nov. 10, 1844, married Erastus Rogers, April 7, 1867, and now resides at Noank, Conn., where he is engaged in fishing; they have two children, Cora (who married a Mr. Lamb and has one child Dorothy) and Freeman. Mary E., born Dec. 10, 1845, died Nov. 25, 1850. Mary J., born Nov. 5, 1854, is now at home.

Like his ancestors before him, Mr. Freeman is a staunch Democrat, and has served most acceptably as tax collector for several years, and also as constable for many years. In addition, he also served on the board of selectmen for several years, acting as chairman of same one year. He attends the Baptist Church. Mr. Freeman is a man of powerful frame and build, and in spite of his advanced age, is very active, and, except a slight difficulty in hearing, is in possession of all his faculties. During his long life, he has been an upright, honorable, good man, and no one stands higher in his community. Among the stories of his earlier life, which he is fond of telling, is one relative to the old Mansfield drum corps: When it was in existence, it was recognized as the best organization of its kind in the State, at one time consisting of sixteen men—thirteen drummers and three fifers—and at a competition of drum corps at Wallingford, Conn., a number of years ago, Mr. Freeman took first prize as individual drummer, and his corps first prize in the State of Connecticut.

HENRY T. CROSBY is now living retired in Chaplin, Windham county, where he enjoys the distinction of being one of the oldest citizens of the town, and he comes from an old New England family.

Simon Crosby, the founder of the family in America, was born in 1609, in England, and came to the Colonies when twenty-six years of age, in the "Susan and Ellen," with his wife and young son, Thomas. Simon became a freeman in Cambridge, Mass., in 1639, and died the same year.

Ezra Crosby, the father of our subject, was a farmer, and resided in Lisbon, New London Co., Conn., where he was born Sept. 17, 1780, and where he died July 29, 1852, aged seventy-two years. During his life he was a quiet, prosperous man. He married Mary Warren, who was born May 15, 1785, a daughter of Jotham Warren, a Revolutionary soldier, and she survived until Feb. 26, 1863. Their children were: Mary E., born Feb. 29, 1809, died June 4, 1813; Miss Jerusha, born Jan. 14, 1811, resided in Chaplin; Henry T.; Mary H., born Feb. 27, 1815, married Alexander Dorrance, and died in Chaplin, Nov. 14, 1894; Lydia M., born Jan. 18, 1817, is the widow of George L. Davidson, and resides in Brooklyn, Conn.; Levi A., born Jan. 22, 1819, died Aug. 14, 1848, at the age of twenty-nine; Harriet E., born July 8, 1821, married James H. Work, and died in Chaplin, April 10, 1899; Charlotte, born Oct. 30, 1823, widow of Henry R. Robbins, resides in Chaplin; Martin W., born Oct. 11, 1826, married Abbie Dexter and resides in Brooklyn, Conn.; Mary Louise died at the age of ten; and Emma Jessie married Newell Clinton Hunt, of Chaplin.

Henry T. Crosby was born Feb. 13, 1813, in Lisbon, Conn., and attended the district schools until he was sixteen years of age, and then had the advantage of one term at the Norwichtown high school. When thirteen years old he suffered an injury to his right ankle which refused to yield to treatment, and when but nineteen he was forced to lose the limb, the amputation being made between the knee and ankle. Ever since then he has worn an artificial limb. At the age of twenty-one he began to teach school, and for nine years had the following schools: his first three terms were spent at the school in his native district, from which he received ten dollars a month; he next taught two terms at Norwich, one term at Oxford, Mass., and three terms in the town of Lisbon. Until about 1843 he remained at home, but at that time he was offered the position of assistant postmaster at Jewett City, Conn., under postmaster James Johnson, which he accepted, and he remained there during the term of that gentleman. The latter was succeeded by a Dr. Kendall, and the new postmaster was very glad to be able to retain the services of Mr. Crosby, who did the greater portion of the work. During the term of Dr. Kendall the latter decided to remove to Moosup, Conn., and resigned the office. Mr. Crosby was selected to succeed him, and held the office during Buchanan's administration. At the beginning of the administration of President Lincoln he was removed and he then purchased a small farm of thirty acres near Lisbon Center, and resided there two years, when he was offered the position of assistant cashier in Jewett City National Bank, under cashier James Johnson, the same man under whom Mr. Crosby served as assistant postmaster. A few years later Mr. Johnson resigned from the bank on account of failing health and eyesight, and Mr. Crosby was selected to fill his position. For seven years Mr. Crosby served as cashier in this institution, or until 1873, when the affairs of the bank were closed up, although it was in a prosperous condition and the stock sold at premium. Mr. Crosby then decided to start a savings bank for the town of Griswold, and a charter was obtained from the State Legislature. On July 1, 1873, the Jewett City Savings Bank began business, with H. L. Reed as president and Mr. Crosby as treasurer. The bank flourished from the start, and is yet in existence in a very prosperous condition. Until July, 1883, our subject continued its treasurer, but he then resigned on account of his poor health and moved to Brooklyn, Conn., where he remained for three years, when, having lost his devoted wife, he came to Chaplin, and has made his home with his sister, Mrs. Charlotté Robbins.

On March 4, 1856, Mr. Crosby was married in Lisbon, Conn., to Mary Jackson, a native of Norwich, who had been reared in the family of Rev. Levi Nelson, being an adopted daughter of that good man. Mrs. Crosby died in Jewett City, Conn., March 2, 1884. No children were born of this marriage.

Mr. Crosby has been liberal in politics and cast his first presidential vote for William Henry Harrison in 1840. In late years he has voted the Prohibition ticket and was treasurer of the town of Griswold for many years. Early in life he connected himself with the Congregational Church at Lisbon. When he moved to Jewett City he transferred his membership to the church at that city, and also repeated this transferral upon his location in Brooklyn and Chaplin. For many years he taught in the Sunday-school and has continued his good work in Chaplin. Mr. Crosby took an active part in educational matters during his residence in Lisbon, having served as school visitor and as a member of the committee authorized to examine all applicants for the position of school teacher, serving in these capacities several years. Mr. Crosby has been very successful, possesses a good income and stands very high in the community where he now resides. For a man of his age he has a very clear memory, and can relate many interesting incidents in the country's history as well as of his own life.

SOLOMON S. BUCKLAND, one of Scotland's well known agriculturists and representative citizens, was born at Windsor Locks, then the town of Windsor, Hartford Co., Conn., May 25, 1828.

Hiram Buckland, father of Solomon S., was also a native of Hartford county, and was a farmer and land owner in the town of Windsor where his life was spent. Hiram Buckland's political affiliations were originally with the Whig party, but after the formation of the Republican party he cast his ballot in its support. His wife Harriet Grant, was a descendant of one of the oldest and most prominent families in Windsor, and a near relative of General Grant. Hiram and Harriet (Grant) Buckland were the parents of eight children, as follows: Solomon S.; John W., who resides in Kansas; Andrew, who died in Kansas;

Mary Adaline, deceased; Elizabeth, who married Andrew J. Barnard; George W., who resides in Kansas; Albert, deceased; and Julia, who married William H. Filley, a prominent citizen of Windsor.

Solomon S. Buckland was educated in the district schools of his native town, Windsor, and at the schools in Ellington. He taught school for many years in Windsor and Bloomfield, and became well known in the educational world for his peculiar fitness for the teacher's profession. He had an intuitive understanding of the pupil's difficulties, and with infinite patience explained them clearly away.

After he gave up teaching Mr. Buckland went West as a salesman of books and traveled through the western States for several years. He found the East more congenial, however, and returning to his native place located at Rainbow, Hartford county, where he engaged in a general merchandise business. After four years of indifferent success Mr. Buckland sold out, and in 1857 he moved to Scotland, Windham county. There he located on the Marcus Burnham farm where, with the exception of four years spent in Los Angeles, Cal., he has ever since been engaged in general farming, stock raising and dairying.

While in no sense a politician Mr. Buckland is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and was one of the first Republicans in Scotland. He was present at the inauguration of President Lincoln March 4, 1861. Mr. Buckland has always been a careful reader and a close student of public affairs. He has lived the life of a Christian gentleman but is not identified with any religious denominations.

In 1854 in Scotland, Mr. Buckland was married to Charlotte Burnham, only child of Marcus and Achsah (Holt) Burnham. To this union was born one child, Mary Elizabeth. She married Arthur E. Brown, by whom she has had six children: Arthur Buckland, who died aged eight years; Florence May; Harold Burnham; Ruth Clark; Marcus Holt; and Kenneth Grant. Mr. and Mrs. Brown and their family reside in Long Beach, Los Angeles Co., California.

THE BURNHAM FAMILY, of which Mrs. Buckland is a member, was an early settled family of Windham county. Marcus Burnham, father of Mrs. Buckland, was born in Windham July 27, 1806, a son of William and Lois (Grow) Burnham. He was reared on a farm in that part of Windham county now known as Scotland. He attended the district schools, and then turned his attention to farming which he followed all his life. After his marriage he settled on the Abner Robinson farm, now operated by his son-in-law Mr. Buckland.

Mr. Burnham lived to a ripe old age, but at the age of eighty-three he fell near his home and broke his back, dying in 1889 from the effects of the accident. He was buried in Scotland cemetery. A good man, of upright morals, and with broad charity for the faults and foibles of others, he had many friends and was highly respected by all who knew him. Mr. Burnham married Achsah Holt, daughter of Capt. Jona and Achsah (Hammond) Holt. She died in Scotland and was buried there. One child blessed their home, Charlotte Lois, now Mrs. Solomon S. Buckland.

HON. FRANKLIN WHITE PERRY is a prominent business man of Putnam, Windham county. Mr. Perry is a member of the hardware firm of Perry & Brown, a veteran of the Civil war, and a former representative from the town in the General Assembly of the State. He is one of the useful citizens and substantial men of Putnam.

Mr. Perry was born June 15, 1841, in the town of Dudley, Mass., a son of George Nelson and Sarah (White) Perry, and a grandson of Eliphas and Deidamia (Bacon) Perry. The grandfather was a farmer on the old home place at Perryville, a little New England manufacturing point on French river, in the extreme southeastern part of the town of Dudley. The town took its name from the Perry family, who had lived there and owned the farm and waterpower (which is ample the year round for mill purposes) from generation to generation since the period of the Revolution. Eliphas Perry, grandfather of Franklin W., was born Oct. 16, 1767, and died Aug. 28, 1847; his widow surviving four years, died Feb. 3, 1851.

George Nelson Perry, the father of Franklin W., of Putnam, was born at Perryville, and married Sarah Ann White, who was born in Thompson, Conn. Mrs. Perry was a descendant of Capt. Stephen Crosby, who fell at the battle of Long Island.

Mr. Perry later moved to Dudley and was engaged largely in the lumber trade and in agricultural pursuits. He was a man of energy and action, and became one of the substantial citizens of his town. In his early life he taught school, and he always took an interest in educational matters, serving on the school board and being connected with Nichols Academy. His political affiliations were with the Republican party and he was active and zealous in party work. Mr. Perry served his town as selectman and in other capacities. His church connection was with the Congregational Society at Webster, and later at Dudley. Mr. Perry died of typhoid fever in the very prime of manhood, Nov. 27, 1858, when forty-five years of age.

To the marriage of George N. Perry and Sarah Ann (White) were born children as follows: Edwin, married (first) Hester Phipps, and (second) Mrs. Mary Park Warren, and resides in Pomfret; Emma, married Austin C. Burnett, resided in Webster and there died; Franklin W., mentioned below; Lucy, married Eugene Allen, of Dudley, now of Harriman, Tenn.; and Addie F., married Charles A. Joslin, of Thompson, the latter now deceased.

Franklin W. Perry attended the public schools of his native town and the Nichols Academy, from which he was graduated. He then passed one year at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. Early in the Civil war—in the fall of 1861—young Perry left the schoolroom for the tented field, enlisting Oct. 2d of that year as a private soldier in Company D, 25th M. V. I. After three years of active service he was mustered out of the United States service as sergeant with an honorable war record.

Returning to his home Mr. Perry again took up his books, entering Howe's Business College, at Worcester, Mass., and at the completion of his course of study he became one of the corps of instructors in that institution. After a short experience in teaching he became bookkeeper for the hardware firm of Kennicutt & Co., of Worcester, a position he held until 1870. In that year, associated with Charles H. Brown, Mr. Perry formed the hardware firm of Perry & Brown, at Putnam, Conn., and established the business which has been carried on by these gentlemen from that time to the present—a period only a little less than a third of a century. The firm is now the oldest one of Putnam, as well as one of the most substantial, its members being men of character and high standing in that community. Both gentlemen have filled seats in the General Assembly of the State and held other public trusts of the city and town. They have also held positions of honor and responsibility in private corporations and enterprises.

For a number of years Mr. Perry was a director in and president of the Putnam Light & Power Company, and for two years was president of the Woodstock Agricultural Society. He is a staunch Republican, and a citizen who has not shirked public duty. He has served as grand juror, as a member of the school board, and for one year was chairman of the Republican committee of Putnam city. He represented Putnam in the General Assembly in 1899 and 1900, serving on the committee on Humane Institutions. In 1901 Mr. Perry was chosen as alderman-at-large for the city of Putnam. He was appointed by the Legislature in 1901 a trustee for four years of the State Insane Asylum, at Middletown, and is also a member of the board of trustees of the Day Kimball Hospital. Mr. Perry is a member of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., of Putnam, and of the A. O. U. W.

On April 12, 1866, Mr. Perry was married to Cornelia Maria, daughter of Col. Calvin Day and Marcia Abeline (Gilbert) Williams, of Pomfret, Conn. Col. Williams held several public offices in his native town. He was a prominent Republican, and served for two sessions in the General Assembly; was a colonel of the State militia for many years. He was an active member of the Congregational Church of Pomfret, holding the office of deacon at the time of his death, which occurred Dec. 18, 1892, at the age of seventy-nine. Mrs. Williams still survives.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Perry are active members of the Second Congregational Church at Putnam, which he served several years as deacon. Mrs. Perry is a member of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter, D. A. R., of Putnam, being a descendant of Capt. John Day, a large landowner in Killingly, now Dayville, Conn., and a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Perry are: (1) George Williams; born May 24, 1869, in Worcester, Mass. He attended the Putnam high school, in 1890 was graduated from the Worcester (Mass.) Polytechnic Institute, and for ten years he has been a successful mechanical engineer at Waukegan, Ill., with the firm of Washburn & Moen. On Sept. 3, 1891, he married Jennie Gertrude Fisher, daughter of the late Oscar Fisher, of Woodstock, Conn., and their children are Gertrude Williams and Gilbert Fisher. (2) Edward Franklin, born Oct. 8, 1871, in Pomfret, Conn. He was graduated from the Putnam high school, and also from the McGaw Institute, at Merrimac, N. H., after which he passed two years at Amherst College. In 1897 he was graduated from the Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., and after one year's service in Brooklyn City Hospital took a special course of study in one of the hospitals in New York City. He is now practicing medicine successfully at Wellfleet, Mass. On May 10, 1899, Dr. Perry was married to Edith Lillian Smith, daughter of Albert M. Smith, of Washington, Conn. (3) Robert Gilbert, born June 27, 1874, in Putnam. He was graduated from the Putnam high school, and in 1897 from Amherst College. Two years later, in 1899, he was graduated from the New York Law School, and is now successfully engaged in the practice of law in New York City.

GEORGE LESTER PRENTICE is a direct descendant of one branch of the distinguished Prentice family of Colonial times. The name is an English one and appeared originally in America in the form here used. Later branches adopted the spellings Prentiss and Prentis.

The first American representatives of this name were Valentine and Alice Prentice and their son John, all of whom came to America in 1631 in company with Eliot, "the Apostle," and settled at Roxbury, Mass. A second child of Mr. and Mrs. Prentice died during the voyage.

The descent in a direct line of the subject of this sketch is traced from Capt. Thomas Prentice, who, it is supposed, was related to Valentine, of Roxbury, Robert, of Roxbury, and Henry, of Cambridge.

(I) Capt. Thomas Prentice, born in England in 1621, married there in 1643, and had eight children. On May 23, 1653, he was made a freeman in Cambridge, Mass. After a while he moved to Newtown and took up his residence in the eastern part of the town, where the Boston water works tunnel now passes. He came into possession of large tracts of land in various parts of New England. Three hundred acres in the Pequod Country was deeded to him by Thomas Day in 1661, the order being recorded to Lieut. Thomas Prentice in the General Court Records of Mass. In 1675 another 300 acres was granted to him by the General Assembly of Connecticut. Thomas Prentice spent the greater part of his mature life in Newtown, but in 1709 moved to Stonington, Conn., where he owned much property. He lived to the advanced age of eighty-nine and died in Newtown on Sunday, July 6, 1710, as the result of a fall from his horse while returning from church. His wife died in Newtown, Oct. 9, 1692. Mr. Prentice left no will, but in 1705 settled his own estate by gift deeds to his heirs. To his grandson, Thomas Prentice, he gave a house and land in Newtown; to Samuel Prentice, another grandson, who is mentioned later, his mansion house and 100 acres of land in the southern part of Newtown.

As a military man Mr. Prentice was exceedingly prominent. In 1656 when about thirty-five years old, he was chosen lieutenant of a troop of horse, and in 1662 Captain. By their sudden attacks and impetuous charges he and his troop became a terror to the Indians in his vicinity. One daring incident is recorded of how, in 1775, they rescued from the dark-hued enemy, Vincent Druce, a badly wounded trooper. So kindly was the feeling that existed between this trooper and his Captain that Mr. Druce, shortly before his death, which occurred Nov. 29, 1677, called Mr. Prentice to witness his will.

On June 24, 1675, Mr. Prentice was made a Captain, and rendered effective service in King Philip's war, especially in the Narragansett fight. His acquaintance with the Indian character particularly fitted him for dealing with the enemy. He was one of the commissioners appointed in 1675, to put to service captive Indian children. Mr. Prentice became the special friend and counselor of converted Indians, who in 1691 petitioned the General Court to appoint him their overseer and magistrate. Additional proofs of his popularity are shown by the facts that in 1672 and 1674 he represented Newtown in the General Court; that, in 1675, after the burning of Lancaster, Mass., by King Philip and his Indians, he was appointed commissioner for the re-building of that place; and that, in 1689, he and his troops were sent to Rhode Island to arrest Sir Edmund Andros.

(II) Thomas Prentice, Jr., second son of Capt. Thomas, born Jan. 22, 1649, became a member of his father's troop of horse. During his life he accumulated considerable property, and upon his death left to his heirs an estate valued at £354, 58. On March 20, 1675, Thomas Prentice married Sarah Stanton, who was born in 1655, daughter of Capt. Thomas Stanton, the well-known Indian interpreter. Mrs. Prentice survived her husband, who died April 19, 1685, in his thirty-seventh year, and she later married Capt. William Denison. She died in 1713 at the age of fifty-nine. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice had four children.

(III) Samuel Prentice, Sr., third son of Thomas, Jr., born about 1680, married Esther Hammond, daughter of Nathaniel Hammond, of Newtown, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice had ten children. Among their grandchildren was Judge Samuel Prentice, of Montpelier, Vt. Falling heir to part of the vast estate in Stonington, Conn., owned by Capt. Thomas, Samuel, Sr., made his home in that place. The old house in which he lived, a substantial two-story building twenty-eight by forty-two feet, is still standing, part of it being over a hundred and fifty years old. Mr. Prentice lived to the age of forty-eight, and died April 24, 1728.

(IV) Joseph Prentice, son of Samuel, Sr., born in Newtown, Mass., Jan. 26, 1704, married, Nov. 10, 1725, Mary Wheeler and they had nine children.

(V) Elisha Prentice, fourth son of Joseph, born in Newtown, Jan. 1, 1737, married and had six children.

(VI) Capt. Elisha Prentice (2), third son of Elisha, was born Aug. 30, 1764, and resided at Griswold, Conn., where he was probably the Revolutionary pensioner of that name. He was married to Deborah Weeden, of Preston, Conn., and they had ten children: Nancy, Abby, Daniel, Elisha, Debby, Sally, Charles, Frederick, Mary, and John Perdy. Capt. Prentice died in 1840 in his seventy-fifth year.

(VII) John Perdy Prentice, born in Griswold, Conn., Jan. 31, 1818, moved to Pomfret about 1838, where he engaged in farming. On March 26, 1835, he married Rebecca Lester, of Griswold, who was born May 5, 1806. She died in Pomfret, Feb. 17, 1845. On Nov. 27, 1845, Mr. Prentice married Caroline A. Davidson, of Brooklyn, Connecticut.

By his first marriage Mr. Prentice had five children: (1) George Lester, who is mentioned below. (2) Tirzah, born Nov. 12, 1837, who married Uriah Carpenter. He died in Minnesota, May 6, 1871. (3) James Lester, born Aug. 22, 1839, who is a truck gardener in Danielson, Conn. He married Lucy Cushing, and they had two children: Stephen and Lizzie. (4) Charles, for many years an ice dealer, later a silk manufacturer of Putnam. He was born in Griswold, Conn., Aug. 27, 1841, and died in Putnam, July 17, 1897. On March 13, 1864, he married Ann M. Williams, and they had one daughter, Minnie Rebecca, born July 29, 1867, who grew to womanhood and married William David Goodwin. (5) Rebecca L., born Sept. 13, 1843, died July 2, 1844.

By the second marriage there were two children, twins, Edward N. and Edwin B., who were born Aug. 28, 1846. The first went West and died there, Jan. 11, 1874; the second married, Oct. 19, 1871, Mary A. Taylor. He died in Webster, Mass. Feb. 1, 1875.

John P. Prentice owned one of the finest farms in Pomfret and was eminently successful as an agriculturist. He died in Pomfret July 2, 1863, after a short illness caused by breaking his spine in being thrown from a wagon.

A member of the Congregational Church, Mr. Prentice was a strongly religious man and much opposed to war. He considered the Rebellion a great blot on our history. In politics, however, he was a staunch Republican.

(VIII) George Lester Prentice, of Putnam, Windham county, by persistent and varied efforts, has risen to the position of leading ice dealer in his city. Born in Griswold, Conn., Feb. 3, 1836, he moved with his parents when about six years old to Pomfret. Here he attended school until he was seventeen years old, when he went to farming on the home place.

It was in Hartford, as a burnisher with Rogers Bros., that Mr. Prentice began his active business career. Here he remained several years and by strict application to business acquired much valuable experience. Then the Civil war broke out putting an end to his activities in this special line. On Aug. 15, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Co. K, 21st C. V. I., and went with his regiment to the James River, serving there under Gen. Butler. Among the battles in which he was engaged were Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, Fredericksburg, Newbern, S. C., Suffolk, Va., and the siege of Petersburg. On April 3, 1865, he also fought in Richmond and he was in that city during the explosion of the mines.

From the time of his enlistment till he was mustered out at Richmond, Va., in 1865, Mr. Prentice served with his regiment constantly, with the exception of a twenty-four hour leave of absence. Despite the great exposure to which he was subjected he escaped without a single wound. A few days before his enlistment, Aug. 11, 1862, he married Caroline Louise Deans, of Eastford, daughter of James and Sally Brown (Foster) Deans, farming people. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice have had three children: Mary Estelle, born in Eastford, Sept. 15, 1860, died in that place Feb. 8, 1869. Harry Foster, born in Putnam, March 15, 1870, married Oct. 20, 1897 Mabel C. Brown, of Putnam, daughter of Edwin Brown. They have no children. Lena Augusta, born in Putnam June 1, 1873, lives at home.

After the war Mr. Prentice retired to a thirty-acre farm which he purchased in Eastford, Conn., and remained there three years. Then selling his place, he went to Putnam and assisted his brother for about a year at stonemasonry and the ice business. The next two years he managed with much success the John A. Carpenter farm in Putnam. Having by this time laid by a small sum of money he purchased a half interest in his brother's ice business, and for several years continued in this line under the firm name of Charles Prentice and Co. During this period they also engaged for about a year in the fish business. Finally withdrawing from the ice firm, Mr. Prentice started a street sprinkler in the city which became so profitable that he continued to work it for sixteen years. At the same time he greatly increased his income by running a steam sawmill. Other public works of his were the laying of the city water pipes and the placing, in 1886, of the first water trough, which is located at the corner of Main and Pomfret streets. In 1890 Mr. Prentice again resumed the ice business, this time starting in on a small scale by himself. Previous experience and excellent management enabled him in a short time to work up a paying custom, and in 1892 business had enlarged to such an extent that he took in his son Harry F. as a partner, under the firm name George L. Prentice and Son. They are still engaged in this line, giving excellent satisfaction to customers.

Mr. Prentice has by steady work and wise management become very well to do, and his residence on Mechanics street, erected in 1898, is one of the pleasantest in Putnam. Fraternally he has been prominent in many lodges in Putnam, among them A. G. Warner Post No. 54, G. A. R., of which he has been quartermaster and is now sergeant major; Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of which he is Chaplain; Wolf Den Encampment, No. 33, I. O. O. F.; and Mizpah Lodge, No. 33, Daughters of Rebekah. As a Republican Mr. Prentice takes a keen interest in politics, but is not, however, an office seeker. Both he and his wife are highly respected members of the Second Congregational Church.

GEORGE H. FITTS, a wealthy retired citizen of Ashford, Windham county, and formerly extensively engaged in business in Wisconsin and Illinois, comes of a fine old New England family of this section, variously represented in the mercantile, agricultural and political life of Connecticut. He was born on the paternal homestead in Ashford, April 10, 1843, a son of Stephen, Jr., and Waity (Moore) Fitts, the latter a daughter of John and Catherine (Reynolds) Moore.

The first of the family to arrive in America was Robert Fitts, or Fitz, who, with his wife, Grace Lord, was among the very early settlers of Salisbury, Mass. Tradition says that Mr. Fitts settled in Ipswich in 1635, to which town he returned in later life from Salisbury, where his death occurred May 9, 1665. His wife died in Ipswich, April 25, 1684, but the son and only child of the family, Abraham, was probably the child of a former marriage.

Abraham Fitts, son of Robert, was born in England about 1629, being nearly ten years old when his father settled in Salisbury. In 1655 he married Sarah Thompson, daughter of Simon Thompson, and settled in Salisbury, where he lived for a few years, then removing to Ipswich, the town of his wife's birth, where she died June 5, 1664. In 1675 he served in the Narragansett expedition, and again in 1690 joined the expedition for the capture of Quebec. In recognition of his military service his descendants received lands by grant of the General Court. He died March 27, 1692.

Abraham Fitts (2), son of Abraham, married (first) Margaret, daughter of Sergeant John and Anna Choate, the emigrating ancestors of that distinguished family in America. The wife died Feb. 28, 1692, and Mr. Fitts married for his second wife Mary Ross, and died in 1714.

Abraham Fitts (3), son of Abraham (2) by the first marriage, married (first) March 3, 1722, Phoebe Fuller, who died Aug. 25, 1739. For his second wife Mr. Fitts married Widow Elizabeth Cross, and his death occurred in June, 1763. Previous to 1746 himself and wife had been admitted to the First Church of Ipswich.

Daniel Fitts, the only son of Abraham (3) and Phoebe (Fuller) Fitts, who lived to adult years, was baptized May 2, 1725, and married Christian Smith Dec. 15, 1750. He had ten children, viz.: Daniel, Abraham, Moses, Eunice, Israel, Stephen, Solomon, James, David and Lydia. He came from Ipswich, Mass., to Pomfret, Conn., and, after living there about a year, removed with his family to Ashford in 1770, buying a farm of 360 acres located "about one—one-half miles northwest of the old meeting-house." It was bounded south by land of Col. Thomas Knowlton, and embraced about 100 acres of the farm which was owned and occupied by William Knowlton (father of Col. Thomas) from 1748 to time of his death in 1753; and it is a noteworthy fact that about one-half of the 360 acres was owned and occupied successively by his son Stephen, grandson Stephen, Jr., and granddaughter Maria (Fitts) Moseley from 1795 to 1889. Daniel Fitts no doubt inherited his great-grandfather's military spirit, as he is found in the field at the very beginning of the Revolutionary war, serving for ten days in the Ashford company of Capt. Thomas Knowlton on the Lexington Alarm in April, 1775, it being the first organized body of troops from beyond the State to arrive in the vicinity of Boston. Although fifty years of age, having a wife and five minor children, he re-enlisted again May 6, 1775, in the company of Capt. Thomas Knowlton, being the 5th Company of the 3rd Regiment, Israel Putnam, colonel. He died while in the service near Boston Sept. 7, 1775, the company record not stating whether from wounds received in conflict with the enemy or from disease, and he was buried in the immediate vicinity. A few years after his death his widow married Ebenezer Mason, of Ashford.

Stephen Fitts, son of Daniel, was baptized April 11, 1762, and was quite young when his parents removed from Ipswich to Connecticut. He was a farmer during his active life, and died at his home in Ashford, Feb. 16, 1841. He was very successful and industrious, and accumulated considerable property. On Jan. 1, 1793, he married Polly Knowlton, born Jan. 11, 1767, a daughter of Col. Thomas Knowlton, of Revolutionary fame. Col. Knowlton was descended from Capt. William Knowlton, who sailed from England for Nova Scotia about 1633, and died during the passage. His wife, Ann, continued her journey with the rest of the family, but later removed to Ipswich. Mrs. Fitts' line was through John, John (2), Nathaniel, Nathaniel (2), William and Col. Thomas Knowlton. Polly (Knowlton) Fitts died Sept. 27, 1845. Her children were as follows: Christian, born Aug. 11, 1794, married William Loomis, a farmer occupying the Col. Knowlton farm in Ashford, and died March 13, 1879, leaving two children, Mary Ann and Chester, the former of whom is unmarried and living on the old homestead, while the latter, who was born Feb. 8, 1822, was a successful farmer and stock dealer and died unmarried Oct. 1, 1874; Stephen, Jr., born Oct. 29, 1798; Maria, born in 1802, married Selden Moseley, a farmer of Ashford, had one child, Nathan J., who married Betsey Ames, and died in New London, Conn., Oct. 9, 1900, Mrs. Moseley, herself, dying April 29, 1889; and Thomas K. died at the age of twenty-three years.

Stephen Fitts, Jr., was reared on his father's farm in Ashford, and his youth was devoted to hard farm work and attendance at the district schools. After the death of his father he came into possession of the homestead, upon which he continued to live until about sixty years of age. He then purchased an adjoining farm, now occupied by his son, John S., upon which he conducted farming and stock raising, and where he died Oct. 23, 1875. He was a man of sound judgment and sterling integrity, and for his time was well-to-do, the principal part of his money having been made in stock. He was very industrious and also economical, and became a large land owner. During the greater part of his life he was blessed with good health, and only for a few years did he realize the disadvantage of waning powers. A staunch Democrat, he filled many important offices in the community, including that of selectman, and he represented his town in the Legislature of 1852. He married Waity Moore, of Union, Conn., who was born Jan. 8, 1808, and who died July 15, 1858. Their four children were: Thomas K., born Oct. 23, 1831; John S., born May 12, 1839; George H., born April 10, 1843; and Mary C., born Feb. 21, 1845. Mary C. married Charles J. Gifford, a farmer of Ashford, who died in 1883, and she at present resides in Willimantic. Two children were born to herself and husband: George E., who married Jessie Metcalf and lives in Willimantic and has one child, Marion K.; and Kate E., the wife of Arthur J. Hanna, of Willimantic.

THOMAS K. FITTS was born in Ashford, educated in the public schools, and reared to farm work. He made good use of his educational chances, and for many years was engaged in teaching school. He then went to Hartford and entered the employ of David Clark, a prominent and wealthy merchant of that city, with whom he remained for more than forty years. Upon his return to Ashford in 1900 he retired from business life, and has since enjoyed the competence accumulated during his industrious and thrifty career. He has always retained his residence and interest in Ashford, and has contributed largely towards the well-being of the town. As a Democrat he has been heard of in numerous capacities, and besides the minor offices discharged with credit, he has represented the town in the Legislature. In 1902 he was a delegate from Ashford to the Constitutional Convention. Mr. Fitts has never married.

JOHN S. FITTS was born in the homestead in Ashford, and resides on the farm occupied by his father at the time of his death, where he was successfully engaged in extensive agricultural and stock-raising enterprises. Like his brothers, he is a Democrat, has been a member of the Legislature, and has held several minor offices. He has been particularly active in promoting the prosperity of his neighborhood, and is esteemed a man of liberal views and commendable enterprise. His first wife, formerly Josephine M. Chapman, daughter of Gideon F. Chapman, bore him two children, of whom Burton T., a graduate of Woodstock Academy, married Alice Beveridge, and lives in Providence, R. I., where he holds a responsible position with the Gorham Manufacturing Company; and Fred J., also a graduate of the Woodstock Academy, is living at home. His wife died Nov. 10, 1879, and for his second wife he married, in 1882, Ellen L. James, of Tolland.

GEORGE H. FITTS was born in Ashford, and, after attending the local district and high schools, completed his studies at the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield, his instructor being David P. Corbin, who later achieved fame as a teacher. When nineteen years of age, in the spring of 1862, he became a clerk in the office of Bolles, Sexton & Co., jobbers of dry goods in Hartford. In their store Sexton Bro. & Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., had their Eastern office, and in 1866 George Sexton (of Bolles, Sexton & Co.), then their Eastern representative and attorney, put Mr. Fitts in charge of the accounts of that firm, in addition to his various other duties. His services were retained by Bolles, Sexton & Co. until they retired from business in 1871, at which time Sexton Bro. & Co.'s Hartford office was discontinued. He then accepted the position of cashier in Sexton Bro. & Co.'s home office in Milwaukee, commencing his duties in March, 1871. They were the leading wholesale dry goods house of that city, and did a large business throughout the northwest. In 1874 the firm name was changed to Storm & Hill, with slight change in personnel of firm. That year he was put in charge of the collections and disbursements and made assistant in the credit department.

Thomas H. Fitts

Geo. H. Fitts

As Chicago promised a better field for the dry goods business the firm removed, in 1881, to that city, where the business was soon after incorporated as a stock company, without change in name. Mr. Fitts then became a large stockholder and was elected treasurer of the company. From this time, in addition to the responsible duties of treasurer, he was in charge of the credit department until the company retired from business in 1892. The company and its predecessors for nearly fifty years did a successful business and maintained a high and undoubted credit and an enviable reputation for honorable dealing.

The same year Mr. Fitts returned to Connecticut, and has since spent his summers in his native town of Ashford, making that his home. He has never taken any particular interest in politics. He is a member of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, as a descendant of Col. Thomas Knowlton and Daniel Fitts, and is also a member of the Connecticut Historical Society. With his brothers, he attends the Congregational Church, and with them contributes liberally for the support of that denomination. All are public-spirited, honorable and intelligent gentlemen, and their native town has profited to a considerable extent by their business and social achievements.

THE MOORE FAMILY, from which was descended Waity (Moore) Fitts, is traced to John Moore, of Richmond, R. I., who was born in England toward the close of the seventeenth century, and who is first heard of through the record of the birth of his three children in Westerly, R. I. He was a freeman in 1728, and in 1704 he bought a tract of land in the northern part of the town of Richmond, R. I., which property is still in the possession of the family. On it is located the ancient burying ground of the family, the graves there containing the bodies of the original John, as well as a number of his descendants. His marriage probably occurred in England, and his wife, Mercy Easton, bore him four children: Robert, probably born in Westerly, died about 1787; Stephen, born April 20, 1716, died at sea; George, born May 28, 1719, died unmarried; and David, born Sept. 13, 1721. John Moore died in September, 1753, his wife having died the previous year.

Robert Moore, eldest son of John and Mercy (Easton) Moore, lived on the farm adjoining that of his father, and for a number of years kept a tavern in an old house now demolished. This old house stood on the site of the homestead now occupied by Robert I. Moore, in Richmond, R. I. Robert married Hannah James, daughter of William James, and they had nine children: Mary; Miriam; Lucy; Sarah; Annie; George; Hannah; Gideon, who died young; and Robert.

George Moore, born Dec. 15, 1752, married Waity Greene (born June 1, 1755, and died May 6, 1817), a lineal descendant of John Coggeshall, the first president of the Rhode Island Colony. It is said that George Moore was a soldier during the Revolutionary war, and that he was the father of fourteen children, all born in Richmond, R. I., viz.: Anna, born March 10, 1776, died March 12, 1787; Henry, born Feb. 15, 1778, died in September, 1837; James, born March 11, 1780, died May 27, 1829; John; Daniel, born April 21, 1784, died Aug. 22, 1830; Clark, born March 11, 1786, died Jan. 31, 1856; George, born Feb. 4, 1788, died Jan. 22, 1861; William W., born Jan. 16, 1790, died Dec. 18, 1870; Waity, born March 7, 1792; Alice, born April 18, 1794; an infant, born Oct. 4, 1796, died Oct. 12, 1796; Anna, born Sept. 2, 1798, died Dec. 3, 1882; Amos, born July 2, 1800, died April 6, 1878; and Oliver Greene, born June 17, 1803, died Jan. 27, 1806.

John Moore, born April 18, 1782, died in Eastford, Conn., June 28, 1859. In 1805 he married his first wife, Catherine Reynolds, daughter of Judge Jesse Reynolds, of Richmond, R. I., who died Nov. 8, 1827, aged forty-one years. His second wife was formerly Lovisa Havens, of Eastford, whom he married Feb. 22, 1829. The four children of John and Catherine (Reynolds) Moore were: Waity, born Jan. 8, 1808, married Stephen Fitts, Jr.; George J., born July 19, 1810, died in Louisville, Ky., where he was for many years a merchant; Jesse, born July 25, 1814, was for nearly forty years a prosperous wholesale merchant in Louisville, Ky., and died in Worcester, Mass., in 1898; and Ransom, born in 1816, died in 1820.

OLIVER H. PERRY (deceased), for several years judge of the Probate Court, and one of Woodstock's honored citizens, was born July 7, 1821, in Greenfield, Mass., and died July 20, 1896, in South Woodstock, Windham county.

(I) Daniel Perry, grandfather of Judge Perry, was born in Rehoboth, Mass., and died in Woodstock. He married Judith Hunt, of Rehoboth, Mass., and to this union was born the following family: John, a farmer who lived and died in Woodstock Valley, and was twice married; Otis, father of Judge Perry; Daniel, married and lived in Woodstock Valley; Judith, married Abiel Fox, grandfather of John O. Fox, of Putnam; Sally, married Charles Smith, lives in Woodstock; Nancy, married Newman Walker, of Eastford. Daniel Perry located in Woodstock when still a young man; he there became the owner of a valuable farm in Woodstock Valley and engaged in the breeding of choice stock which he shipped to the West Indies.

(II) Otis Perry, father of Judge Perry, was born Dec. 29, 1782, in Woodstock, and died May 22, 1863, in Woodstock Valley. He married Polly Carpenter, a daughter of Chester Carpenter, of West Woodstock, born Sept. 16, 1795, in Woodstock, who died Feb. 20, 1872, in Woodstock Valley. Four children were born to this union: Mary Walker, born Jan. 13, 1820, in Greenfield, Mass. She married (first) Sept. 16, 1839, Chester A. Paine, of Woodstock, son of Abraham Paine, of West Woodstock. Chester Paine died May 24, 1862, aged forty-four years. Their children were, Lydia M., born Nov. 25, 1840, who married Albert Kenyon; Charles A., born May 12, 1844, who married Martha Carpenter; Mary E., born April 15, 1847, who married Perry M. Wilson, who served in the Civil war and later became postmaster of Putnam, where he died; John C., born Aug. 15, 1849, who married Fanny Stetson, of Woodstock, and is now living in Bridgeport, where he is connected with the Wheeler and Wilson Sewing Machine Co. Mary W. Perry married (second) Nov. 16, 1870, Waldo Phillips, of Woodstock Valley, and he died Sept. 18, 1899, aged eighty years, leaving no issue. Oliver H. was the second child and eldest son of Otis Perry. Gilbert the third child, was born Dec. 6, 1823, and died Sept. 4, 1830. Charles Otis, youngest child of Otis Perry, was born May 19, 1825, and died Jan. 27, 1829.

Otis Perry spent his life in West Woodstock, with the exception of a brief period in Greenfield, Mass., and was engaged in the occupations of farming and milling. For a number of years he operated the Hiscox mills in Woodstock Valley, later disposing of them to Alba Hiscox. Mr. Perry then took up farming in Woodstock Valley, where his death occurred. He was a very successful man for his day.

In religious matters, Mr. Perry was a member of the Woodstock Valley Advent Church. After giving his firm support to the old line Whig party he became a staunch Republican. In disposition he was quiet and unassuming but always had a pleasant word for everyone, and this combined with his genial manner made him many friends.

(III) Judge Oliver H. Perry was born in Greenfield, Mass., where his father was located for a short time. When Oliver was two years old the family returned to Woodstock, and at a suitable age, he began to attend the district school of the town. Later he was given the opportunity of a course at Wilbraham, Mass., academy, thus completing his education, which was a good English one. After leaving school he returned to the home farm, where he remained until 1854, with the exception of two years which he spent as a clerk for Otis Hiscox, in Woodstock Valley.

In 1844, Judge Perry's father retired from active labor and gave him a deed to the homestead, in consideration of the filial care bestowed upon his parents in their declining years. This farm was located in Woodstock Valley. In 1854, Judge Perry sold this property and removed to New York City, where he embarked in the flour and feed business. For eleven years he was a member of the firm of Phillips & Perry, his partner being his brother-in-law, Waldo Phillips. This firm had a contract with the government to furnish provisions to the army during the Civil war. In 1865 Mr. Perry disposed of his interests in the firm to Mr. Phillips and returned to Woodstock. Purchasing the home in South Woodstock, he spent there the remaining years of his useful life, becoming largely identified with the interests and affairs of the town.

Judge Perry's latter years were not given exclusively to the management of his farm, public affairs having claimed much of his time and attention. In many ways he was well equipped for the duties of a public career and most efficiently filled every office entrusted to him. Judge Perry was a notable exception to the ordinary politician; his desire was faithfully to perform the duties of each position with the best results to his constituents, irrespective of personal aggrandizement. His reputation for ability, prudence and fidelity to public trusts, led to his selection as executor and administrator, as referee and commissioner on some of the most considerable estates in the community brought before the public for final adjustment.

Always a student, Judge Perry's mind expanded with study; in addition to a wide personal knowledge he became thoroughly familiar with all current town matters, and was not satisfied until he had also absorbed every detail of the legal phases pertaining to the same. Judge Perry was the repository for general knowledge of affairs of a local nature.

In early days Judge Perry was an avowed Abolitionist and always voted the Whig ticket. Upon the organization of the Republican party Judge Perry became an ardent and staunch supporter of it, never flinching when called upon to assist in sustaining men and measures of which his judgment did not approve. At the beginning of his political career he was appointed justice of the peace, and in 1854 represented his town in the Connecticut House of Representatives. Again he served for several years as justice of the peace, and in 1880 was made Judge of the Probate Court. This position he filled with efficiency and honor until 1891, when the age limit of seventy years came upon him, and he was compelled to resign.

Judge Perry's religious belief was that of the Second Adventist Church; he attended the Advent Church, of East Woodstock, which he liberally supported.

Judge Perry was identified with many of the business interests of the community, and was a director of the Putnam Savings Bank, a position he held until his death. He was also one of the original incorporators of the Woodstock Creamery Corporation, and served as treasurer until his death. Judge Perry was also one of the committee chosen to purchase and erect the building of the Woodstock Agricultural Association, of which he was for years president and treasurer. His ability and judgment made his services invaluable in the settlement of estates and in kindred offices of trust.

Judge Perry's death occurred July 20, 1896, and his funeral was largely attended, all classes being anxious to pay tribute to his memory. Both before and since his death no one could be found to say an unkind word relative to the life and works of this venerable and honored man. Many of his largest charities were hidden from the public gaze, and no one ever applied to him in vain for help. His fund of sympathy was large, he drew upon it freely in support of the troubles of others, and endeared himself to all.

On Sept. 24, 1844, Judge Perry married Miss Mary Ann Underwood, born March 6, 1821. Mrs. Perry was a daughter of Deacon Laban Underwood, of West Woodstock, and Sally (Phillips) Underwood, of West Woodstock. No children were born to this marriage. The home of Judge and Mrs. Perry was not without young life, however, for these good people adopted Sarah Hiscox, a daughter of Mrs. Perry's sister. Sarah married Charles Davis, one of the leading grocers and meat merchants in Hartford, Conn. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis.

S. TRACY NOBLE. No family in Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., can trace a clearer ancestry than can S. Tracy Noble, who since 1865 has been a resident of that city and for many years has held a very responsible position with one of its greatest industrial companies.

Mr. Noble is a representative of the seventh generation of this old family, his direct line being through Leonard, Henry, Matthew (3), Matthew (2), Matthew (1), to (I) Thomas Noble, the progenitor, who was born as early as 1632, probably in England. He was admitted as an inhabitant of Boston, Mass., in 1653, and in that year removed to Springfield, Mass. Thence as early as 1669 he moved to Westfield, Mass., where he was made a freeman in 1681, and in that year united with the church. Thomas Noble was a farmer and in the winter worked at tailoring. On Nov. 1, 1660, he married Hannah Warriner, born in Springfield in 1643, who united with the church in Westfield, in 1680. Mr. Noble died in 1704.

(II) Matthew Noble, son of Thomas, born about 1668, married Dec. 10, 1690, Hannah, born Feb. 21, 1672, daughter of Thomas and Constant (Hawes) Dewey. Both Mr. and Mrs. Noble joined the Westfield church in 1728. It is said that Matthew Noble was the first white man who went to reside in Sheffield, Mass., passing the first winter with no associates except the Indians. He returned to Westfield in the spring, and in June, along with his daughter, again went to Sheffield, she being the first white woman to go into the town. Mr. Noble died in Sheffield about 1744, and Mrs. Noble died after July 9, 1745.

(III) Matthew Noble (2), son of Matthew, born

Sept. 9, 1698, married (first) May 31, 1720, Joanna, born March 4, 1697, in Springfield, daughter of Samuel and Abigail (Brooks) Stebbins. Both Mr. and Mrs. Noble united with the church in Westfield, in 1728. Mr. Noble served a number of years as selectman, was moderator of the town meeting in 1740 and a representative at the General Court in 1757. He was a saddler, tanner and cord wainer. His death occurred Aug. 8, 1771, and his wife passed away in 1763.

(IV) Matthew Noble (3), son of Matthew (2), born July 27, 1736, in Westfield, married Sept. 23, 1758, Lydia Eager, born June 20, 1740, daughter of Capt. Benjamin and Abigail (Johnson) Eager, of Shrewsbury, Mass. Matthew (3) resided on the farm of his father in Westfield. Mr. Noble was a tanner and saddler. He died Aug. 30, 1804, and his widow passed away Sept. 28, 1811.

(V) Henry Noble, son of Matthew (3), born Dec. 17, 1781, in Westfield, Mass., married (first) Dec. 5, 1802, Betsey Dewey, born Oct. 25, 1781, daughter of Benjamin and Rhoda (Loomis) Dewey. This wife bore one child, Eliza, who died in infancy. Betsey (Dewey) Noble died March 7, 1807. Henry Noble married (second) March 9, 1809, Sally Fowler, born June 5, 1784, daughter of Deacon Ebenezer and Sally (Noble) Fowler, of Westfield. Mr. Noble died May 23 or 24, 1850, and Mrs. Noble passed away Nov. 27, 1863. The children of this marriage were: Henry, born July 19, 1810; Leonard, born June 15, 1813; Nathan, born Nov. 9, 1815, a whipmaker, who lived in Westfield, Mass., many years; Codad, born Dec. 13, 1821, drowned at Westfield, Mass., May 15, 1827.

(VI) Leonard Noble, son of Henry, and father of Samuel Tracy Noble of Rockville, was born in Massachusetts, and became more of a traveler than many of his ancestors. In October, 1830, he went to Tolland, Conn., where he entered a shop to learn the blacksmith trade, remaining until August, 1832. He finished his apprenticeship with Albert Dart and Cyrus White in Rockville. He was one of the skilled workmen who forged the huge bolts and iron stays in the walls of Adams' stone mill at Rockville, and his trade took him through Tolland county, where he worked at various places until he migrated West.

It was about 1835 when Leonard Noble left Rockville and went to Collinsville, and in October of the following year he started in the direction of the setting sun. With his family went Manton H. Hammond and family, Mr. Hammond being his brother-in-law. They made the entire trip with horse and carriage, for it was necessary in those days to make such journeys by conveyances of some kind, and weeks were consumed in transit.

Manton Hammond settled near Detroit, but Mr. Noble went as far West as Chicago. He found the extreme sandy soil not attractive, and although land was offered him at a few dollars per acre, he was not gifted with second sight and turned his back upon it. He traveled into Michigan, where he bought land about twenty miles west of Ann Arbor. This was at what is now Pinckney. Here Mr. Noble set up the tools of his trade, built the first frame house and was one of the genuine pioneers. When the country became more settled he began dealing in agricultural implements, and resided in the growing town until September, 1873.

Mr. Noble returned east and came, first to Rockville, and soon after was made station agent at Talcottville. He had married Nov. 26, 1835, in Coventry, Conn., Miss Anna Wright Loomis, daughter of Samuel and Irene (Tracy) Loomis. Mrs. Noble was born Dec. 11, 1814, in North Coventry, where her father, Samuel Loomis, was a farmer. This wife died soon after Mr. Noble's location at Talcottville, Feb. 8, 1875. She was taken to Pinckney, Mich., for burial by the side of her daughter, Rosa Ellen, whose death had been the only break in the family circle up to that time.

In September, 1875, Mr. Noble was made railroad agent at South Windham, Conn., and there, Oct. 10, 1876, he married his sister-in-law, Mrs. Calista Pryor, widow of Prosper Pryor, born April 10, 1817. Mrs. Noble passed away in New Haven, Conn., while living with her daughter by her former marriage.

After leaving South Windham, Mr. Noble made his last trip to the West. While there he made his home with his daughter Elizabeth, at Howell, Mich., and it was during a visit that he was making in Westfield, Mass., that his death occurred. He was interred by the side of his wife in Pinckney, Michigan.

Mr. Noble was a man of fine appearance, well-built and dignified. He was well known and universally respected and was one of the first members of the Congregational Church in Pinckney and one of its first deacons. In politics he was a Whig, an outspoken and zealous Abolitionist, his house being a shelter for escaping slaves. In later years he was identified with the Republican party.

Leonard Noble's children were all by his first marriage, and as follows: (1) Frances, born Aug. 1, 1837, in Pinckney, Mich., married Samuel Grimes of that town, where they reside; (2) Sarah E., born Aug. 31, 1841, married A. Edgar Noble, and they reside at Howell, Mich.; (3) Henry L., born April 5, 1843, in Pinckney, Mich., in April, 1863, located in Rockville, Conn., where he has remained in the mercantile business ever since. He is the oldest clothing merchant in the city. Henry married Jan. 5, 1867, Esther Buffington, a native of Willington, Conn., born Sept. 14, 1845, who died Dec. 29, 1868, her one child, Cora E., dying in infancy. Henry married (second) May 23, 1871, Miss Flora Eliza Dimock, born in Windsor, Conn., Sept. 25, 1852, daughter of Edwin Bruce and Eliza Jane (Clark) Dimock, who died Jan. 4, 1900. Her children were: Ella E., Edward H., Herbert D. and Katie J. (4) Mary C., born Dec. 10, 1844, married Charles D. Morse and lives in Napoleon, Mich.: (5) Fidelia Annette, born Jan. 11, 1847, is now Mrs. Van Rensselaer Davis, of Lebo, Kansas; (6) S. Tracy, of this sketch; (7) Rosa E., born Aug. 30, 1852, died June 7, 1872, from heart disease. She was a very bright young lady and a popular teacher; (8) C. Adelbert, born July 4, 1854, is a farmer of Whately, Massachusetts.

(VII) S. Tracy Noble of Rockville, was born Dec. 5, 1848, in Pinckney, Mich., and was reared in his native town. His school advantages were the best the place afforded, but the family was large and his services soon became useful. After the age of eight years his schooling was only that to be obtained during the winter months. Mr. Noble's education in agricultural matters however, was very thorough, and as soon as able his services were offered to surrounding farmers. His wages were not only small but his pay had frequently to be taken in farm products, one time in sheep.

Mr. Noble enjoyed the advantages afforded by a select school for a short time owing to the overcrowded condition of the district school, and so ambitious was he to obtain a satisfactory education that after securing a clerkship in a store he learned his lessons at odd moments and went to the teacher to recite as occasion offered. Such energy and perseverance were rewarded. Mr. Noble became intelligent and well instructed, his general knowledge through life having far exceeded that of many others who enjoyed far better earlier opportunities. He remained in and around Pinckney until July, 1865, when he came to Rockville, Conn. His brother, Henry L., had preceded him there and was employed by H. C. Parker, who was then the postmaster and leading merchant of Rockville.

Mr. Noble at once secured employment with Mr. Parker as a clerk in his store, which was in the old Doane block, on the corner of Market and East Main streets. His wages were fixed at $100 per year with board for the first year, and he was required to sleep in the rear of the store. When Mr. Parker disposed of a portion of his stock to Edward Shelton, now of Hartford, Mr. Noble entered the employ of the latter in the capacity of clerk, remaining with him for three years. He then returned to Mr. Parker, with whom he continued until 1869, when he was made agent of the Adams Express Co., whose representative he remained at Rockville until the last of January, 1884.

On Feb. 1, 1884, Mr. Noble entered the employ of the Hockanum Co., at Rockville, as bookkeeper, his early duties there being keeping the labor account. With this great company he has remained ever since. Year after year his efficiency has increased until he is now regarded as one of the most valuable men in the employ of the company. Responsible and important duties have devolved upon him, but so thorough is his system and so excellent his methods, that his part in the great business of this industry moves like clock-work. Since coming o Rockville Mr. Noble has never been for two lays out of a position, having been given occupation insouciant.

On Dec. 8, 1868, Mr. Noble was married in Waterville, Conn., to Miss Annie Fisher, a native of Nottinghamshire, England, who was born Oct. 14, 1850, and came with her parents to the United States in 1851. She was a daughter of George and Mary (Billard) Fisher, the former of whom was a farmer, who came to America to better his fortunes. Their water journey consumed four weeks, and they settled in Scitico, Conn. Mr. Fisher's death was caused by accident, in Hartford, Conn. His wife died Aug. 8, 1899, in Milford, Conn.

The paternal grandmother of Mrs. Noble lived to be ninety-six years of age. She was twice married and had fourteen children. Her second marriage was to a Mr. Hickton, and she was permitted to celebrate her fiftieth anniversary of the second marriage, residing at that time in Scitico, Connecticut.

The children of George and Mary (Billard) Fisher were: Annie, who became the wife of Mr. Noble; Hattie, who married Albert Aspinwall, of Southington, Conn., and died Feb. 12, 1888; and Maria, who died in childhood. Mrs. Noble was reared in Waterbury, Conn., from the time she was five years of age.

There were four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Noble, two dying in infancy. Two daughters, Eva L. and Edith E., are accomplished and cultured young ladies. The former graduated from the Rockville High School in the class of 1892, and New Britain Normal in 1894, after teaching one year at Naugatuck, Conn. She has since been one of the most successful teachers in Rockville. The latter graduated from the Rockville High School in the class of 1894, and for some time has been a popular teacher in the West District School in that city.

From his first vote Mr. Noble has been attached to the Republican party. To really gauge the value of Mr. Noble to his adopted city, one must look beyond all matters of political or personal ambition. For years he was chairman of the Board of Relief, declining at last to serve longer. Mr. Noble has been justice of the peace, and in the fall of 1901 was elected a member of the Common Council of Rockville from the Fourth ward. Since 1883 he has been a member of the school committee of the West District, where he has served continuously, with the exception of one year, during which time the number of schools has increased from seven to eleven. With his family Mr. Noble has been prominent in the Union Congregational Church, in which he has been a deacon since 1890. He is chairman of the Library Committee, and treasurer of the Sabbath School fund. For nine years he gave his services as superintendent of the Sabbath School. For fourteen years Mr. Noble was the President of the Band of Hope Society auxiliary to the old Second Church and later to the Union Church Sabbath School. He was a charter member of the Golden Cross Society of Rockville.

Mr. Noble has seen many changes take place in Rockville since his first coming there so many years ago. At that time he was not burdened with real estate and the city was not then the beautiful one it now is Mr. Noble having done his share towards its permanent improvement. After his marriage he first resided on Prospect street and later purchased land and built the fourth house that was erected on Talcott avenue, this beautiful thoroughfare then being known as Davis Lane. In June, 1876, he bought his handsome home on Union street and this has been the family residence to the present time.

In S. Tracy Noble is found one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Rockville, a man whose influence has always been to elevate the tone of his surroundings and to increase the educational usefulness of his city. To have attained his present ample means legitimately, to have won his way to the confidence of his business associates, to be able to look back over a well-spent life are the pleasant facts in the career of Mr. Noble, than whom there is no more respected citizen in Rockville.

DEACON SIMEON DANIELSON, son of Deacon Adam B. and Melancy W. (Robinson) Danielson, one of the best known men of Killingly, Windham county, was born in the house he now owns and occupies, Nov. 15, 1840.

Simeon Danielson was educated in the district schools of West Killingly, the West Killingly Academy, and the State Normal School at New Britain, but before entering the latter institution taught in the town of Sterling for one winter, and for a winter at Putnam. After leaving the Normal School he continued his educational work in Plainfield, Putnam and Chestnut Hill for about three years, and later taught at Brooklyn Center, and for five years at Williamsville. He then taught a season at Danielson, and one at Woodstock, and later two years at Dayville, making in all twelve years of teaching. In the meantime his leisure during the summer season had been employed at farm work. He was accorded much credit for his superior educational methods, the most convincing proof of which is found in his pupils themselves, who are today holding positions of trust and honor, and are numbered among the leading men in their respective localities.

After renouncing teaching Mr. Danielson located on the paternal farm, and he has since been engaged in general farming. His property is well cultivated, and consists of about 140 acres. The house in which Mr. Danielson and his family live was erected by his great-grandfather, Adam Beg. An Indian, Josh Sansamon, one of the last of the native tribe, assisted at the "raising." Mr. Danielson is a Republican in political affiliation, but has never taken an active part in the political undertakings of his neighborhood. He is fraternally associated with, and a charter member of Killingly Grange No. 112, the Quinebaug Pomona, the State Grange, and the National Grange, and he has been master, overseer, lecturer, and steward of the local grange. He is a member of the Westfield Congregational Church, as are also his wife and daughters, and he was elected a deacon in January, 1902, to succeed Deacon Charles Phillips.

Mr. Danielson is prosperous and popular, and no man in the community is more thoroughly respected. He married in Lansing, Mich., March 15, 1882, Mary C. Harris, born Nov. 17, 1847, in Elba, Genesee Co., N. Y., a daughter of John and Celestia (Whitney) Harris. Of this union there have been born two children, Ada Amelia, born Sept. 3, 1884, and a graduate of the Danielson high school, class of 1903; and Florence Harris, born June 4, 1886, and a member of Danielson high school, class of 1904.

Mr. Danielson is in the sixth generation from James Danielson, the first settler of the name in Killingly. He has the photographs of the commissions of his great-grandfather, Samuel Danielson, Jr., in the Revolutionary war, signed by Jonathan Trumbull, Governor, and Geo. Wyllie, Secretary. The first is the commission of a lieutenant, dated 21st day of March, 1777, at Lebanon. The second is a captain's commission, May 16, 1783. The original commissions are owned by his (Capt. Samuel Danielson's) granddaughter, Mrs. Deacon W. H. Challar.

Melancy Williams Robinson-Danielson, mother of Deacon Simeon Danielson, was in direct line, great-great-great-granddaughter of Williams Robinson, a land holder in Dorchester, Mass., in 1636. She also was great-great-great-great-granddaughter of Capt. Myles Standish and of John Alden and Priscilla Molines. Mrs. Simeon Danielson's (Mary C. (Harris) Danielson's) great-grandfather, Seley Schofield, served through the Revolutionary war and crossed the Delaware with Washington.

GEORGE FULLER, a descendant of one of the old New England families, lives retired from active business life in Scotland, Windham county, after a successful career as a merchant.

Nathan Fuller, his grandfather, was born on Pudding Hill, in what is now the town of Scotland, and served with four brothers in the war of the Revolution, all of whom participated in the battle of Saratoga, where two were killed. Nathan married a Miss Luce, and died in the town of Scotland, aged eighty-seven. He was an extensive farmer, and in his political belief an old-line Whig. Religiously he was a consistent member of the Congregational Church. His children were: David L., born Sept. 10, 1787, died Aug. 6, 1872; Nathan died in Scotland; Jared died in Ohio; Maria, Abbie and Alice, all three died unmarried in Scotland;

Lucy married Sylvester Tracy, and lived in Scotland, where she died; and Lydia died unmarried in Scotland.

David L. Fuller was born in Scotland, where he grew to manhood and married Hadassah Gay, a native of Thompson, who was born June 20, 1801, and died Sept. 9, 1888. The father lived in the southern part of the town, where he carried on farming successfully. In his later years he located at the Center, where he died. During his life he was an active member of the Democratic party, and represented the town in the Legislature, and also served as justice of the peace for many years. The mother was a consistent member of the Congregational Church. To the parents were born: (1) Albert, born Sept. 20, 1818, died in Washington, D. C., Dec. 12, 1862. (2) Jane Gay, born Feb. 19, 1820, died Sept. 24, 1897; she never married, but devoted her energies to literary pursuits and scientific studies. She was a wonderful observer of nature and a thorough botanist, and several of her works are now in print. (3) Alpheus G., who died April 13, 1900, married Miss Lillioire Richardson, of Windham, and had two daughters, Lillian and Jessie, and a son, Arthur, who died aged eight years. (4) George was born May 9, 1824. (5) David L., born Sept. 2, 1826, died Dec. 1, 1856. (6) Elizabeth C. and (7) Sarah C., twins, were born April 4, 1829; the former died July 27, 1869, and the latter on May 29, 1900, both unmarried. (8) Abbie is the widow of Samuel Abbe, of Windham. (9) Frank A., born Dec. 21, 1839, died March 22, 1867. (10) Jared W., born July 31, 1835, died Feb. 18, 1839.

George Fuller was born in Scotland, Conn., where he was reared to manhood and received his early education. At the age of twenty-two he went to St. Paul, Minn., and in company with his brother, Alpheus Fuller, engaged in the mercantile business. In 1860 they sold out the business, and after a couple of years' vacation Mr. Fuller went to Jacksonville, Fla., and again embarked in business as a merchant, continuing with success until 1872, when, upon the death of his father, he returned to Scotland to look after the estate.

Mr. Fuller was married in Windham to Josephine Abbe, a daughter of George Abbe and a descendant of one of the Colonial families of that old town. Mrs. Fuller, however, was born in Windham, April 7, 1836, and died in Jacksonville, Fla., July 11, 1870. The only living child of this marriage, Miss Abby Abbe, born April 7, 1864, resides with relatives in the West. In politics Mr. Fuller has always been strongly in sympathy with the Democratic party, and takes great interest in local affairs, although he has repeatedly refused nomination for town offices. Genial in manner, kind hearted, attached to his family, public-spirited, Mr. Fuller is an excellent representative of the best type of New England men, and has many friends not only in Scotland but throughout the county.

OSGOOD. The Osgood family has been prominently identified from the earliest times with the public affairs of various towns in Massachusetts and Windham county, Conn. The Osgoods come of good old English stock, and their coat of arms is described thus: Argent, three garbs within a treasure fleury, counter fleury gules. Crest: A lion rampant, gules, holding in the paws a garb of the last.

The first American ancestor of this distinguished family was John Osgood. Born in Wherwell, Hampshire, England, July 23, 1595, he married in that country about 1627, and came to New England, in 1638. After a short sojourn in Ipswich, Mass., John Osgood resided in Newbury until about 1645, and then settled in Andover. Being a man of considerable prominence, he was there elected as the first representative to the General Court. His death occurred in Andover, Oct. 24, 1651, and his wife, Sarah, died April 8, 1667.

(II) Capt. John Osgood (2), son of the emigrant John, born in England about 1630, married Mary Clements, daughter of Robert Clements, of Haverhill, and lived in the Osgood residence in Andover, to which he fell heir. He was a man of consequence in the colony, received his title because of service in the militia, and often acted as selectman. In 1668, 1669, 1689 and 1690 he represented Andover in the General Court. For opposition to the oppressive tax measures of Sir Edmund Andros he was imprisoned by that tyrant for nine or ten days in August or September, 1687. He was, however, exceedingly popular with his townsmen.

(III) Lieut. John Osgood (3), son of John (2), born Sept. 13, 1654, married, Oct. 17, 1681, Hannah Ayres, of Haverhill, Mass., who was born Aug. 2, 1662. They lived at Andover. He was made a freeman of Massachusetts April 18, 1691, and at different times filled various town offices, among them those of constable, surveyor, and (for eight years) selectman. As a respected Christian he was made a deacon of his church, and, as a man of local prominence, Lieutenant of the Andover militia. He died April 22, 1725, and his wife passed away Sept. 6, 1735.

(IV) William Osgood, son of John (3), born Feb. 16, 1697-98, was twice married, on June 16, 1726, to Sarah Chickering, who died Jan. 3, 1728, and second, Jan. 26, 1729-30, to Mary Appleton, who was born Oct. 1, 1701. About 1747 they moved to Pomfret, where she died Nov. 12, 1775. William Osgood was a large landowner, and wielded a wide influence. For many years he was magistrate of his town, which he also represented in the General Court. He died Sept. 20, 1791.

(V) Zachariah Osgood, a farmer, son of William and Mary (Appleton) Osgood, born April 30, 1732, married in 1762 Rachel Kinzie, and lived on the homestead in Abington Society, in the town of Pomfret. He died Oct. 30, 1819, and his wife June 11, 1804.

(VI) Winthrop Osgood, youngest child of Zachariah, was born March 4, 1775, and was reared to farm work. On Dec. 25, 1806, he married Mary Jewett, of Thompson, and they lived upon the homestead in Abington, to which Mr. Osgood succeeded. He died March 3, 1852, and his wife Oct. 24, 1839. They had three children: Lucian, born June 28, 1808, married April 5, 1838, Ann Leah, of Alexandria, D. C.; he was first a machinist, and later a draughtsman in the Patent Office at Washington, D. C.; he died Aug. 31, 1839. Charles, is mentioned below. Rachel M., born Sept. 7, 1816, married Feb. 18, 1849, Asa B. Egerton, a farmer of Pomfret.

(VII) CHARLES OSGOOD, whose wise insight into large questions brought him to the front in the public affairs of his State, was born March 29, 1811, in Abington Society, in the town of Pomfret, Windham county, where he attended school and was reared to farm work. His main business in life was farming. For five years he resided in Putnam, but for the rest of his mature life he made his home upon the ancestral farm in Abington, his intelligent management of which made him one of the leading agriculturists of his section. On Feb. 7, 1838, he married Lucy Holbrook, of Abington, who was born Sept. 9, 1809, daughter of John Holbrook, of Abington, who was a member of the Windham county Bar. Mrs. Osgood died May 10, 1885. The five children of this union were: (1) Mary M., born Feb. 9, 1839, attended Mount Holyoke Seminary, later taught school in Pennsylvania and Michigan, and now resides at Brooklyn, Conn. (2) Charles H. is mentioned below. (3) John H., born Jan. 24, 1843, now a resident of Brooklyn, Conn., graduated from Norwich (Vt.) University, in 1864; as captain of a company of United States Colored Volunteers (Infantry) in the 116th Regiment, he served in the Army of the James during the fall and winter of 1864-65, and he also commanded a detachment in digging the "Dutch Gap Canal." (4) Frances Lucy, born in Abington July 14, 1846, on May 20, 1873, married George Sumner, of Hartford, whose biography contains a sketch of her life. (5) Ellen Elizabeth, born in Pomfret (Abington parish) May 28, 1850, prepared for Mount Holyoke Seminary at the Dedham High school, Dedham, Mass., and at Woodstock Academy, Woodstock, Conn. She graduated from Mount Holyoke in 1873. After teaching a private school in Putnam, Conn., for one year she became assistant in the high school at Putnam, and remained as such seven years, resigning to spend the year 1882 in travel and study abroad. In 1883-84 she taught history in Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pa.; in 1885 accepted the position of lady principal of Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass.; spent the summer of 1894 in Europe; in 1895 resigned to take a much needed rest, spent the year in private study in Boston and elsewhere, and in 1896, was recalled to Cushing Academy, where she still remains. Miss Osgood has made English literature and French her specialties.

Mr. Osgood was a man who never wavered over taking the initiative in any beneficial public movement. As a progressive farmer he was keenly interested in the most approved methods of conducting his business, and in 1852 he founded the Windham County Agricultural Society; and, as corresponding secretary for several years, and afterward president, he made it a positive factor in furthering agricultural interests. He was also in sympathy with progressive educational movements, and as acting school visitor for over twenty years greatly advanced educational affairs in his section. Among his achievements are the select schools of Abington, which have so greatly benefited the young. But it was in the State Legislature, where his marked ability won him a place for five terms, that his greatest work was accomplished. One subject to which he had given much conscientious thought and study was the State Prison. That it should be in a measure a reformatory and not a mere cage for confining dangerous persons, he was firmly convinced; and his outspoken convictions upon this subject won him the chairmanship of the State Prison committee. In this capacity Mr. Osgood introduced a bill giving prisoners a deduction of five days from their term of sentence for each month of good behavior. The bill passed the Legislature, and has been enforced with good results. Mr. Osgood was well-known in the best circles of his State, and in 1864, previous to the Presidential election, he was sent South by Gov. Buckingham to receive the votes of soldiers in some of the Connecticut regiments. As a man of force and broad culture he had hosts of friends.

(VIII) CHARLES H. OSGOOD. Occasionally, in every community, a man appears endowed with traits pre-eminently qualifying him to enforce law and order. Such a man was Charles H. Osgood, for several years the well-known jailer of Brooklyn, Conn. Born in Abington Society, in the town of Pomfret, June 3, 1841, he received his education in public and select schools of that neighborhood, and in the Suffield Literary Institute. In 1878 he married Annie E. Hart, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who died Dec. 5, 1889. They had no children.

For a few years in early manhood Mr. Osgood engaged in farming in Pomfret, making a specialty of fruit culture and live stock. Early recognized, however, as a man of exceptional executive ability, at the age of twenty-three he was appointed deputy sheriff of Windham county, under Sheriff May, and in point of age he never had a peer in that position in his county. For six years he served in that capacity; then, at twenty-nine, upon Mr. May's death, he was called to fill that official's unexpired term. How admirably he bore the responsibility in the opinion of the public is shown by the fact that he was afterward elected sheriff for five terms, making altogether a record of sixteen years, during which time he resided in Putnam, where he had his office and was for a time engaged in other business. From 1889 to 1893 Mr. Osgood served by appointment, with unqualified success, as sole prosecuting agent for Windham county. Finally, in 1895, he was appointed, by Sheriff Pomeroy, keeper of the Brooklyn jail, a position in which his masterly qualities had ample scope for asserting themselves. Being a man of large penetration and of extraordinary understanding of the needs of the criminal class, Mr. Osgood at once set about a reformatory work among his prisoners. When he took his position the jail was overcrowded, with scarcely any conveniences—in every way inadequate. In fact, the state of affairs was such as to engender surliness and disorder in prisoners in place of reforming them. With great persistence Mr. Osgood repeatedly reported the conditions of affairs to the State, and insisted upon Representatives giving the premises a personal inspection. The result was the appropriation of a large sum of money for improvements, with which splendid buildings have been since erected.

Mr. Osgood was an unswerving Republican all his life. Socially he stood high, and was a member of Quinebaug Lodge, F. & A. M., and the Royal Arcanum of Putnam. Good breeding and early advantages counted for much in winning him success, but of much more value was his strong, steady will. His death, which occurred June 14, 1902, was sincerely and widely mourned.

MOSES B. HARVEY, deceased. The Harvey family can be traced to (I) Thomas Harvey (son of Thomas Harvey, of Somersetshire, England), who was born in 1617. In company with his brother William, he came to Dorchester, Mass., in 1636, and two years later he was found at Cohasset, where he was one of the first purchasers. Between 1639 and 1642 he was admitted as a proprietor of Taunton, and about 1642 he married Elizabeth Andrews, who was born in England in 1614. He died in Taunton, in 1651.

John Harvey, son of Thomas, the emigrant settler, was born in Taunton, Mass., about 1647, and married in 1675. In 1686, Mr. Harvey purchased land of Isaac Willey which lay mostly within the limits of Lyme, Conn. This was in what is the present town of Salem, which was formed in 1819 out of portions of Lyme, Colchester and Montville. Mr. Harvey died in Lyme, Jan. 18, 1705, and his wife Jan. 9, 1709. Their children were: John, born in 1676, died in 1767; Thomas, born in 1678, died in 1725; Elizabeth, born in 1680, died in 1752; and Mary and Sarah, twins, born in 1682, died in 1705.

The great-grandfather of Moses B. Harvey married Mrs. Lockie Harris, of Preston, Connecticut.

Amos Harvey, the grandfather of Moses B. Harvey, was born in Preston, Conn., and he married Elizabeth Giddings, also a native of Preston. Their children were: (1) Amos; (2) Joseph, who remained in Preston, became a farmer and a milk dealer, married Betsey Phillips, and reared a family of seven children; (3) Paul, who was a shoemaker, married Betsey Green, and reared a family of six children, and at her death married Margaret Fitch, of Preston, moved to Stafford, had a family of six more children born to him, and died in Stafford; and (4) Rhoda, who married Richard Stroud.

Amos Harvey, father of the late Moses B. Harvey, was one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Stafford in his day. His birth occurred July 29, 1781, in Preston, Conn., his death in Stafford, Feb. 24, 1846. He married Sept. 27, 1801, Esther Benjamin, who was born March 10, 1781. Their children were: Julia A., who married William Moore, a shoemaker in Stafford, who had learned his trade with his father-in-law; Moses B., of this biography; Cynthia, the twin sister of Moses B., who married Elijah Fairman, of Stafford; Philip, an iron moulder, who married Malinda Howlands, of Rome, N. Y.; Esther, who married Lemuel Ingalls, a machinist, who later managed the "Orinoca Hotel" at Stafford Springs; Mary, who married Marcus Howland, a tailor of Spencer, Mass.; Amos, a foundryman, who later, in partnership with his brother Moses B., engaged in the manufacture of cotton warps (he married Lorinda Kibbe); Philena, who married Horatio Ledoyt, a native of Monson, Mass., who became a machinist of Stafford; and Park, a molder in the foundry, who married Althea Humphrey, of Tolland.

By trade Mr. Harvey was both shoemaker and tamer, and had a large tannery on the site of the present Riverside mill, at Stafford Hollow. Not only was he a man of fine business qualifications, but he was favored with robust health, his only sickness being his last. It is pleasant to recall a man like "Squire" Harvey, genial, kind-hearted and ever ready to help those who could not help themselves, but still a man of strong convictions, firm in his faith in the Democratic party, delighting in a practical joke, yet the man on whom the community could call when some trust or responsibility was to be assumed. Mr. Harvey was one of the founders of the Universalist Society in Stafford street, and performed more marriages than any other justice of the peace in his locality.

BENJAMIN FAMILY. The mother of Moses B. Harvey came from a family whose ancestry reaches far back, and whose name became widely known during the last century through the brilliant career of her talented nephew Park Benjamin, the author. The family records tell that John Benjamin came in the ship "Lion" to Boston, Mass., Sept. 16, 1632, and was made a freeman Nov. 6, of the same year; was appointed May 20, 1633, by the General Court, a constable; was a proprietor of Cambridge, removed about 1637 to Watertown, and died in 1645, leaving a widow, Abigail, and children, most of whom were born in England.

Joseph Benjamin, son of John, the settler, born about 1640, married June 10, 1661, Jemima, who was a daughter of Thomas Lambert or Lombard. Mr. Benjamin sold his estate in Cambridge in 1686 and he is spoken of at Barnstable and as having lived some time in Yarmouth. Joseph Benjamin's name is given among those of the early settlers of Preston, Conn., about 1690. Later he removed to New London, Conn., and died there in 1704, leaving a widow, Sarah, and children. The records tell of the inventory of the state of Joseph Benjamin taken April 27, 1704, which speaks of his widow Sarah and children: Joseph, aged thirty; John, aged twenty-one; Jemima; Sarah; Mary and Marcy.

Park Benjamin, the journalist and author, was born Aug. 13, 1809, in Demerara, British Guiana, where his father was engaged in business. Park was liberally educated, became a distinguished man, and made his home in the city of New York, where he died Sept. 12, 1864.

MOSES B. HARVEY was born Feb. 8, 1806, in Stafford, Conn., and died Jan. 22, 1874. His youth was spent in Stafford, and there his business honors were won. Mr. Harvey enjoyed only such advantages as the common schools afforded, first in Stafford, later in Colchester. At the early age of fourteen he began an active life in the tannery owned by his father, learning the business of preparing the skins which later were converted into foot-wear in his father's store.

This business, however, did not altogether please young Moses, and he later entered a machine shop situated in the same neighborhood, operated by Harvey Waters, and remained there until he had passed through the different grades and had become proficient. The mechanical knowledge thus acquired aided him greatly in the inventions which he subsequently worked out and patented, some of these being among the most useful of their kind ever applied in woolen mills.

Mr. Harvey with Elijah Fairman soon established a general machine shop for the manufacture of woolen machinery, in Stafford Hollow. Very early in the business of this firm a disastrous fire swept away the first venture, and might easily have discouraged a less determined man than Moses Harvey. However, he overcame this obstacle, and soon another shop was built on the same site in Stafford, and here for many years he was a successful builder of the peculiar machinery used in woolen mills.

Mr. Harvey was the inventor of the flock cutter, a most valuable machine, which he soon patented; he also made many improvements on old machinery, that in some cases almost revolutionized methods of manufacture. For a time Mr. Harvey conducted the business alone, but later took Charles Holt into partnership; they gave employment to from eight to ten hands, and did a most satisfactory business. Finally he disposed of the business to Mr. Holt.

Mr. Harvey then began the business of manufacturing cotton warps in Stafford Hollow, in connection with his machine business, Mr. Harvey giving his particular attention to the manufacturing and Mr. Holt to the machinery. For many years he was the agent for the Valley Company's Warp mills at Stafford Hollow, which he had established. At the same time he controlled, with other partners, the Hop River Warp mills, of which he was general manager. These mills were located at Columbia, Conn., and Mr. Harvey's partners were Joshua Lord, of Willimantic, and J. H. Bolton, of Stafford. Previous to the sale of his interests in the Valley Company's mills, Mr. Harvey built, in 1857, the present Glyn mills. Here with J. H. Bolton and Amos Harvey he continued the manufacture of cotton warps until his death, being the agent and general manager.

Mr. Harvey was identified with many business interests aside from those mentioned. For years—from January, 1870, until his death—he was president of the Stafford National Bank, of which he was one of the original incorporators, in 1854, and one of its first directors. He was also one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Springs Savings Bank, and the first vice-president of the institution, serving in that capacity and also as director for a long period, ending only with his demise.

A staunch advocate of Jacksonian Democracy, Mr. Harvey was not ambitious for office, although at various times he served as selectman of the town, and in other capacities. At one time he was a representative from Stafford to the Legislature, was judge of probate for several years, and was appointed by the governor Railroad Commissioner.

The marriage of Mr. Harvey took place Oct. 8, 1827, to Rachel Jennings. Miss Jennings was born Oct. 29, 1807, a daughter of William and Anna (Staunton) Jennings, the former of whom was a farmer of Willington, Conn. The death of Mrs. Harvey occurred Feb. 9, 1884. The children born to this union numbered six: Ann Elizabeth, born Nov. 26, 1828, died March 1, 1831; George, born Sept. 29, 1831, died Nov. 6, 1831; Ann Elizabeth, born Nov. 27, 1833, died March 30, 1835; Frances, born Oct. 13, 1835, died April 11, 1836; Emma, born April 4, 1837, died Oct. 28, 1838; and Esther Smith, born Dec. 24, 1838, married Edwin C. Pinney, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere.

Mr. Harvey was liberal in his religious views and found the creed of the Universalist Church most in harmony with his belief. The church of that denomination in Stafford was largely indebted to him for its establishment and subsequent success, and he took a deep and abiding interest in its work and extension.

Mr. Harvey was emphatically a self-made man.

Lacking many of the advantages of a younger generation, the foundation of his large success was laid in his own native ability. He was a man of keen and logical mind, and tenacious memory, gifted with a faculty for clear statement of principles and quick perception of results. He seemed to comprehend intuitively both the intricacies of machinery and the complexities of the human mind, and this faculty seemed to increase with his advancing years. In business transactions he saw, from the start, the end as clearly as the beginning. Mr. Harvey was called lucky. But it was rather that by his native worth and strength of character he commanded success, and he was the safe counsellor of both young and old.

CHARLES AUGUSTUS GATES, the popular and efficient agent of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Co. at Willimantic, Windham county, is one of the rising young railroad men of New England, whose standing as a citizen is evidenced by the fact of his being called upon to represent his town in the General Assembly. Mr. Gates was born in Mifflin township, Richland Co., Ohio, Aug. 22, 1867.

William Gates, the grandfather of Charles A., was a native of Hackettstown, N. J., where he was married when a young man, and soon removed to the "West," as Ohio was then called. He was one of the early settlers of that State, making his home in Mifflin township, Richland county. From New Jersey to their home in the unbroken forest the young married couple traveled in a covered wagon, and were several weeks on the way. There Mr. Gates bought land, cleared a space in the woods, and built a log cabin for their first home. Later he became an extensive land owner, and was one of the prominent citizens of his time.

Theodore Gates, father of Charles A., was born and reared on the old homestead in Ohio, and is now living in Madison township, just across the town line from the old home farm in Richland county. Here he has become a prosperous farmer, and is a much respected citizen. In politics he was in his earlier life a Whig, but became a Republican on the formation of that party, and has continued his connection with that organization to the present time, though he is by no means a politician. His wife, Abigail Lumberson, was born in New Jersey, but removed to Ohio when young.

Charles Augustus Gates, the only child of his parents, was born on the old Gates homestead, and had his education in the local schools. Until he was sixteen years of age he lived at home, and then took a course in the business college at Mansfield, Ohio. For three years he was cashier of the Boston Dry Goods Store at Mansfield, a position he resigned to come East in April, 1888, to take a place as baggageman in Willimantic for the N. Y. & N. E. Railroad, a work to which he readily adapted himself, and in which he has made rapid progress, rising step by step until he was appointed to an agency, being stationed at different times at Franklin, Mass., Waterbury, Conn., and Southbridge, Mass. For some years he has held the agency at Willimantic for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Company.

Mr. Gates, who is a strong and positive Republican, has represented his town in the General Assembly several times. In 1899 he was a member of the Lower House, and again in 1901, when he was a valuable member of the Finance committee, and chairman of the committee on Contingent Expenses, and in 1902 he was elected to represent the 17th District in the Senate, and served on the committee on Temperance (of which he was chairman) and on the committee on Contingent Expenses. He is president of the Republican Club of the town, and by act of the Legislature was elected in 1901 county auditor of Windham.

Mr. Gates is an enthusiastic member of the Knights of Pythias, being past chancellor and treasurer of Natchaug Lodge, No. 22, K. P., and he is also a prominent member of the Grand Lodge of that order, and of Past Chancellors' Association, No. 1. He is now a Grand Officer of the State lodge K. P., and Treasurer of the S. G. Adams Division, No. 23, U. R. K. P. He belongs to Purinton Temple, No. 1, of the same order. He is quite as active in the I. O. O. F., and belongs to Obwebetuck Lodge No. 16, being also a permanent member of the Grand Lodge of the State.

On April 15, 1893, Mr. Gates was married to Cora A. Rogers, of Willimantic, a native of Somers, Conn., and a daughter of Raymond E. and Sarah (Collins) Rogers. To Mr. and Mrs. Gates were born two children: Theodore W., born Dec. 25, 1894, who died March 4, 1895; and Raymond F., born Feb. 2, 1896. Mrs. Gates died Feb. 22, 1896. Mr. Gates makes and keeps friends, and stands among the best people of his town.

REV. WILLIAM WARREN ELLIS. Few men have left at death a more distinct mark upon their day and generation than Rev. William Warren Ellis, of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., who passed out of life Aug. 12, 1884, in Gurleyville, Conn. A native of Connecticut, born in West Stafford, Jan. 30, 1825, through his busy life Mr. Ellis ever displayed a pride in the achievements of his State, and will long be remembered as one of her most worthy sons.

As far back as 1733, when occurred the birth of Benjamin Ellis, the great-grandfather of William Warren Ellis, the name of Ellis was known in Connecticut. Benjamin Ellis added lustre to it, becoming a lieutenant of prominence in the State militia, and lived a useful life through ninety-five years, dying Aug. 27, 1828.

(II) Capt. Joseph Ellis, a son of Lieut. Benjamin, was born in 1760, possibly in Sturbridge, Mass., but probably in Stafford, Conn., and died April 22, 1828, in West Stafford, where he had been a large farmer and a very active member of the Congregational Church. He married April 23, 1783, Molly Dunton, who was born in 1762, and who died Oct. 5, 1847, in West Stafford. They had a large family of children: Sally, born Aug. 22, 1784, died Oct. 9, 1787; Polly, born Feb. 1, 1786, married John Cleveland, and died Dec. 5, 1859; Joseph B., born Oct. 15, 1787, died Nov. 8, 1800; Elisha, born Feb. 21, 1789; Sally, born May 4, 1790, married Zina Winters; Wyllys, born Nov. 21, 1791, married Abigail Carpenter, and died July 31, 1831; Royal, born April 7, 1793, married and died in March, 1829; Azubah, born March 23, 1795, married Flavel Partridge; Clorinda, born April 10, 1797, married Abiatha Davis; Natalia, born Dec. 6, 1798, died Sept. 10, 1806; Joseph, Jr., born Sept. 4, 1800; Amaryllys, born Sept. 15, 1802, married Allen Glazier, and died May 21, 1847; Beulah, born Dec. 17, 1804, married a Mr. Spellman; and Caroline, born June 4, 1809, married Lorenzo Lull.

(III) Elisha Ellis, son of Capt. Joseph, and father of William Warren Ellis, was born Feb. 21, 1789, and died May 9, 1869, at the age of eighty years. His life was an agricultural one. His first marriage, on Dec. 6, 1813, was to Hannah Warren Winter, who was born Nov. 18, 1791, and died Feb. 16, 1838. His second marriage, in November, 1841, was to Sally Drake, who died Aug. 11, 1872. The children of Elisha were: (1) Zina Winter was born Aug. 20, 1814, and married Clarissa Lull, Nov. 14, 1841; (2) Elisha Gilbert was born July 3, 1816, and March 4, 1838, married Emily Davis, who was born Dec. 29, 1813, and who was a daughter of Asa and Mary (Robertson) Davis. Elisha G. was a farmer and was considered one of the most robust, as he was the largest man in his neighborhood, six feet in stature, and so strong that he was able to lift his wagon out of the mud when his team of horses was unable to pull it out; Elisha G. and Emily (Davis) Ellis had four children, the survivors being Elizabeth Ann, who is the widow of Mervin Shearer, of Ellington, Conn., and Charles G. Ellis, a farmer and dairyman of Stafford, who is one of its prominent citizens, having been a member of the board of selectmen, a director in the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, and a steward in the Methodist Church. Charles Ellis was married Jan. 18, 1865, to Lucy Ann Howe, of Stafford, and their one daughter, Mabel Weld, is the wife of Burt T. Eaton, of Stafford. (3) Amanda Natalia was born Aug. 9, 1818, and married, Nov. 24, 1841, Leonard G. Goodrich. (4) Horace Dexter was born May 2, 1821, and married, Oct. 5, 1845, Hannah Poole. (5) Rosanna Maria was born June 12, 1823, and married William Blair. (6) William Warren. (7) Azubah Caroline was born Sept. 5, 1827, and (first) married Horatio McKinney and (second) John Carroll, of Willington, Conn. (8) Lucy B. was born April 7, 1830, and married Harrison Howe.

(9) Julia S. was born Dec. 3, 1832, and died unmarried. (10) Harriet Eliza was born July 26, 1835, and married, Nov. 26, 1854, Austin C. Bliss, this whole family being one well and favorably known in this section of the State.

(IV) WILLIAM WARREN ELLIS was born in West Stafford and his few educational opportunities were those offered for a short time by the district schools of his neighborhood. For a number of years he was employed on the home farm, but in 1854 he opened a mercantile business in Stafford Springs, being one of the first to engage there in that line. In 1864 Mr. Ellis went into partnership with Julius Converse, under the firm name of Ellis, Converse & Co., in the general merchandise business, on the site now occupied by the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs. In 1865, together with Col. Charles Warren and James M. Lord, they purchased the business, and it was continued very successfully under the firm name of Ellis, Warren & Co., until 1871.

Mr. Ellis was still in the prime of life and his worldly prospects were of the most flattering nature, when, at the Round Lake National camp-meeting in 1871, he became deeply impressed with the conviction that it was his duty to devote himself to the preaching of the Gospel. With the conscientiousness so characteristic of the man he immediately disposed of his business interests to his partners, and in the same year he was ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Church.

The success of Mr. Ellis in his chosen path gave evidence that the conviction upon which he had acted in entering it had not been a mistaken one. Distinction in this field came to him unsought, and he died in the faithful discharge of his duties, Aug. 12, 1884, at the age of fifty-nine years. For more than twenty years Mr. Ellis served as superintendent of the Sunday-school, putting into it the energy and ability which characterized his work in every department of church activity.

The following tribute to Mr. Ellis is taken from the Rev. J. I. Bartholomew's History of the Methodist Church in Stafford:

"Of the preachers who have gone out from this church, no other was so thoroughly identified with the local church as W. W. Ellis. He was a native of the town, born in West Stafford, Jan. 30, 1825; was converted under the labors of Rev. L. W. Blood, and united with this church at the age of fifteen years. For many years, in song, prayer and exhortation, he rendered great service. As a steward and Sunday school superintendent, for many years, he was a faithful and greatly beloved worker in the church. No man was more deeply identified with its temporal and spiritual interests. In 1871, yielding to a conviction that he ought to preach the Gospel, he received a license to preach from our quarterly conference, closed out his prosperous mercantile business, and in the spring of 1872 entered the pastorate. In this work he continued twelve years, until his death in 1884. In all his charges there was victory. Extensive revivals attended his work at Moosup and South Coventry. His business experience enabled him to manage the temporal affairs of his churches with wisdom and success. His interest in Stafford and in this church continued until the end. He had planned to spend his old age in a house near the church, which is now the home of his widow."

Mr. Ellis continued his relations to the church until his decease. His appointments were as follows: 1872-74, at Attawaugan; 1875-77, at Moosup; 1878, at Voluntown; 1879-80, at Vernon Depot; 1881-83, at South Coventry; and 1884, at Gurleyville. In each place he was rewarded with good success as the seal of Divine approval. He was an earnest, practical preacher and a faithful, sympathetic pastor. At the close of his pastorate in South Coventry Mr. Ellis was in poor health, but hoped to rally so as to resume his Master's work. In this hope he removed to Gurleyville, but failing strength prevented his engaging in further public service. His work was done, and he peacefully passed away on Aug. 12, 1884, in Gurleyville, town of Mansfield, Connecticut.

For the public and social services of the church Mr. Ellis was richly endowed with influential qualities. His noble bearing, magnetic presence, rich, melodious voice and fervent utterances gave him rare efficiency. In the personal relations of life his sincerity, purity and integrity commanded the respect of all who knew him, while his quick sympathies, kindly manners, and genial and unfailing courtesy, won the love of many hearts. The church has lost a faithful minister; a large circle of acquaintances have suffered a sad bereavement. His manner of preaching was in harmony with the subject matter. Buoyant, ever cheerful, with a certain physical exuberance, with a fine commingling of joyfulness and seriousness, he commended his religion as something that would give relish to this life as well as blessedness to the next. Mr. Ellis brought a dash of Christian sunshine and a breath of free Christian courage and hope with every sermon. Add to this his earnestness, which never weakened, his directness of purpose, which never swerved, and we have before us an evangelist. A large measure of his success was due to his loyalty to the truth, his sense of its power, his wisdom in presenting it and his earnestness in enforcing it as the very Word of God.

Another element of the unusual success of Mr. Ellis was his able generalship, he having singular tact in setting others to work. It was announced by the great Wesley, long years ago: "All at it, and always at it,"—a repetition of the Apostle Paul's call to personal devotion. This was a favorite and constant aim with Mr. Ellis, his appeals touching the foundations of religious enthusiasm. In every calling he was ardent, impulsive and extremely enthusiastic, especially in his deep devotion to his Maker and to the work of spreading the Gospel. This state of mind, sanctioned by grace, becomes mighty in religion. It discounts or denies discouragements, it transfigures hope, and in its beautiful light turns it into success.

In the death of Mr. Ellis the community was the loser. It was a cross to give up life at his age and especially when he was so actively engaged in a work he was so much devoted to, but the burden was assumed with Christian faith and courage. His Christian life was of the manliest type, and the influence which he diffused in the business and religious circles in which his life was passed will long be felt. In the family relationship his personality was of the strongest and most attractive character. His home life was one of great happiness and fidelity.

William Warren Ellis was married Dec. 14, 1845, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Davis, who was born June 27, 1823. She was a daughter of James and Mary (Chapin) Davis, of Stafford, the former of whom was an extensive farmer of that locality and a prominent citizen. Two children were born to this union—Orlando Edwin, and Mary Lovisa, both of whom died in infancy.

Mr. Ellis was a Republican in his political belief and always performed the duties of a good citizen, but never accepted any political preferment. In August, 1866, he was instrumental in organizing the Mineral Springs Lodge of Good Templars, and the Temple of Honor in November, 1866, in both of which orders he always took an active interest.

The advancement of evangelical Christianity was more to William Warren Ellis than any hope or prospect of worldly gain, and his great influence with his fellow-townsmen was due even more to his irreproachable character and blameless life than to the high order of his mental equipment and the sound business sense for which he was always distinguished. Hence he will long be remembered not only as a most successful merchant and financier but as one of the real true leaders and exponents of high Christian life.

CHARLES HARRIS MAY (deceased). The May family is numbered among the leading ones of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., and during his lifetime Charles H. May was one of its most representative members, gaining in his honorable career much esteem and respect.

The ancestry of the May family can be traced back to (I) John May, born in Mayfield, Sussex county, England, in 1590, who emigrated to America in 1640, settling in that part of Roxbury, Mass., known as "Jamaica Plains." John May was twice married, although the name of his first wife or the date of their marriage is not known, but she died in 1651. Her death is mentioned by the "Apostle Elliott" when he says:

"Sister Maye died a very gracious and savory Christian."

According to tradition Mr. May was master of the vessel called "The James" which as early as 1635 sailed between the ports of London and New England.

(II) John May (2), son of John the emigrant, was also born in England, in 1631, and he, together with his father and a brother Samuel, emigrated to America.

(III) John May (3), son of John (2), born in Roxbury, Mass., May 19, 1663, married Prudence Bridge.

(IV) John May (4), son of John (3), was the great-great-grandfather of Charles H. May, and was born in 1686, in Roxbury, Mass., and died in Woodstock. His marriage occurred Dec. 18, 1711, to Elizabeth Child, only daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Morris) Child, of Roxbury, Mass. Immediately after his marriage he removed to Woodstock where he spent a long and useful life. He was a very precise man in all his work. John May was one of the petitioners to have the "West Parish of Woodstock" set off, in 1743, and took the Freeman's Oath as a citizen of Connecticut, Sept. 12, 1749. The children of John and Elizabeth May were: Elizabeth; John, Jr., who with one of his brothers, was killed in bed by lightning; Joshua, who married Anna Bacon; Caleb, who married (first) Elizabeth Child, and (second) Mehitable Holbrook; Stephen, who married Mary Child; Thomas, who married Lucy Goddard Child; Prudence, who died young; Esther, who died young; Prudence (2), who died young; Esther (2), who died young; Prudence (3); and Joseph. All of these children were born in Woodstock.

(V) Stephen May, great-grandfather of Charles H. May, was born Nov. 10, 1721, in Woodstock, Conn., and married, June 16, 1747, Mary Child, of Woodstock, Conn. After her death, he removed to West Fairlee, Vermont. His next location was in Roxbury, Mass., from whence he removed to Woodstock, and settled on the home farm. His children were: Elizabeth, Lucy, Molly, Stephen, Jr., Joanna, Ephraim, Sarah and Asa. Stephen served in the Revolutionary War.

(VI) Capt. Ephraim May, grandfather of Charles H. May, was born in Woodstock, Nov. 22, 1759, and died in Woodstock. On March 4, 1790, he married Abigail Chandler, born May 1, 1768, in Woodstock, where she died, a daughter of Capt. Seth and Eunice (Durkee) Chandler, of Woodstock. Their children were as follows: Henrietta, born Nov. 18, 1791, in Woodstock, married Henry Child, of the same place, and removed to West Fairlee, Vermont, where she died; Asa, father of Charles H.; Stephen, born in 1796, died in 1801, in Woodstock; Seth, born in 1798, in Woodstock, died in 1801 in Woodstock; Elizabeth, born in 1800, in Woodstock, died in Woodstock, married Elias Mason; Mary, born in Woodstock, married (first) Alvin Child, and (second) Feb. 13, 1852, Perley Chandler, of North Woodstock. Julia Ann, born in 1809, died aged seventeen years in Woodstock, unmarried.

Capt. Ephraim May served in the War of 1812, and removed from Woodstock to New London, with many others. His rank of Captain was gained in the State Militia, and he also served in that capacity in New London. His occupation was that of a farmer, and he carried on his calling on the homestead farm, bequeathed to him by his father.

(VII) Major Asa May, father of Charles Harris May, was born Aug. 24, 1793, in East Woodstock, where our honored subject spent his life. His death occurred April 19, 1830, when he was only thirty-seven years of age. Although he scarcely attained to middle life he was very influential, prominent in politics, and active in public affairs, possessing rare executive ability and gaining high esteem for his intellectual gifts and his exemplary character. Fraternally he was an earnest Mason and took much interest in that order. Being very religious he took an active part in the work of the Congregational Church of East Woodstock, of which he was a member, and was noted as being a very eloquent speaker. In politics Major May was a Whig, and he was very active in town affairs, filling numerous minor town offices and representing his district in the State Legislature. For a number of years he was connected with the State Militia, attaining to the rank of Major, and was also adjutant.

In 1819 Major Asa May was married to Sally May, daughter of John and Hannah (Bugbee) May, born Oct. 15, 1793. Their children were: Elizabeth, beth, born July 10, 1821, in Woodstock, married Luther Emerson Rawson of Woodstock; Charles Harris, our honored subject; Ezra Child, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; Carlo, born Sept. 3, 1829, in East Woodstock, died in February, 1895, in East Woodstock.

Carlo May having inherited seventy acres of the old homestead farm, spent his life in farming. The good work he did in the Advent Christian Church of East Woodstock can scarcely be overestimated, for he was very enthusiastic in all church work. For many years he led the choir in the Congregational Church. Possessing a jovial, good-natured disposition and pleasant manner, he won many friends and was sincerely mourned when he died.

On March 12, 1853, Carlo May was married to Sarah More Child, daughter of Deacon William and Sophia (Selby) Child, of Woodstock. To this union were born: Lillian, died aged twelve years. Ezra, born in East Woodstock, married Clara Hill, of Woodstock, and has two children. He is a farmer of East Woodstock. Mary Louise, born in East Woodstock, married, in 1895, William R. Barber, of Putnam, Conn., had no children, and died in the place of her birth. Frank Newell, born in East Woodstock, married Betsey Moore, of Pomfret, Conn., and has two children.

Charles Harris May was born Sept. 2, 1823, in East Woodstock, Conn. Here he resided during his life, and died May 12, 1893, in Woodstock. His early education was received in the district schools and Woodstock Academy, but all his life he was an earnest student, gaining much knowledge by close observation and intelligent reading. He had a wide fund of general knowledge, and was well informed on all current town affairs. Being very thorough in everything he did Mr. May was a firm believer in the old saying that whatever was worth doing at all was worth doing well, and consequently whenever he took hold of anything he was sure to make a success of it. This was certainly true of his farming operations. Throughout life he was acknowledged to be a hard-working, industrious man and successful farmer. His busy life resulted in the accumulation of a fine estate, and his prosperity was well deserved.

From the organization of the Republican party, Mr. May was an ardent and staunch member of it, never flinching when called upon to assist in sustaining men and measures that his private judgment could not approve of. His reputation for ability, prudence and fidelity to public trusts, is a well known fact. In addition, Mr. May was identified with many of the business interests of his own town, and served as Selectman for several years. In 1854 he served his town as Representative to the State Legislature. For many years Mr. May was an active member of the Woodstock Agricultural Society, of which he was president for two years. He was also a member of the State Board of Agriculture, in which his advice was often sought and as often generously given. Mr. May was a liberal supporter of the East Woodstock Congregational Church, of which his widow is still a member.

Mr. May's death occurred May 12, 1893, and his funeral was largely attended by all classes, everyone being anxious to pay respect to one of Woodstock's representative and highly honored citizens. Mr. May had the greatest respect shown him on all occasions and by everyone, and he was one of whom it could be truthfully said that he was a manly man who could trust and be trusted. Many kind and generous acts of himself and his charitable widow have been hidden from the public, and those which have become known have been told of by the recipients. No man could hand to posterity a cleaner, better record as a useful man, whose influence was always exerted for good.

On March 13, 1856, Mr. May was married to Harriet Frances Child, born Jan. 7, 1826, in Woodstock, daughter of Stephen and Abigail (Carter) Child, of Woodstock, Conn. The children born of this happy union were: Julia Agnes, born March 25, 1857, in Woodstock, died Sept. 5, 1881, in the same place, aged twenty-four, unmarried. During her latter years she was a teacher in Woodstock and South Killingly. (2) Charles Harris, Jr., born July 1, 1858, in Woodstock, married Nellie Brayton of Putnam. At present he is foreman in a large sash and blind factory in Worcester, Mass. Two (6) John Spencer, born Feb. 25, 1868, in Woodstock, married, Nov. 18, 1891, Susie A. Gildersleeve, daughter of Samuel and Annette M. (Child) Gildersleeve, of New York. He is now conducting the home farm. His family consists of two children, Harris Samuel and Mildred Louise. (7) Everett E., born April 22, 1870, in Woodstock, is a clerk in Byron E. Eddy's store in Woodstock.

DEACON NATHAN E. MORSE (deceased). During life no citizen of Woodstock, Conn., commanded the respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens in greater degree than Nathan E. Morse, who worthily represented one of the best established families of New England.

Anthony Morse, the ancestor of the family, was born May 9, 1606, in England, settled at Newburyport, Mass., in 1635, and died there in 1686.

Deacon Benjamin Morse, son of Anthony, was born in March, 1640, and married Ruth Sawyer.

Benjamin Morse, Jr., was born in 1668, and he married Susannah Merrill.

Abel Morse, son of Benjamin Jr., was born Oct. 5, 1692; he married Grace Parker.

Dr. Parker Morse, son of Abel, was born in 1715; he married Hannah Hues, and had eight children.

Abel Morse, son of Dr. Parker, married Sarah Holbrook, and they were the grandparents of the late Deacon Nathan E. Morse.

Nathan Morse, son of Abel, was born Oct. 14, 1785, and he was twice married, first to Rebecca Child, and second to Mary Mills. His children by his first marriage were: Abel, born on Aug. 20, 1823, married Mary Elliott, of Thompson and died in 1858; George, born on March 29, 1825, married Sylvia C. May and is a prominent resident of Woodstock; and Nathan E.

Deacon Nathan E. Morse was born Nov. 12, 1829, and the loss of his beloved mother, while he was still young enough to miss her tender care, and the severe discipline instituted by his step-mother, led the lad to seek a home with neighboring farmers. His wages amounted to a mere pittance, and his school advantages were meager, but he was ambitious and embraced every opportunity for improvement, this course resulting in the acquirement of sufficient knowledge to enable him to become a teacher, which position he filled during several terms in Thompson. A short time at Woodstock Academy had been of great advantage, and he supplemented his book learning with close observation and as much reading as he could find time for.

At the time of his marriage, Mr. Morse was engaged in farming on rented land, but a short time later, he was offered and accepted a position in Evansville, Ind., as a rent collector, by a liquor dealer, who was a relative of his wife. This business arrangement did not last long, as when his employer tried to compel Mr. Morse to work just the same on Sunday as week days, he objected, as that violated his religious belief, and a resignation of this position followed. Upon his return to Woodstock, Mr. Morse again engaged in farming for a few years, and then embarked in the mercantile business, in partnership with G. A. Paine, the firm name being Paine & Morse. This business arrangement continued for a period of more than six years, and when Mr. Morse disposed of his interest, he purchased the farm which had belonged to his late father-in-law, retiring to it and spending there the remaining years of his life. His death occurred Feb. 4, 1898, while on a visit in Willimantic, his burial being at East Woodstock. Thus passed away a most valued citizen of Woodstock. His later years were not given exclusively to the management of his farm, public affairs having claimed much of his time and attention. In many ways Mr. Morse was well equipped for the duties of a public career, and he most efficiently filled almost every office in the gift of his town, except that of probate judge. In 1883 he was a member of the State Legislature, in Woodstock, and was a favorite delegate of his party to State, county and district conventions. Mr. Morse was a notable exception to the ordinary politician, his desire being to perform faithfully the duties of each position with the best results to his constituency, irrespective of personal aggrandizement. His reputation for ability, prudence and fidelity to public trusts, led to his selection as executor and administrator, as referee and commissioner, on some of the most considerable estates of this community, brought before the public for final adjustment. At the time of his lamented death, he had four estates in process of settlement.

Always a student, Mr. Morse's mind expanded with study, and in addition to a wide general knowledge, he became thoroughly familiar with all current town matters, and was not satisfied until he has also absorbed every detail of the legal phases pertaining to the same. Mr. Morse was a repository of knowledge concerning the trust interests derived from the first proprietors of the town, the range roads, public commons, and the sand bank, clay pit and hearthstone rights. As was natural in his researches, he became interested in genealogical records, and if it had been possible to have the authentic knowledge thus obtained reduced to writing many obscure lines of ancestry might now be cleared up, and much traditional literature given to the world.

Since the first organization of the Republican party, Mr. Morse was an ardent and staunch member of it, never flinching when called upon at times to assist in sustaining men and measures with which his private judgment seemed at variance. In the Congregational Church of East Woodstock, he was very active, serving as treasurer, on committees, and as a delegate, and for many years prior to his death, he was one of the honored deacons. His funeral was largely attended by all classes, anxious to pay respect to a representative man. On this occasion, his pastor, Rev. Mr. Viets, gave a very just and appropriate characterization of Mr. Morse in all the relations of life.

Deacon Morse was identified with many of the business interests of his town, and was, at the time of death, a director in the Putnam Savings Bank, and for many years was secretary and an active and useful member of the Agricultural Society of Woodstock. For over twenty years he indicated his interest in the progress of educational matters by serving on the school board. Among other official positions held by him may be mentioned those of assessor, member of the board of relief, selectman and justice of the peace, he doing all in his power, at all times, to promote the welfare of the community. Had Mr. Morse engaged in the study of the law, it is probable he would have attained eminence in that profession, his mind and ability in that direction showing a decided talent. As to his attitude on temperance, no one could be in doubt, his life and addresses in the best possible way showing his strong advocacy of it.

On Aug. 29, 1850, Nathan E. Morse was united in marriage to Sarah B. Fowler, who was born April 30, 1828, a daughter of John and Mary (Bacon) Fowler, of Woodstock, Conn. John Fowler was born Aug. 18, 1793, and was a member of the well-known Lebanon family of that name. For a number of years he was engaged with Col. A. A. Williams, in business at West Woodstock, but later removed to Muddy Brook, now known as East Woodstock where he engaged in mercantile pursuits, and also operated a small farm. Mr. Fowler was a prominent citizen and held many of the town and county offices. For a long period he was county commissioner and also county surveyor. Although he saw no active service, he enlisted in the army, during the war of 1812, and always conducted himself as a true and loyal citizen. During 1830-31, he served as master of the Putnam Masonic Lodge, although in his later years he was not an active member of the fraternity. His death occurred in East Woodstock, at the age of fifty years.

The death of Mrs. Morse preceded that of her husband, taking place on March 16, 1897, at her home, in East Woodstock. She was a woman of exalted character, well fitted for the high social position she was called upon to fill. The one child of Mr. and Mrs. Morse was Susie Elizabeth, who was born June 14, 1854. She was given good educational advantages, passing from the district schools of Woodstock into the select schools at East Woodstock, taught by Miss Mary Gore, and in North Woodstock, taught by Miss Carpenter, both ladies of social standing, and later becoming a student of the Woodstock Academy. She then became an instructor, herself, teaching for two years in Woodstock; six years at Southbridge, Mass., in a grammar school, and two years in the East Brooklyn Grammar school, resigning in 1887, and on March 31, 1887, was united in marriage to Nathaniel G. Williams. Mrs. Williams is not only a lady of education and culture, but she is interested deeply in all educational and benevolent enterprises which promise to be of lasting benefit to Brooklyn.

NATHANIEL G. WILLIAMS. It is not given to every family in New England to be able to trace an honorable ancestry as far back in the past as to touch the early beginnings of settlement in the great States of Massachusetts and Connecticut. In 1638, while Charles I still ruled over England, came Robert Williams, a native of Norwich, to Massachusetts, locating at Roxbury. In the same year he was made a freeman. He had been married in England to Elizabeth Stalham, who died in 1674, at the age of eighty years, and, although at this time Robert must have himself reached his four score years, he took to him Martha Story, as his second wife, who lived until 1708, dying in her ninety-second year.

There is a tradition, substantiated by Rev. M. Russell, LL. D., and other notable writers, to the effect that Oliver Cromwell, the Protector, belonged to the Williams kindred, the family signature, down to the time of James the First, being "Cromwell, alias Williams."

Samuel Williams, the great-grandfather of Nathaniel G. Williams, was a resident of Pomfret, Conn., and it is supposed that he came thither from a previous residence in Vermont. Here he followed a farming life, and two of his sons located in Brooklyn, Conn. These were: Nathaniel, the grandfather of Nathaniel, of Brooklyn; and Joseph, who was born Aug. 14, 1793, and located on the farm, immediately north of the farm occupied by his brother, Nathaniel, and there he died Sept. 15, 1882.

Nathaniel Williams was born in 1783, and was but a mere boy when his father removed to Pomfret, Conn. In this place he grew to manhood and resided there until about 1812, when he removed to Brooklyn and located on the farm now occupied by John C. Williams, his grandson. There in peaceful seclusion and remunerative agricultural labor, he passed his whole life, dying July 12, 1880. In his religious life he was a consistent Christian man, a member of the Brooklyn Unitarian Church, and when, on that hot summer day, he was stricken with his scythe in his hand, the summons did not find him unprepared to go. In his political belief, he was a staunch Whig, later becoming a Republican, and was at all times a good citizen. He was married at Brooklyn, to Hannah Witter, of the same place, who died Feb. 12, 1848, at the age of sixty years. Their children were: Charles W., born in 1815, died April 3, 1816; Nancy Maria, born in 1816, died unmarried, Feb. 10, 1845; Samuel, born in 1818, died Feb. 20, 1826; Charles Gardiner; Mary, born in 1822, died single, Nov. 29, 1846; and Warren, born in 1824, died single, May 31, 1850.

Charles Gardiner Williams, son of Nathaniel, was born April 12, 1820, in Pomfret, Conn., and was eight years old when his parents moved to Brooklyn. His education was entirely acquired in the public schools, but he grew into a very intelligent and well-informed man. His early rearing was on the farm, but by persevering application he fitted himself to become capable as a teacher, and for a considerable period he worked through the long summers on the farm, and exercised the duties of a pedagogue through the winters. His labors were in Brooklyn, Pomfret and Sterling, Conn., at which latter place he met the most estimable lady who later became his beloved wife.

After his marriage, Mr. Williams located on the farm which is now occupied by his son, Nathaniel G., and until 1887, was industriously engaged in the cultivation of the soil and the development of its resources to its highest capacity. He then retired from activity, moving to the village of Brooklyn Center, where he lived until his death, Jan. 22, 1896. During life his persistent energy resulted in the accumulation of the fruits of his vocation, and at the time of death he was regarded as one of the most substantial farmers of his locality. In his business connections where he came into companionship with others, he was regarded as a man of integrity and most excellent judgment, possessing also those kind attributes which enabled him readily to make warm friends. In early life Mr. Williams belonged to the Whig party, later becoming a Republican, but his strong views on the temperance question made him, for a score of years, a Prohibitionist. In the affairs of the Unitarian Church he was actively interested, both as a member and as belonging to the Church committee, and was a very liberal contributor to its support. For many years Charles G. Williams was a director of the Windham County National Bank, resigning from the board when the institution was moved to Danielson. Mr. Williams was interested in many enterprises calculated to be of benefit to this community, one of these being the Brooklyn Creamery Association, of which he was one of the organizers, and its president at the time of his lamented death.

The first marriage of Charles Gardiner Williams was to Miss Lucy Emily Gallup, who was born in Sterling, Conn., a daughter of John Gallup, and who died Jan. 29, 1864, at the age of forty-two years, leaving three children, Mary M., born in 1849, died June 13, 1872; Nathaniel G., born May 21, 1850; and John C., born Aug. 24, 1856. Another child, Hannah G., born June 21, 1852, died July 15, 1853. The second marriage of Charles G. Williams occurred on Nov. 15, 1865, when Mrs. Ruby (Gallup) Burgess became his wife. She was born Jan. 1, 1822, and was a daughter of David and Nancy (Jacques) Gallup, and the widow of Dr. Horace Burgess. Mrs. Williams survives her husband, and resides in Brooklyn.

Nathaniel G. Williams, who inherits his grandfather's honored name, was born May 21, 1850, in the house where he still resides. He enjoyed good educational advantages, graduating from the district schools into the Brooklyn High school, at a time when it was under such able educators as Profs. Bingham and Latham, and later, at different periods, spent three years in higher study, at the Woodstock Academy. In the interim he taught school at Tat Nic Hill, Brooklyn school district, and at Abington Society, in the town of Pomfret.

Until about twenty-five years of age, Mr. Williams remained on the home farm, accepting then the position of manager of the farm of Mrs. Perin Scarborough, of Brooklyn, remaining in this responsible office for eleven years, or until 1887, when he moved to his present farm which was vacated by his father, who then retired from business operations. Mr. Williams is a sensible and successful farmer, with practical ideas which he puts into use. His improvements have been along modern lines, his home farm of 160 acres being one of the best appointed in this section. Mr. Williams owns other land in Hampton and Brooklyn, his total acreage reaching 250 acres. His attention has also been given to dairying and the raising of fine Guernsey cattle, the close and careful attention which he pays to his valuable herd of this beautiful and desirable breed, being so well known through this section, that his cattle usually obtain the prizes at the different fairs. Mr. Williams has many reasons for preferring this breed, and has made them popular in his locality.

On March 31, 1887, Mr. Williams was married in Woodstock, Conn., to Susie E. Morse, a native of Woodstock, and daughter of Deacon Nathan E. Morse, extended mention of whom immediately precedes this. Many times has Mr. Williams declined local offices, serving only for two years as judge of probate. Although active in the Republican party, he takes more interest in agricultural matters than in political preferment. In the organization of the Brooklyn Grange, No.

43, he was a leader, and has held the most of its offices, including that of master, serving two years. He has also served as master of Quinebaug Pomona, and is a valued member of the State and National Grange, his accomplished wife also belonging to these organizations. In 1892 Mr. Williams was appointed State deputy of the Grange for two years, receiving a re-appointment in 1894. He is an active member and also one of the vice-presidents of the Windham County Agricultural Society, and in 1899 he was appointed to membership on the Windham County Board of Agriculture. The Unitarian Church has long been the place of worship of the Williams family, and our subject is one of the church committee of the Brooklyn organization. Mrs. Williams was reared in the Congregational Church, joining same in East Woodstock, and after her marriage transferred to the Brooklyn Congregational Church, where she is highly esteemed for her many traits of Christain character. In both public and private life, Mr. Williams is a man of quiet and retiring disposition, but he is most highly esteemed in this part of the State, and he is justly regarded as an authority on matters pertaining to the agricultural and dairy interests of Connecticut.

LEWIS MORSE, one of the substantial and wealthy citizens of Woodstock, Windham county, and a descendant of one of the most prominent families, was born Jan. 20, 1842, in East Woodstock, in the same house where he now resides, a son of Albert Morse.

Concerning the antiquity of the surname Mors, Moss, etc., the following is extracted from the "Morse Memorial," compiled by Henry Dutch Lord:

The surname of Morse, Morss, with numerous variations in spelling, has been changed from De Mors to Mors, and, the prefix "de" gradually dropped by English usage, became Morse—with the final "e"—and the surname "Mosce" became Moss, etc., both of these in Old England and New England, but of different origin, as is now believed, and of which the Armorial Bearings of these two distinct families, in detail presently.

"Moss" is an ancient name, and probably local, and of Norman origin. Moss for Mosce, as follows:

Godefridus de la Mosce, Normandy, held a fief from Philip Augustus of the honour of Malherbe [See Mem. Soc. Aut. Norm. V. 176], and not identical with Morse—but intermingled with Moores, Moos, Mores [see "Norman People," pp. 338, 339], as in the name of Geoffry de Mores. Thus in the ancient spelling are instances of "Mosce," alias Moss, and of DeMors, alias Mors, and finally Morse.

"John Moss of New Haven, Conn., born in England about 1619, settled in New Haven, Conn., 1639, and removed to Wallingford, Conn., in 1670," is a striking illustration of the continuance of this surname "Moss" in New England [Morse Genealogy, pp. 139 and 144], and "The Rev. Joshua Mors, an itinerant preacher, contemporary with Whitfield, was the grandson of a Joshua Morse of New England, Chaplain under Sir William Phipps—1689—a minister from the 'west of England,' who settled in Rhode Island, and served also as Chaplain in the first war in which this country was engaged with the French." [See also Appendix to "Morse Genealogy," XCVII.]

We must consider the surname Morse (of Old England and New England) as from De Mors—alias Mors (the prefix "de" dropped) and with a final "e" Morse (Anglicized). And Moss, from Mosce, and whether this prefix "de," as found in these surnames, points to Normandy or Germany for the primary origin remains an open question, the names of both, with the prefix "de," being found in an early date in both places, and of which there are numerous examples of the changes of surnames.

Thus in ancient Normandy, De-St-Lando: The Armorial Bearings of the Family of Lowe were changed to a Wolf (the now well recognized Arms of this family in England).

The family of "D'ath"—"de Ath"—(a Norman family, mentioned in the William Duke of Normandy's Lists) was vulgarly changed—corrupted to Dearth—and De Laward became Laward alias Lord [see Burke, "Norman People," Bardsley, "Rymer's Foedera," and other works]. In further illustration and more pertinently: Thomas Lord, the settler at Hartford, Conn., 1635, died before 1669-70, Intestate. In that year his widow, Dorothy (———) Lord, sealed her last will and testament with a seal bearing the impression of Armorial Bearings from what was undoubtedly the seal ("signet ring" perhaps) of her late husband, Thomas Lord. The "arms," as depicted on the seal thus affixed 1669-70, are identical in every particular with the Armorial Bearings of the Ancient family of De Laward, of England, and as presumed, ante of Normandy. [See Family of Laward, alias "Lord," as given in "Burke," "Edmondson's Herald," "Norman People," and other English works].

The word "surname" was originally, and more significantly, sirname, and "coroner" was anciently and much more correctly, crowner, as Charles Reade, the eminent English novelist, and the early English records assure us.

These illustrations, in connection with that of Anthony Morse (the son of Anthony Morse, of Newbury, Mass.), signing his name as Anthony Moss, "Jun'r," in his last will and testament, serve as examples of the whims and caprices attending surnames. There is no law, no legislative act, as to these surnames, times and customs—the gradual change from feudal service and mailed knights to civil offices and commercial enterprises, vrought a corresponding change in surnames. From De Mors came Morse, the Norman prefix "de" gradually dropped by change of English customs and usage, and Mors yielding to Morse, and gaining a final "e." "The surname 'Morse' claims high antiquity. It occurs as early as A. D. 1358, in the reign of Edward III, Hugo De Mors. As a journey was about to be taken into France during the truce with that country and the captivity of her King, Edward addressed his orders to Hugo De Mors, de conductu pro familurabus cardinalis Petragericensis et aliorum."

Lewis Morse

From the nature of this commission and the prevalence of chivalry at the time, it is inferred that Hugo was a Knight. [Morse Genealogy]. There is assurance of this surname in England in 1358, but whether Hugo de Mors was from Normandy or Germany is unknown.

The surname "Mors" and "de Mors" was known in Germany as early as 1200, of which we gain some interesting particulars from the gleanings of the Rev. Abner Morse, A. M. (after his work of the "Morse Genealogy" had been published, 1850). Rev. Morse in 1865 wrote: "From the early adoption of surnames until 1553 both upon the continent and in England the name is invariably spelled Mors as it still is throughout Germany, its birthplace, probably in the Count de Mors about 1200—1300. German immigrants have no doubt carried the name into Russia. The geographical center of the name in England was the County of Suffolk, where it was not probably planted until after 1400, and then by a single family, as their peculiar Christian names in 1500-1600 in this and contemporaneous countries indicate, and as reference to each other in their thirty wills show. The Morses from Wiltshire were undoubtedly a colony from Suffolk, for they carried with them and transmitted the names peculiar to the Morses of Suffolk, and still have the same family arms. These, perchance, may have been the arms of Count de Mors, of Nassau, Germany, enrolled by the courtesy of the English 'Herald' office, with final 'e' added to the name to make it English; for the arms are too simple and the emblems too ancient to have been compared so lately as to the admission of the 'e' to the name, and the family claim for them about 200 years higher antiquity than the appearance of the name in England, going back quite to the age of the German Count XXX."

Leonard Morse, grandfather of Lewis Morse, whose name heads this sketch, was born Oct. 27, 1770, and married Remembrance Meacham. Albert Morse, son of Leonard, and father of Lewis, was born March 20, 1814, in Woodstock, and died there May 9, 1888. On Sept. 16, 1839, he married Martha, daughter of Stephen Morse, of Ticonderoga, N. Y., and they became the parents of three children, namely: Spencer, who died at the age of six months; Lewis; and Edward, who died unmarried Feb. 10, 1897, at the age of fifty-two years.

Albert Morse was one of the prominent and successful farmers of his section of the State, and left a large estate, having become the owner of the ancestral homestead in East Woodstock, where he held rank as one of the most substantial and honored citizens, and where he was incumbent of various local offices of trust and responsibility. Politically he was an unwavering Republican. He and his wife were faithful attendants and members of the East Woodstock Congregational Church. His widow passed away March 1, 1902, at the old homestead, which is now the home of our subject.

Lewis Morse has ever made his home in the house where he was born—a house that is hallowed by association and memories of those who have passed away. Faithful to his parents, he never married, but devoted his life to their tender care, giving to them the attention and love that made their declining years bright and happy. Since they have entered into rest he continues to live on the homestead.

Lewis Morse received his education in the district schools, almost within a stone's throw of his home. Early in life he became accustomed to the duties on a farm, and he has become a most thorough and practical agriculturist. He is quiet and reserved in his manner, yet warm in his friendships, and those who know him best have unlimited confidence in his word or deed. In his political belief he is a Republican, but he has no desire to partake of the emoluments and attendant responsibilities of public office. In the largeness of his heart he gives aid to those in need, but no one except the recipient is any the wiser for it. He makes no boast of his gifts, yet, it is known that few men give more largely of their means in charity, and in the support of church work and praiseworthy institutions.

EDWARD CHANDLER CHAMBERLIN, a well known, representative and substantial resident and highly esteemed citizen, was born June 14, 1833, in the northwestern part of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn. The family is one of the old-settled ones of Woodstock, several generations of the family having long been among its prominent people.

(I) Elisha Chamberlin, the grandfather of Edward C. Chamberlin, was born in 1765, in the pleasant village of Woodstock, where he owned a fine farm. He married a member of the Chandler family, also one of importance in his locality, and died at Woodstock in September, 1847, at the age of eighty-two years. Elisha Chamberlin's children were as follows: Sarah, who died unmarried; Nathan, who died in Jamestown, N. Y.; John C.; Moses, who died at the age of three years; Mary, who married Deacon Penuel Corbin, of Woodstock; Lydia, who married Benjamin Putnam; and Nancy, who married Benjamin Potter, of Woodstock.

(II) John Chandler Chamberlin, the father of E. C. Chamberlin, of Woodstock, was born June 1, 1801, in the house which later became the birthplace of his children. About eight years prior to his death he removed to Southbridge, Mass., and there his death occurred May 28, 1875. His occupation through life was farming, his robust frame and excellent health peculiarly fitting him for such laborious work. He also conducted a sawmill very successfully. Mr. Chamberlin took more than a passing interest in public affairs. He was a strong Whig, later a Republican, was justice of the peace for many years, served as selectman for years prior to the Rebellion, and ably represented Woodstock in the State Legislature in 1843. As captain of the Woodstock militia company John C. Chamberlin was both efficient and popular. Mr. Chamberlin through life was active in the affairs of the Baptist Church, of which he was a liberal supporter and constant attendant.

In 1826 Mr. Chamberlin was married to Hannah Leonard, and to this union the following children were born: (1) Philena, born June 8, 1827, married Dec. 22, 1845, Samuel Preston Crawford, of Rockford, Ill., who died there March 25, 1902. Mr. Crawford was a retired business man, having successfully conducted a large sash and lumber business. He was a deacon in the Baptist Church and was prominent in public affairs, serving as Mayor of Rockford for two terms. Mrs. Crawford still resides in Rockford. (2) Edward Leonard, born March 17, 1829, died at the age of two years. (3) John Milton, made a successful career for himself in New York City. He carried on a grain business for forty years and died in New York. On May 4, 1853, John Milton Chamberlin married Esther Kettlehune, of New York City. (4) Edward C., of Woodstock. (5) Sarah, born Dec. 4, 1836, in Woodstock, married Nov. 6, 1856, Moses Leonard Gage, of Woodstock, whose sketch appears in this volume. (6) Ripley, born March 12, 1839, in Woodstock, married March 14, 1861, Esther Kinney, of Union, Conn. (7) Louise Sophia Webster, born June 7, 1841, died at the age of nine years. (8) Julia Elizabeth, born April 19, 1844, died in Rockford, unmarried, Dec. 17, 1879. (9) George Woodbury, born June 2, 1846, died Sept. 9, 1855, in Woodstock. (10) Charles Henry, born Aug. 28, 1850, in Woodstock, is a carpenter in Willimantic. He married, June 27, 1874, Emma Bosworth, of Woodstock. Their children are: John Elbert, born Aug. 13, 1876; Bertha Howell, born June 18, 1883, died April 22, 1885; Charles Clifford, born Sept. 1, 1884.

(III) Edward Chandler Chamberlin was reared in his native place and there obtained his education in the district schools. At the age of seventeen he began to work on his father's farm at which he continued until his twenty-second year. He then went to Rockford, Ill., where he engaged in farming, having purchased 221 acres in that locality.

One year later Mr. Chamberlin accepted an advantageous offer and sold out, going to Philadelphia, where he spent the succeeding year as clerk in a dry-goods store. However his thoughts turned with longing to the old home and returning to Woodstock he assisted his father and at the death of the latter bought the magnificent estate of 500 acres which he still owns and operates. The sawmill which had been in use prior to his father's lifetime and which his father operated, he still carries on, doing an extensive business in making planed lumber and shingles. An additional enterprise in which this capable business man is engaged is contracting for the removal of buildings and the erection of new ones.

Mr. Chamberlin and his wife are both active in the Baptist Church, the latter being a valued member. In politics Mr. Chamberlin adheres to the principles of the Republican party, but desires no political office, although he pays more taxes than any other resident of Woodstock. Mr. Chamberlin is no politician; he is a reliable, able, first-class business man who lives up to his reputation of integrity and commands the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

On May 24, 1859, Mr. Chamberlin was married to Maria Jane Kinney, born Feb. 14, 1835, in Union, daughter of Nathan and Lucy (Wales) Kinney, of that place. A family of six children has been born to this union, as follows: (1) Edward Leonard, born April 20, 1860, in Woodstock, married, June 4, 1890, May E. Stone, of Woodstock, their two children being, Raymond Edward, born Oct. 19, 1891; and Pearle Leonard, born July 25, 1896. (2) George Boardman, born Jan. 23, 1862, in Woodstock, died Nov. 13, 1865. (3) Moses Gage, born April 14, 1864, died in Woodstock, Nov. 18, 1865. (4) Myron Kinney, born May 19, 1866, in Woodstock, married Fannie Edna Calkins, a native of North Wilbraham, Mass., where they now reside, their two children being Elton Kinney and Harold Arthur. (5) George Ellsworth, born Feb. 17, 1872, in Woodstock, is a traveling shoe salesman. (6) Carl Bernice, born Jan. 19, 1875, in Woodstock, is a farmer near Rockford, Illinois.

WILLIAM B. CHAMBERLIN, a prominent citizen of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., a relative of Edward Chandler Chamberlin, was born Dec. 11, 1835, in Woodstock, in the house which he now occupies.

Grandfather Elisha Chamberlin, born in Woodstock, was twice married. By his first union he had three children: Sarah, born June 3, 1760, who married John Clark, and died Sept. 8, 1709; Elisha, born in 1765; and Phebe. For his second wife he married a Miss Chandler, and they had these children: Calvin, Sylvanus, Lydia, Rhoda and Benjamin. Benjamin Chamberlin, father of William, was born Sept. 4, 1787, in Woodstock, and died there May 19, 1864. Mr. Chamberlin was a carpenter by trade, following this business through life. In 1810 he removed to the north-western portion of the town, near the Union line. This property had been deeded to him by Luther Crawford, his father-in-law, and here he made his future home. Although he was a hard worker at his trade, Mr. Chamberlin found time to interest himself in politics, and was one of the leading Democrats of his locality. He served his town as representative in the State Legislature, and was a lieutenant in the State militia, his commission being given him by Gov. Roger Wolcott. Many local offices were held by Mr. Chamberlin and the duties were performed at all times with careful consideration for the public good. In early life Mr. Chamberlin belonged to the Baptist Church, but later became a valued member of the Methodist Church, in which he was very active. He lived in excellent health to the age of seventy-seven years and his person and pleasant and genial manner are well remembered by many who knew him in life. His many estimable qualities made him numerous friends.

Benjamin Chamberlin was married (first) March 4, 1811, to Sally Crawford. She was born Sept. 15, 1788, in Union, Conn., daughter of Samuel Crawford, Esq., and died Sept. 9, 1826, in Woodstock. Her children were: (1) Loranda, born May 24, 1812, married John Morse and died July 29, 1832, in Woodstock. (2) Anna, born Oct. 16, 1815, never married, and died Dec. 13, 1835. (3) Eliza, born Aug. 4, 1817, married William Webster and died July 26, 1859, in Thompson, Conn. (4) Lydia, born Oct. 16, 1818, married Luther L. Arnold, and died in Eastford, Conn. (5) Sarah, born Sept. 3, 1822, in Woodstock, married Alvin Bugbee, of Ashford, and died in Ashford, June 13, 1848. (6) Emily, born Oct. 14, 1825, married James Monroe Herindeen, of Woodstock, and died in Woodstock July 1, 1865.

Benjamin Chamberlin married (second) Oct. 26, 1827, Almira Bugbee. She was born Nov. 16, 1803, in Eastford, Conn., and died Jan. 2, 1842, in Woodstock. She was a daughter of Jesse Bugbee, of Eastford. The children of this second union were also born in Woodstock, and were as follows: (1) Benjamin Andrew, born Nov. 30, 1832, who married (first) Josephine Masson and (second) Emma J. Dicks. Benjamin Andrew Chamberlin died in New York on Sept. 28, 1886, having been engaged there in the grain and flour business. (2) William B., of this sketch, born Dec. 11, 1835. (3) Almira Sophia, born July 12, 1837, married Lucius Anson Corbin, of Union, and died there June 12, 1894. The third marriage of Benjamin Chamberlin was March 14, 1843, to Amanda Crawford. She was born April 10, 1806, in Union, Conn., daughter of John Crawford, and she died without issue, Dec. 11, 1895.

William B. Chamberlin, son of Benjamin and Almira (Bugbee) Chamberlin was born in the family home in Woodstock. He received his education in the common schools of the district, following the custom of the farmer boys of working the land in the summers and working over their books in the winters. Until 1856 Mr. Chamberlin remained on the home farm, going then to Stafford Springs, where he entered the sash and blind factory of Crawford Bros., in which he remained for one and one-half years. Then he returned to the home farm and took care of his aged parents until their decease.

Mr. Chamberlin has forty-seven acres of most productive land in Woodstock and also a farm of forty acres in Union, and engages in the raising of general products. For a number of years he has also been extensively engaged in lumbering. His position in the community is that of a substantial and most reliable citizen and excellent business man.

Mr. Chamberlin is a member of the Mashapaug Methodist Church of Union, and has served as trustee and steward for a number of years. His political affiliations have always been with the Republican party, his first vote having been cast for John C. Fremont, in 1856. He has most acceptably served his town as justice of the peace, grand juror, selectman for three years, on the board of relief three years, assessor one year, and in 1872 he represented the town in the Legislature, serving most efficiently on the committee on Federal Relations.

Mr. Chamberlin was married Feb. 10, 1858, to Miss Sarah Eaton Paine, born May 14, 1836, in Woodstock, daughter of Ebenezer and Olive (Eaton) Paine. Her death occurred Dec. 1, 1901, and she was buried in East cemetery in Union. The children of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Chamberlin were as follows: (1) Emma Josephine, born Dec. 5, 1858, married Nov. 18, 1877, Charles Amos Howard, of Union. They now reside at Barre, Mass., their children being—Lena Maud, born Oct. 25, 1878; Mabel, born May 29, 1886; Grace Marion, born June 22, 1883, died in infancy; and Herman William, born Oct. 26, 1897, died in infancy. (2) Ida Sarah, born Sept. 14, 1861, married Oct. 11, 1882, Almon Eugene Bosworth, of Georgiaville, R. I., and their children are—Clarence William, born in March, 1887, and Mildred Ethel, born in November, 1891. (3) Lizzie Lincoln, born May 27, 1866, married, in May, 1895, Everett Lincoln Lewis, of Boston. They now reside at Easton, Mass., their children being—Marion and Herbert. (4) Eva May born Nov. 5, 1872, married Arthur J. Harwood, of Southbridge, Mass. Their son, Stanley Arthur, was born in March, 1898.

REVILO WINCHELL, the esteemed subject of this biography, is one of the oldest native born citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, and for many years was associated with the mill interests of that industrial city. Mr. Winchell comes from one of the oldest families in the locality, his parents having settled there in 1829.

Revilo Winchell was born in Rockville, Conn., March 22, 1837, in the old homestead of his father, on West Main street. The parents of Revilo Winchell were Chauncy and Mary (Vibberts) Winchell, whose sketch appears in another portion of this work.

Revilo Winchell was reared in Rockville and attended what was locally known as the little brown school house, on West street; later he became a student on Maple street. When about eighteen he considered himself old enough to enter the Springville Mill and remained there in various capacities, being in charge of the finishing room until January, 1885, since which time he has lived a rather retired life, enjoying the fruits of a busier early one.

On Jan. 9, 1864, Mr. Winchell was married to Miss Caroline O. Neff, the daughter of Anson and Delacia (Manley) Neff, born March 18, 1840, in Ellington, Conn. Anson Neff was a farmer and both he and his wife died in Ellington. The sisters of Mrs. Winchell are Eliza, now Mrs. Ralph Wiers, of West Stafford, and Nettie, now Mrs. Daniel Curtiss, of Ellington.

Until about 1866, Revilo Winchell resided in Union street, Rockville, but he then removed to the pleasant and most comfortable home on West Main street, where he has since lived. Although not much of a politician Mr. Winchell has strong opinions, is a staunch Republican, and takes an active interest in the success of his party. Being of a quiet and retiring disposition, he has never been willing to be a candidate for any office.

On Sept. 6, 1898, Mr. Winchell was unfortunately the victim of an accident. He was thrown from his carriage when driving, and has never fully recovered. Mrs. Winchell is one of the most valued members of the Congregational Church in Rockville, and the family is not only one of the most respected, but one of the best known in the neighborhood.

EDWARD MULLAN, one of the most prominent and successful business citizens of Putnam, Windham county, is a native of Ireland, and a member of a family which has been noted for its industrial activity and business ability.

Terence Mullan, the grandfather of Edward, was a true son of Ireland, possessing the robust health, active energy and quick wit of the sons of his native land. His descendants remember him with pride and affection. For a number of years he carried on hand-loom weaving, according to the custom of the country performing the work in his own home, where he employed assistants. He was a very industrious man, accumulated means, and retired from active work some ten or twelve years prior to his death, which occurred in 1845, when he was aged eighty-four years. He married Rachel Graves, who also lived and died in Ireland, reaching the age of seventy-eight. Their children were as follows: John, Catherine, Jane, Richard and William, all of whom are deceased.

William Mullan, son of Terence, was born in 1810, in Belfast, Ireland, died in 1880 in Putnam, and now lies buried in the Catholic cemetery there. Under his father he learned to be a mule spinner, and he came to America in 1858 with the intention of following his trade in some large Connecticut factory. Settling in Thompson, Conn., he soon gained the confidence of the management of the Grosvenor Dale mills, which resulted in his obtaining employment there as watchman, a position he held for a number of years, or until his removal to the village of Mechanicsville, town of Thompson, where he entered a woolen mill. After several years in the mill he bought a farm of thirty acres in Thompson, which he cultivated for two years, and the following four years he spent in Mechanicsville. At the end of that time his plans for embarking in the grocery business were completed, and he entered into that line in Putnam as a member of the firm of P. O'Leary & Co., the partnership lasting from April 15, 1873, to Jan. 1, 1874. Then Mr. Mullan purchased the business, reorganized it, and continued it under the firm name of William Mullan & Son until his death. His business connection was large, and he is well remembered, both in the trade and by his fellow-citizens generally. In build Mr. Mullan was medium sized and portly, and until his last illness enjoyed excellent health. In manner he was quiet and business-like, and fully deserved the rewards which came to him from a life of earnest and honest effort. In politics he was a Democrat. His religious connection was with the Roman Catholic Church.

In 1837 Mr. Mullan was married in Ireland, to Ann Colquhoun, a native of that country, and daughter of Churchill Colquhoun. Her death occurred in Putnam, Conn. Their children were as follows: Edward, who died in infancy; John, born Sept. 8, 1840, in Killea, County Down, Ireland mentioned below; Rachel, born in 1842, in Bellaneur, County Antrim, Ireland, who married William Gilmore, and is now a widow, living in Belfast, Ireland; Mary Ann, born in 1844, in Belfast, who married John Brady, and resides in Putnam; two children who died in infancy; Elizabeth, born in 1850, in Belfast, who married John Keegan, of Thompson, Conn., a farmer; Catherine, born in 1852, in Belfast, wife of Patrick O'Leary, of Putnam; two children who died in infancy; Edward, mentioned below; two children who died in infancy; and Ellen, who is a Sister of Mercy, connected with a convent in New Haven.

JOHN MULLAN, son of William, inherited much of his father's energy and many of his estimable traits of character. As early as thirteen years of age he began work, and much of his education was acquired by attendance at night school.

Edward Mullan

His father taught him the trade of mule spinning, at which he worked until he accompanied the rest of the family to America, in 1858. After the location of his parents in Thompson he obtained employment in the Grosvenor Dale mills as a mule spinner, remaining there four years, and entering then the woolen mill at Mechanicsville, where he continued for seven or eight years. At the end of this period he accepted the offer of a position as foreman of the spinning department of the Harris Manufacturing Co., at Oakdale, Mass., a concern employing fifteen hands, and there he remained three years. His next opening, in the same capacity, was in the Dawson Woolen Mill, at Holden, Mass., where he remained for fifteen or twenty years in three different periods. This mill employed from ten to twelve hands, and its output always found ready sale. After this long and successful experience in mill superintendence Mr. Mullan retired from activity in 1896, and has since resided in Worcester, Mass. As a matter of note, it was John Mullan who turned the first jacks in the new Mechanicsville mills, in 1865, these being just finished. At that time he was in the position of second hand.

Like his father John Mullan has always been identified with the Democratic party since becoming an American citizen, although he has never desired any political preferment. The entire family have been devout adherents to the Catholic Church.

John Mullan was married Sept. 23, 1859, to Margaret McLaughlin, born in Ireland, daughter of James McLaughlin, and their children were as follows: (1) Annie M., born July 5, 1861, in Sutton, Mass., resides at home. (2) William, born June 12, 1865, in Thompson, Conn., married Mary Frances Lawless, of Cambridge, Mass., who died March 22, 1901, leaving a son, Gerald Edward, born April 28, 1898. He is now the buyer for John C. McInnes, dry-goods merchants of Worcester. (3) James, born June 17, 1867, in Thompson, married Ellen Cunningham, of New Hampshire, and their children are—William, John, Helen and Margaret. He is a dress-tender by trade, and is employed in Leominster, Mass. (4) Rachel died at the age of six years. (5) One died in infancy. (6) Theresa Elizabeth, born Dec. 30, 1874, in Holden, Mass., resides at home. (7) John Joseph, born July 7, 1876, in Millbury, Mass., is a book-keeper with the People's Coal Company, of Worcester, Massachusetts.

EDWARD MULLAN has long been conspicuous in the business, political, religious and social circles of Windham county. His name is associated with almost every prominent measure in the lines noted, and few citizens are more widely or favorably known. Mr. Mullan was born in Belfast, County Antrim, Ireland, Oct. 26, 1854. His father preceded the family to America, and Edward was four years old when he crossed the ocean with his mother to join him. The father gave him every possible educational advantage, sending him to the public schools in Thompson and later to a private school which was under the care of the well-known Prof. Bigsbee. At the age of fifteen he entered the weaving department of the woolen mill at Mechanicsville and remained there four years, thoroughly learning the trade. After his father embarked in the grocery business he entered the store to assist him, and on Jan. 1, 1874, although only a lad in his twentieth year, he was taken as a partner and given the management. Under the name of William Mullan & Son the business was carried on successfully until the death of the senior partner, when it was changed to the firm style of Edward Mullan & Co., and so conducted for two years. Mr. Mullan then purchased his mother's interest and assumed entire control. In the early history of the business a general line of dry-goods, groceries, crockery, boots and shoes was carried, but the new proprietor changed the stock to groceries of every kind and description, and thus entered the trade. As a business man Mr. Mullan has been a great success, his pleasant, genial manner as well as his known integrity contributing in no small measure to this happy result.

In his political attitude Mr. Mullan has always been prominently identified with the Democratic party, from which he has received many testimonials to his fidelity and ability. For two terms he was a member of the board of selectmen; for one term was registrar of voters; for two years served acceptably as justice of the peace; and three terms on the high school committee. On July 18, 1885, he was honored by President Cleveland with an appointment as postmaster, serving as such until March, 1890. At present Mr. Mullan represents the Fourth ward on the board of aldermen. In 1900 his prominence in the party was recognized by his appointment as alternate delegate to the great Democratic convention which assembled at Kansas City. Outside of politics Mr. Mullan has received many marks of public esteem, notably when he was appointed alternate member of the World's Fair Commission of the State of Connecticut, and in the same year was delegated by Bishop McMahan of Connecticut to attend the Catholic Congress held during the World's Fair, at Chicago, in 1893.

In fraternal life Mr. Mullan is a member of Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, of Putnam; of Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of which he served four years as county president and six years as local division president; a charter member of Cargill Council, No. 64, K. of C., of Putnam, and was the first Grand Knight, serving in that capacity for six years; and a charter member of Putnam Lodge, No. 574, B. P. O. E., of Putnam.

A man of great public spirit, excellent business judgment and farsightedness, Mr. Mullan has been welcomed into almost all of the progressive and substantial enterprises which have placed Putnam so far in the front in the list of young cities. One of the original incorporators of the Putnam Water Co., he is a director in the Cottage City (Mass.) Water Co., the Mystic Valley Water Co., and the Paris (Ky.) Water Co.; has served as a director of the Foundry & Machine Corporation for several years; and in 1901 was elected a director of the Putnam National Bank. He also is a director of the Putnam Light & Power Co., and of the Putnam Box Corporation ever since its organization. He was a director of the Thompson National Bank, and for some time was also its vice-president, continuing as such until its affairs were settled.

On Aug. 25, 1879, Mr. Mullan was married to Eliza Jane Sherlock, daughter of Michael and Margaret (Smith) Sherlock, and a family of three children has come to this union, namely: Anna Gertrude, born Aug. 1, 1881, an accomplished young lady, graduated from Notre Dame Academy, in Putnam, in June, 1900; Margarette Loretta, born Nov. 24, 1884, also graduated in 1903, from the well-known Notre Dame Academy; and Edward William, born July 1, 1890, is a student in the 6th District school. The elegant residence erected in 1899 by Mr. Mullan, on Chapel street, is one of the most attractive homes in the city.

EDWIN C. PINNEY. The Pinney family, with other prominent ones in New England, finds its first American ancestor in one of the sturdy spirits who came to the new world some time early in the seventeenth century.

(I) Humphrey Pinney, whose immediate ancestors, through John Pinney, seem to have resided in Broadway, Somersetshire, England, came to America in the "Mary and John," with the company of Rev. William Warham in 1630. Settling in Dorchester, Mass., he married Mary Hull. He was one of the original members of the Dorchester Church.

(II) Isaac Pinney, son of Humphrey the settler, was born Feb. 28, 1663. He married Sarah, daughter of Daniel Clark, and is said to have died on board a vessel coming from Albany during Queen Anne's war.

(III) Isaac Pinney (2), son of Isaac, was born Jan. 7, 1686, and Jan. 26, 1709-10, married Abigail Filley, who was born in December, 1685, in Suffield, Conn., and died in November, 1761. Isaac Pinney (2) died Aug. 12, 1717.

(IV) Isaac Pinney (3), son of Isaac (2), was born Jan. 15, 1716-17, and was married, according to Stiles in "Ancient Windsor," to Mary (but according to family records of Martha Gaylord to Susannah) Phelps, who was born in Hebron, Conn., Sept. 23, 1731, and died at Stafford, Conn., Sept. 13, 1795, aged sixty-four years. Isaac (3) died Sept. 2, 1791. For thirty years he had been judge of probate. His children were: Susannah, born in 1749, died in 1841; Oliver, born in 1751, died in 1827; Lydia, born in 1754, died in 1836; Sarah, born in 1756, died in 1805; Isaac, born in 1758, died in 1842; and Daniel, born in 1761, died in 1823.

(V) Daniel Pinney, son of Isaac (3), was born Dec. 17, 1761, and married Martha, a daughter of _____ and Azuba (Ward) Green [Gaylord records, as worded in "Ancient Windsor"]. Daniel died June 27, 1823.

(VI) Daniel Pinney (2), son of Daniel, and father of Edwin C. Pinney of this biography, was born March 7, 1798, in Stafford street, and died July 18, 1876, in Stafford. His time was occupied in farming and in a general transportation business between New Haven and Stafford, to the blast furnaces from Brookfield, Mass., and also to Boston, before the days of railroads. In later life Daniel Pinney (2) confined his energies to agriculture. Politically he was a Democrat but no politician, living a quiet, unassuming life and enjoying the esteem of the community.

Daniel Pinney (2) was married (first) March 30, 1823, to Lydia Hyde. She was born about 1797; at Stafford, Conn., daughter of Jacob Hyde, born Nov. 13, 1767, and his wife Lydia (Hull) Hyde, born about 1766.

Mrs. Pinney was a granddaughter of Ephraim Hyde. Jacob Hyde, father of Mrs. Pinney, and Jasper Hyde, the latter of whom was the father of the late Hon. Ephraim H. Hyde, of Stafford, were brothers, and identified long with Stafford interests.

The children born to Daniel and Lydia (Hyde) Pinney were: (1) Giddings H., born May 4, 1824. He was for a long period engaged in the mercantile business in Stafford, in the commission and real estate business after removing to New York, and is now living retired in Brooklyn. He married Mary Fairman, a daughter of Elijah Fairman. (2) Ephraim, born Nov. 4, 1825. He never married, went to California in 1849, and now resides in Los Angeles. (3) Martha, born Aug. 27, 1827. She married Elisha Horton, and died in 1900 in Meriden, Conn.; her husband was a mill carder at one time, and later in life a printer. (4) George, born Dec. 11, 1829. He was a foundryman, married Mary Ellis, and died in Chicago. (5) Mary, born Nov. 10, 1831. She married Richard S. Beebe, and lives in Los Angeles, Cal. Mrs. Lydia (Hyde) Pinney died Dec. 20, 1833.

On Feb. 9, 1834, Daniel Pinney (2) was married to Azuba Carpenter, who was born June 10, 1803, and who died Sept. 5, 1852. She was a daughter of Thurston Carpenter, a farmer of Stafford, Conn., and a descendant in the seventh generation from William Carpenter who came from England to the American Colonies in the ship "Bevis," in 1638.

Mrs. Azuba (Carpenter) Pinney traces her lineage through Joseph (who came from England with his father and previous to 1646 located in Connecticut), Benjamin, John, John (2), and Thurston. (In the "Carpenter Genealogy" the name of Azuba's husband is given as David Pinney, which is in error).

The children born to Daniel and Azuba (Carter) Pinney were: (1) Julia C., born Dec. 30, 1834, who married Cyril Johnson, whose sketch appears elsewhere. (2) Henry L., born June 26, 1836, who resides in Chicago, where he is a salesman in the wholesale house of Marshall Field & Co. He had been in the Quartermaster's department during the Civil war, and was with Gen. Sherman in his last campaign. Henry L. Pinney married (first) Lucy Spencer, and (second) Mrs. Ella Cronkite. (3) Edwin C., who is the subject of this sketch. (4) Albert C., born Feb. 15, 1841, who was engaged in farming and died in Brimfield, Mass., in October, 1901. He married (first) Augusta Ruby, of Stafford, and (second) Annie Hurlley. (5) Annette, born April 23, 1843, who died Sept. 22, 1860. (6) Emily A., born Nov. 11, 1845, who married Jerome Orcutt, and resides in Bridgeport, Connecticut.

(VII) Edwin C. Pinney was born Oct. 8, 1838, in the town of Stafford, Tolland county, two miles east of the village of Staffordville. His educational advantages were not only limited in respect to years, but very inferior as compared with the advantages afforded by the schools of to-day. When but a lad of ten he left home to begin life's struggle for himself, after which his schooling was but a few months in the winter season until the age of fourteen, when not even the advantage of the public schools could be longer enjoyed.

Mr. Pinney's capital at this age was solely his energy and ambition, which were accompanied by more than an ordinarily good practical knowledge of hard work for a youngster. He had worked at farm work for different farmers of the neighborhood, and from the very beginning of such work even at the age of ten had displayed such an interest in his labors that he invariably stood high with his employers. Continuing at such work until about the age of eighteen, Mr. Pinney took up the carpenter trade, entering the shop of a mechanic in Staffordville. Soon after he accepted a position as clerk in the store of his brother, G. H. Pinney, in Stafford and later acted in a similar capacity for other employers. But his mercantile experience covered only a few years. Taking up his trade of carpentering Mr. Pinney assisted in the construction of several mills, among which was the Hydeville Mill, of which in later years he was owner.

In 1861 Mr. Pinney took charge of the Moses B. Harvey farm, which he managed for three years. In 1864 he entered the manufacturing business with Mr. Harvey. This was an enterprise for the manufacture of cotton warps, and Mr. Pinney acted as treasurer of the company and attended to the business of delivering the goods. Thus began his business career in the old Glyn mill. After the death of Mr. Harvey, Mr. Pinney conducted the business of the Glyn mill alone until 1884, when it was sold to the firm of Smith & Cooley.

In April, 1886, in company with Christopher Allen, Mr. Pinney purchased the controlling interest in the Phoenix Mill property at Hydeville, the former owner, Charles Holt, being associated with them during the first year. In April, 1887, Mr. Pinney became agent of the company and subsequently its president, which position he still holds. In August, 1899, in order to enlarge their facilities for a constantly increasing demand, the members of the Phoenix Company purchased the Riverside Mill at Stafford, which has since been conducted as an entirely separate corporation.

In the nearly forty years that Mr. Pinney has been associated with the manufacturing business in the town of Stafford, he has been interested, as owner or trustee, in a majority of the privileges along the Willimantic river north of Stafford Springs. His identification with the town's manufacturing interests is and for a number of years has been a prominent one. Mr. Pinney's connection with many of the town's industrial enterprises, together with his individual interests, has made him no small factor in the business life of Stafford.

Since July 17, 1889, Mr. Pinney has been president of the Stafford Savings Bank, and for some years previous was a director. For twelve years he was a director of the Stafford National Bank; he is president of the Stafford Water Power Company, of which he was an original incorporator; and is president of the Stafford Springs Electric Light Company. For four years Mr. Pinney served as trustee of the Storrs Agricultural College, and for two terms was first selectman; he has also served as road commissioner. In politics Mr. Pinney is a Democrat and takes an active part in local affairs, being a counselor and advisor of his party in this part of Connecticut. Always interested in school matters, he has served most acceptably on the school board as a stanch friend and earnest advocate of higher education. Mr. Pinney has served the public in many responsible official positions, and in 1891 represented the Twenty-fourth District in the State Senate, this being the year of the dead lock. He served as a member of the Constitutional Convention in 1902, being the delegate from Stafford. Whatever public position Mr. Pinney has been called upon to fill, the discharge of his duties has been marked by the same business like methods that almost invariably have characterized his private affairs.

Socially Mr. Pinney is a member of Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M., of which he is a past master; of Orient Chapter, R. A. M., of Stafford Springs; Adoniram Council, No. 14, of Rockville; Columbia Commandery, K. T., of Norwich; and Norwich Consistory, being a Thirty-second degree Mason. Mr. Pinney is one of the prominent men in the Universalist Church, in which he has been a deacon since 1898. For a number of years he was the treasurer and a trustee of that church; his entire family are members of that denomination. The official positions of Mr. Pinney have been various and numerous, yet to him the most pleasant one was that of Sabbath-school superintendent, which he filled for twenty-five years and from which he retired only to be succeeded by his son.

On Dec. 25, 1861, Mr. Pinney was married to Miss Esther Smith, the only child of Moses Benjamin and Rachel (Jennings) Harvey, of Stafford, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Pinney were as follows: (1) Harvey, born Jan. 4, 1864, died Aug. 3, 1864. (2) Edwin Harvey, born Jan. 29, 1866. After attending the schools at Stafford Edwin Harvey Pinney spent three years at the Worcester Polytechnic School, after which for a short time he was an assistant to the superintendent of Pratt & Cady's factory in Hartford. This position he resigned in order to take up the woolen manufacturing business with his father at Hydeville. Beginning at the bottom in order to secure a practical knowledge along mechanical lines, he filled different advancing positions, showing an unusual aptness in the business. Edwin Harvey Pinney is now secretary and treasurer of both the Phoenix Woolen Co. and the Riverside Woolen Co. He is a member of Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M.; of Orient Chapter, R. A. M., at Stafford Springs; Adoniram Council, No. 14, of Rockville; and Columbia Commandery, K. T., of Norwich. He is a prominent member of the Universalist Church, and is the ex-superintendent of its Sabbath-school. He married Miss Jennie Burley, of Stafford, and has three children: Harold B., and Richard and Ruth, twins. (3) Charles B., born Nov. 3, 1871, attended Stafford Springs high school, Norwich Academy, and then entered the Scientific Department of Yale, graduating from that institution in the class of 1895. Soon after leaving college Charles B. Pinney took up the same line of manufacturing as his elder brother, being employed first in the Phoenix Mill. By application to his work, with no little native ability, he familiarized himself with the business, filling a number of responsible positions. He became superintendent of the mill but after one year resigned to become agent. At present he is agent for both the Phoenix Woolen Co. and the Riverside Woolen Co. He is a member of Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M.; Orient Chapter, R. A. M., of Stafford Springs; Adoniram Council, No. 14, of Rockville; and Columbia Commandery, of Norwich. Charles B. Pinney married Miss Clara K. Baker, of Stafford Springs, and has one child, Dorothy. (4) Claude C., born Sept. 5, 1880, attended the schools of Stafford, then prepared for college at Worcester, Mass., Academy. He is now a member of the class of 1904, at the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University. He is a member of Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M., at Stafford Springs.

While a successful business man Mr. Pinney's native modesty destroys all evidence of that fact in his personality, and any reference to his achievements along business lines is all but offensive to him. One feature of his life in which it can be said he manifests some pride, and that quite justly, is in his family. Here again his unostentatiousness is manifest in the high tribute he pays to Mrs. Pinney and her influence in their home. Mr. Pinney's sons are a credit to their paternal and maternal ancestors, and to the high standard of citizenship and the lofty precedent established by them. While but young men they in their chosen lines of business have taken prominent positions, and are regarded as highly competent and thoroughly able.

The public, business and social life of Mr. Pinney has given him a wide acquaintance over the State, which includes many of Connecticut's most prominent men. No citizen of Stafford is better or more favorably known, and none have more at heart than he the town's welfare. A very active man in town affairs, Mr. Pinney is the ready champion of any good movement.

The Pinney family has been very prominent in Tolland county. The name of Pinney was a common one in the early and later history of the town of Ellington, where resided Judge Benjamin Pinney, who was a noted character, and in that town are still to be found a number of his descendants.

BELA MARSH KENT, one of Putnam's self-made men and for years its representative manufacturer, born March 16, 1826, at Attleboro, Mass., died at his home in Putnam, Sept. 29, 1902. Ezra Keith Kent, grandfather of Bela Marsh Kent, was born Sept. 26, 1767, and lived at one time in Rehoboth, Massachusetts.

Thomas Viall Kent, son of Ezra Keith, and father of Bela Marsh, was born April 19, 1801, in Seekonk, Mass. By occupation he was a cabinet maker, and worked at his trade all his life, and was familiar with all kinds of work in wood, including wood turning and carpentering. After moving about frequently in his younger days, he finally settled at Palmer, Mass., in 1837, where he passed the remainder of his life, employed with his work, which, as he was a natural mechanic, he enjoyed exceedingly. Of medium stature, he was very robust of constitution and jovial in disposition, dearly loving and appreciating a good joke. The Jeffersonian principles appealed to him, and he was a stanch Democrat, and although he never sought office, was honored with election as constable for several years. While not a church member, his convictions were in favor of all religious denominations, and he was liberal in his gifts to them. On Nov. 25, 1822, he married in St. Johnsbury, Vermont, Dolly Howard, who was born June 29, 1796, and who died Feb. 19, 1836, in Worcester, Mass. The children born of this union were: Ezra, born Sept. 2, 1823, in St. Johnsbury, Vt., became a spinner in a cotton mill, married Maryette Townsend, and died at the age of twenty-seven years, in Palmer, Mass. Bela M., is mentioned later. Ellen Jane, born Aug. 26, 1827, in Attleboro, Mass., married Keyes Bacon (now deceased), and is living in Worcester. Allin Viall, born Dec. 14, 1830, in Smithfield, R. I., is now living in Newark, N. J., engaged in wood-turning; he married Maria Stone. Harriet Maria, born July 4, 1833, in Northbridge, Mass., died unmarried, at the old homestead in Newark, N. J., at the age of forty-three. A daughter, born Feb. 19, 1836, in Worcester, Mass., died the next day, and was buried in the same grave with her mother. On Nov. 24, 1836, Thomas Viall Kent married, in Ware, Mass., Hepsibah R. Barnes, born Nov. 15, 1810; she died in the spring of 1872, in Palmer, Mass. To this union came the following family: Dolly Howard, born Aug. 24, 1837, in Palmer, Mass., never married, but is now residing in Worcester, Mass.; and Julia Ann, born July 21, 1844, in Stafford Springs, Conn., died in Palmer, unmarried, at the age of forty years.

B. M. Kent

Bela Marsh Kent was born March 16, 1826, and when he was but seven years of age, his parents removed from Attleboro, to Northbridge, Mass., where he attended the district schools, finishing his education with one term at the North Wilbraham Academy, and leaving school at the age of nineteen years. From the age of seven he worked in the cotton mill when he was not at school, the entire time devoted to the latter scarcely amounting to two years, and after he decided that his school life was ended, he entered the cotton mill at Thorndyke (town of Palmer) learning the carding trade, and he remained there until 1851. When twenty-five years of age, he embarked in butchering for six months, then removed to Windsor, Conn., and went to work in a sash and blind factory, owned by his brother Allin Viall Kent, and there remained for another six months. His next location was at Thompsonville, Conn., where he worked in a sash and blind factory for Elliott Hamilton, for three years. At the expiration of this time, believing he could better himself, Mr. Kent located at Hampton (then South Wilbraham), Mass., and for three additional years worked in the employ of Marcus Beebe, in a plow factory, making wooden plows by hand for the southern trade. Inducements being held out to him by William Johnson, at Westfield, Mass., Mr. Kent next entered his employ and worked in his organ factory at that place for several months, but not liking the business, went to Somers, Conn., establishing a sash and blind factory and also engaged in farming, remaining in this locality for one year. After this experience, he removed to East Longmeadow, Mass., and worked in the Springfield Armory on gun barrels, in what is known as the "water shops," where he remained about three years, during the greater part of the war, leaving in 1865 to go to Warren, Mass., where he was employed working on tape looms, and when, at the expiration of one year, the business was removed to Worcester, Mass., he went with the firm, and remained there two and one-half years. His next change was to Webster, Mass., and at that place he was in the employ of Charles Palmer in his sash and blind factory, but after three years he located in Putnam, in May, 1872, purchasing the wood-turning business of Horatio Reed, on the Quinebaug river, a very small plant at that time. Subsequently he made many improvements and enlarged his fields of operation until he occupied the entire building and gave employment to from ten to twelve men. His output included sash, blinds and all kinds of builders' finishings. So thoroughly understanding every detail of this line of work, and having a natural inclination for it, he was enabled to take advantage of every opportunity offered and was very successful. In January, 1900, however, he felt that he had discharged his duty, and sold his business to his sons, who continue it upon the old lines, the same policy of strict honesty, uprightness of dealing and excellence of workmanship being followed out by the new firm. Mr. Kent was a consistent member of the Advent Christian Church of Putnam, of which he served as deacon for over twenty years, and also as treasurer, and of which Mrs. Kent is also a member. When occasion demanded, Mr. Kent cast his vote for the candidates of the Republican party, but his business so fully absorbed his time and attention that he never took an active part in politics. All his sympathies were in accordance with temperance principles and his life testified to his sincerity.

On Sept. 20, 1849, Mr. Kent was married (first) to Adelia D. Bliss, born Sept. 24, 1826, a native of Monson, Mass., daughter of Austin and Eunice (Pease) Bliss, who died June 5, 1869, in Webster, Mass. The children were as follows: Ella Minerva, Clarence Marsh, Nellie Jane, Ernest Bliss, Cora Adelia.

Ella Minerva Kent was born July 11, 1850, in Palmer, Mass., and died in Enfield, Conn., Sept. 4, 1854.

Clarence Marsh Kent was born Dec. 5, 1856, in Enfield, Conn., and received his education in Worcester and Webster, Mass., attending the common schools. His parents removing to Putnam in 1872, he finished his school days in the Gary district, Putnam, leaving school at the age of nineteen years. Having employed his spare time working with his father, while still attending school, Clarence entered into the business after finishing his education, and together with his brother, Ernest B., purchased the plant, Jan. 1, 1900. The religious home of Mr. Clarence M. Kent is the Methodist Episcopal Church. While his sympathies are with the Republican party, whose candidates he always supports, he has never sought office, or allowed his name to be mentioned for nomination. On Feb. 6, 1879, Clarence M. Kent was married to Ida Dewing Pettis, daughter of George A. and Harriet Newell (Hall) Pettis, of Putnam, and to this union have come the following family: Clifford Ray, born April 5, 1881, died Oct. 2, 1890; Earl Bliss, born July 6, 1882, is at home; Edith May, born March 6, 1883, is attending school at the Willimantic Normal; Mabel Dewing was born Feb. 15, 1886; Harold Ray, born June 9, 1890. Mr. Kent is a very estimable young man, and one who both as a business man and in social life has won the respect and esteem of a host of friends and acquaintances.

Nellie Jane Kent was born Nov. 21, 1858, in Wilbraham, Mass., and is a graduate of the Putnam High School, and is now teaching school in the high school at Clinton, Massachusetts.

Ernest Bliss Kent, the fourth child of Bela M. Kent, was born July 31, 1861, in Somers, Conn., and was educated in the Gary District, Putnam, Conn., where his parents moved when he was eleven years of age, and also the Putnam High School, completing his education when about eighteen. At that time he entered his father's shop, where he has since remained, becoming one of the proprietors in January, 1900. His brother Clarence is his partner, and the two young men are succeeding wonderfully in their work, sustaining the reputation of the house, and gaining for it additional honor and business. Like his father, Ernest Kent attends the Advent Church of Putnam, and takes part in its work. He is a Republican and has served most acceptably as alderman one term, representing the second ward in the city board of alderman, serving during 1898-99. On May 18, 1887, Ernest B. Kent married Fannie Louise Bugbee, daughter of Edwin O. Sumner and Frances Agatha (Thurber) Bugbee, of Putnam, Conn., and the following family has come of this union: Ethel Bliss, born April 5, 1888, in Putnam, attending the Putnam High School, in the class of 1905; Carl Thurber, born Nov. 8, 1889, in Putnam, Conn., attending the Fifth District School. On March 5, 1896, Ernest B. Kent finished his fine pressed brick residence on Seward street, which is one of the pleasant homes in Putnam, and there he and his charming wife dispense a delightful hospitality.

Cora Adelia Kent, fifth child of Bela M. Kent, was born Feb. 14, 1866, in Warren, Mass., and married March 10, 1885, Edward E. Sanderson, of Pomfret, Conn. Their children are Mildred and Kent M.

On Oct. 18, 1871, Bela M. Kent was married (second) to Almeda (Coman) Buck, widow of Barney Buck, and daughter of John G. and Diana (Tyler) Coman, of Thompson, Conn. No children were born of the second marriage.

Early in life Mr. Kent had a hard struggle to overcome adverse circumstances, and at times he seemed almost vanquished, but through it all he displayed a sturdy uprightness of purpose and independence of spirit, which in the end conquered. During all those years of hardships and discouragements, he never gave up, but persevered in his work, trying numerous lines of business, and after he succeeded in securing his factory in Putnam, keeping hard at work to make something out of it. Such persistent effort must succeed in the end, when it is backed up with real ability and intelligence, and Mr. Kent had the satisfaction of looking back to his earlier days with pride in that he conquered adverse fate, and not only accumulated an excellent competency for himself, but also provided a fine business for his sons, young men of high character, well worthy of their father. The life of such a man points an excellent example to the coming generations, in that it proves what can be accomplished by a man, if he never forgets to maintain a high standard of honorable dealing and never flinches from his work, no matter how hard and discouraging it may be. In 1875, Mr. Kent built his very comfortable home, located about one mile from the centre of Putnam, and here he enjoyed the well-earned rest which comes after a life of toil, discouragements and successes, happy in the love of his devoted wife and children, in all of whom he took an honest pride.

JOHN BRYDEN KENT, M. D., one of the leading physicians of Putnam, and, in fact, one of the best known medical practitioners of Windham county, was born in Truro, Province of Nova Scotia, Canada, November 6, 1845, son of Alexander and Olive (Archibald) Kent, the latter a cousin of the late Gov. Archibald of Nova Scotia.

James Kent, the great-grandfather of the Doctor, was born in 1749, in Alloa, Scotland, whence in early life he emigrated to Nova Scotia, settling at Halifax. There he married Margaret Williams, who died Jan. 26, 1829. He died Oct. 31, 1825.

John Kent, son of James, was born in Halifax, but made his home in Onslow. He married Janet McCurdy, daughter of James McCurdy, of Nova Scotia. He died June 6, 1854, aged eighty-eight years.

Alexander Kent, son of John and father of Dr. Kent, married Olive Archibald, daughter of Matthew Archibald and his wife, Susan, Blair. Matthew Archibald was born in England (probably in County Kent) in 1754, and came to New England in early manhood, but died in Nova Scotia June 13, 1828. Mrs. Susan (Blair) Archibald was born in 1758, in New England, a daughter of John Blair, who moved to Nova Scotia when she was seven years old; she died Oct. 5, 1847.

John Bryden Kent received his early education in the schools of his native place, and graduated from the provincial academy in 1864, subsequently spending one year in a boys' preparatory school. Having a strong inclination toward the medical profession, he took up the study with Dr. Charles Bent, of Truro, and later went to Boston, Mass., where he entered Harvard College, graduating in 1869 from the Medical Department of that university, with the degree of M. D. Following that event he came to Putnam and began the practice of his chosen profession, which he has continued there for the past thirty-three years, the extensive practice which he has built up extending into a number of the surrounding towns. In 1882 he took a special course in gynecology at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, and has since made a specialty of that branch in his practice. In the winter of 1890-91 he went to Berlin, Germany, where he took a course in the Medical Department of the University of Berlin, receiving a diploma. In 1895-96 he took a course in the New York Polyclinic, a school of medicine for graduates. Dr. Kent is a close student, and loves his chosen calling, in the progress of which he takes a very deep interest. He is especially devoted to surgery, and has given much of his time to its study and practice. He is a member of the Windham County Medical Society, and has filled the offices of secretary and president of same; is a member of the State Medical Society, and has been a member of its Legislative standing committee for the past ten years; and a member of the American Medical Association, in which latter he has represented his county and State as a delegate seven times. From the State Medical Society he received appointment to a membership on the first State board of examiners, which he held for five years. During Harrison's administration he was appointed medical examiner for the pension board at Norwich, and acted as president of the board. He fills the office of post surgeon for Windham county, is examining physician appointed by the county coroner, and examiner for a large number of insurance companies, as well as for the A. O. U. W. and the I. O. O. F., in which fraternities he holds membership. He is surgeon for the Day-Kimball Hospital. Dr. Kent is, as may be inferred, a man of ardent public spirit. He is well read and takes an intelligent interest in all public questions, his opinions on which are highly regarded. The Doctor has ever evinced a deep interest in the cause of education, and served as a member of the school board for twenty-five years, during a greater part of the time acting as chairman of the board. He has become widely known in his section, both as an able professional man and a useful citizen, and he enjoys the esteem of a wide circle.

In 1872, in Putnam, Dr. Kent married Helen Abbie Manning, only child of the late Hon. James W. Manning, of Putnam, and one child has blessed this union, James Manning, born Aug. 14, 1876. He graduated from the Putnam high school, attended the Cushing, Mass., Academy, where he prepared himself for college, and subsequently entered Brown University, from which institution he was graduated in 1899, since when he has been a student at the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons. Mrs. Kent is a lady of culture and refinement. She is a member and has served as regent of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter, D. A. R., of Putnam. The Doctor is a Republican in political connection, and, with his wife, is a member of the Baptist Church of Putnam. Mrs. Kent is active in all religious labors, and has been for the past two years the head of the Baptist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Connecticut.

JAMES WINCHELL MANNING, the story of whose life is inseparably connected with the history of Putnam, Windham county, was born March 8, 1822, in Pomfret, Conn., and passed out of life March 12, 1902, more sincerely lamented by the whole community than any other resident of this city. To quote from the leading newspaper of the county: "His death removes a man of exceptionally good character, a man, who, on dying, could find no misdeed to blot or an enemy from whom to ask forgiveness. He had none. Everyone was his friend."

Mr. Manning was a worthy representative of an honored New England family, which has been identified with the best development of this country from the early days of the seventeenth century. Each generation has played a conspicuous part in the advancement of educational, industrial or municipal affairs, and all members of the family have been upright, honorable citizens.

William Manning, the first of the name in America, came from England in 1634, accompanied by his son, William, and settled in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

William Manning (2), son of William, became a prominent business man in Boston, though residing in Cambridge, and outside the commercial world his name will be remembered as one who took a very active part in the organization of Harvard College. As a delegate to select the first president of this institution, he was sent to England, and up to the time of his death was actively engaged in furthering Harvard's interests. His mortal remains lie in the college grounds.

Samuel Manning, son of William (2), was born in Cambridge, Mass., and made his home there until his twentieth year, when he went to Billerica, Mass. Here he attained honorable prominence, taking an active part in town affairs and holding a number of responsible positions, among them those of selectman and representative.

Ephraim Manning, son of Samuel, was born in Billerica, Mass., in 1684, and died in Woodstock, Conn., in 1750. Pastoral pursuits engaged his attention the greater part of his life, and the old homestead built in Billerica in 1696 is still standing.

Capt. William Manning, son of Ephraim, was born in Woodstock, Conn., in 1735, and died there in 1811. Like all his family, he was devotedly loyal to his country, serving in early manhood in the French and Indian war, and tradition says that he was present at the taking of Ticonderoga. When the storm clouds of the Revolution gathered he shouldered his musket and again entered the service of his country. He held commission as captain, and served until the end of the struggle, later in life receiving a pension for his services. Capt. Manning married Mary Johnson, a widow, a native of Middletown, Conn., and they became the parents of eight children.

William Hyde Manning, son of Capt. William, was born Sept. 10, 1776, in Woodstock, Conn., and died June 27, 1862, in Pomfret, Conn. In early life he learned the trade of shoemaker, which, in connection with farming, was his life occupation. Active, energetic and enterprising, he became a valued citizen, prominent in public affairs and active in the work of the Republican party, which was then in its infancy. With all his public spirit, his popularity and peculiar fitness, he could never be induced to accept public office. In religious affairs he was an earnest worker in the Baptist Church, and for fifty-six years served as deacon of the church of that denomination in Woodstock.

Mr. Manning was twice married, (first) to Lucy Tucker, born March 27, 1778, in Pomfret, Conn., dying there Jan. 15, 1814. The children born of this marriage were: Lory, who married a Mr. McAllister, of Sinclairville, N. Y., where she died; Mary, who became the wife of John Chandler, of Woodstock, Conn., and who died in New York State; Ephraim, a farmer in Sinclairville, who married Mercy Spaulding, and died in 1874; Lucy, who married Thomas Allen, of Pomfret, and died in Sinclairville; and William, a carpenter by trade, who married Antoinette Chamberlain, of Woodstock, and died in Putnam. The second marriage of William Hyde Manning occurred June 4, 1821, Lois Paine becoming his wife. She was born October 4, 1791, daughter of Nathan and Martha (Hovey) Paine, of Pomfret, Conn., and died May 15, 1871, in Putnam. The children of this union were as follows: James Winchell. John Milton, who was born Dec. 18, 1824, was graduated from Brown University, and for a time was a school teacher, but is now engaged in farming at Raynham, Mass.; he married (first) Louisa Leonard, and (second) Eugenia Hall. Francis Henry, born in June, 1828, died in November, 1868; he taught school, later became a manufacturer in Boston, Mass., and married Anna Bullock, of Putnam. Edward Payson died in infancy. Edward Payson (2), born July 1, 1834, died unmarried Aug. 17, 1863, of fever contracted in the army.

James Winchell Manning passed his youth and early manhood in his native town, and was given excellent educational advantages, although his parents had limited financial resources. He attended the Woodstock and Thompson Academies, and then spent parts of two years at the Literary Institute at Suffield, Conn., in the meantime assisting as occasion offered on the farm. Adopting teaching as his first occupation, he successfully followed it during several winters in Pomfret and Woodstock. He then accepted a clerkship in the store of Edwin Searles at Pomfret, where careful attention to his work soon brought him a practical knowledge of the business, so that at the end of one year he bought the store and conducted it for himself.

In 1847 Mr. Manning moved to Putnam, embarking in the dry-goods business, in partnership with Mr. Searles, under the firm name of Searles & Manning, but under the personal management of the latter. At the end of six months Mr. Searles sold out to his junior partner, who conducted the business alone for two years, when he found an acceptable partner in Dr. Daniel Plimpton, the new firm becoming Manning & Plimpton. This connection lasted for six years, when Mr. Manning purchased his partner's interest and again became sole proprietor. For fourteen years he continued alone and met with much success, his upright personal principles being carried into his business life and winning him many friends. The next partner associated with Mr. Manning was Moses G. Leonard, the firm name now becoming Manning & Leonard, and so remaining for twenty-eight years. At the end of that time Mr. Leonard retired, and until 1899 Mr. Manning conducted it alone. That year he sold out to David Flagg, and the name of Manning was taken from the business that for half a century had been conducted by his ability.

Mr. Manning was always prominent in local affairs, and on the organization of the town of Putnam, in 1855, was elected the first town clerk which office he ably and honorably held until 1900 when declining health led him to accept the office no longer. He also filled the offices of town treasurer and registrar of births, marriages and deaths during the same period. In 1866, as a Republican he was elected a member of the Connecticut House of Representatives, and in 1869-71-72 filled the office of State Comptroller. In 1867 he was elected a director of the First National Bank of Putnam, becoming its president in 1889, and holding this office until his death. He was also one of the incorporators of the Putnam Savings Bank.

From the organization of the town Mr. Manning manifested the deepest interest in all its moral and material development and advancement, and at the time of its formation was elected president of the Business Men's Association, which was a powerful agent commercially. In 1855 Mr. Manning united with the Baptist Church, and ten years later was made deacon, an office he continued to hold during life. In the cause of temperance he was always zealous, and was foremost in the organization of the Connecticut State Temperance Union of which he was president for some years. For six years he served as president of the Day-Kimball hospital Corporation of Putnam, and after resigning that position remained one of its directors.

On May 5, 1846, Mr. Manning was united in marriage to Miss Emily Fitts, daughter of Daniel and Abigail (Slade) Fitts, of Pomfret, Conn. This union was blessed with one child, Helen Abbie, who was married Sept. 5, 1872, to Dr. John B. Kent, a leading physician of Putnam. They have one child, James Manning Kent, born Aug. 14, 1876.

In summing up the life of so esteemed a citizen as Mr. Manning, it is difficult, in so limited a space, to do him justice. A leading citizen, a man whose name was coupled with the progress, advancement, morality and good citizenship of his community, a man of honor, principle, religion and temperance—justly did Putnam feel his loss.

It was the good man's death. But mark his air;
The calm of resignation settles there.
No dread of death; the terror and the gloom
Are not for those who look beyond the tomb.
Faith penetrates the dark and deep; her eye
Beams full and bright with immortality.
No dread of death; the messenger of peace,
Death comes to give the Christian his release;
Death comes to burst the fetters and the chain;
For him to live was Christ, to die is gain.

EDMUND TIFFANY WHITMORE, retired shoe manufacturer, and a prominent and influential citizen of Putnam, Windham county, has been active in town and city affairs as well as in business circles, and is held in high esteem by many who know him. He comes from one of the oldest families of New England.

Concerning the three families of "Whitmore," "Wetmore," and "Whittemore" in America, all researches show the present bearers of the first name to be descendants of Francis Whitmore, of Cambridge, Mass.; those who have the second to be descended from Thomas Whitmore, of Middletown, Conn.; and those of the last to be descended from Thomas Whitmore, of Malden, Mass. The first two were of the same family, Francis and Thomas probably having been brothers. The last is a distinct name in England, but it may be worth while to note that the mode of spelling was Whitmore as far back as 1200. The coat of arms of the Whitmore family is described as follows: "Vert fretted or," gold bars crossing diagonally on a green shield. Crest, a lion's head couped at the shoulders and bound about with azure ribbons. Whitmore Hall is situated in the parish of Whitmore, Staffordshire, England, 146 miles from London and five miles from New Castle on Tyne. By a marriage between the families of Mainwaring and Whitmore the manor of Whitmore passed into the possession of the Mainwarings, who were its proprietors in 1852.

(1) John Whitmore came from England and settled in Massachusetts. In 1639 we find him in Wethersfield, Conn. In 1641 he removed to Stamford, Conn., being one of the first settlers in that place where he was held in good repute. He was admitted a freeman by the General Court Feb. 6, 1642; and was deputy from Stamford to the General Court Oct. 27, 1643. He was also representative to the New Haven Assembly in 1647. He met his death at the hands of the Indians in 1648. The act was not a case of private hatred, but seems to have been the deed of the whole tribe, and the Colony of Connecticut was moved to unite with that of New Hampshire in a just revenge. The General Court of Connecticut, at Hartford, Sept. 13, 1649, found the following:

"This Court, taking into serious consideration what may be done according to God in the way of revenge of the blood of John Whitmore, late of Stamford, and well weighing all circumstances, together with the carnage of the Indians (bordering thereupon) in and about the premises, do declare themselves that they do judge it lawful and according to God to make war upon them."

A committee was sent to New Haven next day to confer with the rest of the magistrates and return with what convenient speed they might. These spirited measures proved effectual.

Mr. Whitmore probably brought from England all his five children. Whether he brought his wife is not known. He married a second time in Stamford, Conn., a widow Jessup, but had no children by this marriage. His children were: (1) Thomas, born in 1615, settled in Middletown, Conn. (2) Ann, born in 1621, married George Farrar. (3) Mary, born in 1623, married John Brewer. (4) Francis, born in 1625, settled in 1646, at Hartford, Conn. (5) John, born in 1627, was in Stamford, Conn., in 1650.

(II) Francis Whitmore, son of John Whitmore, born in 1625, died Oct. 12, 1685, in Cambridge, Mass. He was in Cambridge in 1649, and was admitted a freeman there May 3, 1654. He was a large land owner in Connecticut, and in other towns in Massachusetts: the boundaries of Lexington beginning "on the Southerly side of Francis Whitmore's house." "The house of Francis Whitmore, of Cambridge, was on the dividing line between Cambridge and Lexington," and is mentioned in the act of the division. Francis Whitmore served in the Indian wars under Major Willard, as the treasurer's books witness. He was also selectman of Cambridge, and held many other offices of trust. Francis Whitmore married (first) Isabel Parks, daughter of Deacon William Parks, of Roxbury, Mass. She died March 31, 1665, and he married (second) Margaret Harty Nov. 10, 1668. She died March 1, 1686.

Mr. Whitmore was the father of ten children: (1) Elizabeth, the eldest, born May 2, 1649. (2) Francis (Lieut.), born Oct. 12, 1650, went to Middletown, Conn. (3) John, born Oct. 1, 1654, settled in Medford, Mass. (4) Samuel, born May 1, 1658, settled in Lexington, Mass. (5) Abigail, born July 30, 1660, married Samuel Wilcox. (6)

Sarah, born March 7, 1662, married Deacon William Locke. (7) Margery, born Sept. 9, 1668, married Thomas Carter. (8) Frances, born March 3, 1671, married Jonathan Thompson. (9) Thomas, born in 1673, settled in West Killingly, Conn. (10) Joseph, born in 1675, settled in Woburn, Mass.

(III) Thomas Whitmore, son of Francis Whitmore, born in 1673, in Cambridge, Mass., died Jan. 23, 1751, in Killingly, Conn. He resided in Watertown in 1698, and in Billerica, Mass., in 1707, and soon afterward settled in Killingly. He joined the Killingly Church Oct. 15, 1715. He married Mary Jennison, daughter of Samuel Jennison, and granddaughter of Robert Jennison. Their children were as follows: Thomas, born Nov. 4, 1694; Francis, Sept. 5, 1696; Samuel, Sept. 22, 1698; Mary, Sept. 4, 1700; Daniel, Feb. 22, 1702; Ephraim, baptized May 29, 1709; and Hannah, Abigail and Sarah, baptized May 29, 1709. Sarah married Benjamin Lovejoy, of Plainfield, Conn., in 1725.

(IV) Deacon Daniel Whitmore, son of Thomas Whitmore, born Feb. 22, 1702, in Watertown, Mass., died Aug. 12, 1768, in Killingly, Conn., where he was deacon of the church a number of years. He married (first) March 20, 1723, Dorcas Converse, who died Jan. 21, 1742. He and his (second) wife, Ruth, were married Dec. 4, 1744. Following is the record of his children: (1) Margaret, born Oct. 30, 1723, died in 1757. (2) Daniel, March 18, 1725, died May 2, 1741; (3) Dorcas, Nov. 7, 1726, died May 16, 1741; (4) Martha, May 20, 1728, died Dec. 22, 1757; (5) Josiah, March 1, 1730, died May 1, 1741; (6) Moses, Oct. 27, 1731, died May 21, 1741; (7) Abigail, June 5, 1733, died Feb. 1, 1759; (8) Aaron, March 27, 1735; (9) Elizabeth, March 13, 1737; (10) Mehitable, May 20, 1739, died May 16, 1741; (11) Thankful, Dec. 20, 1740, died June 5, 1741; (12) Daniel, Dec. 25, 1741. Deacon Daniel and his wife Dorcas joined the Killingly Church Dec. 24, 1729.

(V) Daniel Whitmore (2), son of Deacon Daniel Whitmore, born Dec. 25, 1741, in Killingly, died Oct. 28, 1824, in the same town. On Dec. 16, 1783, he married Robe Green, and following is the record of their children: (1) Anna, born May 4, 1785, died in 1865. (2) Brayton, born Jan. 26, 1787, died Oct. 3, 1823. (3) Olive, born Feb. 8, 1789, died Sept. 26, 1875. (4) Aaron, born Sept. 24, 1791, died in 1862. (5) Marsylvia, born Aug. 18, 1793, died Sept. 8, 1824. (6) Cyrus, born June 6, 1797, died Feb. 3, 1880. (7) Sophia, born Feb. 19, 1801, died July 20, 1875. (8) Zylphia, born April 30, 1803, died March 1, 1821. The father of this family, Daniel Whitmore, was a farmer and a large land owner, having about 700 acres in Killingly at the time of his death. This property was divided among his children. He was religiously inclined, and was a member of the Congregational Church.

(VI) Cyrus Whitmore, son of Daniel Whitmore, born June 6, 1797, in Killingly, died Feb.

3, 1880, in Putnam, Conn., aged nearly eighty-three years. He had resided in Putnam for thirty-five years. He had been previously engaged in cotton manufacturing in Killingly, and was also engaged in the manufacture of machinery in that town. A man of great energy and business tact, he helped materially to build up the earlier manufacturing interests of Killingly. He was one of the first cotton manufacturers in Danielsonville.

In 1818, Cyrus Whitmore married Lucy Tiffany, who was born April 24, 1797, in Woodstock, Conn., and died Oct. 23, 1881, in Putnam, aged eighty-three years and six months. She was the daughter of Edmond and Polly (Howlet) Tiffany, who were married Aug. 27, 1795. The latter died Oct. 3, 1813. Mrs. Whitmore was a descendant of the same progenitor of the Tiffany family as the late Charles L. Tiffany, the noted New York jeweler.

Mrs. Whitmore was the mother of two sons, Daniel J. and Edmund T. The elder, Daniel Judson Whitmore, born Dec. 25, 1825, in Killingly, died Sept. 2, 1864, in Putnam. He was in the shoe manufacturing business with his brother. On Aug. 10, 1859, he married Cordelia A. Darling, of Woonsocket, R. I., and they had two children. The first, Helen Marsylvia, born Aug. 31, 1860, was married June 24, 1885, to John Westcott, of Wauregan, Conn., a cotton mill machinist. Their children are John Benjamin Westcott, born May 29, 1886, and Bessie Downer Westcott, born July 6, 1889. The second, Daniel Benjamin, born Feb. 3, 1862, died May 21, 1871.

(VII) Edmund T. Whitmore, son of Cyrus Whitmore, was born in Killingly, March 14, 1828. In his earliest boyhood he formed the intention of seeing not only his own country, but also foreign lands, and when about twenty years of age he went to the far West, where he spent several years in hunting, trapping and speculating in wild lands. During three years of this time Mr. Whitmore was in northern Wisconsin on the Wolf and Wisconsin Rivers, and in northern Iowa and southern Minnesota. At that time (1846) those sections of the country were inhabited only by Indians and a few hunters and trappers.

Returning East in 1849, Mr. Whitmore embarked in a sailing vessel for Smyrna, and visited many of the Mediterranean ports, spending some time among the mountains of Asia Minor. Upon his return to America he engaged in the manufacture of shoes, continuing that business nearly forty years as a member of the various firms of Whitmore Bros., Whitmore, Leavens & Fay, Fisher & Whitmore, E. T. Whitmore & Co., and Whitmore & Johnson.

In 1894 Mr. Whitmore sold out to William S. Johnson the shoe manufacturing business which he had established. In 1899 he retired altogether from active business, and though still active he thoroughly enjoys his respite. During his active career

Mr. Whitmore did much to promote the best interests of Putnam.

In politics Mr. Whitmore is a Republican and has ever been a firm and staunch supporter of the principles of his party and an active worker for its success. He was chairman of the Republican town committee for six years, and a member of the State central committee for three years. In 1871 he represented Putnam in the Connecticut General Assembly, and he served on the Railroad committee. He has served his town as chairman of the town and city board of relief several years. In religious belief he is a Congregationalist, and he is a consistent member of the Second Congregational Church of Putnam. A man of generous impulses he contributes liberally to charitable and benevolent enterprises.

Mr. Whitmore was married, May 17, 1859, to Ellen Augusta Sheppey, and they have had four children: (1) Clara Louise Whitmore, born Feb. 18, 1860, in Putnam, married Sept. 15, 1885, Anson B. Williams, of West Eaton, N. Y., who was a successful dry-goods merchant in Putnam and later in Willimantic, Conn., where he died Jan. 11, 1896. They had two children, Christine Agnes, born Aug. 31, 1886, and Bernice Louise, born Nov. 14, 1892. (2) Edward Fremont, born Aug. 22, 1861, in Putnam, married Aug. 20, 1884, Cynthia Hawley Stone. He has two children, viz.: Howard Wendell, born July 7, 1885, and Alden Harrison, born Aug. 27, 1891.

Edward Fremont Whitmore commenced his education in the public school of Putnam. In 1879 he entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he took a special course in designing, graduating in 1882. He accepted a position as designer with the Putnam Woolen Co., remaining with that concern twenty years, as designer, assistant superintendent, and later superintendent, resigning in 1901 to take charge of the dry-goods business of Williams & Co., Willimantic, which he purchased Feb. 1, 1903. Mr. Whitmore became a member of the Congregational Church at Putnam in 1874, and has always maintained an active interest in same, serving several years as choir leader, and as Sunday-school superintendent and church treasurer. For eighteen years he was connected with the Spalding Library Association, a parish institution connected with the Congregational Church.

(3) Walter Keith Whitmore, born June 26, 1871, in Putnam, died June 28, 1872. (4) Clarence Norton Whitmore, born Oct. 4, 1878, in Putnam, died Sept. 11, 1879.

Mrs. Whitmore is connected with many benevolent and philanthropic organizations, to the work of which she gives much time and effort. She has always taken an active interest in the Temperance cause, and for several years was president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and later of the Non-Partisan Union; she is officially connected with the latter organization. Mrs. Whitmore was appointed by Gov. Bulkeley a member of the board of lady managers of Connecticut for the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. She represents Putnam on the board of visitors to the Windham County Temporary Home, and is secretary of the board; and is also a member of the House committee of the Day Kimball Hospital.

Mr. Whitmore inherited from the maternal side of the family a love of nature, and has always been an ardent disciple of Izaak Walton, his skill and success with the rod and line being well-known throughout the State. He was one of the pioneer visitors to the now well-known Rangeley Lake region, going there when the only means of transportation was a rowboat on the lakes and a ride on horseback through the wilderness. In the fall of 1885 he had the credit of catching the largest square-tailed trout (weighing ten and one-half pounds) ever known to be taken with an artificial fly in the Rangeley Lake region. Annual trips to these lakes with an occasional one to the Adirondacks have served to keep him young in heart, and it is safe to affirm that he is never happier than when engaged in his favorite pastime or relating his experiences along that "line."

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Whitmore since their marriage has been under the same "roof tree," and its cordial hospitality has been extended beyond their immediate circle of friends to many honored in public life in the State and Nation. Mr. Whitmore is a genial, whole-souled man, one who commands the respect of all who know him. He is generous, perhaps to a fault, and a man of whom nothing but good can be truthfully said. No man can hand down to his posterity a cleaner, better record, as a useful citizen in the community.

WILLIAM HARRISON TAYLOR, of Putnam, son of George H. and Susan (Bennett) Taylor, was born in Arctic, R. I., May 2, 1862. He was educated in the district schools and the Putnam High School. From an early age he has been engaged in newspaper work and has been connected as editor, business manager or proprietor with journals in Putnam, Rockville, New Haven and Danielson, and as reportorial representative of various papers in other parts of Connecticut, Rhode Island and in New York City. He is also publisher of the "Legislative Souvenirs" of Connecticut and Rhode Island, and of the only history published of the Constitutional Convention of 1902. On Jan. 16, 1888, he founded the Connecticut Editorial Association, of which he was secretary and treasurer for several years. He was a messenger in the House of Representatives in 1884, and doorkeeper in 1889. In the Connecticut Legislature of 1901 Mr. Taylor was chairman of the committee on Manual and Roll, and a member of the committee on Temperance. He is secretary of the Legislative Club of 1901, and a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

He was secretary of Republican campaign clubs for three Presidential campaigns. Fraternally he is a Mason, Odd Fellow, Forester and Granger.

On Nov. 26, 1891, Mr. Taylor married Alice I. Day, of Springfield, Mass., and they have one daughter, Grace Abilena, born Nov. 29, 1892.

DAVID S. KENYON, one of the foremost citizens and farmers of Sterling, Windham county, descended from one of three brothers, James, Roger and Austin, who lived respectively in Kingston, Westerly, and Shoreham, R. I., and who were the sons of one John Kenyon, born in 1657, and died in 1732. Just where the ancestry separated from that of Edgar L. Kenyon, also one of the prominent men of Sterling, and who is mentioned at length elsewhere, cannot be determined from the records available at the present time.

Moses Kenyon, the paternal grandfather of David S., was a farmer in Sterling during his active life, and upon his death he found a last resting place in the cemetery at Oneco. Through his marriage with Polly, or Mary, Champlin, the following children were born. Arnold and John W. were twins, of whom the former died at the age of twelve and the latter became the father of David S.; Stephen Champlin married Betsey Croel, June 15, 1817, and died at his home in Providence, R. I.; Mercy, born in 1793, married Griffin Whitford, and lived in Sterling, Conn.; Moses lived first in Sterling and later in Hampton, Conn., where his death occurred; and Sylvester, born Nov. 28, 1801, died unmarried in Sterling, April 15, 1831.

John W. Kenyon was born in Sterling, and from his father's farm he gradually engaged in other interests, principally that of stage driving, in which he was interested for a number of years when a young man, having the route between Norwich and Providence and Norwich and Colchester. With the advent of the railroad his occupation dwindled into unremunerative lines, and he returned to Sterling, where he purchased 100 acres of land in the Sterling Hill school district, near Cedar Swamp Brook. Here he lived until his death, and became a successful and honored member of the community. In Norwich, Conn., he married Lois Day Flanders, and to this couple were born: Happy C., deceased wife of Horatio N. Duglass; Mary Emeline, who lives in Sterling; Martha Louise, who died in New London, Conn., in June, 1901, and who had been twice married, first to Christopher Tyler, of Foster, R. I., and second to Horatio N. Duglass; Hannah Adeline, who became the wife of Checkley Hall, of Sterling Center; Harriet Elizabeth, who is the widow of Archibald Tuckerman, and lives in Willimantic, Conn. (her son, John W. Tuckerman, is a druggist at Moosup, Conn.); Charlotte L., unmarried and living on Sterling Hill; Julia A., who married Orrin Thompson, and lived in Griswold but died in Sterling, and is buried in Oneco cemetery;

David S.; and William H., a machinist at Hopedale, Mass., who married Mary McGee.

On the paternal farm in Sterling David S. Kenyon was born May 6, 1840, and in his youth attended the district schools up to his eighteenth year. His first independent business venture was as a clerk for E. A. Card in the store at Oneco, where he remained until his removal at the end of six years, or in 1872, to Cranston. Here he became associated with the Spragues, who at the time were among the largest and most prosperous manufacturers in the whole of New England. He applied himself to a mastery of the business, and before the expiration of his seven years' service became manager of their affairs, a responsibility of no mean order. In 1879 he returned to Sterling at the invitation of William A. Potter, who became so interested in him that he willed that after the death of himself and wife he should come into possession of the farm of 240 acres. This farm constitutes one of the finest properties in Sterling, and under the superior management of Mr. Kenyon has wonderfully improved and been fitted with all modern and labor-saving devices. In addition, he owns the Kenyon homestead of 100 acres, and on both of these farms he conducts large general farming, stock-raising and dairying enterprises with evident success.

In addition to his other responsibilities Mr. Kenyon is still interested as a salesman, and for many years he has been an agent, for farm implements and fertilizers. He has been foremost in promoting the local interests of the Democratic party, and among his other offices has served as a member of the board of selectmen for a number of years, during two years of which time he was chairman of the board. For the past four or five years he has been treasurer of the town, an office also maintained on other occasions in the past. He represented the town in the State Legislature in 1885 and 1886, the former year being a member of the Woman Suffrage committee, and during the latter year was a member of the committee on Corporations. In all of his public services Mr. Kenyon has shown himself the devoted and unselfish servant of the people, and his wise and broad-minded counsels have resulted in lasting good to the community.

Twice married, the first Mrs. Kenyon was formerly Elsie A. Hyde, a native of Sterling, and daughter of Elisha Hyde. Mrs. Kenyon was born Dec. 4, 1845, and died Oct. 2, 1877, leaving one daughter, Lena J., born April 14, 1873, and who died Aug. 30, 1899. On Sept. 28, 1882, Mr. Kenyon wedded Mary F., daughter of Gardner and Mary (Childs) Luther, and granddaughter of Martin Luther. Mary (Childs) Luther was a daughter of Captain and Harty (Bliss) Childs.

WILLIAM A. POTTER, with the closing years of whose life Mr. Kenyon was associated in business, was a resident of Sterling, and was born April 20,

D. S. Kenyon

1814, his death occurring Oct. 7, 1879. He married Julia J. Hall, who died without issue. Mr. Potter was one of those enterprising and energetic men whose influence in any community is bound to be felt and respected, and he left an indelible impress upon the community which profited by his large-hearted and whole-souled career. He was for many years connected with the quarry interests of Sterling, and in addition to maintaining a large contract business engaged also in the management of a store at Sterling Depot. He owned the house now occupied by Mr. Kenyon, but after giving up his mercantile business at the depot he removed to the farm where his death occurred, and where, in addition to farming, he carried on a general store in a part of his house. He also was a Democrat in politics, and held several responsible positions in the town, although he could never be made to accept political office. He was respected and honored by all who knew him, and his death left a wide gap in the ranks of the developers of this part of the county.

GEORGE MILTON MORSE. Among the early settlers of the State of Massachusetts no family appears to have been more prominent than that of Morse. The earliest authentic record is of Samuel Morse, who with his wife Elizabeth, and son Joseph, came to American shores from England in the ship "Increase" in 1635.

Both father and son became founders of Dedham, Mass., in 1636. The senior Morse was a leading spirit in the settlement; was chosen collector in the first enterprise in the settling of Dedham which seems to have been done at Watertown, in September, 1636. In 1640-42 he was treasurer and selectman.

(I) Samuel Morse was born in 1585 in England and died in 1654 in Medfield, Mass. His wife Elizabeth was born in 1587 and died in 1655. "Mr. Morse belonged to that class of Puritans who strove to separate from the corruption of the English Church, yet continued in her communion until their embarkation for this country."

(II) Joseph Morse, son of Samuel the settler, born in 1615, married in 1638, Hannah Phillips, of Watertown, Mass., and lived in Dedham. Mr. Morse died in 1654, and Mrs. Morse in 1676.

(III) Jeremiah Morse, son of Joseph, was born April 10, 1651. Mr. Morse was a wheelwright and a resident of Medfield, where he died Feb. 19, 1715-16. His wife Elizabeth died April 25, 1733, aged seventy-four years.

(IV) Jeremiah Morse (2), son of Jeremiah, born Oct. 31, 1679, married Nov. 19, 1700, Mehetael Cheney and resided in Medfield and Oxford. He died Oct. 10, 1717, in Oxford, and she died Oct. 4, 1727.

(V) Josiah Morse, son of Jeremiah (2), born July 1, 1701, was a wheelwright by trade, married and located in Walpole.

(VI) Josiah Morse (2), son of Josiah, born

Jan. 31, 1728-29, married (first) May 18, 1747, Keziah Clark, who died March 27, 1766, and (second) March 29, 1768, Dorothy Wood. He resided in Walpole and Sharon.

(VII) Oliver Morse, son of Josiah (2), married Waitstill Stratton and resided in Foxborough, Mass. By trade a carpenter, he also worked as a stone-mason and engaged in farming.

(VIII) MILTON STRATTON MORSE, son of Oliver, was born Dec. 25, 1799, in Foxborough, Mass. Born to work although not to poverty, Mr. Morse was early schooled in New England economy and taught both the necessity of labor and the value of money. It is something for the scientists yet to discover how this lad, with no marked heritage in a mechanical line, should so early have developed those industrial methods which long made his name known in many mill sections not only of his own but other States. His name will always be associated with work of this character.

While still a young lad, Milton S. Morse removed to Wrentham, Mass., and this place was the scene of his first connection with cotton manufacturing. He began work in a small cotton factory, his first task was that of picking cotton and placing it on the cards, at which labor he continued for two years. His father then apprenticed the lad to a blacksmith, but he was rescued from that by the smith's not living up to his contract, and he returned home, being then thirteen years old. The family was then living in Attleboro, Mr. Morse seeking employment in Pawtucket. Although the lad remained at home for a year it was not in idleness, for he soon obtained work in braiding straw and picking cotton by hand for firms in Pawtucket. He was then employed by Zeba Kent, in his mill, at Seekonk. When not busy at the mill he would start to the woods with two yoke of oxen and a horse, and load lumber destined for the shipyards at Warren, R. I. During these years very little time was given to his public school education.

Early in 1815 the father of Milton S. Morse removed to a farm in East Providence, where the son assisted him for a year, subsequently going to live with his uncle at Foxborough. At the end of a year he entered a cotton mill at Attleboro, and very soon was made overseer of the card room. It chanced that in this room were a pair of mules by whose aid Mr. Morse taught himself spinning. One and a half years later he removed to East Wrentham, near the Foxborough line, and assumed charge of the carding and spinning in Blake's factory where he remained about two years. After a brief interval spent in farming, he took charge of the mule spinning in a mill at Walpole, remaining at this point a year and then becoming superintendent of Elisha Sherman's factory in Foxborough, where warps were manufactured by contract, for firms in Pawtucket. After spending a year at Foxborough Mr. Morse assumed charge of a mill at North Attleboro devoted to the manufacture of cotton sewing thread. This was considered by his advisers as a very doubtful position, as it placed him in competition with the firm of Coates and other manufacturers with established reputation. However just here came proof of the thoroughly practical understanding that Mr. Morse had of the business of cotton manufacturing and mill management. Putting into practice his perfected mechanical ideas, he taught inexperienced operatives the business of thread-making, and carried it out with such success that by 1839 he was able to make from Sea Island cotton yarns which ran 130 skeins to the pound.

After an engagement of one year with the Manville Company at Cumberland, R. I., Mr. Morse assumed charge for a brief time of the carding room of a mill at Central Falls, R. I., and a few months later formed a co-partnership with Avery Gilmore, under the firm name of Morse & Gilmore, for the manufacturing of cotton goods. Hiring a small mill at Central Falls, R. I., they made a contract with Crawford Allen, of Providence, to stock the mill and sell the goods on commission. They soon established a profitable business, which continued for three years, when Mr. Morse sold his interest. During this period he was also engaged for a year in running the Lefavor mill at Pawtucket. In 1832 he took charge of the Lyman mill at Woonsocket, running it by contract for Crawford Allen, and at this time he removed his family to that town.

In 1833, in connection with Mr. Allen, Mr. Morse purchased the Abbott Run mills at Cumberland, and transferring his residence to Valley Falls he took charge of the property. He repaired the old and put in much new machinery and continued in the ownership of this property, his original half interest having been increased by the addition of a fourth interest. In 1842 and 1843 he ran, by contract, a mill at Valley Falls, owned by Mr. Allen, and also one owned by Henry Marchant, of Providence. The latter contract, which was for three years, was broken by the owner of the mills.

In 1843, with Mr. Allen, Mr. Morse operated the Arkwright mills, at Cranston, R. I., of which he assumed the superintendence, continuing in this relation for eleven years. In 1844 the machinery was removed from the Valley Falls mills to a brick mill then recently built at Putnam, Conn., and owned by George C. Nightingale, of Providence. In 1857 machinery was brought from a factory at Greenville, R. I., to the present stone mill belonging to Mr. Nightingale. These mills were successfully operated by Mr. Morse under contract. In 1848 the large stone mill known as the Morse mill, was built and operated by M. S. Morse, G. C. Nightingale and S. Dorr, Jr., of Providence, the mill and village growing up to large proportions and importance in one year.

In 1862, Mr. Morse with his brother Alfred, purchased a cotton mill at Holden and another at Farmersville, both in Massachusetts. Later he disposed of the latter mill and became sole owner of the former, continuing to run this mill until his death. In 1872 the firm of Morse & Nightingale erected the Powhatan mill, at the privilege above that which furnishes power for the mills owned by them at Putnam.

Although Mr. Morse lived to reach the border of four-score years, he continued the active supervision of his affairs until the time of his death. This occurred May 17, 1877, as the result of an accident three days before. He was very much interested in the political events of his day and willingly co-operated in the various projects which resulted in benefit to his locality. However, he never aspired to office, being always engrossed in the cares of his important business. His ambition, combined with wonderful natural ability balanced by sound judgment, led to his success as a business man. It was a matter of congratulation to him that through a career of forty years he never failed to meet his obligations or to fulfill all the financial contracts made in his name. Socially he was approachable to the most humble individual in his employ and at the time of his decease more than 1,000 employes, as well as many others, felt the loss of a benefactor and true friend.

On Sept. 30, 1824, Mr. Morse was married to Susanna Blake, of Wrentham, Mass., and to this union were born four children, namely: Stillman F., who was drowned at Valley Falls, in his thirteenth year; George M., who now resides in Putnam; Fanny B., born Oct. 3, 1834, at Valley Falls, who married Andrew Crossman, of Providence; and Susan A., born Aug. 24, 1838, who married Henry A. Munroe, of Providence.

(IX) GEORGE MILTON MORSE, the second son of Milton S. and Susanna (Blake) Morse, was born Aug. 25, 1830, at Central Falls, R. I., and spent his youth in and about the city of Providence. His early years were devoted to study at the schools of Providence, where he remained until the age of eighteen. After the location of the business in Putnam, Conn., he engaged as clerk in the company store with which his father was connected. Returning to Providence he remained two years. Meantime he attended the High School in Providence and the University School on College street, but in the spring of 1850 he made his home again in Putnam and in 1854 was made superintendent of the Morse mills. This responsible position he filled for a number of years, in 1877 assuming the entire management of the property.

In 1869, the Company was granted a charter and in the following year Mr. Morse became one of the corporate owners. Since 1877 he has been the Company's agent and upon the death of his father became president. In 1872 the Powhatan mills were erected under the personal supervision of Mr. Morse, who superintended every detail of their construction, placed the machinery, and successfully started them, fully prepared for the manufacture of sheetings and shirtings. These mills are still in successful operation on the upper dam of the Quinebaug river, in Putnam.

Of the three corporations located at Putnam, Milton S. and George Milton Morse were the managers, the entire responsibility devolving on the latter at the death of his father. Since that time, Mr. Morse has remained the competent and efficient head of this extensive manufacturing interest, which is the largest industrial plant in the city of Putnam, employing 750 hands. Mr. Morse is president of both the Morse and Powhatan Companies, and of the Abbott Run Mills, also treasurer of the latter concern; he was also a third owner and manager of the Holden Cotton mills, at Holden, Mass., which he sold to Martin B. Jefferson, in 1893. For the past ten years the responsibilities of the business have been largely carried by Augustus I. Morse, the eldest son of George M. Morse.

Mr. Morse has been much absorbed in the various duties pertaining to his business, and has neither taste nor leisure for matters of a political character. He is a firm advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and is in full sympathy with the protective tariff principles which it endorses. He has done much to promote the cause of education in his town, and was a member of the managing committee, and one of the building committee of the High School recently erected in Putnam.

In 1891, and again in 1896, Mr. Morse served as Representative in the Connecticut Legislature, being chairman of the committee on Constitutional Amendments and a member of the Finance committee. On several different occasions he has refused Senatorial nominations. With great propriety Mr. Morse may be spoken of in connection with his sympathy and interest in all forms of Christian work. In April, 1858, he became a member of the Baptist Church, in Putnam, in which he has served as deacon since 1880, and is one of its most liberal and generous supporters. His Christianity finds expression in earnest Christian labor, in a broad sympathy for his fellow-men of whatever class or condition, and in cheerful and spontaneous giving. Not restricted by rules or tenets he gives, with a firm belief that he is simply the custodian of means which should be devoted to the glory of God and the welfare of others.

It would not be meet to close this all too brief sketch of one of Putnam's most valued citizens without referring to the fellowship which Mr. Morse has long evinced toward all Christian people in his community. Every Friday evening and at five o'clock on Sunday afternoon he holds union service in his own church in behalf of all who may attend and as a result of these meetings many have been converted to Christianity. He has been a very liberal giver to the cause of Christianity. His benefactions are of a practical character suggested by the exigencies of the hour and carried out without reference to business principles.

In the summer of 1875 Deacon Morse attended a camp meeting near the present well-known Douglas camp grounds fourteen miles from Putnam in Massachusetts. Partaking earnestly in the work of the meeting he was a contributor toward its remarkable success and was moved to undertake the establishment of a permanent camp meeting there. Accordingly he purchased land and erected several suitable buildings such as dining hall, office and dormitory, and his sainted mother was the first to erect a cottage on the grounds. The site is beautifully adapted to the purpose, and through the continued and earnest endeavors of Deacon Morse and his co-laborers a very successful permanent camp meeting has been maintained, contributing much to the uplifting of mankind and the cause of religion in general. Thus are mentioned only a few of the avenues in which this good man has given lavishly of his personal effort and means to benefit his fellow man and testify his gratitude to the Giver of all things.

On April 13, 1851, Mr. Morse was united in marriage with Miss Melora, daughter of Whitford and Mehetabel (Hopkins) Whitney, of Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Melora (Hopkins) Morse comes of an old Rhode Island family. The HOPKINS FAMILY in this country goes back to one Thomas Hopkins, who came from England and settled in Providence, R. I., about the year 1640. He was assigned a share of land near the south end of the town—the fourth lot south of what is now Power street. Thomas Hopkins subsequently had other lands assigned him and settled for a time on a tract of land west of the Pawtucket, or Blackstone, river. About the time of King Philip's War Thomas Hopkins with some of his family moved to Long Island. He was several times commissioner—in 1652, 1659 and 1660. He was a deputy to the General Convention from 1665 to 1667, and again in 1672, and was a member of the Town Council from 1667 to 1672.

Thomas Hopkins (2), born about 1650, married Mary Smith and settled upon the homestead in that part of Providence, which in 1731 was set off to make the town of Smithfield, and later set off for the town of Lincoln. On this estate was reared the large family of Thomas Hopkins (2). All but one of his eight sons married and left children from whom are descended those of the Hopkins name in Rhode Island and in other parts of this country.

Ezekiel Hopkins, fourth son of Thomas (2) and Mary (Smith) Hopkins was a member of the town council of Scituate in 1731, and represented his town in the State Legislature in 1745.

A large family of children have been given to Deacon and Mrs. Morse, all of whom have been reared "in the fear and admonition of the Lord." and are creditable representatives of this old New England family. The first-born, (1) Francis Stillman, died in childhood. The second, (2) Ida M., born Oct. 14, 1852, was married June 10, 1875, to Charles M. Fenner, a well known Putnam business man. She is a prominent member of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter, D. A. R. (3) Augustus Irving Morse, born Dec. 8, 1855, was married Jan. 5, 1878, to Annie G. Dyer, and they have one child, Lila Dyer, born Sept. 14, 1879. (4) Stillman F. Morse, born Nov. 23, 1857, was married in November, 1879, to Emma L. Leonard, of Putnam, and has had five children, namely: Louise Frances, born July 8, 1881; George William, Aug. 27, 1883; Ralph Leonard, April 18, 1889; Wendell Chapin, March 25, 1896, died March 6, 1897; Florence Leonard, born Nov. 27, 1897. (5) Milton Stratton Morse, born Oct. 11, 1859, married in November, 1879, Elvira H. Busiel, and has one child, Ethel Busiel, born Dec. 27, 1880. (6) George Byron Morse, born Aug. 27, 1861, married in November, 1885, Maud L. Alden. (7) Harriet Marcella Morse, born Sept. 5, 1863, married Oct. 17, 1888, Albert Charles Luke, a merchant of Putnam. Her children were born as follows: Frederick Morse, Oct. 28, 1889; Albert Eugene, March 17, 1894. The eldest died June 2, 1891. (8) Alice Melora Morse, born May 6, 1865, married Oct. 31, 1887, James Eugene Taylor. (9) Walter Nelson Morse, born Sept. 1, 1867, married, in 1890, Lena Parmalee. He died Nov. 24, 1898, in Pasadena, Cal. (10) Blanche P. Morse, born July 9, 1870, married July 3, 1892, George A. Vaughan, and is the mother of a daughter, Blanche Melora, deceased, and George A., Jr., born Aug. 27, 1894.

FREEMAN F. PATTEN, one of the best-known citizens and business men of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, comes from an old New England family, which by marriage is connected with a number of old and prominent families in the country's earliest history. His maternal grandfather, Capt. Parley Converse, was, in his day, one of the most prominent citizens of the town, and of whom a sketch appears elsewhere. Mr. Patten's great-grandfather, Capt. Hezekiah Wells, received his title in the Revolutionary war.

The Patten family in America descends from William Patten, a native of Somersetshire, England, and from whom our subject is a descendant in the eighth generation as follows: William, Thomas, Nathaniel (1), Nathaniel (2), Nathaniel (3), Benjamin, Robbins and Freeman F.

(I) William Patten, the progenitor of the family, came to America about 1630. He was early at Cambridge, where his name appears on the records soon after 1630. His wife's name was Mary. She died Sept. 30, 1673. He died Dec. 10, 1668. They had a family of three children, Mary, Thomas and Nathaniel.

(II) Thomas Patten was born in October, 1636, in Cambridge, Mass., where he died Jan. 16, 1689. He married, April 1, 1662, Rebecca Paine, who was born Sept. 19, 1642, in Dedham, Mass., daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Paine. This wife died May 19, 1680, and for his second wife Thomas Patten married Widow Sarah Ditson, who after his death married Thomas Richardson. The third child and second son of Thomas Patten was Nathaniel.

(III) Nathaniel Patten (1) was born Sept. 14, 1668, in Billerica, Mass., and died April 2, 1718. He was married Dec. 6, 1699, to Miss Hannah Ross, who was born March 31, 1679, a daughter of Thomas and Seeth (Holman) Ross. The children of Nathaniel Patten were as follows: Hannah, born April 3, 1705, married Joseph Emerson May 19, 1726; Nathaniel, born Sept. 10, 1707, married Mary Kidder; John, born Oct. 31, 1711, died June 14, 1785, married Jane Hill in February, 1738, and she died June 11, 1786.

(IV) Nathaniel Patten (2) was born Sept. 10, 1707, and died Nov. 25, 1755, in Stafford, Conn. He was the progenitor of the family in this town. He married Mary Kidder, who was born March 26, 1707, in Tewksbury, Mass., and died Nov. 30, 1789, in Stafford, Conn. She was a daughter of Enoch and Mary (Haywood) Kidder, of Tewksbury, Mass. The children of this union were: Mary, born April 10, 1728, married Jonathan Torrey; Hannah, born Nov. 11, 1729, married Nathan Pease; John, born Nov. 26, 1731, married a Miss Johnson; Nathaniel, born March 19, 1733, married, Nov. 3, 1763, Esther Shedd (she died April 13, 1815; and he died Dec. 13, 1818); William, born March 11, 1738, married Abigail Bigsby; Jonathan, born Nov. 28, 1740; Sarah, who lived to be about 100 years old, married a Dr. Stanton.

(V) Nathaniel Patten (3) was born March 19, 1733, in Windham, Conn., and died Dec. 13, 1818, in West Stafford. He married, Nov. 3, 1763, Esther Shedd, who was born Feb. 4, 1739, and died April 13, 1815. She was a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Hill) Shedd, of Billerica, Mass. To Nathaniel Patten and his wife were born the following children: Esther, born Oct. 31, 1764, married Absalom Shaw; Nathaniel, born April 9, 1766, married, Sept. 29, 1796, Eunice Pomeroy, who died May 21, 1822, and he died Dec. 17, 1816; Elizabeth, born May 9, 1768, lived a maiden life in the home of her brother Benjamin, and died in 1852; Celinda, born Oct. 30, 1770, married first a Mr. Bartlett and second a Mr. Cooley; Asa, born May 3, 1773, married Aseneth Davis; Justus, born Dec. 16, 1775, died young; Benjamin, born Feb. 4, 1778, died Aug. 9, 1854 (he married first Sally Wells, Nov. 1, 1814, who died Jan. 26, 1834; and second, April 14, 1835, Mrs. Huldah (Clark) Gage, who died April 4, 1878); Justus, born May 15, 1780, never married; Calvin, born Aug. 2, 1782, was a twin with Luther Calvin, and married Laura Warriner; and Luther Calvin died in 1804.

(VI) Benjamin Patten, the grandfather of Freeman F., was born Feb. 4, 1778, in Somers, Conn., and died Aug. 9, 1854, in West Stafford, Freeman, Patten.

Conn. His remains rest in the old cemetery at West Stafford. All his life he followed farming, and became very successful. Blessed with good health he became noted for his thrift and industry. In politics he was a Whig, and in religious connection was a devout member of the Congregational Church. Benjamin Patten was married Nov. 1, 1814, to Sally Wells, who was born March 6, 1786, in East Windsor, Conn., and died Jan. 26, 1834, in West Stafford, Conn., a daughter of Capt. Hezekiah and Sarah (Trumbull) Wells, of East Windsor, Conn. Capt. Hezekiah Wells was a native of East Windsor, Conn., born June 25, 1736, and where he died March 8, 1817; he was an ensign in Col. Wolcott's regiment at Boston in 1776, was later second lieutenant in Col. Gay's Regiment, Second Battalion, Wadsworth's Brigade, and in 1777 became captain in the Sixth Militia Regiment. To Benjamin Patten and his wife were born: (1) Benjamin Wells, born Aug. 18, 1816, was married May 9, 1844, to Laura Alden Converse, who was born March 3, 1823, a daughter of Capt. Parley Converse. He became associated with the old Green Mill, where he was engaged in the fulling department. In company with Capt. Parley Converse he entered into the business management of the Converseville Company, and at different times was agent, treasurer and manager of the enterprise. He died Jan. 11, 1880. Benjamin Wells Patten had one daughter, Sallie Amanda, who married Frank Skinner, of Philadelphia, where he is in business as a real estate and insurance agent. Their children are Laura Patten Skinner, who was born April 20, 1874; Nadina C., born July 4, 1875; Leona, born Dec. 13, 1877, died Jan. 26, 1885. (2) Luther Patten, born Jan. 7, 1818, died Feb. 18, 1827. (3) Nancy Wells, born March 20, 1820, married Spencer Davis, a farmer in Somers, Conn., and died in September, 1852. She had two daughters who were married; Sarah married a Mr. Chapin and died in New York; Laura married a Dr. Floor and is now a widow. (4) Robbins, born March 22, 1823, is mentioned later. (5) Horace, born March 30, 1829, is living in Enfield, Conn., where he is engaged in farming. He married, April 12, 1854, Mary Jane Allen, of Enfield, Conn. She was born June 18, 1833, and died April 23, 1898. Of their children Henry B., an eminent civil engineer in Cheyenne, Wyoming, was educated at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, from which he was graduated in 1878. From 1881 to 1885 he was resident engineer of the Union Pacific Railroad; and from 1885 to 1893 was division engineer in charge of the Wyoming division of the same road. From 1895 to 1899 he was city engineer of the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming. He is now chief clerk in charge of the office of the United States Surveyor General of Wyoming. In 1888 he was elected a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, a deserved compliment to his high professional standing and manly character. On March 9, 1882, he was married to Emily Adelle Allen, in Enfield, Conn., a daughter of Asher and Emily M. (Allen) Allen, by whom he has had Henry Allen, born in Cheyenne, Wyoming, May 30, 1885; Mabel Patten, born in Cheyenne, Jan. 25, 1889. Homer Wells Patten, another son of Horace, was born March 14, 1858, in Enfield, and is a traveling salesman.

(VII) Robbins Patten was born March 22, 1823, in West Stafford. He was married June 4, 1851, to Louisa Augusta Converse, who was born July 10, 1825, a daughter of Hon. Parley and Sally (Alden) Converse, whose sketch appears elsewhere. She died Jan. 15, 1901, in Stafford Springs. To Robbins Patten and his wife were born the following children: (1) Franklin Wells, born May 8, 1852, in Stafford, studied law and was admitted to practice in Philadelphia. He became connected with the Greenwich Insurance Company, of New York. He was never married. His death occurred in New York City, in January, 1890. (2) Freeman F. is the subject proper of this article.

Robbins Patten was educated in the local schools, and for two or three terms was a student in the academy at Wilbraham. When he was about twenty years of age he engaged in farming, in which occupation he continued until the fall of 1858. That year he removed to Stafford Springs to become associated with the Converseville Company, taking the position of superintendent of the dyeing department, where he remained until Sept. 8, 1879. That year he sold out, and since then has lived a retired life. At the time he retired from the mill he held a position as director of the Company. He is vice-president and director of the Savings Bank at Stafford Springs, and was one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, of which he is a director. Both himself and wife were members of the Methodist Church, where he holds the position of trustee. For many years he was a deacon in the West Stafford Congregational Church. In politics he is a Republican.

Freeman F. Patten was born Nov. 3, 1856, in Stafford, where his early education was received, this being supplemented by an attendance at Wilbraham Academy for three years. When about nineteen Mr. Patten took up a business life, first as clerk for about two years in the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs. In April, 1877, he became bookkeeper for the Converseville Company (which was founded by his grandfather, Capt. Parley Converse). This marked the beginning of a connection in various capacities with the woolen manufacturing business in Stafford Springs, which continued through twenty-three years in the same mill in which it began, ending in 1900. During that period Mr. Patten had been advanced from bookkeeper to assistant treasurer, and in 1890 he became treasurer of the Warren Woolen Company, which was the successor of the Converseville Company, the change taking place in September, 1879. The Warren Woolen Company greatly increased the capacity of the mill, and added as well an entire new plant, that being for the manufacture of worsted yarns. This latter plant was the first of its kind in Stafford, and one of but two in the State. In 1899 Mr. Patten severed his connection with the Warren Woolen Company. Soon after he became a partner in the Middle River Company, at Stafford Springs, from which he severed his connection in 1900, since when he has lived retired, except for the management and care of his private interests which are varied and extensive. While but a man of middle age, Mr. Patten has had well onto a quarter of a century's identification with the woolen manufacturing business in his native town, where he has long been looked upon as one of its shrewd business men and most substantial citizens. He has been prominently identified with the progressive movements of his town and section. His real estate holdings for a number of years have been large and important; his judgment on values of that character is considered first class; his opinion on general matters of business and finance carries no little weight. He is a director of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs; he was one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, and has been a director of the same for years. In political matters, Mr. Patten has invariably, in national matters, been a staunch supporter of the Republican principles. In local matters he is non-partisan, looking to fitness before politics. He has been a business man rather than a politician, and never an office seeker. He has served as school treasurer, also borough treasurer. He is one of the original members of the Business Men's Club, and is one of the governors of the Country Club. Mr. Patten is eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution.

Mr. Patten was married, Nov. 17, 1890, to Miss Lily Welch, a daughter of Dr. Calvin and Helen (Cronkleton) Welch, of Delaware, Ohio. She graduated from the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware. Mr. and Mrs. Patten are both members of the Methodist Church, in which he is a steward. The pleasant home of Mr. Patten on "Edgewood" is in the midst of the most desirable residence locality in Stafford Springs. The home was built by Mr. Patten's father in 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman F. Patten have one son, Parley Converse, born Sept. 25, 1893. Mrs. Patten is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

RICHARD MONROE HOYLE. The true historian owns allegiance to no particular class or faction. It is his to chronicle facts. In recording the facts of history, however, no writer may lightly pass over the private soldier of the great Civil war, whose deeds of heroism rival those of storied Greek.

For long years our literature has teemed with stories of officers who "gallantly led their men into the jaws of death," etc., ad infinitum; but what of the "led?" Time and again was it proved during the struggle that in desperate battle the American soldier needed neither leading string nor animated shoulder straps to insure the performance of his full duty—his intelligent grasp of the situation and his splendid patriotism carrying him straight to the mark, and winning many a battle which had been illy planned by incompetent officers. All honor to the private soldier, the fruit of whose heroism is an undivided country and an unslipped flag!

When the storm-clouds of war surcharged with sectional hatred and strife burst in awful fury over our devoted country, one of the first to respond to the call of President Lincoln was the gentleman whose honored name introduces this paragraph, then a lad of but sixteen years of age. Being of good stature he was passed by the recruiting officer and in April of 1861 was enrolled as a private soldier at Blackstone, Mass., for three months' service. Owing to the speedy response to the call for men, those of Mr. Hoyle's company could not get places in the three months' regiments. But at the first call for 300,000 they joined the Worcester regiment of the 15th M. V. I., one of the first regiments to leave the State. Capt. Getchell commanded the Company, and Col. Devens the regiment, which was named for the Continental 15th—the banner regiment of Revolutionary times.

At the presentation by the ladies of Worcester of the regimental colors, the men, on bended knees, took a solemn vow never to surrender their colors to the enemy. That they kept their vow is proved by the tattered shreds of their flag still clinging to the standard, which may be seen today in the Boston State House.

The 15th M. V. I. saw hard service in the 2nd Army Corps, Army of the Potomac, from Ball's Bluff to Appomattox. Of its original 1011 men 889 were killed or wounded. In four different engagements the regiment lost more than half its number. At Antietam, the bloodiest battle of the war, when 25,000 men fell between seven in the morning and four in the afternoon, the 15th M. V. I. sustained the heaviest loss of any of the regiments engaged.

It was at Antietam that Mr. Hoyle received his nearly fatal wounds, being shot through his right knee and left arm, and left on the field between two fires in the west woods in front of bloody lane. Mr. Hoyle had previously been wounded in the left side and right thigh, but not so as to be disabled for duty. He served as a non-commissioned officer and was mentioned by his Captain for promotion. His wounds, however, prevented his accepting a commission and he was honorably discharged from the service in March, 1864.

Richard M. Hoyle was born in the town of Thompson, Conn., June 27, 1844. George Hoyle, his father, was also a native of the east part of that town, he being a son of Richard, and a descendant of Dr. John Hoyle, who was the first of that name in Providence, R. I. A full history of Dr. John Hoyle's descendants will be found under the Hoyles of East Thompson.

George Hoyle was reared and educated in Thompson and passed his entire lifetime as a highly respected and prosperous farmer. He first cultivated the home farm and then lived successively in Providence, Blackstone, Mass., Stockbridge, and Webster, where his death occurred in 1879. He was buried in the Putnam cemetery. He was a man of quiet and correct habits, in early life voting the Democratic ticket, and later supporting the principles of the Republican party. He married Hannah Standish a native of Thompson and a lineal descendant in direct line of the noted Pilgrim, Miles Standish. To her were born the following: (1) George, residing in Danielson; (2) Jane, who became Mrs. William Palmer, deceased; (3) Mary, who married Gardner Howe, both deceased; (4) an unnamed infant; (5) Lucy, who married George Evans; (6) Richard Monroe; (7) Deborah, who married Daniel Mowry; (8) Sarah, Mrs. E. M. Corbin, of Putnam; (9) La Fayette, of Danielson; (10) Ellen; (11) Jeremiah, and (12) Emma, deceased. The mother of this family was a woman greatly devoted to her children and possessed of many strong traits of character. She died in 1872. Both the parents were consistent and faithful members of the M. E. Church.

Richard M. Hoyle has passed a life of varied activity, his genius mastering the situation at all times. His business transactions have been attended with a high degree of success, which may be ascribed to his close application and untiring industry. He was educated in the district school of Putnam, but, like many boys of his day, his education was finished in that larger school where the sword displaced the ferule and the shout of battle the buzz of the schoolroom. Just prior to the war he had taken service with a barber with the intention of learning the trade, and when he returned from the war he resumed his apprenticeship. After finishing this apprenticeship he worked for the next six years at Danielson, Putnam and Webster. In 1875 Mr. Hoyle returned to Putnam, where he has since been located, engaged in the stationery and news business—the first in Putnam to take up this occupation. Owing to the fine business ability of Mr. Hoyle, and a certain directness and persistency of pursuit when he makes up his mind as to the feasibility of any enterprise, he has prospered in other lines. Soon after locating in Putnam he purchased a large business block on Union street, and on its total destruction by fire in 1877 rebuilt it in 1878. He now owns "Music" block on South Main street, and was one of the proprietors of the Bugbee Hotel. Mr. Hoyle's residence is a model of comfort and convenience, and he delights in its spacious environs, being quite domestic in his tastes. Like many of the well-to-do townspeople, he owns a nice farm within a short drive of Putnam, and there he indulges his one hobby, if it may so be called, that of experimenting in fine stock. He is a lover of good horses especially, and has for years kept in his stable some very fine speed animals, owning one at present which frees him from breathing the dust of the best.

The public utilities of the city have felt the intelligent interest of Mr. Hoyle, though he cares nothing for public preferment. He was one of the organizers of Putnam's famous Fire Department, and acted as foreman of the Hook and Ladder Co. for five years. In the fraternities he finds social enjoyment in membership with several of the best. In Masonry he is a leading member of Quinebaug Lodge No. 106, R. A. Chapter No. 41, and is a Sir Knight, his Commandery being in Willimantic. In the G. A. R. he is on hand to aid in the fraternal work of A. G. Warner Post. Mr. Hoyle votes as he shot, to use the expression of one of our great statesmen; which, being interpreted, of course means that the principles promulgated by the Republican party come more nearly to his ideas of right.

The home life of Mr. Hoyle has been peculiarly felicitous. Mrs. Hoyle is a lady of refined tastes and many domestic accomplishments, and the devotion of this couple to each other is a matter of frequent comment among their large circle of friends. Home has always been a sacred word with Mrs. Hoyle and it is her constant effort to make it approach her ideal in creature comforts. Both she and her husband dispense a delightful hospitality in their commodious residence.

The family of which Mrs. Hoyle is a member is of the elect in New England history and numbers many who have attained prominence in various walks of life. The original American ancestor was William Carpenter, who, with his son, Joseph Carpenter, came from England in 1633. The record of the latter's marriage to Margaret Sutton, daughter of John, is May 25, 1605, according to the genealogy of the Carpenter family compiled by the Hon. Amos R. Carpenter. Joseph died in 1675, and was the father of nine children.

Benjamin, the next in line, was born Jan. 19, 1658, and was the second son. He married Renew Weeks, born in 1660. This lady died July 29, 1703, and Benjamin then married Martha Toogood, Nov. 27, 1706. He died May 22, 1727, the father of eleven children.

Benjamin (2), the eldest son, was born Jan. 27, 1680, and married Jan. 23, 1706, Mary Barney. They moved to Ashford, Conn., in 1733, where he followed farming during life. They reared eight children.

Daniel, the third son, born Feb. 26, 1708, was of the line. His parents removed from Swansea to Ashford, Conn. He and his wife Sarah had four children.

Joel, of this family, was born in Swansea Aug. 11, 1731, and came to Ashford with the family. He died in Ellington, Conn., Jan. 25, 1789. He was a physician and served as a surgeon in the Revolutionary war. His home was in Ellington, where he practiced. He married Mary Ruggles Dec. 9, 1755, who was born in 1728 in New Britain, and died in Ellington Dec. 27, 1799. She was the mother of eight children.

Elijah, the fifth son of Joel and Mary (Ruggles) Carpenter, was born Aug. 9, 1762, in Ashford. He married Sarah Younglove July 3, 1780, who died Feb. 13, 1842. His death occurred in Thompson May 5, 1795. Elijah served three different times in the Revolutionary war. He first served as corporal in the 11th Regiment of Connecticut militia, 1776, Caleb Clark, Captain, in New York and New Jersey. He was a private in the 2nd Regiment under Capt. Hill from July 1, 1778, to March 1, 1779; and served as private in Gen. David Waterbury's brigade, William Moulton, Captain, July 5, 1789. He was Mrs. Hoyle's great-grandfather.

Daniel was the eldest son of Elijah and Sarah (Younglove) Carpenter. He was born in Thompson March 5, 1781, and married Olive Smith of Tolland, Conn., July 11, 1800. This lady was born in 1783 and died in 1830. Daniel then married Chloe Smith, then the Widow Darling, and a sister of his first wife. Daniel Carpenter was a farmer, living first in Thompson, then in Woodstock. He was the father of six children.

Lucien Carpenter, the father of Mrs. Hoyle, was born in Holland, Mass., Jan. 22, 1812. In early childhood he worked out among the farmers of the neighborhood, and at seventeen went into a cotton factory, where he worked until 1843. He was then a bookkeeper for sixteen years and a dry goods clerk for ten, when he retired from business and spent the remaining years of his life in Providence, R. I. He died in Putnam, Conn., in 1901. Lucien Carpenter was a man of much force of character and was highly respected in the different communities in which he lived. He was a staunch Republican in politics and represented that party in the Legislature from the town of Putnam in the years of 1863-64-65. He married (first) Almira Burlingham Jan. 4, 1835, she having been born in Killingly, Conn., in 1815. His second wife was Ann Luther, born Dec. 1, 1820, in Providence, R. I., the date of the marriage being June, 1881. The children by his first wife were:

(1) Louis Cass, born Feb. 20, 1836, married Mary Morrison, and resides in Colorado; he is a lawyer and is quite a prominent man; was appointed by President Grant Collector of Internal Revenue of the 3d district of South Carolina, and is engaged in the practice of his profession in Denver, Colorado.

(2) Isaac Newton, born in 1839, was a merchant of Sterling, Ill. Died in 1900.

(3) Ellen M., born in 1841, married Charles Dresser. Died Oct. 30, 1900.

(4) Inez Vilette, born in 1847, Mrs. Hoyle.

(5) Cassius M., born June 21, 1850, died in 1883; he was a State marshal in South Carolina.

CHARLES W. PRENTICE, who is engaged in the top roll covering business at Taftville, New London Co., Conn., is a descendant of old New England ancestry.

(I) Capt. Thomas Prentice, born in England in 1621, is first of record in this country at Cambridge, Mass. He had married in England, his wife's name being Grace. They united with the church in Cambridge in 1652. They lived in the eastern part of Cambridge village and later in Newtown, Mass., where Mr. Prentice died July 6, 1710. He was appointed captain of the troop of horse in the Indian war, June 24, 1675. They brought to this country with them their eldest child, Grace; their other children were: Thomas, Elizabeth, Mary, John, John (2), and Hannah. The mother died Oct. 9, 1692.

(II) Thomas Prentice married March 20, 1675, Sarah, daughter of Capt. Thomas and Ann (Lord) Stanton, he the famous Indian interpreter. Mr. Prentice died April 19, 1685. His widow married (second) Capt. William Denison, and died in 1713. The children of Thomas Prentice were: Thomas, Grace, Samuel and Rev. John.

(III) Samuel Prentice, born about 1680, married Esther Hammond, daughter of Nathaniel Hammond, of Newtown, Mass. Mr. Prentice owned a large tract of land in Stonington, Conn., before 1700, and went there to live about 1709. He died April 24, 1728. His widow married (second) Christopher Avery. The children of Samuel Prentice were: Samuel, Joseph, Grace, Mary, Jones, Esther, Oliver, Eunice, Thomas, Dorothy and Lucy.

(IV) Joseph Prentice, born Jan. 26, 1704, in Newtown, Mass., married Nov. 10, 1725, Mary Wheeler, and their children were: Joseph, Priscilla, Eleazer, Elisha, Jonathan, Mary, Hannah, and Manassah and Ephraim (twins).

(V) Manassah Prentice, born July 22, 1749, in Preston, Conn., lived and died in that town, his death occurring about 1824. He married (first) Nov. 19, 1772, Asenath Burton; she died March 29, 1790, and he married (second) Dec. 2, 1790, Mehitable Preston, of Lisbon, Conn. His children were: Ephraim, born Sept. 27, 1773, is mentioned below; Abby, born Sept. 16, 1776, married a Mr. Hart and removed West; Manassah, born Nov. 25, 1778, was a resident of Cazenovia, N. Y.; Joseph, born April 2, 1781, was an Episcopal clergyman of Catskill, N. Y.; Henry, born Sept. 20, 1783, lived in Plainfield, Conn.; and John Dow, born Aug. 19, 1788, died Sept. 11, 1789.

Ephraim Prentice

(VI) Ephraim Prentice, born Sept. 27, 1773, lived in Plainfield, Conn., but in the latter part of his life removed to Pigno, Ohio, where he died. He married Mary Dow, and among their children were John and David.

(VII) John D. Prentice, born Aug. 5, 1799, died June 5, 1861. He married Abby Gray Gilmore, daughter of Josiah P. and Susannah (Gray) Gilmore, who was born in November, 1800, and died Dec. 5, 1858. They had a family of six children, namely: (1) William P. lived at Moss-ville, Peoria Co., Ill. (2) Mary married a Mr. Marsh, and went West. (3) Ephraim is mentioned below. (4) Susan G. married John Montgomery, for many years a resident of Plainfield, Conn., and later of Fiskdale, Mass., where both died. (5) Thomas J. lived for a time in Plainfield, and then removed to Fairbury, Neb. (6) Charles, born in April, 1838, died July 16, 1848.

(VIII) EPHRAIM PRENTICE was born near Moosup, town of Plainfield, Windham county, July 27, 1822. His educational advantages were limited to the district schools, and a part of his boyhood days was spent in Ohio, where his parents resided for a time. His mechanical ingenuity early manifested itself, and when a mere boy he worked as a sash and blind maker, being regarded as an excellent workman. For about two years he operated a shop in that line in Greenville, New London Co., Conn. He later worked as a millwright, being employed in Eastford, Conn., North Webster, Mass., Wauregan, Conn., and other places, remaining at Wauregan for twenty-four years. While there he began the work in which he made the greatest success, that of covering top rolls for use in cotton mills, or spinning frames, mules, etc. In the beginning he occupied a room rented in the mill, hiring the power as well and having the assistance of a couple of hands. He continued there with marked success until the spring of 1883, when he removed to East Brooklyn, then in the borough of Danielsonville, and located on the Stewart property, which he had purchased two years previous. He removed the old house, and erected the present one, and also fitted up a shop for the continuance of the business of covering rolls, in which he had so greatly prospered. After his death that work was turned over to his son George E., who now carries it on. In about 1871, soon after the Ponemah mills at Taftville were established, Mr. Prentice established a business (branch) there, which is now carried on by his son Charles W.

From the time of his location in East Brooklyn, Mr. Prentice devoted his time largely to farming, and brought his sixty-two acres to a high state of cultivation. This work he found congenial from the start, and he became an enthusiastic stockman, breeding imported Holstein cattle, of which he had a fine herd. Visitors to his home could not fail to be impressed with the neatness and order prevailing on the entire place, and with the up-to-date methods pursued in every department. In business affairs Mr. Prentice was a man of fine judgment and keen discernment, and his advice was often sought and followed. He was an especially successful man in his investments, and this was a considerable source of his wealth. His word was relied upon, and his personal standing was unquestioned. He was a typical self-made man, who won honor and fortune by strict integrity and untiring industry, and his sudden death, at his home in East Brooklyn, Nov. 13, 1899, removed one of the mechanical geniuses and successful agriculturists for which New England is noted.

In Plainfield, Conn., Mr. Prentice was united in marriage with Rachel S. Wilson, who was born in that town, Sept. 22, 1821, and proved herself a most worthy helpmeet and loving mother. She entered into rest Nov. 8, 1891. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Prentice were as follows: (1) Charles W. is mentioned below. (2) Ellen M., born Nov. 1, 1849, who tenderly cared for the parents until they passed away, is unmarried, and resides on the old homestead. (3) Emma R., born Sept. 5, 1852, married John Whittaker, of Plainfield, Conn. (4) George E., born June 14, 1860, at Wauregan, was educated in the district schools, and at an early age began work with his father and has continued in the roll covering business ever since, now carrying it on in East Brooklyn.

Both Ephraim Prentice and his wife sleep in the family lot in Westfield cemetery, at Danielson. They were faithful adherents to the tenets of the Congregational Church. In his political belief Mr. Prentice was a Republican, but his private affairs so engrossed his time and attention that he invariably declined to accept the many offices tendered him. In his fraternal relations he was a Mason, being a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of Danielson.

Charles W. Prentice was born Feb. 13, 1847, in Greenville, Conn., and was an infant when his parents moved from there to Eastford, from which place they went to Central Village and later to Pachaug, in the town of Griswold, and from there to Wauregan, where he received his education in the common schools. After leaving school he was employed as an assistant bookkeeper in the mill at Wauregan for a period of ten years, and then entered the employ of his father in the shop at Wauregan, where he remained until 1880, at which time he located at Taftville and took charge of the shop there, which he has since conducted with marked success. Mr. Prentice was married in Manchester, N. H., to Alice M. Brown, of that place, and they have two children, Harry E., and Leonard C. In political faith Mr. Prentice is a Republican, but he is not particularly active in party affairs and is no office seeker. Fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason, holding membership in Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., at Danielson, and in Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Hartford.

He is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, at Taftville, and of the New England Order of Protection. Mr. Prentice ranks among the popular, well-known, highly respected and substantial citizens of his town.

PERRY. Some ten or more years before the war of the Revolution, there appeared in Killingly, Conn., two young men, brothers, by the name of Perry. They were born in Rehoboth, Mass. The elder, David, Aug. 8, 1741; the younger, Sylvanus, in 1743. Their baptisms are recorded in the records of the Second Church of Rehoboth, at Palmer's River, David, Oct. 18, 1741; Sylvanus, Sept. 9, 1743.

These young men were the sons of Eliakim and Sarah (Joy) Perry, of Rehoboth, who had also a daughter, Abigail, who married John Wilson, July 28, 1764, and another daughter, Elizabeth, who married Simeon Read, Jan. 7, 1768, both of Rehoboth. The Hon. Ellery Wilson, of Providence, R. I., is a grandson of Abigail. David was married in Killingly by the Rev. Aaron Brown, Jan. 12, 1764, to Anna Bliss, born April 11, 1740, died Sept. 12, 1835, daughter of John Bliss of Rehoboth. Sylvanus was married likewise by Rev. Aaron Brown in Killingly to a sister of David's wife, namely: Rebecca Bliss, who was born Dec. 20, 1744, in Rehoboth.

Eliakim Perry, the father, was born May 8, 1716, in Sandwich, Mass., and was a son of Benjamin Perry, of Sandwich. He married Sarah Joy, daughter of David Joy, of Rehoboth, Dec. 18, 1740, the Rev. John Greenwood officiating. Sarah Joy was born in Rehoboth July 17, 1720, and died at the age of twenty-six years, after the birth of four children. Eliakim Perry married again and had the following children: Seth, who lived in Norwich, or what is now Franklin, Conn.; Azor, who settled in Middletown, Vt.; Eliakim, Jr., who settled in Moravia, N. Y.; Ozias, who also settled in Moravia; Ezekiel, who lived in Middletown, Vt.; Sarah, who married Caleb Harrington, and lived in Clarendon, Vt.; and Phillippa, who married a Mr. Rowe, and lived in New London, Connecticut.

Eliakim Perry served in the expedition under Gen. Pepperell against Cape Breton in 1746, with his brother Abner, who was killed in taking the Island Battery. All of Eliakim's sons were in the war of the Revolution, two, David and Sylvanus, becoming first lieutenants in actual service, and captains after the war.

Benjamin, the father of Eliakim, was the son of Ezra, and born in Sandwich, Jan. 15, 1670. His name appears in the list of members of the first Church of Sandwich, prepared by Rev. Benjamin Fessenden, March, 1730. Benjamin married, about 1694, Dinah Swift, daughter of William Swift, of Sandwich (who was a son of the first William). He moved to Stoughton, Mass., prior to 1734, when he appears in the tax list of that town. He settled in what is now Sharon, taking with him his sons Josiah, Benjamin and Nathaniel. Four years later, in 1738, his two youngest sons, Abner and Eliakim, followed him, Eliakim soon moving to Rehoboth, where he purchased land in 1741.

The children of Benjamin and Dinah (Swift) Perry were: (1) Merebah, born June 11, 1695; (2) Remember, born March 13, 1697-98; (3) Seth, born May 19, 1699; (4) Benjamin, born May, 1699; (5) Susannah, born Dec. 27, 1701; (6) Abner, born March 10, 1703 (from whom is descended Josiah Perry, of Webster, Mass.); (7) Josiah, born Oct. 18, 1709; (8) Nathaniel, born July 2, 1713 (a captain at Fort Cumberland, 1755, where he died. His home was Easton, Mass., where he was among the prominent citizens); (9) Eliakim, born May 8, 1716.

Ezra Perry, the father of Benjamin, was one of the first residents of Sandwich, Mass. He is supposed to have come from Devonshire, England, and to have been a brother of Edward Perry (the ancestor of Commodore Oliver Hazard and Mathew Calbraith Perry), and of Margaret, Deborah, and Hannah Perry, all of whom appeared in Sandwich about the same time. The first public record of Ezra which we find, is that of his subscription July 6, 1644, for repairing the old meeting house. He was then nineteen years old, having been born in 1625. He married Elizabeth Burgess, daughter of Thomas and Dorothy Burgess, of Sandwich, Feb. 12, 1651. His children (all born in Sandwich) were: Ezra, born Feb. 11, 1652; Deborah, born Nov. 28, 1654; John, born Jan. 1, 1656; Samuel, born March 15, 1667; Benjamin, born Jan. 15, 1670; Remember, born Jan. 1, 1676 (mother of General Tupper); and Sarah.

Ezra Perry held many offices in Sandwich, where he was a substantial and honored citizen. In 1661 he was Deputy to the Grand Enquest. He owned land at Monument, where many of his descendants still live. His tombstone, and that of his wife Elizabeth, still stand in the old Sandwich burying ground, his death occurring Oct. 16, 1689, and that of his wife Sept. 26, 1717.

Of the two brothers, David and Sylvanus, who lived in Killingly, David move to Plainfield, N. H., where he was selectman of the town for many years. He had an interesting life. At sixteen he enlisted in the war against the French, and was present at Ticonderoga and Quebec. At the breaking out of the Revolution David was given a commission as Second Lieutenant, and soon promoted to be First Lieutenant. In his old age he wrote a book, describing his experiences, only two copies of which are extant, one being in the possession of the Rhode Island Historical Society. Among David Perry's honored descendants are Mr. Charles Perry, of Ira, Vt., and Mrs. Frank B. Ullery, No. 3207 Indiana avenue, Chicago, a daughter of the late Hon. James Madison Perry, of Chicago, who was a grandson of Captain David, of Killingly. David's children (born in Killingly for the most part) were: Sarah, born Oct. 20, 1764; Sylvanus, born Jan. 3, 1767; Anna, born Jan. 17, 1770; David, born Aug. 4, 1772; Lucy, born Jan. 19, 1774; Polly, born Sept. 24, 1776; Hannah, born Nov. 3, 1779; Nathaniel Green, born Feb. 12, 1782. Some of his descendants have become wealthy and prominent in Illinois.

The other brother, Sylvanus, lived all his life in Killingly, respected for his sterling worth as a citizen. A few days after his marriage he buys thirty-five acres of land in Killingly, and subsequently from time to time he buys more land. His military record begins with the Lexington Alarm, April 19, 1775. He was then about thirty-one years old and the father of three small children, but he shouldered his gun, with fourteen others in Killingly, immediately on receipt of the news of Lexington (which came by direct express to Killingly from Boston the same night) and before sunrise had started for the battlefield.

In June, 1776, Sylvanus was ensign in the 5th Company, 3d Battalion, Wadsworth's Brigade. This brigade was raised to reinforce Washington in New York, and it served in New York City and Long Island. But in October, 1776, Sylvanus was promoted to be second lieutenant, in the 8th Battalion. He was in Chandler's regiment. In the following February, 1777, he was appointed a first lieutenant in Wylls' regiment, his commission bearing date of Jan. 1, 1777. This regiment, commanded by Samuel Wylls, was the 3d Regiment, Connecticut Line, and Lieut. Sylvanus served in this until Jan. 1, 1781, four years, when he retired, through the consolidations then made.

This 3d Regiment, Connecticut Line, must not be confounded with the third regiment raised in April and May, 1775. The 3d Connecticut Line was raised for the "New Army" or "Connecticut Line," and from Jan. 1, 1777, its operations (in which Lieutenant Sylvanus took part), were as follows:

I. Took part in repelling the enemy at Danbury, April 26, 1777.

II. In May, 1777, went into camp at Peekskill.

III. Served in Parson's Brigade (1st Brigade) under Israel Putnam, along the Hudson, until January, 1778, when this Brigade took post at West Point, and later began the construction of public works at that point—at Fort Wylls, named probably from Col. Wylls.

IV. In the summer of 1778, the 3d Regiment encamped at White Plains with the main army of General Washington.

V. In 1778-79 it wintered at Redding, Conn.

VI. During the operations of 1779, it served in General Heath's wing, on the Hudson.

VII. Its Light Company was engaged, under Capt. Champion (detached to Meigs' Light Regiment) in storming Stony Point, July 15, 1779.

VIII. It wintered at Morristown, N. J., and served on outposts.

IX. In 1780 it was with the main army on the Hudson.

X. In 1780-81 it wintered at Camp Connecticut Village, above the Robinson House, Hudson River. Here it was re-organized for the next formation of the Line, and our Lieutenant retired. He had served with slight interruptions for nearly six years in the war—from its first opening gun—and risen from a private to be a first lieutenant. Shortly after his retirement Cornwallis surrendered.

On Nov. 17, 1775, Sylvanus Perry buys about sixty-one more acres of land in Killingly, and Dec. 9, 1784, fifty acres more, paying for it £60, or about $300.

In the public records of Vermont occurs the following item: "Sept. 19, 1777. Council of Public Safety, by order of Thomas Chittenden, President, Sylvanus Perry is permitted to pass from Bennington, Vt., to Sunderland, and return within one month." He probably went to visit his father, who had just moved to Vermont.

In the battles of Long Island and Harlem Heights, in August and September, 1776, we find Lieut. David Perry, Ensign Sylvanus Perry, and their half brothers, Ozias and Seth. David, Ozias and Seth were in the 3d Regiment, raised in 1775, and commanded by Israel Putnam. Sylvanus was in the 3d Battalion, Co. 5, Wadsworth's Brigade, but in October following these battles he was made lieutenant in Chandler's regiment. Wadsworth's Brigade, 3d and 4th Battalions, and the 3d Regiment, were among the troops that suffered most in these battles. The company in which Sylvanus Perry served was among those detailed to cover the retreat from Long Island, to whom the word was sent to "get off as they could, in order or not." The story is told of these that, as they stole through the darkness over the black river, some one asked "Where are we going?" "To Heaven, I hope," answered a Windham county captain, prepared for any results. "Sept. 15th was a day of sore battle," and many Windham county men were killed and wounded.

Lieut. Sylvanus Perry was granted a pension of $20 per month, from April 9, 1818, to March 4, 1820. After the latter date he resigned the pension, because he had sufficient means of support. In September, 1819, he visited in Rome, N. Y., his son William, who had settled there, but in May, 1820, he was back in Killingly again. While in Rome he drew the first installment of his pension, namely $336.66, and he signed his name to the voucher. A few months later he had a stroke of palsy on the right side, and died in Killingly Oct. 5, 1821, aged seventy-eight.

Sylvanus Perry married the second time Rebecca Greenwood, daughter of John Greenwood, the son of Rev. John Greenwood, who succeeded his father, Rev. John Greenwood, as minister of the First Church of Rehoboth, now of Seekonk. Mrs. Perry was born in 1763, in Rehoboth. Sylvanus Perry in 1797 administered an estate of his mother, the Widow Ann Greenwood.

By the first marriage Capt. Sylvanus Perry had seven children, all born in Killingly: Anson, born Oct. 5, 1770; Abigail, born April 12, 1772; Phoebe; William, born Sept. 3, 1780; Elizabeth, born 1781; George; Keziah, born April 5, 1785. By the second marriage he had: Sylvanus, born Nov. 1, 1798; Rebecca, born July 6, 1800.

A monument is soon to be erected to the memory of Sylvanus Perry in the old burying-ground of Killingly.

Among the descendants of Capt. Sylvanus now living in the vicinity of Killingly are James Perry and Orren D. Perry, of Putnam. In New York City there are Francis A. Thayer, Anson Perry Thayer, and Miss Caroline Thayer, children of Rebecca (youngest daughter of Capt. Sylvanus, who had married Hiram Thayer), and George A. Perry, grandson of William. Other grandsons of William's line in Rome, N. Y., are Edward S., William H., and Charles E. Perry. William F. Perry, a son of Anson, lives in Lindenwood, Ogle Co., Illinois.

LYSANDER WARREN was throughout the active years of his long and useful life one of the most public-spirited and progressive men of Killingly and Windham county. One rarely finds a student who is an active man of affairs, yet such was the case with Mr. Warren. He was always a lover of books and interested in education, yet every enterprise of value to his community received his hearty encouragement and support, and his practical advice was much sought.

The Warren Family is one of the oldest and most honored in the town of Killingly, and is first represented in America by Deacon Jacob Warren, who is supposed to have come from England and to have located in Plainfield, Conn., where his death occurred. Eleazer Warren, his son, had a son Eleazer, who was the great-grandfather of Lysander, and who was one of the most prominent men of Killingly in his day. In her history of Windham county, Miss Larned says of the specially called meeting of the Assembly held at Hartford in May and July, 1775, at which meeting Eleazer Warren was chosen to represent the town of Killingly: "The session of 1775, holden so soon after the Lexington Alarm, which necessitated the calling out of troops and military organizations, was considered by the freemen one of very great importance, and the best and wisest men were selected as deputies." At the first call for soldiers, a great-uncle of Mr. Warren went with Israel Putnam to Bunker Hill, and afterward fought at Westchester, N. Y., where the British were repulsed May 11, 1776. Eleazer Warren was appointed captain of Company 14, 11th Connecticut Volunteers, in October, 1776, but was probably not engaged in active service.

Eleazer Warren, grandfather of Lysander, was born in 1760, and was a farmer in Killingly, living for a time at Pomfret, but finally locating on the old homestead, where his death occurred Jan. 1, 1832. He is buried in a private cemetery on his farm, laid out by himself. He married Chloe Seamans, who was born in Killingly, and died Jan. 6, 1815, in her fifty-third year, and to them were born the following children: Aaron, who removed to the vicinity of Schroon Lake, Essex Co., N. Y., where he married and died leaving four children, Erastus, Aaron, Jr., Laurania and Zilpha; Laurania, who became the wife of a Mr. Aldrich, and died at her home in Genesee county, N. Y.; Artemas, who married Sarah Cleveland, and afterward Mrs. Deborah (Drew) Neal, and who lived on a farm at Killingly Center; Dyer, the father of Lysander; Zeviah, unmarried and an invalid all her life, who died Sept. 12, 1879, at the age of eighty-two years, two months; Betsey, who married John Warren, and died in Killingly; and Seamans, who married Miss Sally Barnes, and died at her home on Schroon Lake, Essex Co., New York.

Dyer Warren, born June 28, 1783, during the residence of his father at Pomfret, was brought up on a farm and attended the common schools. After his marriage he erected a house on the land given him by his father, and this same property is still owned and occupied by his daughter, Mrs. Amanda E. Foster. Dyer Warren was a well-to-do farmer. He died at his home Oct. 3, 1860, and was buried in the private cemetery before referred to. He was very capable in several lines, and as a staunch Democrat held a few town offices, including that of highway surveyor for several years. His first wife was formerly Sally Bartlett, a native of Killingly, who died March 26, 1814, at the age of twenty-nine years. There was one child of this union, Cassandra, who became the wife of George Smith, originator of the first cotton mill in the State of Georgia, and her death occurred in Little Rock, Ark. For his second wife Dyer Warren married Minerva Durfee, a native of Killingly, and daughter of Phillips and Elizabeth (Brown) Durfee. Mrs. Warren died Jan. 12, 1875, aged seventy-seven years, four months, twenty-three days. She was the mother of several children, not the least prominent of whom was Lysander.

Lysander Warren, a great scholar and most worthy man, was born Dec. 11, 1815, and, considering his limitations, became a remarkably cultured man. From earliest childhood he had a craving for the insight to be found in books and universities, and a steady persistency enabled him to master many of the branches for which he had special aptitude. He soon mastered all that the public schools had to teach him, and, although working hard all day on the farm, he would walk miles through the woods after dark that he might study with a man who could impart to him the rudiments of algebra. His father reluctantly consented to his entrance to a preparatory school for Brown University, at Scituate, R. I., but even then he returned each summer to the farm, and it is to be deplored that even with all of his exertions to aid the family maintenance the finances of the family would not permit of further study for him. Nevertheless, he became a teacher of Latin in the school at Scituate, and was afterward principal of schools at Plainfield, East Killingly, and Putnam Heights, in all engaging in educational work for about thirteen years. His health began to fail owing to the close confinement, and his physician ordered a change of occupation to that of farming. During his teaching years he helped his brother, Orestes, through Brown University, and a sister, Amanda E., through Mount Holyoke Seminary, and these extra drains upon his savings made it hard for him to purchase the place in which he resided for the rest of his life. To complete the payment of the place he borrowed some money from his father, giving his note for the same, this being the only note that he ever signed during his lifetime. He was a constant reader, and was always adding to his store of knowledge. Every winter found him renewing his acquaintance with Virgil, and all of his leisure was devoted to classical or general research.

A Republican in politics, the numerous offices to which his fellow townsmen elected him were sufficient guarantee of his popularity and ability to cope with important questions of the day. For thirty years he was a member of the board of education, and during his administration really remarkable strides were noticeable in this important branch of municipal well-being. For thirty years also he was justice of the peace, and for two score years was county surveyor, securing the latter position by competitive examination. In 1858 he was elected to the State Legislature, and he was re-elected in 1868 and 1878. For seven years he was sheriff of Windham county, resigning the office only because it conflicted with the discharge of his numerous other obligations. When the Windham County Savings Bank was established, in 1864, he was one of the twenty-two incorporators, and was the last to survive of that little band, and he was also one of the trustees, and held that position until his death. His legal knowledge was beyond the ordinary, and his all around general experience caused his services to be in demand as a trustee and administrator. He had great financial sagacity, was very economical, and by the exercise of thrift and judicious management secured the largest property of any man in Killingly. He was in early life a member of the Free Will Baptist Church, but in later years was a member of the Methodist Church, being also a stanch advocate of temperance. The news of his death, which occurred July 4, 1900, was received with profound sorrow by all who had watched his successful and meritorious career, and the town was henceforth without one of its most temperate, wise, and learned citizens. His wife, formerly Marcia Mason, of Killingly, and whom he married in 1844, died in 1891. Her only surviving child is Angie Villette, wife of Prof. Charles A. Perkins, who has charge of the department of Physics and Electrical Engineering in the University of Tennessee, Knoxville; she is a graduate of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., class of 1876, having received the first degree of B. A. ever given to a woman in a New England college. Her children are: Marcia Villette, born Feb. 11, 1885; Margaret Warren, born May 27, 1888; Alice Osborne, born Dec. 9, 1889; and Warren, born Jan. 11, 1894. The other children of Lysander and Marcia Warren were: Josephine Marcia, born Oct. 6, 1851, who died March 3, 1854; and Emma Lou Anna, born Jan. 15, 1858, who died Dec. 17, 1860.

Hearty M. Warren, the second oldest child of Dyer and Minerva, born Feb. 19, 1819, died unmarried, May 9, 1873; he taught school for a number of terms in Killingly.

Anthony Durfee Warren, third in the family, was born June 24, 1820, and was educated at the public schools and at the West Killingly Academy. He spent a number of years in teaching school, and during that time taught in nearly every district in Killingly, as well as in Brooklyn. He began to farm the old homestead in 1856, and was thus employed until his death. The April preceding his end he removed to Danielson, but nevertheless continued to operate the farm, which, under his management, had grown to large proportions, and was brought to a high degree of cultivation. He was acting school visitor for several years, and was selectman for seven years, elected thereto by his Republican constituents. Until his health failed he was a regular attendant and teacher at the Free Will Baptist Church, and contributed generously to the support of the church. He was a man of strict integrity, of more than ordinary erudition, modest and kindly, and was greatly beloved by his associates in the schoolroom, in the church, and in the ordinary walks of life. He never married, and seemed to find his greatest consolation in ministering to the needs and happiness of those by whom he was surrounded.

John H. Warren, fourth of the children of Dyer Warren, was born Jan. 5, 1822, and died April 13, 1833.

Orestes Warren was born Nov. 24, 1826, graduated from the Woodstock Academy, and while in his Senior year at Brown University received the appointment of civil engineer on the railroad between Holly Springs, Miss., and Shongelo. After finishing this work he conducted a private school at Carrollton, Miss., and when the war broke out it is not known whether he volunteered, enlisted, or was forced into the Confederate ranks. At any rate he was quartermaster in the army, and died at Spring Hill, Tenn., April 18, 1863. After the restoration of peace his remains were brought to his childhood home in the North, and are buried in family graveyard on the old homestead.

Amanda E. Warren was born July 18, 1831, graduated at the Mount Holyoke Seminary, and is the widow of Publius D. Foster, residing at Killingly Center. Mr. Foster was an attorney at Washington, D. C., and was later employed in the office of the quartermaster general. To Mr. and Mrs. Foster were born the following children: Warren W., a graduate of Harvard Medical College, now an examiner in the pension office, at Washington, D. C., married Evelyn Carter, and has one child, Warren; Harriet Minerva, a graduate of Wellesley College, became the wife of Gillespie Moore, of Chicago, Ill., and has two children, Mildred and Warren Gillespie; Irving Lysander, a graduate of Brown University, married Nellie O. Patterson, and is a professor of languages at State College, Pennsylvania.

Betsey S. Warren is the wife of George R. Davis, of Killingly, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. All of the children of Dyer and Minerva Warren had fine educations, and all taught school during their younger days.

ESEK HALL, who now lives a life of retirement on his well cultivated and improved farm, in Moosup, Windham Co., Conn., is one of the highly respected citizens of that town. The Hall family is one of the old and well established ones of New England, and extended mention of it is made in another part of this volume.

Ebenezer Hall, the father of Esek Hall, of Plainfield, was born in 1802, in Sterling, Conn., where he went to school and grew up on his father's farm. While still a young man he was employed as a teamster at the Almyville mill, in Moosup, Conn., and it was during this time that he was married. As his family increased he made other arrangements, leaving the work at the Almyville mill and moving to Plainfield, where he rented the Medbury farm. Here he resided for one year and then removed to the Bailey farm, also in Plainfield, remaining for one year operating this farm and then purchasing the Dorrance farm. Here Mr. Hall spent the busiest years of his life and became one of the largest and most prosperous farmers of his locality. At a comparatively early age his career was cut short by death a cold caught at camp-meeting resulting in diphtheria and causing his sudden decease. That was long before the discovery of antitoxin and few cases occurred of recovery from this dread disease. His burial was in Moosup, Conn., his death having occurred Aug. 27, 1853.

In his political belief Ebenezer Hall adhered to the principles of the Democratic party, which at that time was in a minority in Plainfield, but he was elected to a number of local offices on account of the esteem in which he was held by his fellow-citizens. In the Baptist Church he was known and appreciated. Mr. Hall was married in Plainfield, Conn., to Thankful R. Casey, who was born in Sterling, Conn., and at that time was employed in the Almyville mill. Her death took place July 11, 1839, in the thirty-seventh year of her age, and she was laid to rest in Moosup. Her children were: (1) Esek. (2) Jared, born in 1834, married Susan S. Benson, and previous to 1874 was engaged in the woolen manufacturing business, but after that time until his death, in 1901, was occupied with farming in Plainfield. (3) Alva, who became the boss spinner in a woolen mill in Rockville, where he died unmarried, a well-known and popular member of the Masonic fraternity.

The second marriage of Ebenezer Hall was to Hannah Shippee, of Killingly, who lived until March 4, 1888, dying at the age of seventy-seven. Her children were: Alfred, who is a resident of Worcester, Mass.; Freeman, who is a farmer in Sterling, Conn.; Thankful, who died unmarried; Harriet, who married John Pike, and lives in Killingly, and Jane, who died in Killingly, having married twice, her second husband being George Pierce.

The birth of Esek Hall, of Plainfield, occurred June 12, 1829, on the old Medbury farm, in Plainfield. His education was received in the district schools of his locality, and later he entered the Plainfield High School, which was then under the able management of Stephen Hall. The summers were occupied with farm work and milling, but during the winter seasons Ezek applied himself closely to his books, and so well did he satisfy his teachers that he was recommended by them to the school board at Nooseneck, R. I., as a competent teacher for their school of fifty pupils, which offered a salary of $40 per month, then considered excellent pay. For one year Mr. Hall continued at Nooseneck and was then employed in the Plainfield mill, which was then operated by Hill & Mathewson. Mr. Hall remained connected with this mill for several years, and during this period in company with another employe, did the carding and spinning of the mill, by contract.

From the Plainfield mill, Mr. Hall went to Almyville, Conn., where he remained for several years, having charge of a spinning room. Growing tired of this life, he rented a farm in Plainfield, upon which he experimented for a short time, and then purchased a small farm in the same town, continuing there for some time, but finally entered the employ of the old Hartford & Providence Railroad, as assistant in the depot at Moosup. His duties here were manifold, and he did the book-keeping in connection with other business, remaining for six years at this point. He was then promoted to the position of agent of the same road at Andover, where he was also agent for two express companies and in addition served for many years as postmaster.

Upon closing up his business connections at Andover, Mr. Hall returned to Moosup, where he acted as agent during the illness of the regular agent for about a year, and after this Mr. Hall, still in the employ of the same road, became the agent at River Point, Conn. After remaining there for some six months he was appointed agent at Moosup, succeeding John Spaulding. Here Mr. Hall remained, efficiently performing the duties for a period of fifteen years, until he sent in his resignation because of failing health, Feb. 10, 1897. It was with expressed regret that the railroad parted with this faithful and efficient employe of thirty-five years, one of the superintendents lamenting the necessity of parting with "the best agent I ever had." Those who know Mr. Hall will realize how true those words are, for in all relations in life, every post of trust and responsibility placed in his care has been guarded with a fidelity that has won him the highest esteem.

The pleasant home of Mr. Hall is a small farm of twenty acres which he farms for pastime, enjoying the exercise after so many years of office life. In politics he is a Republican but has never sought office, performing the duties of a good citizen at the polls. For many years he and his estimable wife have been consistent members of the Baptist Church of Plainfield.

Esek Hall married, March 7, 1853, Miss Amy C. Cole, who was born Oct. 8, 1833. She was a native of Moosup, a daughter of Caleb and Hannah (Crandall) Cole, and a granddaughter of Rev. Nathaniel and Ann (Cole) Cole, both of whom were natives of Swansea, Mass. The former came from Swansea to the Union Plainfield Baptist Church, Nov. 9, 1792, the society having been organized in the previous month, and Dec. 5, 1792, he was installed pastor. He continued with this congregation until he retired, in 1833, at the age of seventy-seven years, after a ministry of forty-one years. His death occurred in Plainfield, and his homestead farm is now owned by Mrs. Hall.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hall are: Judson E., who was born Sept. 30, 1855, graduated at the Willimantic High School, learned telegraphy in his father's office and was operator and agent in the employ of the Consolidated Railroad for several years holding several positions on the line of that road. Later he became a bookkeeper in the office of the Waterbury American for several years, and now holds a responsible position with the Chase Clock Co. at Waterbury. His fraternal connection is with the order of Odd Fellows and the Royal Arcanum. He married Miss Carrie Bailey, of Boston, and they have one child, Elmer Louis, born Nov. 14, 1887.

The second child born to Mr. and Mrs. Hall is Adeline A., who was born May 28, 1859, a graduate of the Willimantic High school and also of a select school in Providence, R. I. She also learned telegraphy with her father and put her knowledge to practical use, entering into the employ of the railroad company as a skilled operator at the office in Danielson. Later she married William Badger Williams, who was a native of Bolton, Conn., but who now is connected with E. S. Kibbe & Co., of Hartford, and resides in Manchester. During his residence in Bolton Mr. Williams was a leading merchant and one of the prominent political factors. For a long period he was the efficient town clerk, was also postmaster, and during one year served as the member from Bolton in the State Legislature.

Mr. Hall enjoys the esteem of his neighbors and is most kindly remembered by the railroad which he faithfully served through so long a period. He was known as a man who always possessed the ability to meet the demands of any situation and never shirked an opportunity to bring his faculties into play for the benefit of his employers. He takes great pleasure in the regularity of a rural life, and that he may long enjoy every comfort is the wish of his hosts of friends.

WILLIAM DENISON GRANT, ex-mayor of Willimantic, Windham county, is one of the thrifty and successful men of that city, and holds an enviable position in the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens, who have learned his integrity and ability. They elected him to the office of mayor without his solicitation, and in this, as in every other position to which he has been called, he discharged its duties with credit to himself and with satisfaction to the public.

The Grant family traces its descent from Matthew Grant, who was born Oct. 27, 1601. He embarked with his family on the "Mary and John," from Plymouth, England, March 20, 1630, and reached Boston Harbor, May 30, 1630. His death occurred in Windsor Dec. 16, 1681.

Samuel Grant was born in Dorchester, Mass., Nov. 12, 1631, and died in East Windsor Hill, Sept. 10, 1718.

Josiah Grant was born in Windsor, Conn., March 19, 1668, and died in Stonington, March 28, 1732.

Oliver Grant was born in Stonington, Sept. 3, 1703, and died in Stonington, May 4, 1757.

Oliver Grant (2) was born in Stonington, July 18 (13), 1729, and died May 22, 1798.

Miner Grant was born in North Stonington, Feb. 28, 1756, and died in Ashford, March 26, 1828.

Denison Grant was born in Willington, June 2, 1789, and died in Mt. Hope, April 15, 1867.

Elisha Denison Grant was born in Mt. Hope, Feb. 18, 1823, and married Cordelia Martin, a representative of an old established family in Windham county.

William Denison Grant, son of Elisha D. and Cordelia (Martin) Grant, was born in Ashford, Feb. 29, 1860. He attended District School No. 5, in Ashford, and after attending the high school at Ashford for a time, taught one term of eighteen weeks at Phoenixville. When he was eighteen years of age he taught a term in the Bicknell district in Ashford, and his success as a teacher was marked, but in 1880 he gave up school work to come to Willimantic to enter the employ of Edwin Bugbee, in the flour and feed business, at the corner of Jackson and Valley streets. For about eight years he remained in this line, in the time becoming a partner with Mr. Bugbee, under the firm name of Bugbee & Grant. Mr. Grant assumed the sole charge of the business, Mr. Bugbee retiring in his favor, June 20, 1888, and has since continued the business at the same stand. In 1902 he erected a brick building at the corner of Valley and Broad streets, to which he removed.

On June 4, 1885, Mr. Grant was married in Willimantic, to Miss Hattie Clapp, a native of Brookfield, Mass., and a daughter of David and Harriet (Holley) Clapp; she died Aug. 20, 1891, and was buried in Willimantic. By this marriage were born two children: Florence A. and Jay E. Mr. Grant married, second, Jennie Simons, of Coventry, Conn., a native of Mansfield, and a daughter of Edward and Mary (Holley) Simons, by whom he has three children: Ethel Y., Winnifred C. and May Ellen.

Mr. Grant became a voter in Willimantic, and has always been a Republican. In the spring of 1898 he was elected on the board of city aldermen to fill a vacancy, and then chosen at the regular election. While in that body he served as chairman of five different committees appointed by a Democratic Mayor. In December, 1899, he was elected Mayor of Willimantic by a plurality of 144 votes, more than a hundred in excess of the normal Republican lead. Neither of the offices he has held were sought by him, and on election day he did not leave his office for the scene of conflict. To Mayor Grant, probably more than to any other man, is due credit for the securing of the charter for the first trolley car line in the city, which was completed in 1902. He is president of the Willimantic Traction Co., and secured the capital to complete the line in face of great opposition.

The home of Mr. Grant on Prospect street was completed in 1895, and stands as a model of good taste and convenience. He is a plain and approachable man with friends in all parties.

HON. JAMES N. KINGSBURY, of Thompson, Windham county, is one of the leading citizens of this part of Connecticut, and for many years has been intimately connected with its business and political life. He was born May 24, 1835, in Webster, Mass., a son of Elisha and Lucy (Pierce) Kingsbury, and a descendant in the eighth generation from Joseph Kingsbury, of Dedham, Mass.

Joseph Kingsbury, with his wife Milicent, is on record at Dedham in 1637, and probably reared a numerous family, the names of five of these being: Mary, Elizabeth, Joseph, John and Eleazer.

From this immigrant ancestor, James N. Kingsbury's lineage is through Eleazer, Josiah, Theodore, Jacob, Ephraim and Elisha Kingsbury.

Eleazer Kingsbury, born May 17, 1645, married Oct. 30, 1677, at Dedham, Esther Judson, and was of that town in 1677.

Josiah Kingsbury, son of Eleazer, born Dec. 26, 1678, at Dedham, married Jan. 16, 1705, Susannah Morey, of Roxbury. Mr. Kingsbury settled early in Needham, and was licensed as an innkeeper in 1719; was selectman, and represented his town in the General Court. He died April 20, 1739. His home was near the north end of Chaubunagungamaug Lake.

Theodore Kingsbury, son of Josiah, born Dec. 17, 1707, married Jan. 31, 1731-32, Mary, daughter of Israel Towne, and settled in the vicinity of his father on a farm of 250 acres of land near Sucker brook. His death occurred Feb. 11, 1787, and his widow died in January, 1810, aged one hundred years and two months.

Jacob Kingsbury, son of Theodore, born May 16, 1743, married (first) March 10, 1766, Hannah Parker, of Douglass, Mass., and settled on a part of his father's farm north of the homestead. Mrs. Kingsbury died Feb. 25, 1803, and he married (second) April 28, 1804, Mary, widow of James H. Davis. Mr. Kingsbury died Nov. 3, 1836, his wife passing away Nov. 30, 1829.

Ephraim Kingsbury, son of Jacob, born June 27, 1770, married (first) Nov. 15, 1797, Rachel, daughter of Reuben Robinson. She died Feb. 1, 1810, and he married (second), June 26, 1814, Abigail Taft, of Uxbridge, Mass. He resided near the homestead, where he died April 17, 1823.

Elisha Kingsbury, son of Ephraim, born Sept. 7, 1803, married Feb. 15, 1824, Lucy Pierce, of Holden, Mass., and lived near the mill on Sucker brook. Their children were: Rachel, born in 1828, died in 1832; Darius, born Sept. 5, 1830, settled in Victoria, B. C.; Laura, born Oct. 7, 1833, married William Carpenter, of Thompson, Conn., and died childless Feb. 15, 1883; James N., born May 24, 1835; George, born Oct. 29, 1838, lived on the homestead, and married Oct. 31, 1857, Harriet S. Hall, of Dudley, Mass., by whom he had two daughters, Emma and Mable.

James N. Kingsbury, at about the age of eight years, was taken to Thompson, Conn., where he acquired his education, and some years later, upon his return to his native State, located in Oxford and began work in the manufacture of shoes. This business he later successfully followed in Oxford and Webster and later he carried on the manufacture of shoes in Putnam. In 1865, he located in the town of Thompson, and continued the manufacture of shoes for three years. At the end of that time he engaged in the grocery business, so continuing until 1891, when he sold out. Since that time he has been engaged in the coal business, winning a high reputation for reliability. He has been called upon by his fellow-citizens to fill many offices of trust and responsibility. In 1869 he was made postmaster, and very efficiently conducted the affairs of that office until 1885. In 1872 he was made town clerk, a position he still capably fills, and for fourteen years he was Republican town committeeman. In 1889 and 1891 he was honored by election as representative in the State Assembly, making an excellent record as a member of the Judiciary committee. For twenty-five years he has been justice of the peace, and during this period has performed more than one hundred marriages. Mr. Kingsbury has been a director and for three years president of the Thompson National Bank, vice-president of the Thompson Savings Bank, and trustee of the Putnam Savings Bank. His character is one of sterling integrity and worth, and he has long been held in high esteem in the community.

James V. Ringobury

Mr. Kingsbury was married (first) to Harriet F., daughter of Danforth and Jane (Holmes) Kinney; she died in 1884. In 1885 Mr. Kingsbury was united in marriage with Miss Anna Towne, daughter of Joseph and Luan (Robbins) Towne. Three children were born to the first marriage, viz.: (1) Charles N., who was educated in the district schools of Thompson, and took a commercial course at the Worcester (Mass.) Commercial College, is now filling the position of freight agent for the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. at Darlington Station, Pawtucket, R. I.; he married Miss Emma Tripp, of Plainfield, Conn., and they had one son, Newton, who died at the age of eight years. (2) Alice, who acquired her education in the district schools of Thompson and graduated from the High School, in Putnam, later becoming a teacher for some four years, married E. C. Franklin, of Putnam, and they have one son, Raymond Kingsbury, born Sept. 5, 1896. (3) Myrtice, who was educated in Thompson and Danielson, graduating at the latter place, and also from the State Normal School at Willimantic, in 1896, is now one of the popular teachers in the public school in Putnam, a lady of culture and high attainment.

WOLCOTT CARY. Among the venerable citizens of Hampton, Windham Co., Conn., was Wolcott Cary, who was also one of the most highly respected and thoroughly esteemed residents of the town. His home was in Hampton from 1843, and few men were more widely known, although for almost forty years he was a patient invalid, bearing affliction with Christian fortitude.

The Cary family was founded in this section of Connecticut when Great-grandfather Benajah Cary came to Scotland (then Windham), Conn., and purchased a large tract of land in the present towns of Hampton, Canterbury and Scotland, where he engaged in lumbering and farming. A man not only of unusual size and weight, but also mentally endowed beyond his fellows, he left a large, robust and intelligent family.

Grandfather James Cary was born on the old homestead in the Pudding Hill District of Scotland, and he also was a successful farmer, and at death owned 800 acres of valuable land. His first marriage occurred Aug. 12, 1773, to Abigail Kingsbury, a native of Pomfret, and his second marriage was to Anna Bradford. All his children were born to his first union, and they were: Abigail, born Jan. 28, 1775, who married Parker Moss, of Canterbury; James, born Dec. 9, 1777, who was given a part of the homestead now located in Canterbury, where he engaged in farming; Benajah, born Jan. 4, 1780, who died aged twenty-two; Anna, born Feb. 21, 1782, who died in 1790; Sally, born Sept. 7, 1786, who married Thomas Moss, and lived in Woodstock, Conn.; and Sanford, born July 14, 1784.

Sanford Cary, the father of Wolcott Cary, engaged principally in farming on the home place. When the call came for loyal spirits to defend New London from the British, he was one of those who bravely fought for its protection. On May 16, 1811, he was married to Caroline Tracy, a native of Windham, and daughter of Jabez and Hannah Tracy. The former was born Oct. 1, 1765, and died June 6, 1814; the latter was born June 11, 1767, and died Sept. 5, 1855. The Tracy children were: Caroline, who married Sanford Cary, born March 19, 1787; Sylvester, born Feb. 22, 1792, died Oct. 16, 1835; and Lucretia, born Oct. 18, 1796, died March 5, 1828, the wife of John F. Williams, of Woodstock, Connecticut.

The children born to Sanford and Caroline (Tracy) Cary were: Henry Hudson, born July 2, 1814, who became prominent in the town of Scotland, serving as selectman in 1857, when the town was organized; Dwight, born Feb. 24, 1817; Wolcott, born June 29, 1819; and Jane, born Sept. 8, 1824, who married Nelson Moss, and died in Woodstock, Connecticut.

In politics Sanford Cary was a staunch Whig, and took an intelligent and active interest in town affairs. Both he and his wife were leading members of the Scotland Congregational Church.

The birthplace of Wolcott Cary was Scotland, Conn., and there he attended the district schools and enjoyed the advantages of two terms at the Suffield Literary Institute, at Suffield, Conn. The work on the farm claimed his energies during the summers, but he was not more than sixteen years of age when he began to teach school. His first attempt was in the Brunswick District, and very many of his pupils were much older than himself. His salary was $11 per month, with an opportunity of boarding around among the neighbors, according to the custom of that time. The following winter he was engaged for the Canterbury school, at an increased salary of $14. This was considered excellent wages, those being days when very little money was in circulation in the country districts, trade in farm products being satisfactory in almost all cases. Mr. Cary was regarded as an excellent teacher, and for seven terms prior to his happy marriage with one of his fair young pupils he efficiently taught the Scotland and Canterbury schools.

In 1843 Mr. Cary moved to Hampton and located on the property known as the "Burnett farm," about one mile south of Hampton Center, where he resided until 1867. During his residence there he was again chosen as the favorite teacher in that locality, teaching seven terms in Hampton. After 1867 Mr. Cary retired from active life and for nearly forty years lived in a somewhat invalided state, from a paralytic affection. This invalidism only drew closer the bonds of affection between him and a devoted family and a community which had always esteemed him highly. Mr. Cary died, after an illness of but two days, Jan. 12, 1903.

Mr. Cary was married Oct. 26, 1842, to Lucy A. Burnham, who was born Aug. 29, 1823, a native of Scotland, and daughter of Elisha and Phoebe (Avery) Burnham. At one time Mrs. Cary was a student under her husband, and later she also was a teacher in Scotland and in Hampton. Mrs. Cary died March 18, 1902, after a short illness. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Cary were: (1) Mary Josephine, born Dec. 12, 1843, married Dec. 14, 1861, Henry Holt, a farmer; she died Dec. 9, 1886, at her home in Norfolk, Neb., where she was buried. Her children were: Edwin B. (a railway mail clerk, residing in Omaha, Neb.), Lucy A., Cora M., and Emily R. (wife of Frank W. Congdon, of Hampton, Conn.). (2) Julian E., born May 27, 1846, married, Jan. 19, 1876, Clara Marll; he is a brick manufacturer in San Francisco, Cal. (3) George C., born June 24, 1848, married (first) Dec. 5, 1872, Lydia McCracken, who died and left one child, Grace, who died in infancy. He married (second) Emma Harvey, Sept. 24, 1883. He is a grain dealer in Great Bend, Kans. (4) William B., born Feb. 11, 1856, married May 19, 1885, Carrie E. Howe. He is a meat dealer in Lowell, Mass., where he manages one of Armour's branch houses. His children are Burton W., Julian C. and Helen H. Cary.

Mr. Cary was a lifelong Republican, and faithfully filled many local offices. For many years he was a member of the Congregational Church committee of Hampton, and was one of the members whose place was seldom vacant.

The family of which Mrs. Cary was a most estimable member is one of the well-known ones of Windham county. Mrs. Cary's father, Elisha Burnham, was born in Scotland, which was then a part of Windham, and for many years he conducted a saw, shingle and gristmill at Scotland. Later he removed to Windham, and there followed farming until his death, at the age of seventy years. The first marriage of Mr.

Burnham was to Phoebe Avery, and their children were: (1) Edwin E., who married Amanda Lincoln, was a merchant in Willimantic for a number of years, and died there. (2) Alfred A. married (first) Ardelia Cleveland, a daughter of Governor Cleveland, and (second) Mary Belden for a long period he was a successful attorney in Windham. (3) Lucy A. became Mrs. Cary. (4) Phoebe Ardelia married John Larrabee, a farmer of Windham, where he died. (5) Mary Amanda married Charles Larrabee, who also was a farmer in Windham. The second marriage of Mr. Burnham was to Mrs. Polly (Avery) Smith, a sister to his former wife, but there was no issue of this marriage. These families represent the very best elements of the town of Hampton, the descendants reflecting credit upon their parents and the family name.

SYLVANUS M. WOODWARD, selectman of the town of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn., and one of its most highly respected citizens, is descended from an old family which is fully mentioned in the sketch of W. W. Woodward, of Danielson, elsewhere in this volume.

David Woodward, father of Sylvanus M., was born Nov. 12, 1793, in Brooklyn, and spent his early life there. He was reared to farm work and learned the trade of mason. When he was about twenty-four years old he went to the vicinity of Lyndeboro, N. H., where his maternal grandparents lived, and where also two of his brothers had located. Mr. Woodward worked at his trade there for about fifteen years, residing in several places in the vicinity until 1832, when he came again to Brooklyn and worked at his trade in that vicinity the rest of his life. He died in the house now occupied by his son, but erected by himself in 1846. The date of his death was Jan. 30, 1866, and he is buried in Brooklyn.

David Woodward was one of the seven men of Brooklyn who supported the ticket of the Liberty Party when it was first organized. Later he was one of thirty-three Free-Soilers, and still later a staunch Republican, remaining as such until his death. He served as justice of the peace for many years, and during these years, as at all other times, he was a hard-working man. He was twice married, by the second marriage, to Mrs. Nancy (Lucas) Littlehale, Jan. 21, 1849, having no issue. His second wife was born Oct. 25, 1811, and died Dec. 17, 1864.

The first marriage of David Woodward occurred Jan. 23, 1817, to Hannah P. Woodward, born Feb. 2, 1795, in Lyndeboro, N. H., daughter of Ephraim Woodward; she died May 4, 1846. To this marriage came six children: (1) Hannah Emeline, born in 1817, died Feb. 10, 1843, unmarried. (2) Laurinda Adeline, born Sept. 17, 1820, became the wife of Eustace Baker, a carriage painter, living in West Dedham (now Westwood), Mass., and died there Oct. 3, 1890. (3) Verney Crosby, born Nov. 21, 1823, married Eleanor C. Lorin, and died in Newton, Mass., March 21, 1891. He was a mason. (4) Jacob Rowell, born Aug. 23, 1825, became a seafaring man and when last heard from was in Ecuador, S. A., many years ago. (5) Sylvanus M., is the subject of this sketch. (6) Elisha A. was born June 15, 1835.

Sylvanus M. Woodward was born March 28, 1828, in Plainfield, N. H., and was four years old when his parents moved to Brooklyn, Conn. He began work as a very small boy in the cotton mills at West Killingly, then operated by the Danielson Mfg. Co. He continued this factory work until the age of twelve with hardly any opportunity for schooling. After reaching the age of twelve he worked at farm work in the summer and for three winter seasons attended the district school. He continued farm work until the age of nineteen, spending his spare time in study, and was then able to take appointment as school teacher on Black Hill in the town of Plainfield. This position paid him $12 a month and board around; and he taught two Saturdays of each month. School-teaching continued his vocation until he enlisted in the army. Mr. Woodward taught in Plainfield, Brooklyn, Canterbury, Killingly and Putnam, filling the summer seasons with farm work and masonry.

Mr. Woodward was teaching school in Canterbury when he enlisted for three years service Dec. 7, 1861, from Brooklyn in Co. K, 12th C. V. I. under Col. Henry C. Deming. The 12th C. V. I. saw service in the vicinity of New Orleans and in the city after its surrender. This regiment also did garrison duty above New Orleans. In its first engagement, that of Georgia Landing, La., Mr. Woodward was shot in the right hand by a minie ball which took off the first finger, badly crippled the hand for life, removed him at once from the field to the hospital, and finally caused his discharge from service in January, 1863. He followed his regiment up the Mississippi, however, through the campaign there until August, 1863. He then came home to Brooklyn where his family was located with his father, by whose death a couple of years later he came into possession of his present home, buying out the other heirs. Here Mr. Woodward has lived ever since, occupying himself as a small farmer and with his masonry business. This latter occupation he has worked at in many of the principal cities of New England. For some years past he has devoted nearly all his time to farming.

Mr. Woodward married, March 28, 1853, in Webster, Mass., Hannah E. Lucas, born Nov. 18, 1829, in Uxbridge, Mass., daughter of Levi Jr., and Cynthia (Howland) Lucas. She is a lineal descendant of John Howland, who came over in the "Mayflower." Five children were the fruit of this marriage: (1) Angelo L., born Feb. 2, 1854. He taught school two terms when only fifteen years of age. At seventeen he left home and became an artist in the city of New York and afterwards removed to Easton, Pa., where he died Aug. 22, 1902. (2) Mary Adeline, born Feb. 19, 1856. She is now the wife of Judge Milton A. Shumway, of Danielson. (3) Elvira Josephine, born April 24, 1859. She married Fred B. Brooks, now a grocer in Westford, Mass., by whom she has had seven children, namely: Clarence Cecil and Clara Katherine, twins; Merrill Milton, a bookkeeper, graduated from Comers Commercial College, Boston, in 1899; May Martin; Louis Lucas; Raymond Holland; and Ruth Hannah Woodward. (4) William Sylvanus, born April 12, 1862, died Aug. 25, 1863. (5) Leon Austin, born June 4, 1872. He married Anna Trumbull, and is employed by the American Bicycle Co., Hartford.

Mr. Woodward is a staunch Republican. Several years ago he served as selectman for one year, a service he is again rendering his town. He has also served as a grand juror, and for several years as a justice of the peace and also on the school committee. He is a member of McGregor Post, G. A. R., of Danielson, and has held nearly every office in the organization. He is now adjutant and has held that office for some years. He draws a small pension from the government for his wound in the service.

For a man of his years and a hard worker from childhood Mr. Woodward is well preserved. His memory is remarkable at his age. It is also remarkable for a man to be chosen at his time of life to the office he holds. It came to him entirely unsolicited and is noteworthy testimony of the high respect in which he and his good family are held.

JUDE RANDOLPH BUCK. One of the well-known and highly regarded citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is Jude Randolph Buck, who was born in Somers, Conn., March 18, 1832.

Probably no contemporaries of John Buck, the grandfather of Jude Randolph Buck, yet remain, but at one time in his native Stafford he was a man well known and regarded with esteem. By trade John Buck was a cooper, and carried on also some farming operations. He married Betsey Kent, and reared a family to respectability and usefulness. These children bore the names of: Sarah, Norman, John, Jairus, Sylvester, Ann and Lucy.

Norman Buck, the father of Jude Randolph Buck, was born in Somers, Conn., June 5, 1798, and died Aug. 2, 1860, in Somers. He was married to Mary Pomeroy, who was born Aug. 21, 1796, in Somers, Conn., and died there April 10, 1845. She was a daughter of Jude Pomeroy. By occupation Mr. Buck was a farmer and as he kept his vigor and strength until late in life he accomplished some very good results. In his earlier years he took much interest in the Whig party, but upon the formation of the Republican party embraced its principles. A number of minor offices were very efficiently filled by him, and he was a man whom all could trust, active in religious affairs, and a leading member of the Congregational Church in Somers.

The family born to Norman Buck and wife consisted of six children: (1) Norman Alonzo, who was born Sept. 5, 1824, in Somers, died in West Stafford, Conn., May 23, 1866. His profession was that of bookkeeper; he was with the Broad Brook Manufacturing Company, removing later to Glastonbury, where he filled the same position with the Narbuc Fire Arms Co. On Sept. 7, 1851, he married Elizabeth Emily Norris, of Brools Brook. (2) Mary Ann, who was born March 21, 1827, married John Hiram Tyler, of Somerville, where he carried on the business of carriage-making until his death. Her residence is now in Springfield. (3) Louisa Mandana, who was born Sept. 9, 1829, married Nov. 3, 1850, Charles Bowers, a factory employe, a spinner, of Somers. She died at Broad Brook, while he lives in Long Meadow, Mass. (4) Jude R., of this sketch. (5) Harriet Elizabeth, who was born Sept. 7, 1834, married Feb. 2, 1860, Henry Whiton, of West Stafford, where he was a machinist, later moving to Springfield, where he died. She died in Pasadena, Cal. (6) Henry Martin, who was born July 17, 1837, and died Nov. 7, 1855, in Somers.

Jude R. Buck, of this biography, enjoyed the advantages offered by the public schools until he was nineteen years of age; he then put aside his books and entered the employ of his brother-in-law, John H. Tyler, who conducted a carriage-making business in Somers. After learning the trade and becoming a skilled workman Mr. Buck remained in the business for some twelve years; he then engaged in the teaming business in the same place for one and one-half years. About this time Mr. Buck was offered a position in the stockinet mill in West Stafford. This he accepted and remained running stockinet machinery for probably three years. Leaving there he took a machinist's position in the machine shop of D. E. Whiton, at West Stafford, and there he remained for the succeeding ten years, working on chucks.

Mr. Buck next formed a partnership with Jabez Collins in Springfield, in the sale and livery business, and this was successfully conducted for one and one-half years, when Mr. Buck sold his interest to Eli Bangs. The firm of Smith & Bangs about this time needed a trusty and reliable clerk in their meat and grocery store, and for six months Mr. Buck filled that position. He then came back to Stafford, where he purchased the Nathan Rockwell farm of seventy acres on Stafford street, conducting operations there for several years. Then he sold the farm and bought out the meat, grocery and general store owned by Jonathan Pasco, in Stafford Hollow, and there he did a very flourishing business for seven and one-half years. During the first term of President Cleveland Mr. Buck kept the postoffice in his store. The store and business were later disposed of to H. F. Cody.

Mr. Buck then returned to the farm, the confinement of a sedentary life causing his health to fail. He has become robust again, enjoys the labors attendant upon the raising of his large crops, and keeps also about twelve head of cows, sending the product to the Somers creamery.

On March 18, 1857, Mr. Buck was married to Melissa Ann Kingsbury, who was born June 15, 1837, and was a daughter of Rufus and Celia (Smith) Kingsbury, of Stafford, although Mrs. Buck was born at South Hadley Falls. The children of this marriage are: Clarence Everett, born April 30, 1865, died in Stafford, Dec. 15, 1865; and Mabel Celia, born Dec. 20, 1872, who resides at home.

Politically Mr. Buck is a member of the Republican party, but has never been willing to accept political honor. Fraternally he is connected with Ionic Lodge, No. 110, of Stafford Springs, and also Orient Chapter, R. A. M. For a number of years Mr. Buck was one of the deacons of the Congregational Church, of which he has been a consistent member through a long period.

JOHN HENRY LARNED, a successful and well known citizen of Pomfret, Windham Co., Conn., is the owner of an extensive farm lying in the eastern part of the town near the Putnam line.

(I) William Learned (or Larned) of Bermondsey, County Surrey, England, and his wife, Goodith, probably came to New England in 1632. They are of record in that year in Charlestown, Mass., where Mr. Learned was made a freeman in 1634. He figured in public affairs, was selectman in 1635-36 and both were members of the Church there. He was one of the seven who established the Church in Woburn, Mass., in 1642; and in 1644-45 he was selectman of that town. He died March 1, 1646.

(II) Isaac Learned, son of William, was born in England and baptized Feb. 25, 1623-4, probably in Bermondsey Parish, coming to New England with his parents. He married at Woburn, July 9, 1646, Mary, born in England and baptized June 26, 1626, in the Parish of Nayland, Suffolk, daughter of Isaac Stearns, of Watertown. Mr. Learned sold his property in Woburn, Mass., in 1652, and moved to Chelmsford, Mass., where he died Nov. 27, 1657. He was chosen selectman in 1654, and sergeant of the train band in 1656. His widow, Mary, married, June 7, 1662, John Burg, and died probably within a year and a half afterward.

(III) Isaac Learned (2), son of Isaac, was born in Chelmsford, Mass., Sept. 16, 1655. He married, July 23, 1679, Sarah Bigelow, born Sept. 29, 1659, daughter of John and Sarah (Warren) Bigelow, of Watertown, and settled in Framingham, Mass. Mr. Learned was a soldier in Capt. Davenport's company at the Narragansett fight and was wounded. He was received as an inhabitant of Sherborn, Mass., in April, 1679—Framingham not then being a town; he figured in the incorporation of Framingham in 1699-1700. He was selectman in 1698, 1706 and 1711, and fence viewer in 1681-2. His death occurred Sept. 15, 1737.

(IV) Isaac Larned (3), son of Isaac (2), was born May 10, 1680, married Nov. 19, 1706, Sarah How, of Framingham, and lived in that town. She was born Dec. 24, 1686, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Woolson) How. Mr. Larned became one of the settlers of Oxford, Mass., where all save the eldest three of his children were born. [It was the Oxford family, we believe, that first adopted the spelling of the name now used, dropping the "e"]. Mr. Larned was prominent in the affairs of the town of Oxford. On the division of the proprietors land in 1714, he drew a house and lot in the east corner of the town, which has ever since been occupied by his descendants. He and his wife were among the thirty-two who formed the Church in Oxford in 1720. He was town clerk for five years from 1732, and held the rank of lieutenant in the militia.

(V) John Larned, son of Isaac (3), was born in 1714. He married, Sept. 13, 1737, Hepzibah Smith, who died July 18, 1747. On Jan. 21, 1751, he married (second) Miriam Smith. He resided in Oxford, where he died, April, 1796. He and his son Elijah were both soldiers in the earlier French and Indian war campaigns, and members of the same company. John was mustered into the service Oct. 20, 1756. The son later, in 1777, served in the Revolution, probably as sergeant-major in Capt. Abijah Lamb's company.

(VI) John Larned (2), son of John, was born June 20, 1758. He married, Dec. 6, 1781, Martha Waterfield, of Dudley, Mass., who died Aug. 26, 1791. He married (second), Nov. 6, 1794, Widow Abigail Wakefield, also of Dudley; and after her death he was again married. There were several John Larneds; this one, living on the west side of the river adjoining the town of Oxford, was known as "Over the river John," and his occupation was farming. He was the father of fifteen children.

(VII) Zenas March Larned was born in Oxford, Feb. 24, 1811, and was reared to manhood in his native town. He remained on the home farm until about 1853, when he disposed of it, and was for nearly a year engaged as a foreman in highway construction work in different parts of Massachusetts. He then managed the Town Poor Farm in Oxford for a year, after which he purchased a farm of 100 acres in Charlton, Mass., on which there was considerable timber. This he cleared off, and supplied from it railroad ties for the Norwich & Worcester Railroad. Mr. Larned greatly improved his farm, and by hard work made it one of the best in the town. He lived on this farm until about 1877, when he retired from work and went to Woonsocket, R. I., where for two years he made his home with his son John. He next went to the home of his son Daniel W., in Jetmore, Hodgeman

Co., Kans., where he remained for a year, then returning to Pomfret to stay for about three years with John again. From there he went back to Kansas where he died, May 8, 1886. His remains were brought back to Oxford, Mass., for burial. Politically he was first a Whig, and later a Republican. During his residence in Oxford he held many town offices, among them that of selectman. He was known as a man of the highest integrity, who purely by his industry achieved the moderate success that came to him. He attended the Baptist Church. On Dec. 31, 1834, he married (first) Lucinda M. Whitney, who was born in Millbury, Mass., July 28, 1810, and who died July 28, 1851, and is buried at Oxford. The children of this marriage were: (1) George H., born Oct. 16, 1835, died Jan. 3, 1840. (2) Daniel W., born March 12, 1837, enlisted in the 27th Mass. V. I., and was promoted to the rank of sergeant of Co. B. He went to Kansas during the early boom, and located at what later became Jetmore, Hodgeman county. He was active in the organization of that county and is a prominent man there, having served as clerk of the county court. He is now married and a retired, well-to-do farmer there. (3) John F. born Oct. 9, 1842, died March 25, 1843. (4) John H., born July 31, 1847, is mentioned below. For his second wife Zenas Marsh Larned wedded March 31, 1852, Mrs. Harriet Howe, widow of Daniel M. Howe, by whom she had four children. One son was born of her marriage with Mr. Larned, Horace M., born Jan. 6, 1857, died Jan. 9, 1857. She died in Charlton, Massachusetts.

John H. Larned, now resident in Pomfret, Conn., was born in Oxford, Mass., and his early life was spent there. He was brought up to hard work on the farm, and attended the district school until his sixteenth year, that summer going out to work for a farmer in Oxford. The winter following he attended the Dudley Academy, paying for his board by chopping wood. He was a great woodsman, and when only seventeen years old he bought a tract of woodland, in company with another man, and cut the wood from it; and at eighteen his earnings from cutting down trees were sometimes as high as $4 a day, notwithstanding the fact that the price he was paid for the work was only five cents a tree. He was engaged extensively in farm work and wood-cutting until his twenty-first year, with the exception of one summer which he spent in cutting stone. At the age of twenty-one he was employed by Henry Stevens, of Webster, Mass., who operated a saw and grist mill and a farm. Young Larned began work in the sawmill, working nights, and doing eleven hours work for $1.25, out of which he had to pay his own board. Later his wages were advanced to twenty cents an hour, and by working overtime he managed to put in the equivalent of ten days a week. He remained at this for ten months, assisting in both saw and grist milling, and on the farm as well. He then went to Woonsocket, R. I., where he was employed by Edward Harris, a well known woolen manufacturer. His first work was at "outside work" around the factory, but in three months he was promoted to the position of "outside foreman" over a number of men who had been in the service of Mr. Harris for many years. When only twenty-one years of age Mr. Larned had thirty-five under him, and his wages were advanced several times. Notwithstanding Mr. Harris urged him to remain, he resigned his position, and accepted another with Nathaniel Elliott, who operated a larger lumber business in the same town. At the end of the year, Mr. Larned was promoted to foreman by Mr. Elliott with whom he remained for seven years without the loss of a single hour's time. After leaving Mr. Elliott's, Mr. Larned took a year's vacation, three months of which he spent in traveling in the West and Northwest. Later he formed a partnership with Thomas A. Lake, under the style of Lake & Larned, and they did a large and successful lumber business in Woonsocket, Mr. Larned being the practical lumberman. This continued for two years, when the firm sold out to other parties.

On Jan. 1, 1882, Mr. Larned purchased the farm on which he now lives in Pomfret of John Dimon. It was known as the "Ithamar May place," and is a tract of 240 acres, which Mr. Larned has cleared and improved in many ways, until he now has a neat and altogether fine farm. He has been engaged in general farming, and he has made a special reputation as a breeder of Ayrshire cattle and Chester county swine. He is also an extensive speculator in farm produce. He buys pork, potatoes, butter and various other products, a good part of which he disposes of to the well-known "Deerfoot Farm" in the neighboring State of Massachusetts. In 1900 he bought and sold 18,000 bushels of potatoes, and he also deals in livestock for which he goes mostly to New York State, and which he brings to Pomfret to dispose of. He is one of the best known and most thrifty and energetic farmers in his region.

On Jan. 22, 1872, Mr. Larned married Cilina Millette, born June 9, 1849, a native of Canada and daughter of Louis Millette. Six children have been born to them, as follows: (1) Henry D., born Dec. 22, 1873, married May 29, 1893, Delvina Roy, and lives in Woonsocket, R. I.; they have one child, Henry Alfred, born Oct. 10, 1894. (2) John W., born June 17, 1878, resides in Woonsocket, R. I. (3) Charles E., born July 7, 1880, lives at home. (4) Edwin A., born Sept. 21, 1884, died Jan. 18, 1885. (5) Clara Cilina, born Nov. 12, 1885, lives at home. (6) Joseph Alfred, born Nov. 17, 1887, died Nov. 25, 1887. Mrs. Larned and her children are members of the Catholic Church.

Mr. Larned is a Republican in national politics, but in local affairs an independent. He is now justice of the peace, and heretofore has served as assessor and on the board of relief. The foregoing sketch of his life shows a youth inured to labor, always begetting further habits of industry, and finally leading to the man of affairs. In addition to the interests already named he is agent for the farm implements of the Adriance Buckeye Machine Co., and for the well-known Thorley Food Co.'s product. He is entirely a self-made man, now well-to-do and highly respected.

GEORGE D. ANGELL. The Angell family name is supposed to be derived from Angel, a town in France, although some authorities claim that the family is of Venetian origin.

The first recorded member of the family in this great country, was Thomas Angell, who was born in 1618 and was an apprentice to Roger Williams and with him embarked in December, 1630, in the ship "Lion," from Bristol, England, under the command of Capt. A. Pearce. After a passage of sixty-six days they finally arrived at Boston, Mass., Feb. 5, 1631, and later they removed to Salem, Mass. As is known to all students of history, in 1636 owing to religious dissensions Roger Williams, the pastor of the Salem Church, was ordered to return to England. Making his escape to the wigwams of the Narragansett Indians, he was joined by five supporters, one of the party being faithful Thomas Angell. The winter was spent in Seekonk and in the following spring Angell accompanied his leader to the tract of land which was given them by the friendly Indians, and here arose the town of Providence, where, about Aug. 20, 1637, Roger Williams with his thirteen friends, signed a compact to incorporate a town fellowship.

It was in 1638 that Roger Williams made his celebrated will and in this Thomas Angell received lot 2, which embraced the present sites of the First Baptist Church, the old Normal School and Angell street. Thomas died in 1694, leaving descendants who were among the most distinguished citizens of North Providence and vicinity. With varying fortunes, conspicuous in public, military and religious life, the family grew and prospered, it being our task to resume its history in the time of Job Angell, the grandfather of George D. Angell, of Brooklyn.

Grandfather Job Angell was a very extensive farmer and large landowner in the town of Plainfield, Conn., residing at Central Village, and was esteemed a man of large means. His name was prominently connected with public affairs and he was undoubtedly a man of high character. He died on his farm, Oct. 11, 1853, at the age of eighty-six years. He married Susan Bennett, of Rhode Island, whom he survived, her death occurring Nov. 17, 1836, at the age of sixty-four years. Their children were: Henry, who married Rebecca Arnold, was a farmer in Plainfield; Louisa, who married William Hutchins, resided in Clinton, N. Y., and died there; Susan, who married Harry Parkhurst, resided for many years in Plainfield, but the family later moved to Providence, and there they died; Harriet, who married Lewis Pond, died in Utica, N. Y.; Emily, who married William Hubbard, died in Utica, N. Y.; Daniel, who married Sarah B. Dodge, was a farmer in Central Village; Thomas, a farmer, resided in Plainfield; and Job F. Angell.

Job F. Angell, the father of George D., was born in 1802, in Central Village, Conn., and grew up accustomed to farm work. His educational opportunities were confined to the advantages offered by the district schools and Plainfield Academy. When he was a young man he taught through three winters in the Plainfield schools and later went to Providence, where he established a meat market on what is now North Main street, and for a number of years he continued at that location, conducting a market in the vicinity.

Mr. Angell was a man of keen business instinct; in addition to his market he dealt largely in real estate, owning at that time large tracts of unimproved land which are now covered with buildings. Later he sold his market in Providence and for several years devoted his time entirely to the development and management of his real estate interests. In 1842 Mr. Angell bought a small farm in Canterbury and there he followed farming a few years with no idea of profit, merely for pleasure. Later he removed to a larger tract at Mantton, R. I., near Providence and continued there to farm according to his own ideas for several years. He finally removed to New York City, where he lived retired until his death, March 26, 1891. His life had covered many years and death was caused by advanced age. His remains were brought to Providence, and interred in the cemetery of Grace Church.

Mr. Angell's political life had not been notable, because he took only a voting interest in it. Always a strong anti-slavery man he was a member of the Republican party. In religious movements he was more deeply interested, was an active member of the Universalist Church, and during his residence in Canterbury was mainly instrumental in the organization of the society there and the building of the handsome Universalist Church. Not only did he contribute to the building of the edifice, but he gave the land upon which it was placed. Intolerant in his attitude toward wrong of any kind, he was quick to right it if in his power, and was a man who won to himself a great following of sincere friends.

The marriage of Job F. Angell was to Julia F. Lester, who was born in June, 1804, in Plainfield, Conn. She was a daughter of Sessions and Esther (Kenyon) Lester, the former of whom was a very prominent citizen of Plainfield, a large farmer and stock drover. The mother of George D. Angell, having lived to the age of ninety years, passed out of life Jan. 9, 1895, and was laid by the side of her husband. The children of Job F. and Julia E. (Lester) Angell were: (1) Emily L. was married to John Hyde, a farmer, who died in Brooklyn, where his widow still resides; their children were Eugene, who married Ida M. Earle, and resides in Hartford, Conn. (their children being Fred; Harold married to Minnie Brownell; Louise; and Elise), Frederick Hyde, who died at the age of three years; Addie L. Hyde; and Jennie B. Hyde, who died in young womanhood.

(2) James F. Angell, the second child of Job F. and Julia (Lester) Angell, married Lydia Coddington. For many years he was engaged in the jewelry jobbing business in New York City, was very successful and now lives retired. His children are Ida; Job F., who married twice and has one child, Lillian; George D., of Brooklyn; Julia E., who married Thomas Brownell, and died in Providence, leaving one child, George F.; Frances M., who is the widow of George Brown, and resides in Providence, her one child being Alice; and the youngest, William, who died young.

(3) George D. Angell was born Nov. 11, 1834, in Providence, R. I.; he accompanied his father when he removed to Canterbury in 1842, and upon his return to Providence in 1848. His early education was acquired in the public schools of Providence and Canterbury, and later he was a student in a private establishment in the latter place. In that city he was then apprenticed to the well-known jewelry firm of Stone & Weaver, and remained with them learning the trade for three years. This firm was widely known for its specialty of lockets, and here Mr. Angell was very thoroughly drilled in all the details of the manufacturing business and the finer work which goes to make a skilled jeweler. For a short time after finishing his apprenticeship Mr. Angell remained with the firm, but concluded to try an agricultural life for a time, and with this end in view operated his father's Providence farm for several years.

Mr. Angell then went to New York City and in association with his brother, James F. Angell, bought an interest in a jewelry jobbing house and for fifteen years continued in the business, which prospered on account of its excellent management. However, like many others after a life of successful business activity in other localities, when Mr. Angell decided to locate permanently, he came to Brooklyn. There he purchased what was known as the Lewis Serls place.

The first marriage of Mr. Angell was in November, 1864, in Providence, to Miss Mary C. Peckham, who was a daughter of Henry C. Peckham, of Providence. Mrs. Angell's death took place in 1891 at the age of fifty years. The children born to this union were: (1) Henry L., who was educated in the public schools of Brooklyn, N. Y. For about a year he was engaged in the life insurance business and then entered the employ of Clarence Whitman & Co. in their New York office; for the past five years he has been the general manager of their Chicago office, holding a very responsible and lucrative position. He married Miss Jessie Taylor, his children being, Winifred, Lester, Lawrence and Margaret. (2) Grace, who married Oscar F. Atwood, and died in 1894 in Brooklyn; and (3) Clara P., at home.

Mr. Angell married a second time in Brooklyn, in 1894, Esther, a daughter of Abram Shepard. In politics, Mr. Angell is a Republican, but does not disturb his life of quiet, congenial pursuits, with any political ambition. Mrs. Angell attends the Congregational Church, of which she is a member.

HON. MONROE F. LATHAM. During the last quarter of a century no more substantial career has contributed to the well being of Eastford, Windham county, than that of Hon. Monroe F. Latham, millwright, farmer and legislator, who was born in the house he now occupies, Jan. 3, 1843, a son of Hon. Joseph B. and Percy Keyes (Bullard) Latham, and grandson of Labin Latham.

Labin Latham, a sea captain, lived to a good old age in Johnston, R. I., and was survived by his wife, formerly Surviah Waterman, who died in Eastford, at the home of her son, Hon. Joseph B. Latham. To Labin Latham and his wife were born a large family of children who located in different parts of the East, and of the three who settled in Windham county, Lydia (the wife of George Sprague) and Sophia (the wife of Horace Spink) died in Eastford, in which town their brother, Joseph B., the father of Monroe F., was destined to fill a prominent place.

Hon. Joseph B. Latham was born in Johnston, R. I., June 8, 1802, and lived in his native town until attaining his majority. Having decided to learn the trade of millwright, he walked to Eastford, Conn., and entered the shop of George Sprague, located on Sprague Hill, near Phoenixville. Mr. Sprague manufactured the first iron plows made in Connecticut, and Mr. Latham continued under his capable supervision for several years. He was later employed by Rufus Sprague and Clifford Thomas in the cotton mill at Phoenixville, which mill was the second of its kind operated in the State. There he added to his trade of wheelwright that of millwright, to which he devoted his active life, and in the application of which he became an expert of more than local reputation. He commanded large wages and accumulated a snug little competence, his services being in demand for large undertakings in both Connecticut and Massachusetts. A Republican in politics, he was elected to many offices of trust in Eastford, and represented the town during four sessions of the Legislature, an honor conferred upon no other citizen before or since his time. For many years he served as chairman of the board of selectmen, and was for several years justice of the peace. The closing years of his life were spent at farming, which he regarded as a pastime, and his death occurred while at the home of his son, Eugene, at South Windham, April 21, 1872. He was buried in a private lot opposite the school-house, near his home in Phoenixville, and his death spread wide regret among those who appreciated the value of his services in behalf of the town. He was one of the most prominent and influential men of his time and place, in his manner he was direct and outspoken, his word carrying a kind of weight which appealed to reason and common sense.

On Jan. 24, 1827, Mr. Latham married Percy Keyes Bullard, born in Eastford, Feb. 9, 1801, a daughter of Zuinglius and Sally (Keyes) Bullard. She died at the home of her son, Monroe F., Feb. 24, 1883. Four of the sons of this worthy couple became members of the Legislature. The children in the order of birth were as follows: (1) Joseph B., born Nov. 4, 1828, married Hannah Emeline Cutler May 14, 1851, and died in Manchester, Conn., July 20, 1889. He was a millwright by trade, and while living in Eastford served two terms in the Legislature. In 1874 he removed to Manchester, Conn., and was with the Union Manufacturing Co. up to the time of his death. (2) Lorenzo B., born July 28, 1830, married Mary Ann Squires while in England, June 27, 1859. He was formerly a sea captain and visited all parts of the globe. During the Civil war the "Comet" was captured as a blockade runner, and he was made Captain of her. He died at New Brighton, Staten Island, in April, 1902. (3) Percy K., born Sept. 25, 1834, died Feb. 12, 1847. (4) William H., born Dec. 25, 1836, married Mary Ann Adams, Oct. 24, 1864. He was a graduate of the State Normal School at New Britain, Conn., and attended Brown University for a short time, after which he taught school at Eastford and Brooklyn. Later he engaged in the banking business in Providence, R. I., and for many years he was vice-president of the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company. He died April 29, 1896, and is buried beside his wife at Phoenixville. (5) Eugene E., born May 11, 1839, married Martha Spaulding, Jan. 2, 1862. He was an expert wheelwright and master machinist, and was employed for many years by Smith, Winchester & Co., at South Windham, later entering the employ of the Seymour Paper Co., at Windsor Locks, Conn. This company sent him to Egypt in 1885, to install a fumigating plant in the land of the Pharaohs. He was a Democrat in politics, the only one in the family, and represented Windsor Locks for one term in the Legislature. On Feb. 28, 1889, he was killed in Windsor Locks. (6) James E., born Nov. 3, 1841, married Elizabeth B. Adams, Dec. 25, 1866. He represented Eastford in the Legislature in 1878, and is a millwright at Providence, R. I. (7) Monroe F. was born Jan. 3, 1843. (8) Sarah R., born May 20, 1845, died Nov. 2, 1846.

In his youth Hon. Monroe F. Latham learned the trade of millwright, which he followed with his brothers, and they were very active for a time in putting wheels and flumes in the eastern part of Connecticut. Until his mother's death he remained on the home farm, faithfully looking after her interests, and he finally bought out the other heirs. The house had been erected by his father, and he has since continued to be his home; surrounding it are about 100 acres of farm land, in connection with the cultivation of which he has for many years operated a saw and grist mill. In the meantime his interests have been by no means self-centered, but have extended into a variety of avenues. As a loyal Republican he cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has since then held about all of the offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen. During several terms he was a member of the board of relief, was assessor two terms, and has been justice of the peace for more than two years. Almost continuously for thirty years he has been a member of the board of selectmen, and for many years he has been chairman of the board. In 1884 Mr. Latham was appointed postmaster at Phoenixville, a position he resigned in 1896, in compliance with the law which excludes postmasters from other office. He was succeeded in the postal department by his wife, who is at the present time postmistress. In 1884 he was elected for the first time to the Legislature, and served on the fisheries committee, and in 1897 was elected to the State Senate from the Sixteenth district, and was chairman of the committee on Agriculture. In 1902 he was a delegate from Eastford to the Constitutional Convention at Hartford, convened for the purpose of revising the constitution of the State.

On March 22, 1881, Mr. Latham married Sarah F. Johns, born in Norwich, Conn., Nov. 1, 1855, daughter of Jacob and Jane (Whaley) Johns. Of this union there are two children: Oliver H., born Dec. 7, 1882, graduated from the South Manchester high-school in 1902; and Wilfred J., born Sept. 11, 1899. Fraternally Mr. Latham is identified with the Crystal Lake Grange No. 60, of Eastford, of which he is a charter member, and in which he has passed all of the chairs; with the Quinebaug Pomona, of which he has served as secretary for several years; and with the State Grange. Mrs. Latham has served as Ceres in the local grange. The family attend the Congregational church. Mr. Latham is influential and popular, possesses fine executive and financial ability, and has the faculty of making and retaining friends. The available facts in regard to the Latham ancestry are as follows: William Latham, then youth in charge of Gen. Carver, was a passenger on the "Mayflower" in 1620, and though not named as one of that company of venturers, his passage on the first ship is vouched for in Bradford's history. Young Latham was at Duxbury in 1637, Marshfield in 1643 and 1648, and the same year went to the Bahamas, where he died.

Robert Latham, who was a constable in Marshfield in 1643, is made a son of the "Mayflower" voyageur by Mitchell, in his Family Register, published in Bridgewater, Mass., in 1840. Robert lived at Cambridge for several years, and took the oath of fidelity at Marshfield in 1657, removing to East Bridgewater in 1667. In 1649 he married Susanna, daughter of John Winslow, a brother of Gov. Edward Winslow, and of his wife, whose mother was the historic Mary Chilton, said to be the first female to set foot on Plymouth shores. Mary Chilton was a daughter of James and Susanna Chilton, both of whom died the first winter after reaching America in 1620. The children comprising Robert Latham's family were as follows: Mercy, born at Plymouth in 1650; James; Chilton; Joseph; Elizabeth; Hannah; and Sarah.

Cary Latham, whom Savage declares probably a brother of the constable, Robert, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Masters, who married the widow of Edmund Lockwood. To Cary Latham and his wife were born children whose births are recorded in Boston as follows: Thomas and Joseph, born respectively in September, 1639, and Oct. 1642. Mr. Latham removed to New London, Conn., and became prominent in affairs of the town, serving for sixteen years as selectman, and as deputy to the General Court from 1664 to 1670, inclusive. He died in 1685. His children born in New London were: Elizabeth, Jane, Lydia and Hannah.

Thomas and Joseph, the two sons of Cary Latham, settled on the Groton side of the river, in New London, where the name has been perpetuated. On Oct. 15, 1673, Thomas married Rebecca, daughter of Hugh Wells, of Wethersfield, and had but one child, Samuel. Thomas died in 1677. In Newfoundland Joseph married his wife Mary, by whom he had Cary, born July 14, 1668, besides ten other children born in New London. Joseph Latham died in 1706, leaving seven sons and one daughter.

CHARLES HENRY STEVENS. During a peculiarly useful life Charles Henry Stevens, whose lamented death occurred July 22, 1882, was one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, Connecticut.

The birth of Mr. Stevens occurred April 23, 1852, in Stafford, and his early schooling was acquired in that place. With his parents he moved to Lawrence, Mass., and entered the high school, in which he remained during several terms. Upon the return of the family to Stafford he became a clerk in a dry-goods establishment in Springfield, Mass. Some two years later he also returned to Stafford and in the same capacity entered the employ of Warren & Lord, who conducted a general store, and here he remained for two years. About this time he and Asa Olin Brooks bought the business of Ormsby Bros. in the Page Block. For a year the firm of Stevens & Brooks carried on this dry-goods store, also selling boots and shoes. Mr. Stevens then became sole owner, and continued the business until his death, which resulted from typhoid fever.

Mr. Stevens was a successful merchant, his honest and upright methods securing the confidence of the public, while his quiet, unassuming, courteous manner won him personal friends who soon became business ones also. His home life was one of peace and happiness, his kind and gentle spirit making every one at ease in his presence.

In politics, Mr. Stevens was a Republican, true to the principles of his party, but he was never willing to accept public trusts. He was one of the most liberal supporters of the Methodist Church, faithful in his attendance on its services. Fraternally he was a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F & A. M., of Stafford.

Charles Henry Stevens was married May 24, 1875, to Miss Carrie Carder, of Wales, Mass., who lived later in Stafford. Her father was Elmer Carder, who married Elvira Moulton, and by trade he was a boss carder. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stevens were: Louis H., born May 2, 1876; George William, born June 24, 1878. The latter is associated with Harvey Chapman in the hardware business in Stafford.

Mr. Stevens came of English stock, his father, John Stevens, and his mother, Juliette (Howe) Stevens, coming from highly respected and well-known industrial families. John Stevens was born in Bradford, England, and lived to be seventy-three years of age, dying in Stafford, Conn., Dec. 16, 1892. On May 5, 1850, he married Juliette Howe, who died Nov. 9, 1894. She was the daughter of Asa and Hulda Howe, and was born Oct. 16, 1822. By trade John Stevens was a fuller of woolsens; he came to America in his youth and followed his trade in the Mineral Springs mill for a number of years. His quiet and unassuming manner made him many friends, and he was highly valued in the Methodist Church of Stafford Springs. His political affiliation was with the Republican party.

LOUIS HERBERT STEVENS, son of Charles Henry Stevens, was born May 2, 1876, in Stafford Springs, and acquired his education in the common schools of that locality. At the age of fourteen he entered the employ of Amos N. Nichols, a grocer located in the Harwood Block. He remained there some months, acquiring a knowledge and a taste for this line of merchandising. In the fall of 1896 Mr. Stevens became associated with O. M. Brown in a business known as the Chicago Grocery. He has continued in this position very successfully ever since, having been well qualified for it by a previous experience with F. J. Chandler. Their line of goods covers all articles usually found in a first-class grocery, their methods are founded on those of Mr. Stevens' father and promise to meet with the same confidence from the public.

Mr. Stevens married June 14, 1899, Miss Lena Siswick, of Stafford, who is a daughter of George H. and Ann (Boothroyd) Siswick. To this union one little daughter, Dorothy Howe, was born May 23, 1901.

In politics Mr. Stevens is a staunch Republican. Socially he is a member of the Temple of Honor, has served for two years as its secretary and is now its efficient Past Worthy Chief Templar. His religious connection is with the Methodist Church of Stafford Springs. Mr. Stevens is one of the progressive young business men of this locality, and is held in high regard.

JAMES MONROE MUNYAN (deceased). The Munyan family of northeastern Connecticut is one of 200 years' standing in New England. The American ancestor, Edward Munyan, a weaver by trade, came to America about 1700, and located in Salem, Mass. About that time and some years later there was a constant migration going on to the lands of Windham county, Conn. There being no great demand for his labors in the weaving business Mr. Munyan joined the tide of those seeking homes in the wilderness.

The land in what was known to the Indians as Quinntisset, now Thompson, Conn., began to be occupied some years after 1700, and that on Thompson Hill in 1716, where Hezekiah Sabin, a son of Capt. John Sabin, of Pomfret, became the first resident proprietor. In 1721 Mr. Munyan purchased of James Leavens 100 acres of land, to which he removed his family. This land, at that time a remote wilderness, lay north of Pottaquatic, and extended to near the Rhode Island line, and is still held by his descendants. Mr. Munyan's family at the time of removal was composed of wife, Sarah, two daughters, Keziah and Sarah, and son Joseph, the latter then a boy of ten years. The journey was long and laborious; roads very poor, streams seldom bridged. Six cows, ten sheep and four hogs to stock the farm shared the perils of the way. Oxen were hired at the different villages to convey the cart of household goods from one settlement to another. The old oak tree under which they encamped the night of their arrival was found covered with wild turkeys in the morning. A dense unbroken forest stretched eastward many miles into Rhode Island. The Greens and Hascalls were their nearest neighbors, and they supposed them to be the only inhabitants of the region. Wolves chased the cattle; pine knots were burned through the night to scare away wild beasts and Indians. A log house was built during the summer and land adjoining broken up and planted with corn from which in the autumn three apronfuls of ears were harvested by the daughters. Sarah Munyan, the wife of Edward, was taken into full communion in the old Killingly Church (organized in 1715) Aug. 28, 1728, and Keziah Munyan, one of the daughters of Edward, married, June 14, 1736, Benjamin MacIntire.

From the foregoing family the late James M.

Munyan's lineage is through Joseph, Israel, Isaac and Hosea Munyan.

(II) Joseph Munyan, son of the emigrant settler, born about 1712, married, March 11, 1741, Sarah Joslin (marriage recorded in the Thompson Parish Church), and had children, all baptized, as follows: Hannah, Jan. 16, 1743; Jonathan, March 10, 1745; Joseph, July 26, 1747; Israel, Jan. 4, 1750; John, Aug. 6, 1758; Benjamin, July 20, 1760; and David, Sept. 28, 1762. The father of this family in 1739 built a frame house on the old homestead, one of the first substantial houses of that locality.

(III) Israel Munyan, son of Joseph, bapt. June 4, 1750, married July 28, 1772, Alice Grover.

(IV) Isaac Munyan, son of Israel.

(V) Hosea Munyan, son of Isaac, was born and bred in Thompson, Conn., and there passed his life, owning a farm on what is known as Buck Hill. In early manhood he was married to Sarah, daughter of Jacob Blackmar, a soldier of the Revolution and a United States pensioner, and to them were born children as follows: Emory, who went to California, and died at San Jose, Cal.; James Monroe, who is mentioned more fully farther on; Albert, who went to Australia, and died there; Horace, who died in Thompson, Conn.; and Alvin, who is now a resident of Bay City, Mich.; and Alvin, who is living at San Jose, Cal. The parents of these children were plain country people, such as made good citizens and neighbors. The father was a Democrat in his political views.

James Monroe Munyan, son of Hosea, and the subject proper of this sketch, was born Dec. 1, 1825, at the Munyan homestead on Buck Hill. He received only an elementary education, such as the times and neighborhood of his early boyhood afforded. He was reared to farm labor and early became self-reliant and self-supporting, leaving home to work for others. Later on he became associated with his brother Albert in operating a sawmill, which business he afterward conducted alone at Quadic. In 1865 he engaged in mercantile pursuits, keeping a general store at Thompson. This business he carried on until 1876, when owing to failing health he disposed of it and again engaged in agricultural pursuits, buying home and land, and in addition operating the homestead of eighty acres.

The political affiliations of Mr. Munyan were with the Democratic party, the party of his forefathers. He believed in the precepts of the Golden Rule, and followed its teachings. He was an estimable man and good citizen—a useful member of society. He served his fellow townsmen as selectman for two years. He was a man of temperate habits.

In 1856 Mr. Munyan was married to Harriet Wakefield, a native of Providence, R. I., a daughter of John and Susan A. (Davis) Wakefield, and granddaughter of Ebenezer and Hannah (Munyan) Wakefield, of Thompson, Conn., and of Daniel Davis. In girlhood Mrs. Munyan attended the common schools of Thompson, Conn., and the East Greenwich (R. I.) Academy, and later she was engaged in teaching school at Bradford, Ohio. She is a member of the Congregational Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Munyan there were born four children, namely: (1) Oscar Munyan, was born in 1859, and in early boyhood attended the public schools of Thompson, Conn., his native town. He was then for two years at the Dean Academy, Franklin, Mass., and for one year in the Boston School of Technology. After his school days were over he was for a period engaged in mercantile business. Since then Mr. Munyan has been mainly occupied in agricultural pursuits on the home place. He is a proficient civil engineer by profession. He served for a number of years as chairman of the Democratic town committee. In 1880 Mr. Munyan was married to Martha A. Card, and the union has been blessed with three children: Alice G., Emory C. and Sarah L. (2) Sarah A. Munyan. (3) Clara I. married Jesse Armstrong, a dry-goods merchant of Thompson, Conn., whose death occurred July 29, 1898. Three children were born to them: Mildred W., July 24, 1887; Philip, Sept. 1, 1888; and Bernice Baldwin, April 29, 1892. The mother of these children is now engaged in teaching school. (4) Fred A., married Margaret Mahoney, and is engaged in farming. He has no children. James Monroe Munyan died April 21, 1899, and his remains were interred in the East Putnam Cemetery.

Among the earlier generations of the Munyans in the old family neighborhood there were a number who went to New London in the war of 1812. A Caleb Munyan was a sergeant in Capt. Joslin's Company, term of service from June 21 to June 28, 1813; and Ebenezer Munyan was a private in Capt. Parley Whitmore's Company, for the same term of service. A Joseph Munyan was a member of Capt. Samuel Dresser's Company, term of service from June 25 to July 15, 1813; and for the same term of service an Isaac Munyan was a member of Capt. Jacob Lyon's Company, and he or another Isaac was in Capt. John Joslin's Company from June 21 to June 28, 1813.

ROSS. This family, of which the Hon. Asa Munyan Ross is a worthy descendant, is one of the oldest representative families of Thompson, Windham county.

Early records show that Thomas Ross, a Scotchman, who was of Cambridge as early as 1656, removed about 1670 to Billerica, Mass. His wife, Seeth, daughter of William Holman, was killed by the Indians in 1695. In Miss Larned's work on Windham county it is stated that in 1711 a Massachusetts colony took possession of Chestnut Hill in the town of Killingly, Conn. Among this colony or soon following it, was a David Ross who purchased 500 acres of the Saltonstall grant of 2,000 acres made in 1714, situated in the northeast corner of said county and in the town of Killingly. The church records of that vicinity show the baptisms of the children of David Ross to have been David, Isabel, Sarah, Abigail, John, and Jonathan, all occurring between 1717 and 1732. It is believed that the present family of Ross is descended from Thomas Ross of Billerica, through David Ross the colonist of Killingly.

Lemuel Ross, great-grandfather of Asa M., was a landowner and farmer in the town of Thompson, where he raised a large family. He died at Brandy Hill in the town of Thompson, and was buried, with his wife, Olive Smith, born in Thompson, in the Dike cemetery. His children were: Esek; Ziba, who married Nancy Munyan; Arthur Amasa, who was a minister; Asa; Stephen; Abigail, who married Thomas Gleason; Eli; Obadiah, who married Martha Peck; Sally, who was the wife of Amos Whipple; Anne, who was the wife of Andrew Darling; Prudence, who was the wife of Nelson Drake.

Asa Ross, son of Lemuel, was born on Buck Hill in the town of Thompson. For many years he was an overseer in the mills. He bought the tract of land known as the Wheaton farm, and spent his later years there, making many improvements. He died at seventy-two years of age, and was buried on his estate. He married Sarah Munyan, who was a native of Thompson. A full history of the Munyan family will be found in another part of this work.

The children of Asa Ross were: Roxy, who married Arnold Ballou, of Burrillville, and had four children, Daniel R., Arnold B., Roxie A., and Sarah A.; Mary, who married Joseph Thornton; Lowell Nelson; Asa, who married Florilla Whipple, of Burrillville, R. I., and who resides at Worcester, Mass.; Celia, who married Uriah Ross, of Burrillville, R. I.; and Sarah, who married Henry Munyan.

Lowell N. Ross, son of Asa, was born on the home farm. After leaving the district school he attended Thompson Academy; he was always of studious habits, and taught school in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. He was one of the largest landholders in the section where he lived, owning a tract of 200 acres. His life was an active one; he took a deep interest in the people and the schools and was noted for his honesty and uprightness. In politics Mr. Ross was a Democrat of the school of Jefferson and Jackson. For over fifty years he was a subscriber and reader of the Hartford Times. He was an industrious, thrifty man much devoted to his home, his wife and his family. He married, in Douglass, Mass., Chloe Ann, daughter of Samuel and Chloe Dudley, of West Douglass. Mrs. Ross died Jan. 26, 1864, Mr. Ross Feb. 25, 1898. They are buried in the family cemetery on the farm.

The children born to Lowell N. and Chloe Ross were: Lowell Dudley; Arthur J., who died after reaching manhood; Samuel, who died in middle age; Georgia Ann, who married Mr. Stockwell; Loren T., who resided on the Dudley homestead, and died May 28, 1883, in Douglass, Mass.; Asa Munyan; Josephine A., who married George H. Law, of Thompson; Jennie A., who married Frank Elliott, both deceased; George Oscar; William Newton, who died in infancy in 1865.

ASA MUNYAN ROSS, son of Lowell Nelson, was born, Dec. 12, 1854, on what is known as the Deacon Converse farm. He acquired his education in the district schools of Thompson. His life is a busy one and his occupation somewhat varied. He owns land in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Massachusetts, 150 acres of this being in the town of Douglass. Besides farming and stock raising he also deals in hay and cattle and operates a lumber mill in Rhode Island. Though an energetic business man his activity is not confined entirely to his personal concerns. He takes a lively interest in the welfare of his town and matters relating to State government and is popular with all classes though very unassuming.

Mr. Ross is a Democrat, and has served his town as selectman, member of the Board of Relief, and of the school board. Twice—in 1896 and 1898—he was nominated by his party for State Treasurer and received the full party support at the polls, but was unable to overcome the strength of the Republican opposition. Mr. Ross' financial success shows him to be possessed of good judgment and sound common sense; his political prominence is evidence of the confidence reposed in him by the people. On April 15, 1877, he married Flora A. Randall, who was born in Thompson, Jan. 6, 1857. Mrs. Ross is a daughter of Peter and Urania (Sayles) Randall, and granddaughter of Elisha Sayles and Daniel Randall. She is a lady of refinement and high character, a strong temperance advocate and a member of the W. C. T. U. of Thompson.

GEORGE OSCAR ROSS, the youngest brother of Asa M., was born on the old homestead April 12, 1860. He received his education in the district school. Up to the time of his marriage, 1882, he remained on the farm with his parents, and then settled on his present farm, the Asa Eddy place, a tract of eighty-four acres. He is the proprietor of 240 acres of land of various kinds, including tillable and timber lands, and has made many improvements thereon, including the erection of a barn and various minor additions. Mr. Ross believes in the political faith he inherited from his ancestors—Democracy. He is a good citizen and obliging neighbor, a wholesouled man who is highly respected. On November 20, 1882, Mr. Ross married Edith May Flint. They have one child, George, born September, 1883. Mrs. Ross is of a domestic turn and devoted to her home and family. Her father, William H. Flint, was born in Thompson and was a brother of Judge George Flint, of Thompson. He was a resident of Gloucester, Providence county, R. I., and later of Winsted, Conn., where he died in 1879. Mr. Flint was buried in Greenville, R. I. He was married to Frances J. Brown, born in Smithfield, R. I., daughter of Arnold and Lydia (Waterman) Brown. They were the parents of three children: Edith May, who married George Oscar Ross; Mary Frances, who married Frank Sheldon; and Susan Alice, who married Stephen H. Clemence, of Rhode Island. Mrs. Flint is still living at Gloucester, Rhode Island.

JOSEPH ALLEN LEWIS (deceased), than whom there was not a more respected old citizen of Willimantic, Windham county, was the pioneer in the gardening, nursery and fruit business in the town, where his residence of more than forty years was marked by an honorable and upright career, second to none of the business men of his time. Mr. Lewis was born Jan. 5, 1829, at Exeter, R. I., a son of Arnold and Mary A. (Tillinghast) Lewis. Arnold Lewis was born in 1791, at Exeter, R. I., son of Stephen Lewis, who belonged to an old New England family, and was descended from William Lewis, who came to New England, in the ship, "The Lion," landing at Boston Sept. 16, 1632. On Oct. 10, 1822, he married Mary A. Tillinghast who was born in 1800. They engaged in farming, and spent their lives in Exeter, where they reared the following family: Eunice, born May 11, 1823, married Stephen A. Tift; Gardiner, born Aug. 9, 1825, was thrown from a horse and killed when a boy; Joseph Allen; Sarah, born Oct. 17, 1830, married John T. Lewis, and died in West Greenwich, R. I.; Eliza P., born Feb. 17, 1832, married Joseph R. Frye, now deceased, and is living in Willimantic; John, born Oct. 6, 1833, was in the nursery business at Dighton, Mass., where he died; Mary Abbie, born Nov. 28, 1838, married the late Elijah Kenyon, of Kenyonville, R. I., where he was long a wealthy manufacturer and where his sons are conducting the extensive business he founded; Miss Hannah E., born March 28, 1841, lives in Willimantic; and Henry Byron, born June 19, 1846, is superintendent of the repair shops of the N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad at Providence, Rhode Island. Joseph Allen Lewis attended the public school at Exeter, R. I., where he proved himself an apt pupil, and made rapid progress. When he became a young man he taught school and was a fine instructor, being a thorough master of everything which he undertook to teach. In his early manhood he was employed in Moore's nursery at Providence, R. I., and acquired a good knowledge of the business in which he afterwards became distinguished. At Springfield, Mass., Mr. Lewis was also employed in the nursery business, and also at Dighton, Mass., where he worked for the late Dr. Wood. In this last position Mr. Lewis taught winter school, working for Dr. Wood in the summer.

Mr. Lewis was married Jan. 25, 1853, to Miss Caroline Frye, a native of West Greenwich, R. I., where she was born Oct. 15, 1829, sixth child and fourth daughter of John and Alice (Nichols) Frye. John Frye was a farmer, and had a family of seven children, of whom two were boys. Joseph R., a brother of Mrs. Lewis, was a resident of Willimantic.

Mr. Lewis began housekeeping in Dighton, where he was employed at the time of his marriage, and where he lived until his coming to Willimantic in 1858. That year, in company with his brother-in-law, Joseph R. Frye, he bought nine acres of land from Martin Harris on Jackson street. To this original purchase they added more land as their business demanded it. The tree and vegetable business was at once established, and soon grew to be one of the largest of its kind in the State. Mr. Lewis removed his family to the residence where he spent the rest of his life in April, 1862. The handsome maple trees which now adorn Jackson street in front of his home were set out by him, and the Norway maples around the works of the Willimantic Linen Co. were raised by him from the seed. Mr. Lewis at first made a specialty of forest and fruit seedlings, but later devoted his attention very largely to fruit and vegetables. In growing tomatoes alone, at one time he had as many as seventy acres under cultivation, growing and canning for the wholesale trade. Mr. Lewis built a large canning factory at the head of North street in 1892, which he operated for several years. This plant was a very extensive one, and at times over 40,000 bushels of apples were canned in a single season, as well as the immense quantity of tomatoes, which were the best goods sold in New England, commanding always the highest price. The building was later destroyed by fire.

Mr. Lewis was characterized by much energy and push, and was a good business man, a fact his career establishes beyond question. His dealings were straightforward, and personally he was a most modest and unassuming man, never given to boasting. Universal respect attended him, and he found much help and encouragement in his hard struggle with the world in the excellent woman who became his wife. She is still living on the old homestead, and is a remarkably well preserved lady.

Mr. Lewis was a man of strong character, clear in his convictions and outspoken in their expression. In early life he was a Republican and the campaign of 1856 found him a strong supporter of John C. Fremont. In 1872, feeling that he could not endorse the re-nomination of Gen. Grant, nor yet willing to follow Greeley into the Democratic party, he became a Prohibitionist, and as long as he lived was earnest in the advocacy of the principles of that organization. His remains rest in Willimantic.

To Joseph A. Lewis and wife came the following children: Cora A., born Jan. 22, 1855, at Dighton, Mass., was married Nov. 5, 1879, to Clark O. Terry; Mary F., born Sept. 15, 1859, in Willimantic, graduated from the Normal School at Worcester, Mass., becoming a successful teacher, and she was married Oct. 24, 1889, to Edward E. Johnson, of White Bear Lake, Minn., by whom she has three children: Donald R., Mildred F. and Alice E.; Ella C., born June 24, 1861, in Willimantic, died when three years old; and Arthur L., born Oct. 21, 1867, was married in Willimantic, Nov. 20, 1890, to Miss Lottie E. Holt, and has his home in Willimantic.

CLARK OLNEY TERRY, general manager of the J. A. Lewis vegetable and fruit farm at Willimantic, Windham county, is one of the reliable and industrious citizens of that modern and progressive center of industrial activities. Mr. Terry has lived in Willimantic since 1870, the year in which he entered into connection with the business of Mr. Lewis, of which he has been for some years the manager, and in which he commands the confidence of the public.

Mr. Terry was born May 5, 1848, in Exeter, R. I., a son of Seth W. and Dorcas (Crowell) Terry. This is one of the old New England families, his ancestor having been among the early settlers at Plymouth, Mass., from whom Mr. Terry is in the seventh generation.

Seth W. Terry, noted in the preceding paragraph, was in his active years a farmer and a lumber dealer, and did a large business in ship timber, which was cut and delivered at the docks. He was the father of nine children, of whom three boys and four girls lived to reach mature life. One of these children, William H., is a dairyman in Lebanon, Connecticut.

Clark O. Terry was early initiated into genuine work, and was trained to habits of industry which have ever been of value to him. When a boy he attended the Pine Hill district school, where for a number of terms he had Joseph A. Lewis for his teacher, a gentleman who subsequently became his employer, and one for whom Mr. Terry entertains the most reverent and grateful feeling, declaring that always and everywhere Mr. Lewis exercised the best influence and worked for the public good. When but a lad of twelve years young Terry drove a double yoke of oxen for his father, hauling lumber to Wickford in Rhode Island. In 1870 Mr. Terry came to Willimantic, and found employment with J. A. Lewis, engaging with him first by the month, but soon making a five-year contract. Mr. Lewis and Mr. Terry harmonized very closely, and as long as Mr. Lewis lived that harmony was unbroken. Mr. Terry had so long been closely identified with the management of the extensive business of Mr. Lewis that when that gentleman died the entire charge of the estate passed into his hands, an arrangement that has worked to the satisfaction of all concerned, and which is still continued. The fine appearance of the farm and gardens gives evidence of a master hand in charge.

Clark O. Terry was married Nov. 5, 1879, to Miss Cora A. Lewis, oldest daughter of Joseph A. and Caroline (Frye) Lewis; she was born Jan. 22, 1855, in Dighton, Mass., and was but a child when her parents removed to Willimantic, where she was reared, and there is still living. Mr. Terry cast his first presidential vote for Horace Greeley, and for a time following that campaign voted the Republican ticket, but for some years he has been a Prohibitionist, a principle he heartily upholds. He is a man of the best of habits and the soundest morals, and his influence for good is pronounced. The closest attention has always been given by him to his business, and he is familiar with its every detail. Mr. Terry is a member of the Baptist Church, and his life brings no shame to his profession of faith. Since coming to Willimantic his home has always been with the Lewis family, and he now resides on the old Lewis homestead.

JAMES H. POTTER, long a successful attorney, is probate judge of the town of Killingly, and one of the most respected residents of Danielson.

Christopher Potter, great-grandfather of the Judge, married Elizabeth Hazard, May 19, 1751, and was a resident of Newport, R. I. The Hazard family, which figured conspicuously in Colonial history, is still prominent in Rhode Island. It descends from Thomas Hazard, who was born in 1610, and with his four year old son emigrated from Wales in 1636. The same year he was made a freeman in Boston, and removed to Rhode Island, where he founded Newtown. His name appears among the elders of Rhode Island, appointed April 28, 1639. His children were: Robert, George, Jeremiah, Benjamin, Stephen, Jonathan, and Thomas. The name was originally spelled "Haszard," taken from the two words "has," high, and "ard," nature, meaning of a high disposition, proud and independent. As a race the Hazards are physically strong and of good stature. The coat of arms handed down through several generations has three escalops, and three bars, with an escalop rampant for a crest. The family motto was "Sinceritas" (Be just, and fear not).

Christopher Potter was a private in the company of Capt. Fenner, in the regiment of Col. Lippetts, during the war of the Revolution, his name appearing on the payroll in 1776.

Nicholas Potter, the son of Christopher and Elizabeth Potter, was a native of Newport, though the greater part of his life was spent in Gloucester and Foster, R. I. He married Amy Wade, who was born March 15, 1780, a daughter of Gideon and Phoebe Wade, of Newport, R. I., Nicholas Potter moved to Sempronius, Cayuga Co., N. Y., where he died at the age of eighty-nine. His widow survived him several years. They had the following children: Nicholas, who lived and died in New York; Barnum, who went West; Amy, who married Daniel Austin, a carpenter in Rhode Island; Calista, who married a Mr. Kimbell, and lived in Cayuga county, N. Y.; and Stephen H., who was the father of James H. Potter.

Stephen Hazard Potter, father of the Judge, was born in Gloucester, R. I., and was married at Foster, R. I., to Esther Burgess, a daughter of Gideon Burgess. The father died in Killingly, in 1866, at the age of seventy-seven. The mother died in Killingly at eighty-one years of age. The remains rest in Bartlett's cemetery, in East Killingly. Stephen H. Potter spent the greater part of his life in Killingly, Conn., where he was extensively engaged in farming though for a short time he was engaged in farming in Cayuga county, N. Y. In early life he was a carpenter in Killingly, and in Cayuga county followed this trade in connection with farming. He returned to Killingly in 1834. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat, and later became a Republican. These were his children: (1) Amy married Amasa Hardy, and lived and died in Cayuga county, N. Y.; (2) Phoebe died young; (3) Julia married Harvey Horton, and lived in Killingly, Hartford and Providence, where she died; (4) Maria D. was the wife of Erastus Young, of Danielson, Conn.; (5) Sabra was the widow of Charles P. Card, of Sterling, Conn.; (6) Adaline married William Fisk, and lived in South Killingly, where she died; (7) William B. married Mary Ann Chase, who lived in Killingly, and died at the age of forty-two; (8) Nicholas lived in Killingly, and died at the age of forty-six; (9) Charles A., a farmer of East Killingly, married Phoebe Chase; (10) James Hopkins; (11) Erastus E., a resident of Fort Oram, N. J., where for thirty-two years he has been a teacher, married Henrietta Himes (he enlisted in Co. K, 18th C. V. I., and served three years; was at Winchester, where his regiment was captured; was at Piedmont, and in many other engagements).

James Hopkins Potter was born at Sempronius, Cayuga Co., N. Y., July 17, 1833, in a log cabin. During the first year of his life his parents removed to Killingly, where he grew to manhood, securing his education at the district school. When he was about nine years old he began working in a cotton mill. In the boyhood days of Mr. Potter there were no laws determining the number of hours a child should labor, nor any laws requiring attendance at school. Children not over eight years of age were often obliged to work twelve or thirteen hours a day, entering the mill at the first peep of day in summer, and working by candlelight in the fall and winter. Half an hour each was allowed for dinner and for supper, and they were obliged to work until eight or nine o'clock in the evening. Mr. Potter has many times heard the nine o'clock bell ring in the Danielson steeple while on his way home from the mill where he was employed. When he was eighteen Mr. Potter gave up mill work to take a position in the general store of Judge Paine at East Killingly. His district school education was supplemented by five terms in the West Killingly Academy under the able instruction of F. Harrison and a Mr. Peak, of Yale; Sprague, of Amherst; R. C. B. Frost, of Brown; Perrin, of Dartmouth, as well as others. There Mr. Potter won the highest prize for English composition. He paid his way through the academy by money he had earned while teaching in the district schools of Killingly, and for fourteen years he successfully followed the profession of school teaching. For twelve years he taught in Killingly, and for two years was engaged in teaching in New Dover, Morris Co., N. J. While engaged in teaching Mr. Potter studied law, and on retiring from the school room he entered the law office of the Hon. E. M. White, of Dover, N. J. For two years he was there actively engaged in legal practice, and, returning to Killingly, was admitted to the Bar in October, 1875.

During most of his life, since arriving at mature age, Mr. Potter has held some town office. In 1862 he represented his town in the State Legislature. He is still actively engaged in the practice of his profession, and success has crowned his career. His appearance before the Supreme court has been almost always successful, and several of the cases which he carried there were of unusual importance. Mr. Potter devotes himself closely to his profession, and enjoys a substantial practice. Mr. Potter is a Democrat, and for the last four years has held the office of probate judge, being a Democratic official in a Republican town. His services as assessor, justice of the peace, and in other town offices, were honorable and creditable. In 1900 and in 1902 he was the candidate of his party for the Lower House of Congress, making a sturdy canvass against Hon. Charles A. Russell. While a representative in the General Assembly in 1862 Mr. Potter served as clerk of the committee on Sales of Land, an important committee at that time.

Mr. Potter was married Oct. 10, 1861, to Miss Harriet N. Short, of Killingly, a teacher both before and since her marriage in Killingly and the borough schools. Mrs. Potter is a daughter of Erastus and Louisa (Wood) Short. She belongs to the Westfield Congregational Church of Danielson, while her husband usually attends the Baptist Church. He is a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., and Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W.

William Short, who was the great-grandfather of Mrs. Potter, was a resident of Killingly, Conn. By his wife, Damris, he had these children: A child, born Jan. 20, 1742; Daniel, born Nov. 24, 1744; Elizabeth, born Oct. 17, 1746; Rebecca, born Jan. 6, 1750; Siloam, grandfather of Mrs. Potter, born July 10, 1752; Zerviah, born Dec. 7, 1754.

Siloam Short lived in the southern part of the town of Killingly, where he proved himself a successful farmer. His wife, Mary, was a daughter of Israel Day, and she became the mother of: (1) Polly married Abel Short, of Vermont, and lived in White River Junction, Vt. (2) Daniel went to New York State when a young man, locating near the lake section, where he died. His wife was a Miss Brown. (3) Rebecca, who married Samuel Titus, lived in Killingly. (4) Lora, who married a Mr. Young, lived in Sterling, Conn. (5) Lucy, who lived in Killingly, never married, and died at the age of ninety-two years. (6) Siloam, who married Rebecca Eaton, lived in Killingly, Conn. (7) Orilla became the wife of James Danielson. (8) Erastus, who was the father of Mrs. Potter, was born in 1800, and died in November, 1888.

Olive Day was the first wife of Erastus Short, and his second was Louisa Wood, whom he married Sept. 15, 1833. She was a daughter of Levi and Mary (Mason) Wood. To the first marriage of Erastus Short were born: (1) Harriet A., who died at the age of three years, and (2) Rhoda, who died when only six months old. To the second marriage were born: (3) Herbert D., born July 8, 1837, who died at the age of twenty-four; (4) Harriet N., born Jan. 3, 1839, who is the wife of Judge Potter, as noted above; (5) Levi M., who died in Virginia June 5, 1863, at the first battle of Piedmont, where he was severely wounded (he was a member of Co. K, 18th C. V. I.); (6) Daniel S., who was also a soldier, married Fannie R. Standish, and lives in Haverhill, Mass.; (7) Hiram A., who is a resident of South Killingly, and married Phila M. Young; (8) Linus E., who was taken prisoner at Piedmont, and died from starvation in Andersonville; and (9) Nathan A., who resides on the home place, married Minnie Young, and, after her death, Evangeline Easton.

Erastus Short was born in Killingly, and spent his entire life engaged in farming. In 1838 he represented his town in the General Assembly, which convened that year in New Haven. In early life he was a Whig, and later became a Republican. In the State militia he held the position of captain, and was usually called Capt. Short. In the work of the South Killingly Congregational Church he took an active part, and he was a working member of that church for many years. He was not officially chosen, but served as deacon of the church for a long period. As a farmer Mr. Short became quite prosperous, and was regarded as a man of most excellent judgment. His farm was first purchased by William Short, and then consisted of 200 acres. It is still in the family. Erastus Short added to the holdings, and greatly improved the place.

Aaron Wood, the maternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Potter, was born in Swansea, Mass., May 4, 1742. His wife, Freelove, was born April 25, 1745. Their children were: Nathan, Isaac, Innocent, Sarah, Elizabeth, Levi (the grandfather of Mrs. Potter), Polly, Aaron, Mercy and Noah.

Levi Wood was twice married, first to Mary Mason, and then to Sarah Randall, Aug. 4, 1816, in Foster, R. I. To the first marriage were born twelve children: Nathan B., born Oct. 9, 1794; Levi, born June 28, 1796; Polly, born June 25, 1798 (married Harry Wood); Wheaton, born Jan. 12, 1801; Delight, born March 5, 1803 (married William Wright); Olney, born July 4, 1805; Ira, born Jan. 26, 1808 (died April 20, 1880); Albert, born Feb. 10, 1810; Huldah, born Aug. 25, 1812 (married John Brayton); Louisa (the mother of Mrs. Potter), born Jan. 5, 1815 (died Nov. 30, 1868; she married Erastus Short); Minerva, born Aug. 7, 1817 (died when twelve years old); Hiram, born Aug. 5, 1820.

Previous to 1650 there had come to New England from Great Britain the following named Potters: In Massachusetts, Anthony, who located at Ipswich; Humphrey, at Salem, who had an only child, Ann; Inigo, at Charlestown, of whose children there is a record of three sons and three daughters, but not of the marriage of any of them; Nicholas, at Lynn; Robert, at Lynn, later of Boston, and who still later returned to England; and Vincent, of Braintree and Roxbury. William Potter was at Portsmouth, R. I. In Pennsylvania, Nathan was at Philadelphia, and in that city were later settled descendants of George Potter. In Connecticut, John and William Potter were at New Haven, and they signed the Plantation Covenant there June 4, 1639. George, Nathan and Robert Potter were at Portsmouth, R. I. George was admitted an inhabitant of the Island of Aquidneck in 1638, and his son, Abel, was of Portsmouth, Providence and Warwick; Nathaniel was admitted an inhabitant of Aquidneck in 1638, and died before 1644; and Robert, who came from Coventry, England, in 1634, was made a freeman of the Massachusetts Plantation Sept. 4, of that year.

Robert Potter is mentioned first as a farmer of Lynn, and as probably removing soon after, being made a freeman of Roxbury. He went finally to Portsmouth, R. I., where in company with Samuel Gorton he purchased a tract of land called the "Shawmut Purchase." He married first in 1643, and again later. He died in 1655. From this Robert Potter are descended a number of men of distinction, among them Rt. Rev. Alonzo Potter, D. D., LL. D., late a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of Pennsylvania; Rt. Rev. Horatio Potter, D. D., LL. D., sixth bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the diocese of New York; Major Gen. Robert B. Potter; Hon. Alonzo Clarkson Potter; and Rt. Rev. Henry Codman Potter, the seventh bishop of the diocese of New York.

CHESTER E. MAY, of Woodstock, Windham county, is a representative of a family that traces its genealogy back to the mother country in the days prior to the landing of the Pilgrims. Beginning with John May, who was born in England in 1590, the line runs through John (2), John (3), Capt. John (4), Thomas, Silas, Chester, E. Lyman and our honored subject. These have all been men of character and standing in their time, and have exerted a powerful influence for good on New England society.

So far as accurate record serves us, John May was born as stated, came to America, married twice, and died in Roxbury April 28, 1670. His second wife, Sarah, died in Roxbury May 4, 1670. According to well authenticated tradition, John May was master of a vessel named "The James," which as early as 1635 sailed between the port of London and New England. He finally settled in Roxbury (that part of which afterward was called Jamaica Plain) about 1640. He was a member of the famous "fighting parson" Eliot's church in Roxbury, and became a "freeman" in 1641. The name of his first wife is unknown, but her death is mentioned by the Apostle Eliot, under date June 18, 1651, where it is said: "Sister Maye died a very gracious and savory death." John May's will, which was made four days before his death, was a nuncupative, or declaratory one, he being then very sick. In it he mentions his carpenter's tools. His two sons, both natives of England, were: John (2), born in 1631, died in Roxbury Sept. 11, 1671; and Samuel died in the same place July 17, 1677.

John May (2) came to America with his father and was admitted freeman in 1660. For some months before his death it is recorded that he was unable to see. He occupied the same land that his father had before him, but probably added to it materially. Like his father, he thought it important to mention his carpenter tools in his will. He married, Nov. 19, 1656, Sarah, daughter of Daniel and Joanna Brewer, and they had children as follows: Mary, who married J. Ruggles; Sarah, Mrs. Samuel Williams; Eleazer, deceased in infancy; John (3); Mehitable; Naomi; Elisha; and Ephraim. In about 1695 the two last named removed to Rehoboth, Massachusetts.

John May (3) was born May 19, 1663, in Roxbury, and died Feb. 24, 1730. He married, June 2, 1684, Prudence Bridge, who was born Jan. 11, 1664, a daughter of John and Prudence (Robinson) Bridge, of Roxbury; she died Sept. 26, 1723. Their children were: John (4); Samuel; Prudence, deceased in girlhood; Ebenezer, who married Abigail Gore; Prudence (2); Hezekiah, who removed to Wethersfield, Conn.; Sarah; Nehemiah, who removed to Woodstock, Conn.; Mehitable; Eleazer, who removed to Pomfret, Conn.; and Benjamin, who lived in Roxbury, Mass. The father of this family was a man of parts in his community, being a selectman and deacon of the Roxbury church.

The stone which marks his grave still bears mute testimony to his birth and death in the old burying ground. It is still possible to identify much of his real estate in Roxbury.

Capt. John May (4) was born in Roxbury Nov. 23, 1686. He was an inhabitant of the west part of the town, and was one of those who applied in 1741, and in 1742 petitioned, to have the west part of the town incorporated as a separate precinct under the name of West Parish of Woodstock. This division was made in 1743. He with others took the freeman's oath as citizens of Connecticut Sept. 12, 1749. He married, in 1711, Elizabeth Childs, of Brooklyn, Conn., and their children appear on the records as follows: Elizabeth; John; Joshua, who married Anna Bacon; Caleb, who for his first wife married Elizabeth Child and at her death Mehitable Holbrook; Stephen, who married Mary Child; Thomas; Prudence, deceased in infancy; Esther; Prudence (2); and Joseph.

Thomas May was born Feb. 14, 1723, and died Aug. 7, 1803, in Woodstock. He married, in 1751, Lucy Goddard, who died Dec. 17, 1790, in Woodstock. She was the mother of Silas; William, who married Sarah Paine; Abel, who died young; Chloe, who also died in youth; Prudence; Jonathan; Abigail, who married Cyril Carpenter; and Thomas, who removed to Vermont.

Silas May was born in 1753, and died Dec. 26, 1805. On March 30, 1780, he married Dorothy Morse, and his children were: Chester, born Jan. 16, 1781, died July 31, 1854; Lydia, born Sept. 28, 1782, married Abraham Paine, of West Woodstock, and died Dec. 31, 1818; Lucy C., born December 11, 1784, became the wife of Elkanah Penneman, of North Woodstock, and died Jan. 31, 1826, the mother of the following children: Silas, Louisa Wood, Lucy A., Elkanah S. and Emily H.; and Nancy, born in December, 1793, died unmarried, Nov. 26, 1822. Silas May lived where our worthy subject now resides, and in his day was the keeper of the town inn. He was a man of fine influence, and on account of his occupation was known the country over.

Chester May, son of Silas, was born in East Woodstock, and was a child of six years when his parents moved into the house in which his grandson and namesake now lives, and where he passed the rest of his life. He was united in marriage, Dec. 24, 1806, with Miss Hannah Lyman, of Woodstock Hill, Conn., born June 15, 1780, a daughter of Eliphalet Lyman, the noted minister of Woodstock. Chester May was, in person, tall and spare, of an exceedingly urbane and gracious disposition, and was very active in the public life of the village and Church. He followed agricultural pursuits, in which he was a master, and was very well-to-do in this world's goods. He reared a family of nine children, as follows: Lucy, born Nov. 22, 1807, died Dec. 22, 1807; Silas, born Feb. 7, 1809, married Harriet Perry, of West Woodstock, and died Jan.

20, 1885; Lydia, born Sept. 20, 1810, died unmarried Oct. 11, 1890; Mary Ann, born June 4, 1812, became the wife of John Paine, of Woodstock, a farmer, and died March 14, 1899; Annette Maria, born Oct. 29, 1813, married Robert Fowler, of Canterbury, Conn., and died in Plainfield March 24, 1895; Harriet, born Feb. 28, 1815, died May 11, 1825; Eliphalet Lyman; Hannah Huntington, Dec. 8, 1819, died unmarried Dec. 8, 1897; and Nancy, March 18, 1823, became Mrs. Nathaniel S. Child, of East Woodstock, whose family is written elsewhere in this volume.

ELIPHALET LYMAN MAY was born Nov. 15, 1816, in East Woodstock, passed his entire life on the place where he was born, and died April 5, 1901. His marriage occurred May 26, 1847, Harriett Louisa Stone becoming his wife. She was born May 28, 1824, in Thompson, Conn., and still survives her husband, living with our honored subject. She was a daughter of David and Mary (Thurber) Stone, and her only child was the son who now so tenderly cares for her. The father was engaged during his entire life time in agricultural pursuits, in which he was very successful. He was an exceedingly healthy and robust man, most industrious and energetic. An attack of the grip in 1895 undermined his health, but he was comparatively well until within a few days of his death. In his political belief he was a Republican, and his religious creed was that of the Congregational Church. His connection with that denomination dated from Jan. 6, 1833, and he was quite active in the work of the church, serving frequently on its different committees. In disposition he was quiet and unassuming, temperate in all things, and of a genial and witty nature. His death removed one of Woodstock's most highly respected and time-honored citizens.

Chester Everett May was born June 10, 1848, in the village of East Woodstock and in the home where he has passed his life. He received his pre-scholastic training in the schools of the town, and attended later Woodstock Academy one term and Nichols Academy three terms. This was further supplemented by one term at an academy in East Greenwich, R. I., and by a course in bookkeeping in a business college in Woodstock. He was engaged during his odd hours in helping his father on the farm, and at the age of twenty-four years began farming for himself, which he has continued during his subsequent life. He owns a farm of 125 acres, which he has in a high state of cultivation, devoting it to the raising of general farm products. On the farm is a fine fruit orchard of five acres. He makes a specialty of dairy products, keeping a herd of twenty to twenty-five cows, and sending the milk to the Boston market.

On March 14, 1877, Mr. May was married to Emma Harriet White, who was born June 23, 1861, in Ashford, Conn., a daughter of David M. and Jane Anna E. (Squire) White, of West Woodstock.

She is a lady of superior attainments and has been very active in the public life of Woodstock. She is also an active member of the Grange, serving that organization as official lecturer. Her discriminating judgment, in conjunction with her fine literary tastes and pleasing personality, has made her a forceful unit in the building up of the Grange, which in this community is a wonderful power for good. Both Mr. and Mrs. May are members of the Congregational Church, in which they take a leading part. Fraternally Mr. May is a charter member of the American Order of Fraternal Helpers, and he was one of the early members of Senexet Grange, and is also a member of the Woodstock Grange, No. 150, having served as secretary, treasurer and master of both. In political belief he is a staunch supporter of the party of Lincoln and Garfield, and takes an active part in the public life of his town. He has served a term of three years as selectman, was assessor three years, and a member of the board of relief three years.

JAMES HURDIS CLOUGH was born Nov. 14, 1845, in Suffield, Hartford Co., Conn., and is a son of James Leonard Clough, who was born June 7, 1807, in Springfield, Massachusetts.

James L. Clough was a carpenter by trade, and came to Suffield in 1842, having worked at his trade for about a year previously in Hartford. In Suffield he engaged in his trade, and at the same time became a farmer and dealt extensively in garden products.

In 1865 Mr. Clough removed to Tolland and located on the Stafford road, about a half mile north of the Center, on what was known as the Drake place. It contained 150 acres, and here in addition to general farming Mr. Clough developed an extensive berry business.

In religion Mr. Clough was a strong Baptist, being a devoted member of that Church. Mr. James L. Clough was a great home man, and had no desire for a public career. A Republican in his political views, he seldom permitted his name to be associated with any public office.

James L. Clough was married April 5, 1840, to Lucy Lavenia Sykes, who was born Feb. 18, 1817, in Suffield, Conn., and was a daughter of Alfred and Abigail (Stebbins) Sykes. She died Nov. 7, 1893. To this marriage were born: (1) Francis Wayland, born Feb. 2, 1841, in Hartford. He married Phoebe West and lives in Springfield, where he is a mechanical draftsman. They have one child, Frederick West, born March 13, 1869. (2) Aby Elizabeth, born May 3, 1842, in Hartford. She died at the age of twelve years. (3) James H. (4) Alfred Beecher, born June 1, 1849. He married Clara J. Smith, April 9, 1878, and died Nov. 21, 1883. He was a good man, and the father of Edna Lucy, born Dec. 27, 1879. (5) Earle Fenelon, born Oct. 28, 1850, in Suffield. He married Nellie L. Arnold Oct. 10, 1878, and is now ving on the old homestead in Tolland. They have two children, Chester Irving, born Dec. 10, 1884, and Emery Maurice, born May 16, 1893. (6) Roger Minot, born May 1, 1852, in Suffield. He married Carrie A. Beach, of Meriden, Nov. 12, 1878, and is running a machine shop in Tolland. They have the following children, Stella Alberta, born Nov. 16, 1879; Arthur Wallace, born March 12, 1881; Gertrude Genette, born March 14, 1883; Ernest Roger, born Jan. 23, 1885; Leroy Valentine, born Dec. 1, 1886, died in infancy; Raymond Minot, born May 5, 1889; George Beach, born June 8, 1893; Lucy Lydia, born Oct. 31, 1896; Mary, born Aug. 13, 1899. (7) John Elliot, born Sept. 20, 1854, in Suffield. He married Sarah Elizabeth Tilden April 11, 1878, and is living in Tolland. Their children are: Alver Esten, born March 2, 1879; Clayton Sykes, born Dec. 2, 1881; and Walter Erwin, born Sept. 18, 1887, died Feb. 1, 1888. (8) Justin Edward, born March 20, 1858, in Suffield. He married Lilla Pratt Whitaker, of Northfield, Mass., May 27, 1896, and lives in Orange, Mass., where he is a mechanic. They have one child, Olive, born Aug. 31, 1897.

James Clough, the grandfather of James H., was born in Springfield, Aug. 16, 1784, and died March 3, 1823, in Pittsfield, Mass., where he was engaged in the tanning business. Elizabeth Popin, his wife, was born in Springfield, Mass., Dec. 2, 1784, and died Oct. 28, 1816, in Pittsfield, Mass. Their children were: (1) Elizabeth, born Dec. 21, 1805, died May 23, 1814; (2) James Leonard; (3) Christopher; (4) Sarah J., born June 1811, died Feb. 18, 1899 (Sarah J. was born blind—she could distinguish daylight from dark—she was educated in the Blind Asylum at South Boston, becoming a highly educated teacher of music. She married Mr. Morrill, who was also blind, and a musician and a teacher of note); (5) Elizabeth, born in 1815, died about 1842 in Michigan.

Alfred Sykes, the maternal grandfather of James H. Clough, was known as Capt. Sykes from his interest in military affairs. His father was Victory Sykes, and served in the Revolutionary army. James H. Clough had his education in the home schools, and at the early age of fifteen years took the work of life as an apprentice to the carter trade with A. B. West, of Hartford, Conn. While working at the bench Mr. Clough developed talent for free hand drawing and architectural instruction. He studied these subjects and after working at his trade three or four years decided to stop and devote some months to a more careful preparation in these lines. He went to Boston, where he entered the office of George F. Sacham as an architectural draftsman. For three years he was with Mr. Meacham and then began business on his own account. In 1872 he opened an office on Pemberton Square, as the junior member of Appleton, Stephenson & Clough. This business continued very successfully until 1879, when Mr. Clough was compelled to retire from the firm on account of ill health.

After his retirement, Mr. Clough came to Tolland and bought ten acres of his brother John E. Clough. There he has built a pleasant home and outbuildings, and has gone quite extensively into the greenhouse business. His flowers are readily sold in a number of Connecticut towns. This business venture has proved very successful. In 1901 he bought machinery for making baskets and is now carrying on the basket business also.

Mr. Clough was a charter member of the Tolland Grange, and is its present Master. Mrs. Clough is also a member of this same order. Mr. Clough is a Republican, though for a time he was active in the Prohibition party. He was elected justice of the peace in 1900.

Mr. Clough was married in Somerville, Mass., Jan. 12, 1871, to Abby Jane Arnold, a daughter of Andrew Smith and Emeline Eunice (Kempton) Arnold. Mrs. Clough's father in his active years was a saw mill owner. He enlisted in the 16th N. H. V., Company I, Sept. 13, 1862, and was discharged Aug. 29, 1863. He died May 7, 1901, in Tolland, where her mother is now living. Mrs. Clough's great-grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier who fought all through that war and was never injured by so much as a scratch.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough have had the following children: (1) Frank James, born Jan. 7, 1872, in Somerville, Mass., married Maude Adell Perry, of Wollaston, Mass., Oct. 27, 1897, and is in business as a dealer in provisions in that city. They have one child, Alfred Arnold, born Oct. 21, 1898. (2) Burton Andrew, born March 20, 1873, in Somerville, Mass., married Miss Ellen Amanda Wolfe, of South Coventry, March 20, 1900. They have two children, Leonard A., born in Willimantic, April 17, 1901, and Alice L., born in South Coventry, Dec. 10, 1902. Burton A. is an electrician in the Willimantic Light Plant. (3) Harvey Burnett, born Aug. 21, 1881, in Tolland, graduated from Rockville High School, 1902, and is now at Amherst College. (4) Grace Emeline, born May 14, 1883, in Tolland.

Mr. Clough has made his own way in the world; he has applied himself closely to his work and has been a hard student all his life.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough are both members of the Methodist Church, and are devoted workers in that communion. Mrs. Clough is an earnest worker in the ladies aid society.

WILLIAM R. BRAYTON is a successful business man of Pomfret, Windham county, residing at Marcy Hollow in Abington Society, in that town. He carries on a successful and prosperous milling and grain business and is also a repairer of wagons. He has a neat home and a good business, all of which he has earned and built up himself.

Ray Brayton, the father of William R., was born Nov. 23, 1814, in Pomfret. He learned the trade of carpenter and followed it all his life. He died April 15, 1860, in the town where he was born and had spent his life. He is buried in the Brayton cemetery in Pomfret. He was a Democrat in politics, but held no office. He was married Jan. 1, 1841, to Nancy Rounds, who was born Feb. 12, 1816. She was a native of Foster, R. I., and daughter of Constance and Mary Rounds. Mrs. Rounds died Aug. 6, 1891, in Pomfret, and is buried at South Foster, Rhode Island.

The issue of Ray and Nancy Brayton was as follows: Samuel A., born Sept. 12, 1843, died Nov. 5, 1846. Henry E., born Sept. 21, 1845, died Feb. 3, 1847. George A., born Jan. 4, 1847, died March 30, 1848. Thomas Eugene, born Jan. 21, 1849, is given further mention below. William R. is our special subject. Mary E., born July 12, 1853, is unmarried and resides with William R.

Thomas Eugene Brayton was born in Pomfret and received his education in the district schools. He left home at the age of eighteen and went to Whitinsville, Mass., to learn the trade of machinist. He was employed in the Whitin Machine Works, receiving the wages of sixty cents a day. He continued in this employment for many years; and through his worth and merit was promoted until he became an overseer in those extensive works. He remained there until about 1883, when he entered the employ of the Whitinsville Cotton Mills as master mechanic. This position Mr. Brayton held until his death, which occurred very suddenly March 24, 1895.

Thomas Eugene Brayton was a member of Uxbridge Lodge, I. O. O. F.; of Social Lodge, D. R.; and an engineer in the Fire Company. He was for many years librarian of the Congregational Sunday-school. He had a good tenor voice, and both he and his wife sang in the choir. He was very popular both with his employers and with his acquaintances. Mr. Brayton began life a poor man but through his industry and economy was in comfortable circumstances when he died. On Dec. 1, 1871, he married Josephine Wright, of Whitinsville, who survived him. Their only daughter, Lena J., born Jan. 10, 1886, is an accomplished musician.

William R. Brayton was born in Pomfret. His schooling was very limited, and his boyhood days were one round of continuous hard labor. He lost his father when but ten years of age, and when his only surviving brother left home to learn a trade it devolved upon William's youthful shoulders to continue the farm and assist in the support of his widowed mother. He also worked at carpentering for an uncle, Mr. Willis Pike, of Pomfret, and as he was an adept with tools had no difficulty in picking up the trade. He both cultivated the farm and worked at carpentry until about 1889, when he erected his present shop and engaged in wagon repair work. This he continued until after the death of his mother, when he purchased the grist and cider mill of Alvin Marcy. Mr. Brayton soon dropped the cider branch of the business and made grist milling and dealing in grain his principal concern. He buys his grain by the carload and sells it at retail. He has made valuable improvements to the mill property.

Mr. Brayton is a Democrat, but has never wanted office. He has never married. It is by hard work that he has won his well merited success.

FRANK WILLIAM MARTIN, one of the most enterprising and thrifty farmers of the town of Chaplin, Windham county, comes from an old and substantial family of the State of Connecticut.

William Martin, the grandfather of the subject of this biography, was born Nov. 13, 1795, in Hampton, now Chaplin, Conn., on what is now a part of our subject's farm. Before he came of age he lost his father and much responsibility fell upon his shoulders. In time he became the owner of a valuable tract of land known as the "Sessions farm," and there in about 1824 he erected the comfortable brick residence which has been the home of his descendants. This was the first brick house that was built in the town of Chaplin, and the brick itself was made in a part of Chaplin called Bedlam. William Martin followed farming extensively and also did much business in the way of buying and selling stock, becoming, as the years went by, possessed of ample means and added prominence. His death occurred on July 27, 1881, the result of an apoplectic stroke, dropping lifeless in his garden, with his hoe in his hand. His life had been one of industry, in his later years from choice, and until he was about seventy years old he was quite robust. At that time he suffered from sciatic rheumatism and this crippled him in one limb. His figure was commanding and his personality pleasant. In early life he was a Democrat, but some of the later issues of the party caused him to change his views, and he was sent by his Republican fellow-citizens to represent the town of Chaplin in the Legislature for two terms. Many of the town offices were efficiently filled by Mr. Martin, and he was a leading member of the Congregational Church in Chaplin, being a constant attendant and liberal supporter. His burial was at Bedlam.

On Jan. 2, 1820, William Martin was married to Betsey Walcott, who was born Jan. 3, 1801, in Chaplin, Conn., a daughter of Asa and Elizabeth (Clark) Walcott, the former of whom was born Sept. 11, 1754, and the latter April 7, 1762, and who were married Nov. 25, 1784. Betsey (Walcott) Martin died April 2, 1878, the mother of children as follows: (1) Caroline Elizabeth, born Oct. 24, 1821, married Albert F. Knight, a tanner and currier residing in Chaplin, Conn., where she died, and he later removed to Wisconsin. (2) William was the father of our subject. (3) Emily C., born

F. H. Martin

March 13, 1825, was the second wife of Albert F. Knight. She died in Wisconsin and he there married again. (4) Eliza, born March 28, 1827, is the widow of Horace Eaton, a bootmaker at Chaplin, where he died, and she is now a resident of Springfield, Mass. (5) Horace, born Feb. 9, 1829, married Sarah Spooner; he was by trade a carpenter, and died in Toledo, Ohio. In earlier life he was engaged in the lumber business for many years in Springfield, Mass. (6) Zalmon married Carrie Clark; for a few years he was a clothing dealer in Springfield, Mass., but he later removed to Beloit, Wis., and resides there at present.

William Martin (2), son of William, was born July 5, 1823, in the house that stood one-half mile west of the present home. He was two years old when the family moved into the house now standing, the one mentioned above as having been erected by his father. His education was acquired in the school located at what is now Clark's Corners, in the town of Hampton, a short distance from his home, and he enjoyed instruction until he was eighteen years of age. Soon after reaching his twenty-first year he taught school one term in Tower Hill district of Chaplin, his wages being $12.50 per month, and "boarded around," this giving him variety but not always comfort, as some of the houses were fully one and one-half miles from the schoolhouse, and in those days the teacher was also the janitor and had to make his own fires and put his room in order. Later Mr. Martin taught two terms in Bedlam, two terms in South Center district, two terms in North Center district, and two terms at what is now Clark's Corners. During his last period of teaching he received as compensation the sum of $19 a month, teaching for four winters after his marriage and being recognized as one of the best instructors in the neighborhood.

Mr. Martin assisted his father in the management of the farm, and after the latter's death came into possession of it, and continued to follow farming until a few years ago, when he was, in turn, succeeded by our immediate subject, who now manages the estate. Mr. Martin has been one of the leading men of his county, and during 1886 he was a member of the Legislature, serving with credit upon the committee on Agriculture. He has also served acceptably on the board of selectmen, and has held other town offices. Since 1868 Mr. Martin has been one of the deacons of the Chaplin Congregational Church, at present being one of its senior deacons and one of the church's most active and consistent members.

On April 17, 1849, William Martin (2) was wedded to Miss Adeline Grant, of Mansfield, Conn., who was born Oct. 30, 1828, a daughter of Denison and Sally (Byles) Grant; she died Oct. 12, 1896. The children of this marriage were as follows: Mary Estella, born Dec. 30, 1850, died Sept. 26, 1851; and Frank William, born Nov. 27, 1858. Frank William Martin was born in the house he now occupies. His education was secured in the district and the select school at Chaplin Center, taught successively by Misses Mary Williams, Harriet Dorrance, Josephine Robbins and others, and following this period he himself began teaching, at the age of nineteen, spending the summers in farm work, and during the winters becoming the ruler of the school room. Three of these terms he taught in Chaplin and two in Hampton, five successive winter terms. Mr. Martin has always resided on the home farm, and when his father retired from its management he immediately took charge. This estate comprises 270 acres, a part of it lying in Chaplin and a part in Hampton, and Mr. Martin has become well known in agricultural circles, both as a farmer and as a stockraiser and breeder of fine cattle. In addition to these and his dairy interests, he is also engaged in the grain and fertilizer business. In fact, Mr. Martin's energies are active in almost every branch of agricultural work.

On March 21, 1882, Mr. Martin was married to Miss Marcia J. Hunt, who was born July 12, 1862, in Kenton, Ohio, a daughter of Lester T. and Ellen (Burnham) Hunt, the former of whom was a native of Chaplin, while the latter was born in North Windham. She returned there when she was six years of age and there grew to maturity. One child has been born to this union, William Lester, born Feb. 3, 1901, the fifth William who has lived on this farm.

In his political life Mr. Martin has always been a staunch Republican, and has taken a prominent part in public affairs in his town and county. For a long term he was a member of the board of assessors, and for ten consecutive years he was a member of the board of selectmen, during the last three of which he was chairman of the board, retiring from the same in October, 1900. In 1901 he was a member of the board of relief. Both he and wife are among the valued members of the Chaplin Congregational Church, and Mr. Martin is one of the efficient teachers in the Sunday-school. The family is one of the highest social standing in the county, and personally Mr. Martin is thoroughly representative.

CHARLES LEWIS PHELPS, one of the highly respected citizens of Hebron, Tolland county, residing on Burnt Hill, in that town, on land that has been in the possession of the family since it was acquired from the Indians, is a representative of one of the oldest families of Connecticut.

The founder of the family in America was William Phelps, born in 1599, at Tewkesbury, Gloucestershire, England, a son of William Phelps; he removed thence to Somerset, in Dorsetshire, where he married. In 1630 he came to America and located in Dorchester, Mass., being one of the party of Rev. Mr. Warham, of whose church (founded in Plymouth, England) he was an original member. His wife, Elizabeth, accompanied him hither; also his five children and his younger brothers, George and Richard. On Oct. 19, 1630, William Phelps applied to be made a free man, and on Nov. 9, 1630, he was one of the jury impaneled for the trial of Walter Palmer for the murder of Auston Brothchur, the first trial by jury held in New England. In the spring of 1636 he removed with his children to Windsor, Conn., where his brother George had located in 1635, and resided there the rest of his life, dying July 14, 1672. He was known as "Ould Mr. William Pfelpes," being a regular, bluff, genuine "John Bull." For his second wife, he married Mary Dover, a native of England, who died Nov. 27, 1675, at an advanced age. The children born to William Phelps were: William, born in England, who married, at Windsor, Conn., June 4, 1646, Isabelle Wilson, and, after her death, Sarah Humphrey; Samuel, born in England, who married in Windsor, Conn., on Nov. 10, 1650, Sarah Griswold, also born in England (he died May 15, 1669); Nathaniel, born in England, who married Elizabeth Copley, Sept. 17, 1650, and removed to and was one of the pioneers of Northampton, Mass., where he died, in May, 1690; Joseph, born in England, who married at Windsor, Conn., Hannah Newton, Sept. 20, 1660, and removed to Simsbury, Conn., at an early day, where he died in 1684; and Timothy.

Lieut. Timothy Phelps, son of William (the settler,) and Mary Dover, was born at Windsor, Conn., Sept. 1, 1639, and was married May 19, 1661, to Mary, daughter of Edward Griswold, who was born Oct. 5, 1644; he died in 1719. They had twelve children. The eldest, (1) Timothy, who married Martha Crowe, Nov. 4, 1686, removed to Hebron, Conn., about 1690, and erected a log house on the farm now occupied by Frederick P. Bissell, about one mile south of Hebron Green. William Shipman of Saybrook and he were the first two permanent settlers of Hebron, and he served as the first town clerk; he died Sept. 28, 1729. (2) Joseph is mentioned below. (3) William, born Feb. 4, 1668, at Windsor, married, first, Abigail Mudge, Dec. 7, 1699, who died April 24, 1705, and second Ruth Barber, April 18, 1706. (4) Cornelius, born April 26, 1671, married Sarah Mansfield, Nov. 2, 1704. (5) Mary, born Aug. 14, 1673, died March 23, 1690. (6) Samuel, born Jan. 29, 1675, married Abigail Eno, April 3, 1707. (7) Nathaniel, born Jan. 7, 1677, married Hannah Bissell, March 28, 1700, and located in Hebron, Conn. (8) Sarah was born Dec. 27, 1679. (9) Abigail, born June 5, 1682, married Samuel Marshall, July 12, 1706. (10) Hannah was born Aug. 4, 1684. (11) Ann, born Oct. 2, 1686, married David Porter, Jan. 13, 1707. (12) Martha, born Nov. 12, 1688, married Samuel Colcomb, Oct. 13, 1709.

Joseph Phelps, of Windsor, next in line of descent, the second child of Lieut. Timothy, was born in Windsor, Sept. 27, 1666, resided in Windsor, Conn., and owned large tracts of land in Hebron.

His death occurred in Windsor in 1716, and one deed describes him as Joseph Phelps "weaver." On Nov. 18, 1686, he married Sarah Hosford, and they had these children: Sarah, born Aug. 14, 1687; Mary, June 8, 1689; Joseph, March 16, 1692; Abigail, Oct. 15, 1693; Benoni, June 24, 1699; and John, Sept. 20, 1701.

John Phelps was born in Windsor Conn., and came to Hebron about 1719 or 1720, purchasing a home on Godfrey Hill, on the road from Hebron to Bolton, about one mile north of Hebron Green, near the site of the old Episcopal Church, which was used until 1825. Mr. Phelps bought and sold considerable land and is mentioned as a squire on town records. His death occurred Feb. 10, 1769. On Feb. 12, 1724, he married his cousin, Anne Hosford, a daughter of Capt. Obadiah Hosford, one of the first and largest landholders of Hebron. Their children were: Amos, born May 30, 1736, who married Amy Filer, and resided in Hebron; Esquire John, Sept. 7, 1731, who married Desire Dewey, of Lebanon, Jan. 16, 1765, and resided on his father's homestead, which was later occupied by his descendants; Aaron, born Oct. 14, 1733, who died April 7, 1743; Capt. Roger, born Dec. 24, 1738; Aaron (2), March 30, 1746, who married Abigail Barber, April 8, 1767, and resided in Hebron on a farm he inherited from his father; Mindwell; and Sarah.

Capt. Roger Phelps, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Hebron, and was given the farm now occupied by his great-grandson, Charles L. Phelps, on Burnt Hill. This name was given to that locality because the Indians in early times would burn over that section where they raised their crops of corn. Capt. Roger Phelps erected the first house on that hill and it stood in the dooryard of our subject's present home. Capt. Phelps was a farmer and also a builder. In response to the Lexington alarm, he went from Hebron, as lieutenant in the company of Capt. Worthy Walters, with William Dewey, who was the great-grandfather of Admiral Dewey. Lieut. Phelps served eighteen days at Boston and later as captain marched to New London, when it was burned, and took his son Roger, then nineteen years of age, as his aide. His final residence was in Hebron and both he and his son had pensions. The last years of his life were spent on this farm, where he died, Feb. 22, 1807. His marriage took place on April 24, 1760, to Abigail Filer, born March 30, 1733, who was a daughter of Samuel and a granddaughter of Samuel Filer of Windsor. The children of this marriage were: Mary, born Feb. 15, 1768, who died Oct. 19, 1833, a maiden lady; Roger, born Oct. 7, 1762; Abigail, Aug. 14, 1764, who died March 5, 1767; Susannah, born Sept. 8, 1766, who married Abel Phelps, Sept. 7, 1786; David, born Dec. 26, 1768, who graduated from Yale College, was a lawyer and located at Colchester, Delaware Co., N. Y., and died Oct. 20, 1851; Abigail, born April 16, 1771, who died in Colchester, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1848, unmarried; Amie, born Aug. 9, 1774, who died April 9, 1840, a maiden lady.

Roger Phelps, the grandfather of our subject, was born on the old homestead on Burnt Hill, where he lived all his life, engaged in farming and also in building. Until his death he was very active in Democratic politics, held some of the local offices, was prominent in educational matters, and was considered one of the substantial men of that locality. Like the other members of his family, he was of fine physique and was always able to do a great deal of hard work. His death occurred Sept. 8, 1846, and he was buried in the old cemetery at Hebron. The grandmother of our subject was Anna Jones, a daughter of Ezekiel Jones, of Hebron, and she was born March 20, 1765, married Feb. 1, 1787, and died Feb. 2, 1821. The children of these two were: Anna, born Nov. 29, 1787, who married Col. Andrew Mann, and died in Athens, Mich.; Betsy, born Sept. 25, 1790, who married a Mr. Knapp, and located in Wisconsin; Maria, born March 8, 1793, who married Reuben Mann, and died in Marshall, Mich., April 25, 1848; Henry J., born Dec. 1, 1795, who died April 6, 1852, in Marshall, Mich., his first wife having been Betsy Way, and his second wife, a Michigan lady; Rachel, born Jan. 16, 1799, who died unmarried; Clarissa, born Oct. 21, 1801, who married Edmund Way, and died Jan. 24, 1861, in Wilmington, N. C.; Roger Lewis, Laura and Louisa, triplets, born April 12, 1805; of these, Laura died April 26, 1805, and Louisa died April 28, 1805.

Roger Lewis Phelps, father of our subject, was born in the old homestead and erected the house which is now standing. During his whole life he remained on the farm, although on account of a frail constitution he was unable to perform any very hard work. His business was principally that of buying and selling stock, in which he was very successful, and in which he was active until his last sickness, his death occurring March 2, 1863, after an illness of less than a week's duration. His parents had found a comfortable home with him during their last years. In politics he was a Democrat. On May 29, 1834, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth W. Strong, who was born Dec. 4, 1808, and died Feb. 17, 1899, at the home of her son, Charles. The children of this union were five in number: (1) Roger E., born July 22, 1836, married Jan. 14, 1867, Carrie S. Barstow, of the State of New York. When a young man he resided in Oxford, N. Y., where he engaged in dairying, but later removed to Andover, Conn., where he is now engaged at farming. He has two children: Cora Victoria, born May 13, 1870, a graduate of Grace Church Training School of New York as a deaconess and now the wife of Rev. George Q. A. Rose, of Monterey, Mexico, who has three children, Roger P., George and Lawrence; and Carrie Barstow, born Jan. 12, 1872, at home. (2) Victoria E., born May 16, 1838, taught school for over forty-five years, first in Hebron, later in Glastonbury, Conn., where she has taught three generations of a family. She was married Oct. 21, 1872, to Geo. R. Hale, of Glastonbury, where she now resides; her only child, Ransom P., died in infancy. (3) Laura L., born Nov. 17, 1841, died Dec. 26, 1844. (4) Anna L., born Nov. 11, 1845, died Nov. 6, 1851. (5) Charles L. is our subject.

Charles L. Phelps was born March 24, 1847, and his education was received in the district schools, later at Ellington Academy, and still later at Wilbraham Academy, at Wilbraham, Mass. Before he was twenty-one years old, he taught one term of school at Naubuc, in the town of Glastonbury, and one term at Hebron Green. When he reached his majority, he purchased the interest of the other heirs in the home farm, and has since engaged in farming and dairying. This is a very valuable property, lying partly in the town of Hebron and partly in Andover. In political matters Mr. Phelps is a Democrat, and represented his town in the State Legislature in 1873, the last session held at New Haven; he has served three terms on the board of selectmen, being chairman two of these terms, and has also held a few of the minor offices of the town, as well as being a member of the school committee for over thirty-three years.

On May 11, 1870, he was married to Charlotte Morgan Mann, born Nov. 24, 1846, a native of Hebron, daughter of Judge Cyrus and Eunice Elizabeth (Worthington) Mann. Six children were born to Judge and Mrs. Mann: (1) Margaret, born May 9, 1844, married June 26, 1867, Charles E. Jillson, a printer at Providence, R. I., and has two children. One of these, Charles Herbert, born Aug. 25, 1868, married Nov. 24, 1897, Clara Louise Hicks; he now resides in Providence, R. I., and has two children, Roy W., born Oct. 26, 1898, and Walter H. The other child, Eleanor Worthington, born Sept. 14, 1871, married Geo. F. H. Howarth, June 16, 1897, resides in Merchantville, N. J., and has one daughter, Margaret R., born March 17, 1898. (2) Mrs. Phelps. (3) C. Edwin, born Dec. 20, 1848, died Feb. 25, 1856. (4) William W. was born Jan. 30, 1855, and resides in California. (5) Arthur, born July 8, 1854, died May 12, 1863. (6) Herbert, born Jan. 14, 1857, went to Denver, Colo., in 1878, where he was employed as clerk in a feed and grain store until 1899, when he became a member of the firm of Mann & Brown, dealers in stone and coal, and is quite successful; he was married Aug. 21, 1883, to Frances C. Mack, of Gilead, Conn., and they have one child, Paul Cyrus, born May 22, 1891. The old Mann property in Hebron remained in the family name until 1878, when it was sold.

One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Phelps, Lewis Worthington, born Oct. 20, 1880. At the age of seventeen he taught school in his native district and in 1900 graduated from Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford. At present, he is employed as a bookkeeper in the factory of P. W. Turner at Turnerville, and is a fine young man, possessing marked business ability, and one who has a bright future before him. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps, as well as their son, are members of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Phelps is a vestryman. So generally is Mr. Phelps' integrity recognized that he is often selected to settle estates and his word is considered as good as his bond. Mrs. Phelps is a lady of great refinement and culture, one who takes a deep interest in historical and genealogical matters, is an excellent musician, and well posted in matters of current interest. In their pleasant home she is the moving spirit, rendering the fireside the happiest place in the world to her family, as well as to their large circle of friends; in the social world she takes a leading part, her many charms of manner and well-informed mind gaining her life long friends and associates.

ALBERT D. PUTNAM, one of the highly respected citizens of Danielson, Windham county, is a lineal descendant of that hero of other days, and who as long as this Republic endures will be honored, Israel Putnam. The Putnams have an old and established ancestry, reaching as far into the past as 1580.

John Putnam, born about 1580, of Aston Abbots, County Bucks, England, came to New England, according to family tradition, in 1634; is of record in Salem, Mass., in 1641. He married, in England, Priscilla (probably Gould), who was admitted to the Church in Salem in 1641. John Putnam was admitted in 1647, and was made a freeman in the same year. He was a farmer, and, for the times, was exceedingly wealthy. His death occurred in Salem Village, now Danvers, Dec. 30, 1662.

Lieut. Thomas Putnam, son of John, was baptized at Aston Abbots, England, March 7, 1614-5, married (second) at Salem, Sept. 14, 1666, Mary Veren, widow of Nathaniel, a rich merchant formerly of Salem. Lieut. Putnam was prominent in public, military and ecclesiastical affairs, was the first parish clerk of Salem Village, was grand juror and constable, and received a number of important appointments. In 1640 he was an inhabitant of Lynn, a freeman there in 1642, and one of the seven selectmen in 1643. He was admitted to the church in Salem, April 3, 1643, and his death occurred at Salem Village May 5, 1686.

Joseph Putnam, son of Lieut. Thomas, was born April 14, 1669, in Salem Village, married, April 21, 1690, Elizabeth, born Oct. 7, 1673, daughter of Israel and Elizabeth (Hathorne) Porter. Mr. Putnam will always be remembered for his opposition to Mr. Parris and the witchcraft trials. He opposed from first to last the proceedings which disgraced Danvers and his immediate relatives and friends at the peril of his own life. He died in Salem Village in 1724-25.

Gen. Israel Putnam, son of Joseph, born Jan. 7, 1717-18, in Salem Village, now Danvers, married (first) at Danvers, July 19, 1739, Hannah, baptized there Sept. 3, 1721, daughter of Joseph and Mehitabel (Putnam) Pope, of Danvers. She died in Brooklyn, Conn., Sept. 6, 1765, and he married (second), June 3, 1767, Widow Deborah (Lothrop) Gardiner, daughter of Samuel and Deborah (Crow) Lothrop, of Norwich, Conn., and the widow of John Gardiner, fifth proprietor of Gardiner's Island. Soon after his marriage and the birth of his first child Mr. Putnam removed to Pomfret, Conn., purchasing, in connection with his brother-in-law, John Pope, about 500 acres of land in that part of Pomfret which, in 1786, became Brooklyn. This land he became the sole owner of in 1741. He was a thrifty and highly prosperous farmer, and was an earnest and helpful friend to all the best interests of the settlement. He was prompt to offer his services in the French and Indian war when the New England Colonies were called upon for a large military force, and he was at once placed in command of a company which he had raised, and he figured more or less prominently in the campaigns for ten years following 1755-56, acquiring a great reputation as a soldier and hero. He was promoted major in 1757, and later lieutenant-colonel and colonel in 1764. He was foremost in making the "stamp act" impossible in Connecticut, and from the hour of its passage stood forth as a ready and resolute defender of the imperilled liberties of the people.

Between the close of the French and Indian war and the outbreak of the Revolution, Col. Putnam received many marks of the confidence of his fellow-citizens, was placed on important committees, chosen moderator of town meetings, was several times elected selectman, and a deputy to the General Court. The news of the battle of Lexington, April 19, 1775, reached Pomfret on the morning of the 20th, and was received by Putnam as he was ploughing in the field with his son Daniel, who was then but sixteen years of age and who afterward wrote of his father: "He loitered not, but left me, the driver of his team, to unyoke it in the furrow, and not many days later to follow him to camp." That afternoon he heard of the fight at Concord, and at once left on horseback for the scene of hostilities. Soon after he was appointed a brigadier-general, and from that time until the close of the campaigns of 1779 he was a conspicuous figure in the war of the Revolution, but his exploits therein we have neither time nor space to recount—suffice it to say that he held the confidence of Gen. Washington and his countrymen. He was especially conspicuous at the battle of Bunker Hill and in other important engagements. After Bunker Hill he was made a major-general, and served with distinction until disqualified for service by a stroke of paralysis, which seriously affected his limbs and closed his military service as specified. Gen. Putnam returned to his home in Pomfret, where he died May 29, 1790. His wife, who had accompanied him in the most of the campaigns in the Revolution, died at his headquarters at Fishkill-on-the Hudson, Oct. 14, 1777. Gen. Israel Putnam was the father of the following children: Israel, born in 1740; Daniel, born March 10, 1742, who died at the age of seventeen years; Hannah, born Aug. 25, 1744; Elizabeth, born March 20, 1747; Mehitable, born Oct. 21, 1749; Mary, born May 10, 1753; Eunice, born Nov. 18, 1759; David; and Peter S., born in 1764.

Of Putnam Washington Irving wrote: "A yeoman warrior, fresh from the plough, in the garb of rural laborer, a patriot brave and generous, but rough and ready, who thought not of himself in times of danger but was ready to serve in any way and to sacrifice official rank and self-glorification to the good of the cause. He was eminently a soldier for the occasion. His name has long been a favorite one with young and old, one of the talismanic names of the Revolution, the very mention of which is like the sound of a trumpet. Such names are the precious jewels of our history, to be garnered up among the treasures of the nation and kept immaculate from the tarnishing breath of the cynic and the doubter."

Daniel Putnam, son of Gen. Israel, born in Pomfret (now Brooklyn), Conn., Nov. 18, 1759, married, in Boston, Sept. 2, 1782, Catherine, daughter of Shrimpton and Elizabeth (Malbone) Hutchinson, born in Boston April 11, 1757, and was occupied in farming on a large scale, owning some 400 or 500 acres in Brooklyn, Conn. He was a man of much worth, a Whig in politics, and he was a member of the Episcopal Church. His death occurred April 30, 1831, and his wife died Oct. 31, 1844, in Hartford.

William Putnam, son of Daniel, born Jan. 1, 1783, married, April 17, 1805, Mary, born April 17, 1786, daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Payne) Spalding, of Brooklyn. Mr. Putnam died in Brooklyn Dec. 5, 1846, and his wife passed away Dec. 29, 1880. Mr. Putnam was a farmer in Brooklyn, Conn., and held various town offices. He was highly respected and held a prominent place in the community and both he and wife belonged to the Brooklyn Episcopal Church. The children of William Putnam were: (1) Caroline M., born Feb. 17, 1806, died April 10, 1882. On Jan. 6, 1834, she was married to Edward Fogg, who was born in Brooklyn, July 1, 1797, and who became one of the town's most representative men. In politics he was first a Whig, but after 1856 a Republican. He served as judge of probate for several terms, also selectman and was captain of the local militia. In 1839 he represented the town in the Legislature, and was for many years warden in the Brooklyn Episcopal Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Fogg were born:

Thomas B., born Oct. 28, 1834; Mary, born Jan. 25, 1837, died in 1841; Miss Elizabeth, born Dec. 8, 1838; Edward, born Dec. 14, 1840, died young; Miss Mary P., born Oct. 11, 1843, lives in Brooklyn; and Edward F., born Nov. 24, 1846, died Feb. 13, 1858. (2) Miss Harriet, born Feb. 5, 1810, resides in Brooklyn, Conn. (3) William Hutchinson was the father of Albert D. Putnam, of Danielson. (4) Elizabeth, born Dec. 11, 1813, died in Brooklyn, Oct. 29, 1891. She married Benjamin Spalding, and lived for years at Ripon, Wis., their son Luther being a farmer at River Falls, Wis. (5) Asa, born July 16, 1820, died in July, 1868. (6) Jane, born April 25, 1823, died Sept. 30, 1900; she was the wife of Dr. Camp, of Brooklyn, Conn. (7) Ann, born March 20, 1825, died in 1897; she married Charles Bacon, of Simsbury, Conn., lived for a number of years in Hartford, but died in Brooklyn, her children were: Richard, a lawyer of Cleveland, Ohio; and Charles P., a lawyer of New York City.

In recalling the life and services of William H. Putnam, perhaps the biographer can do no better than to quote from the Windham County History as follows: "William H. Putnam was born in Holland, Mass., Feb. 2, 1812, and died July 17, 1889. In childhood he removed with his parents to Brooklyn, Conn., where the residue of his life was spent. The best schools obtainable at that early day afforded him a knowledge of the elementary branches, and the work connected with his father's farm occupied his time until his marriage. On the 12th of March, 1834, he was united in marriage with Miss Eliza, daughter of Capt. John Day, of Brooklyn, Conn., who died on the 27th of May, 1880. Mr. Putnam two years after his marriage leased the farm belonging to Capt. Day, of which he finally became the owner. He cultivated the fertile acres, and made it his residence until 1877, the year of his removal to the village of Brooklyn, his son, Albert D., in the meantime succeeding to the farm interests. Mr. Putnam interested himself with matters pertaining to his town and as a Republican held various local offices and represented the town in the Legislature in 1858 and 1879. His prevailing modesty and aversion to the excitement attending a public career influenced him to decline more important honors. His advice was often sought in questions requiring maturity of judgment and experience. He was a director of the Windham County National Bank and the Brooklyn Savings Bank. Mr. Putnam was a member of the Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church of Brooklyn, of which he was for many years senior warden."

To William H. and Eliza (Day) Putnam were born these children: Harriet G., born Dec. 1, 1834, died in November, 1895, unmarried; Mary, born in November, 1835, is the wife of James Perkins, of Danielson; John D., born June 19, 1837, who is a Government official stationed at Los Angeles, Cal., married Helen Lovell, and their children were

William H., Catherine E., Charles P., Sarah L., John D., Dana G., Mary and two who died young; Sarah, born June 30, 1839, died Dec. 23, 1880, unmarried; William, born Jan. 30, 1843, was killed at Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864, while serving as a volunteer in Co. C, 12th Conn. V. I.; Catherine B., born Oct. 7, 1848, resides in Danielson; and Albert Day, born Feb. 25, 1852.

Albert Day Putnam grew up in Brooklyn, Conn., where he attended the common schools and later the schools of Danielson, this being supplemented with a year at the New Britain Normal School. Prior to this, at the age of seventeen, he began teaching and followed this profession through eight winters, in Brooklyn, attending to farm work during the summers. His first school was on Church street, then for three terms he taught on Allen Hill and four terms in the Christian Corner district. For a time he operated the home farm, continuing until 1888, when he came to Danielson, where he has since made his home. Here he has been connected with the banks of the borough in the capacity of clerk, for a long period being with the Savings Bank, in which institution he is now a trustee, and he is a director in the Windham County National Bank.

Mr. Putnam is a Republican in political sentiment, although he takes no very active part. He has, however, always taken a lively interest in educational matters, and for the past ten years has been a member of the school board. The entire family are members of St. Alban's Episcopal Church of Danielson. In fraternal organizations Mr. Putnam has been connected with Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., for the past twelve years; with Aetna Lodge, A. O. U. W., for some six years; and he is also a member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

On Dec. 6, 1876, Mr. Putnam was united in marriage with Miss Harriet E. Dorrance, daughter of Charles and Jennett (Sharp) Dorrance, and to this union were born: William H., born Feb. 1, 1878, is treasurer of the Uncas Knitting Co., of Danielson; he married Adabelle C. Lyon, and has a son, Lionel. Bertha Dorrance, born in November, 1879, died at the age of two years. Sarah J. was born July 11, 1882. Eliza Day was born May 16, 1886.

THE DAY FAMILY, the maternal line of Mr. Putnam, includes many distinguished names.

Capt. John Day, born March 12, 1756, was a resident of Killingly, and it was in his honor that the village of Dayville was named, he having erected the first house in what is now that pleasant village, and he also built and operated a small mill here. Capt. Day bought a large tract of land in East Brooklyn, and he took a prominent part in local affairs and was very successful in his business ventures. On Oct. 17, 1793, he was commissioned captain of the local militia, his commission being signed by Gov. Samuel Huntington. Capt. Day died March 10, 1838. His parents were James and Mary (Parkhurst) Day, the former of whom died Dec. 25, 1782, aged sixty-six years, the latter surviving until July 28, 1818, dying at the age of ninety-four years. Their children were: Capt. John, born Nov. 12, 1756; Annis, who died April 27, 1848, aged eighty-seven years; and James, Jr., who died unmarried, May 29, 1808.

Capt. Day was married Jan. 25, 1781, and his children were: Lucy, born July 15, 1782; Eunice, born Sept. 12, 1783; Polly, born Aug. 2, 1785; Betsey, born Sept. 12, 1787; Calvin, born Dec. 16, 1789; John, Jr., born Feb. 16, 1792, died Jan. 28, 1864; Phila, born April 25, 1794; Susan, born June 21, 1796; Sally, born Dec. 8, 1798; Luther, born April 9, 1801; and Wealthy, born June 28, 1804.

John Day, Jr., son of Capt. John, was born at Dayville and engaged in farming near the place of his birth, though for a short time after his marriage he lived in Brooklyn, Conn. Mr. Day was active in the building of the Norwich & Worcester Railroad, contracting to build a considerable length of the road and fulfilling the contract. On March 17, 1814, he married Sarah Ann Dexter, born Oct. 18, 1793, and their children were: Eliza, born Jan. 29, 1815, married William H. Putnam, and died May 27, 1880; Willard, born Sept. 29, 1816, is represented to-day by his descendants, Hon. Frank Day, of Brooklyn, and George H., the president of the Electrical Vehicle Co., of Hartford, Conn.; Albert, born Dec. 16, 1819, married (first) Susan Payne, (second) Susan Child, and (third) Lucinda Bartlett; Herbert, born June 12, 1823, married Ellen Millard, of Dayville; Sarah, born Dec. 8, 1831, died young; and Ann, born Sept. 9, 1835, married Benjamin Spalding, and died in Brooklyn, Connecticut.

DORRANCE. This family is allied to many of the well-known families represented in this volume. The first account we have of the Dorrances in America tells that on April 17, 1723, the people of Voluntown, Conn., gave Rev. Samuel Dorrance a call to preach the Gospel, at a salary of £60 per year for the present, and £50 in such species suitable to promote his building and settling. Mr. Dorrance was a "Scotch Presbyterian, lately arrived from Ireland, a graduate of Glasgow University, licensed to preach in 1711 by the Presbytery of Dumbarton, and bringing with him satisfactory testimonials of ministerial character and standing from several associations in Scotland and Ireland." This Voluntown Church was the first, and long the only, Presbyterian Church in Connecticut. He was ordained Dec. 23, 1723. Besides him, his brothers George and John, and John, Jr., were there found on the church rolls. Rev. Mr. Dorrance was found in the ministry at Voluntown in 1760, and at that time his salary had risen to the respectable sum of £300. He was dismissed from the pastorate March 5, 1771. He died Nov. 12, 1775, at the age of ninety years. John and George, sons of Rev.

Samuel Dorrance, removed to the Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania. John never married. George Dorrance became a lieutenant colonel of the militia at Wyoming. In 1777 he led a scouting party up the river, consisting of eighty men, to disperse or capture a settlement of Indians and Tories on the Wyalusing. Having accomplished the object, an unseasonable snow storm detained them beyond their expected time, and they suffered extremely from cold and hunger. By Col. Dorrance's order rafts were made of the huts from which the enemy had been driven, and the whole company were safely wafted down to Forty Fort. On July 3, 1778, he went out of Forty Fort with that little band of heroes who thought to drive their insolent invaders from the Valley. He commanded the left wing under Col. Denison. He was severely wounded on the field of battle while gallantly riding along the broken lines and laboring to restore the men to order and position. He was the only one wounded who was saved from death on the field or the fiendish orgies of the succeeding night. His feeble condition on the next day making him a burden to his captors, they slew him and divided his garments and arms among them. Col. Dorrance was born March 4, 1736, and was slain July 4, 1778. He was twice married, having by his first wife two daughters and by his second three sons: Robert, who served in the independent company of Capt. Ransom until the close of the war, afterward in the Western army, and was in the battle resulting in St. Clair's defeat, where he was killed Nov. 4, 1791; Gershom, who went back to his old home in Voluntown; and Benjamin Dorrance, born in 1767, who became one of the most popular men of his day. Benjamin Dorrance was elected sheriff of Luzerne county, Pa., in 1801, and soon after his time expired was elected one of the commissioners of the county. He was a member of the Legislature in 1808, 1809, 1810, 1812, 1814, 1819, 1820 and 1830. Benjamin Dorrance was a native of Plainfield, and when quite a lad accompanied his father's family in their removal to Wyoming. He was in the fortifications the day after the battle when Forty Fort was surrendered, and used to describe with graphic clearness the entry of the British at one gate and the Indians at another. He died Aug. 24, 1837. He married Nancy Ann, daughter of Jedediah and Martha (Clark) Buckingham, and a descendant of Thomas Buckingham, a Puritan settler who came to New England in 1637. [See Kulp's Families of the Wyoming Valley for further family history.] The will of Rebecca Fuller, of Hampton, probated in 1815, names children Augustus D. Dorrance, Alexander Robert, Nancy and Caroline; and the will of Samuel Dorrance, of Hampton, probated in 1779, names wife Rebecca, and children: Gordon, Alexander, James, John, Daniel, Jean, Sally, Olive and Polly. The forerunners from Windham county to the Wyoming Valley went in 1769, and in the course of a few years scores of valuable families followed, among them, besides the Dorrances, Stephen Fuller. After the massacre a number of them found their way back to their old home. Mrs. Stephen Fuller came on horseback with her little daughter, Polly. Of the sons of Rev. Samuel Dorrance not going to the Wyoming Valley, Lemuel remained on the homestead; Samuel removed to Coventry, R. I.; and James D. to Brooklyn, Conn.; a daughter, Susannah, married Robert Dixon. James D. Dorrance located in Brooklyn, Conn., on a farm at the cross roads, about two miles southeast of Brooklyn Centre, on the road to Wauregan. There he resided until his death, which occurred April 1, 1825, when he was aged eighty-one years. He married Elizabeth Gordon, and among their children were: (1) Sarah; (2) Susannah, born July 14, 1782, who became the third wife of John Wylie on March 17, 1857, and was grandmother to Mrs. Annette Young, of Danielson, and Joseph W. Cutler, of Putnam; (3) Samuel.

Samuel Dorrance, a farmer, resided in Brooklyn, Conn. His farm was located northwest of the farm of his father, and he resided there until the close of his active life, after which he lived at Brooklyn Centre, and died there Sept. 4, 1854, aged eighty-four years. He was a successful farmer. Mr. Dorrance attended the Congregational Church. He married Amy Kenyon, of Plainfield, who died Dec. 11, 1870, aged eighty-four, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry Hammond, in Danielson. They had children as follows: Caroline, born Nov. 8, 1806, married Henry Palmer, and resided in Plainfield, where she died. Elizabeth, born Dec. 19, 1808, became the second wife of Horatio Webb; she died in Windham. Emma, born April 4, 1813, became the wife of Hon. Henry Hammond, of Danielson. Esther, born July 24, 1815, married William Greenslit, and resided in Hampton, where she died. James, born March 5, 1818, died Oct. 25, 1818. Katherine K., born Sept. 6, 1819, married Seth Cady, and they died in Cleveland, Ohio. Harriet, born July 26, 1822, died unmarried. Charles is mentioned below. George S., born Nov. 15, 1827, married Caroline Palmer, and died in Plainfield, Conn., where his widow yet resides.

Charles Dorrance was born Nov. 21, 1824, in Brooklyn, and resided on the home farm until the age of about eleven years, when his parents removed to Brooklyn Centre. He attended the common schools of Brooklyn and the Plainfield Academy. When about twenty-one years of age he located on the home farm, and two years later was married. He was a successful, quiet, hardworking farmer until his health failed. He died Feb. 16, 1899, in a Providence hospital, and is buried at Brooklyn. Mr. Dorrance was a member of the Baptist Church. His political support was given to the Republican party.

Mr. Dorrance married Jennett Sharp, who was born Sept. 30, 1822, in Canterbury, Conn., daughter of Willard and Hannah (Hyde) Sharp, and died March 4, 1869. Children as follows were born to this union: (1) George W. married Ida Pellett, is a contractor and builder at St. Paul, Minn., and has had six children, Louis S. (deceased), Bertha, Albert, Harold, Grace and Ida I. (2) Catherine J. married John Davenport, a real estate dealer, in West Medford, Mass., and has had two children, Mildred M. and Marjorie H. (3) Harriet E. is the wife of Albert D. Putnam, of Danielson. (4) Bertha A. died aged twenty-one years. (5) Effie K. died aged twelve years. (6) Fannie G. is the wife of John A. Paine, of Danielson, and has had five children, Everett A. (deceased), Arthur R., Wallace M., Corinne L. and Dorothy D. Charles Dorrance, the father, married for his second wife Frances R. Davis, who died Oct. 12, 1895, aged sixty-one years.

CHARLES D. WAY, who is one of the leading stock dealers of the town of Hebron, Tolland county, and one of the most representative citizens of that town, resides in the Gilcad Society of Hebron.

Mr. Way's ancestry is a matter of just pride to him, as it runs far back and includes many notable characters. This is the story of his "Mayflower" ancestral line: Elder William Brewster and his wife Alice come to Plymouth Rock, Mass., in that noted vessel, and landed Dec. 21, 1620. Jonathan and Lucretia Brewster came on the same ship, with their father, the Elder. Their daughter Grace married Daniel Wetherel. Mary Wetherel married Col. George Denison, famous in the old Colonial wars. Borodale Denison married Jonathan Latimer. Colonel Jonathan Latimer, Jr., married Lucretia Griswold, a sister of Col. Givins Griswold. Col. Latimer was at the battles of Bunker Hill, Saratoga and other conflicts. He migrated to Tennessee with six sons and one daughter in 1799. Jonathan Latimer, also an officer in the Revolution, married Elizabeth Chapel. Clarissa Latimer, their daughter, married Daniel Shaw Way, the grandfather of Charles D. Way.

The Way (or Waye) family is traced back to the tenth century. In the sixteenth century there were many families bearing the name in Devon, Dorset and Somerset, England. (I) Henry Way, from whom the Connecticut family descended, was known as the "Puritan." He was born in Dorchester in 1583. In 1630 he brought his wife to America in the ship "Mary and John." They landed at Boston, and made a settlement not far away, to which they gave the name of Dorchester. Notwithstanding the discomforts and deprivations of colonial days, Henry Way lived to be eighty-four years old. His wife died April 24, 1665.

(II) George Way, one of the many children of Henry Way, settled at first in Boston, and about 1658 joined the colony of the famous Roger Williams at Providence, R. I. After the burning of that town by the Indians he made his home in Saybrook, Conn., where he died about 1700. His two sons, George (2) and Thomas, inherited property from their grandmother, Johanna Smith, of New London, Conn. From them are descended those families of the name of Way, who trace their ancestry back to Connecticut. From James Way, another son of Henry Way, who lived and died in Newtown, L. I., are descended Ways who live in Dutchess county, New York, and in Canada. Aaron Way, another son of Henry Way, lived for a time at Essex, Mass., and his descendants joined the colony which planted Dorchester, S. C., about 1690, and from there removed to Liberty county, Ga. Descendants of William Way, another son, are found in Chester county, Pennsylvania.

Charles D. Way traces his lineage back to Henry Way, the emigrant, as follows: (II) George Way (1), one of the sons of Henry, was born in England, and married Elizabeth Smith, a daughter of John and Johanna Smith, of Boston, and afterwards of New London, Conn. His home was at Saybrook, Conn., where he died about 1700. His children were: Mehitable; Agnes; Elizabeth; Johanna; Alice; George (2); Thomas (1).

(III) George Way (2), son of George (1), was born at Saybrook, married Susanna (West), of New London, the widow of Joseph Beckwith, of Lyme, Conn., and died in February, 1716. Their children were as follows: George (3), Jr.; Joseph; John; Thomas (2); Elizabeth; Eliphas; Mehitable; Sarah; Alice.

(IV) Thomas Way (2), son of George (2), was born in Lyme, Conn., March 8, 1700. He married Jane Lee, of Lyme, about 1722, who died March 16, 1738. After her death he married Sarah Wells, Nov. 29, 1739. To his first marriage were born: Lois; Eunice; Thomas (3); Elizabeth; Delight; Morton.

(V) Thomas Way (3), the third member of the above family, was born in Lyme, June 14, 1731, and was married to Amy Mirick Sept. 1, 1753. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and fought at the Battle of Bunker Hill. His children were: (1) Jane, who married a Mr. Fosdick; (2) Elizabeth, who married Joseph Lovett; (3) Grace; (4) Elisha, who married Emma Gorton; (5) Thomas (4), who married Emma Lee; (6) Amy, who married Elisha Miner; (7) John; (8) Delight, who married Russell Smith; (9) Mirick; (10) Daniel Shaw. Thomas Way died Nov. 26, 1815, and his wife Amy, March 20, 1819, at the age of ninety years.

(VI) Daniel Shaw Way, the youngest child of Thomas (3), was born in Lyme, June 28, 1772. Molly Mack, his first wife, bore him one son, Daniel M., and died young. His second marriage occurred Jan. 10, 1799, in Chesterfield, New London Co., Conn., to Clarissa Latimer, who was born in Chesterfield, July 26, 1776, a daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Chapel) Latimer. Mr. Way died in Hebron, July 21, 1823; and Clarissa (Latimer) Way, May 8, 1835.

Daniel Shaw Way was a carpenter and worked at his trade in Hebron, and also for some years at Wilmington, N. C. In 1800 he bought a farm on East street in Hebron, which is now in the possession of Frank R. Post, and made it his home. For years he made frequent trips to the South, taking contracts at his trade. In 1823, while South, he contracted yellow fever and was brought home to Hebron, where he died July 21, 1823. His family were prominent in the Episcopal Church on Godfrey Hill.

The children of Daniel and Clarissa (Latimer) Way were as follows: (1) Edmund Randolph, born Feb. 23, 1800. He married, March 1, 1828, Clarissa Phelps, who was born in Hebron, Oct. 31, 1807. He removed to Marshall, Mich., where he died July 4, 1856. His wife died Jan. 24, 1861, in Wilmington, N. C. (2) Betsy (or Elizabeth) L., born in Hebron, Conn., March 22, 1802. She married Oct. 29, 1822, Henry Jones Phelps, of Hebron. His death was in Marshall, Mich., April 7, 1852, and hers at Canajoharie, N. Y., Aug. 25, 1830. (3) Clarissa, born March 13, 1804. She married March 24, 1825, Major Charles Post, who was born in 1798, and died in 1861. She died April 17, 1880. Mr. Post was a merchant in Hebron for thirty-five years. Many public offices were held by him, and he was postmaster through a long period. (4) Daniel, born Aug. 2, 1806, died July 11, 1810. (5) John Mirick, born Sept. 26, 1809. He married Sept. 13, 1836, Elizabeth J. Welles, who was born Nov. 9, 1813. His early life was spent in Savannah, Ga., and he was employed in his later prime as a bookkeeper in New York. For over thirty years he was in the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank at Hartford. He spent the later years of his life at Gilead, where he died Nov. 26, 1894. (6) Maria, born Feb. 2, 1812, died in 1814. (7) Daniel, born May 28, 1814. He was the father of Charles D. Way. (8) James Atkins, born Dec. 14, 1816. He married, Aug. 20, 1843, Anna Malvina Post, who was born June 29, 1818. James Atkins was graduated from Washington (now Trinity) College in 1837. After his graduation he went West to practice law in Marshall, Mich., which he did for many years. The latter part of his life he engaged also in banking. He died in Marshall, Mich., Nov. 29, 1894.

(VII) Daniel Way, the father of Charles D., was born in Hebron on the farm to which reference is made above. Such educational advantages as were the privileges of farm lads of his day were his, and on account of the prolonged absences of his father from home while he still was very young much of the care and work of the farm fell on his shoulders. This farm was his home until after his marriage, when he moved to Gilead and located on the farm which is now included in the larger farm occupied by his son, Charles D. There he spent the rest of his life, and there he died from a cold contracted in midwinter by carelessly leaving off his coat while driving a promising young roadster. A popular man and a genial and active character, his death was mourned by all. He was a Whig and a member of the Gilead Congregational Church.

Daniel Way and Harriet B. Hutchinson were married May 19, 1841. She was born Jan. 21, 1821, a native of Gilead, and a daughter of John B. and Laurretta (Jewett) Hutchinson, and died July 5, 1891. Their children were: Charles Daniel, whose name introduces this article, born June 17, 1842; John Bissell, born May 17, 1847, died March 20, 1859.

(VIII) Charles Daniel Way was born in a house that stood not far south of his present home. As soon as the house in which he is living was completed his parents moved into it when Charles was about a year old.

Mr. Way was educated in the district school, in an academy at Cromwell, of which Prof. Beckwith was principal, and in the Ellington Academy, under Prof. Chapman.

At the age of fifteen years Mr. Way took the management of his mother's farm, which comprised seventy-five acres at that time. From the first he displayed ability as a farmer, greatly prospering, increasing his farm holdings to 250 acres, and at the same time effecting many desirable improvements.

For several years following 1869 Mr. Way was in company with Hon. John H. Buell in the lumber business at Gilead, under the name of Way & Buell. They owned the first steam engine ever set up in the town of Hebron, and the first steam saw mill in Tolland county.

Mr. Way is well known as a stock dealer. There is a fine stock barn on his farm where he keeps a large herd of fine cattle. His ability as an expert on cattle values is admitted by all, and his integrity and honesty in all his dealings are never questioned.

Charles Daniel Way was married Sept. 12, 1866, to Katherine Trumbull Chesbrough, who was born in Bozrah, Conn., June 9, 1845, a daughter of P. H. L. and Emily (Burnham) Chesbrough. To this union have come: (1) Charles Daniel, Jr., March 13, 1868. He married Isabelle V. Lyman, of Marlborough, Conn., a daughter of George and Anna Maria (Denslow) Lyman. She died Nov. 10, 1897, leaving one son, Walter D. This son assists his father in the management of the home farm. (2) Cassius, born July 28, 1881. He graduated from Storrs Agricultural College in 1899, and is now studying veterinary surgery at Cornell University.

Mr. Way is a Republican, and though he has never sought office he was prevailed upon to become a candidate for Representative to the General Assembly. He was elected to this position in 1897, and served on the Committee on Agriculture. He was active in the killing of the old obnoxious cattle law—a law that was considered detrimental to the interests of the stockmen of the State—and he was elected largely to work for its repeal. The bill which he prepared for its repeal went through the House without an amendment or dissenting vote.

Mr. Way attends and supports the Gilead Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member.

Patrick Henry Lee Chesbrough, the father of Mrs. Way, was a native of Bozrah, and a son of Capt. Perez and Priscilla (Thompson) Chesbrough. Capt. Perez Chesbrough was a soldier in the Revolution, though his main services to the cause were rendered on the water. He owned the brig "Betsy" and rendered material assistance to the Colonists. Priscilla Thompson, his wife, was a direct descendant of Priscilla Alden of the "Mayflower."

P. H. L. Chesbrough was for many years a successful teacher in Lebanon and Hebron, Conn. He died in 1899 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John L. Hunter, in Willimantic, at the age of ninety-three years. His health and vigor were retained to a remarkable degree for a man of his years. His wife, Emily Burnham, died at the same place Sept. 9, 1896, at the age of eighty-two years. Their children were: (1) Emily (deceased), wife of Dr. C. Eggleston, of Marshall, Mich., where she died; (2) Jessie, wife of William H. Porter, an attorney of Marshall, Mich.; (3) Anna, unmarried, a resident of Hartford; (4) Mrs. Way; (5) Joseph T. (deceased), husband of Ella Gager; (6) Cassius, died when a young man; (7) Mary Lyon (deceased), wife of Hon. John L. Hunter, of Willimantic.

SELAH ANDERSON BURNHAM, a prosperous farmer of the town of Andover, Tolland county, who has attained middle life in that community, is much regarded and very highly spoken of by all who know him. Spencer Burnham, his father, was born in Boston, but was reared in South Windsor, Conn. His birth occurred in January, 1817, and his death March 31, 1869. Mary Holton, his wife, was a daughter of Pitman Holton, of Ellington, Conn., and was born in January, 1817, dying in August, 1882.

(I) The Burnham ancestry in this country runs back to Thomas Burnham, born in 1617, who sailed from England for the Barbadoes, and soon after came to Connecticut, settling in Hartford. In 1656 he was made a constable in that settlement, and in 1659 acquired a large tract of land in what are now the towns of East Hartford and South Windsor. His house was one of the five on the east side of Connecticut river to be fortified and garrisoned during the Indian war of 1675. Mr. Burnham was a lawyer, and died in 1688. His wife's Christian name was Ann.

(II) Samuel Burnham, son of Thomas and Ann, lived in Windsor, where he died in 1728. His wife's name was Mary.

(III) Timothy Burnham, son of Samuel, married Naomi Gilman, and is referred to as being a resident of Podunk, which included parts of the present towns of East Hartford and South Windsor.

(IV) Elijah Burnham, son of Timothy, married Hannah, daughter of Daniel Bidwell, and lived in Podunk.

(V) Selah Burnham, son of Elijah, born in Podunk, married Lucina, a daughter of Timothy Anderson, for his second wife.

(VI) Spencer Burnham, son of Selah, was born in January, 1817, in Boston, but was reared in Windsor, Conn. For some seven or eight years Spencer Burnham was engaged in farming for himself in South Windsor, and then, disposing of his property there, he bought a farm in East Hartford, on which he was settled all the remaining years of his life, following tobacco raising on a very large and successful scale. In his politics he was a strong Democrat, and was a patriotic citizen. In Ellington, Conn., he married Mrs. Mary W. (Holton) Jones, who was born in 1817, and who died in the faith of the Baptist Church, in August, 1882. By her first marriage Mrs. Burnham had a son, Richard Jones, who lived in Hartford, where he died in 1897. To Mr. and Mrs. Burnham were born: Spencer H., a tobacco farmer of East Hartford; Alfonso, who died at the age of fifteen years and nine months; Mary Ellen, who married Giles Putnam, of East Hartford; Selah Anderson; and William Wallace, of Bridgeport, Connecticut. Spencer Burnham, the father, died in March, 1869.

Spencer H. Burnham, eldest son of Spencer Burnham, enlisted Aug. 24, 1861, in Company A, 7th Conn. V. I., which regiment was for a time under the command of Col. Joseph R. Hawley, afterward Governor of Connecticut, and Senator of the United States. Mr. Burnham was in a number of battles in which his regiment was engaged, among them being James Island, S. C., June 16, 1862, where he was wounded, and Drury's Bluff May 14, 1864. He was discharged Sept. 22, 1864.

Selah Anderson Burnham was born in East Hartford, Conn., Sept. 12, 1852, where he received his education in the common and high schools. At the age of twenty years he set himself to learn the carpenter's trade, which he followed until 1890 in his native town and the adjoining communities.

Mr. Burnham married Emma Antrim, of East Hartford, and they had one son, Wallace S., born Jan. 3, 1878, who died Dec. 18, 1898. The marriage of Mr. Burnham to Adaline Celestia, the widow of Joseph J. Watson, and a sister of E. D. White, occurred Nov. 23, 1884. The family history of Mrs. Burnham is very fully presented under the name of E. D. White elsewhere. By her marriage with Mr. Watson, Mrs. Burnham was the mother of a daughter, Lucia Jane, born Oct. 8, 1870.

Since his coming to Andover, Mr. Burnham has been a farmer. For six years prior to his advent here he was bridge builder on the Highland Division. At the present time his farm is largely devoted to dairying. In politics he is a Democrat, and for six years has served on the Andover board of selectmen, and has also been assessor and grand juror. The family attend the Baptist Church, to which Mrs. Burnham belongs. Mr. Burnham is a Granger, and was a charter member of Lodge No. 64, A. O. U. W., of Hebron, where he has filled the various offices, and served as delegate to the Grand Lodge in Boston, in March, 1897.

HARRIS. The Harrises of eastern Connecticut, have been prominently identified with that section of the commonwealth from the very dawn of its settlement. From the old towns of Killingly and Putnam have gone out into the world men of letters and of achievement in the professions and earned callings of life, among them several sons of the late William and Zilpah (Torrey) Harris. Notable among these are Dr. Edward M. Harris, of Putnam, Charles Harris, now member of the Industrial Commission by appointment of the United States Congress, and William Torrey Harris, LL. D., the well-known educator, author, and for years United States Commissioner of Education, residing at Washington, District of Columbia.

William Harris, of Killingly, was a son of John Harris, of the Rhode Island family, a descendant of one of the two brothers, Thomas and William Harris, who in company with Roger Williams, sailed from Bristol, England, in the ship "Lyon," in 1630. They were all for a time at Salem, Mass., but soon went to Rhode Island, and became founders of the town of Providence, where all were conspicuous in its early history. Thomas Harris was many times a deputy and commissioner, and William Harris was one of the twelve original members of the First Baptist Church there.

William Harris, of Killingly, Conn., was a native of the town of Scituate, R. I., where his boyhood was passed. He became a manufacturer of woolen goods in Providence, and later bought a tract of land in the town of Putnam, Conn., and there passed the remainder of his life. In 1834 he was married to Zilpah Torrey, who was born Dec. 24, 1814; daughter of Capt. William and Zilpah (Davidson) Torrey, and great-granddaughter of Rev. John Fiske, the first minister of the original organization on the hill which is now the First Congregational Church of Putnam. She was born on a part of the Fiske estate. Mr. Harris was a grandson of Dr. John Wilkinson, who was a surgeon in the war of the Revolution, and a great-grandson of Judge Daniel Mowrey, who for many years was a member of the General Assembly of Rhode Island, and of the Continental Congress. He was one of the substantial men and useful citizens of his community, and commanded the esteem and respect of his neighbors and friends. His political affiliations were with the Whig, and later with the Republican party. His remains, with those of his wife, rest in the cemetery at Putnam Heights. Mrs. Harris passed away June 26, 1899. Of their nine children—five sons and four daughters—those living are: Hon. William Torrey; Dr. Edward M.; David H., a business man of the State of North Carolina; Hon. Charles J., also of North Carolina, and a member of the United States Industrial Commission; and Mary Jane, the wife of Frank T. Benner, of Newton, Massachusetts.

WILLIAM TORREY HARRIS was born at North Killingly, Conn., Sept. 10, 1835. His early education was received in the common schools and sundry academies, among them Phillips Andover Academy, and for two years and a half he was a member of the class of 1858 in Yale College, but left before graduation. In 1869, however, that institution bestowed upon him the degree of A. M., and in 1870 that of LL. D. was conferred by the Missouri State University. In 1857 Mr. Harris removed from Connecticut to St. Louis, where for twenty-three years he was teacher, principal, assistant superintendent, and superintendent of public schools, holding the last named office from 1867 to 1880. During this period the increase of pupils in the public schools rose from 17,000 to 55,000; Mr. Harris published thirteen volumes of reports, those contributed to the Educational Exhibit of the United States at the Paris Exposition of 1878, attracting such attention that he was tendered the honorary title of "officer de l'Academie" (signifying officer of the educational system of France), while the reports themselves were placed in the pedagogical library of the Ministry of Public Instruction, then organizing. In 1879 Mr. Harris also received the title of "officer de l'Instruction Publique" from the French government. Upon resigning the position of superintendent of public schools in St. Louis in 1880, on account of failing health, Mr. Harris was presented with a gold medal costing $500, and a purse of $1,000 by the citizens of the city, in grateful recognition of his "faithful and distinguished service." He then visited Europe, representing the United States Bureau of Education at the International Congress of Educators held at Brussels the same year, and returning to America he settled in Concord, Mass., where he took a prominent place as member of the School of Philosophy. In 1889 Mr. Harris again represented the United States Bureau of Education at the Paris Exposition, and Sept. 12, of the same year, he was appointed United States Commissioner of Education and removed to Washington, District of Columbia.

In 1866 Mr. Harris was the founder of the Philosophical Society of St. Louis; in 1875 was president of the National Educational Association, and for fifteen years and more has been an officer of the American Social Science Association, for which he has written many papers. The Journal of Specula- tive Philosophy, founded by Mr. Harris in St. Louis in 1867, was the first attempt of its kind in the United States. He continued to edit and publish it without interruption up to 1893, when twenty-two volumes had appeared. He was also assistant editor of "Johnson's Encyclopedia," contributing up to 1893 forty articles to the departments of philosophy and psychology. In co-operation with A. J. Rickoff and Mark Bailey, Mr. Harris prepared the Appleton School readers, and with Duane Doty, of Detroit, Mich., drew up for the Educational Bureau the first "Formulated Statement of the Theory of American Education," endorsed by educators throughout the country. In 1893 Mr. Harris was the editor of "Appleton's International Educational Series," and had been for years. From his constant contributions to the foremost magazines an "Introduction to the Study of Philosophy" has been compiled, and he is looked upon as the most deeply versed and eminent expounder of German thought in America. He has recently published "Hegel's Logic: a Book on the Genesis of the Categories of the Mind," and a commentary on "The Spiritual Sense of Dante's Divine Comedy," both of which rank in the highest order of philosophical productions, and, indeed, may be said to mark an era in the history of mental development in the United States.

EDWARD M. HARRIS, M. D., son of William and brother of William Torrey Harris, was born Sept. 4, 1845, on the old Capt. William Torrey homestead at Putnam Heights, Conn. He received his elementary education in the public schools of Putnam, and later attended the Danielson Academy, at Danielson, Conn., and the Nicholas Academy, at Dudley, Mass. He then studied for a time at Yale, thence went to Harvard, from the Medical Department of which institution he was graduated in 1866, with the degree of M. D. He located in the practice of medicine in the city of Providence, R. I., and for some eighteen years was actively and successfully engaged in professional work there. His increasing private business affairs in Providence and in Putnam; Conn., however, required so much of his time that he gave up the practice of medicine to look after his large business interests. While engaged in professional work Dr. Harris was a member of the City, County and State Medical Societies, being twice elected president of the first of these. He served as senior physician at the Providence Hospital, as physician at the Home for Old Ladies, at Dexter Asylum, at the Providence Nursery and also at the Dispensary. As a physician Dr. Harris stood high in the profession both in the State and in Providence. As a citizen he has been enterprising and public-spirited, ever taking a deep interest in all questions that have tended to advance the interests of his town, State and county. By extensive reading and travel, both abroad and in this country, the Doctor has become a man of knowledge and information, and is an all around accomplished gentleman. He is a lover of a good game of whist and chess, and generally holds his own in either. As a chess player Dr. Harris has won and has held the championship of the State of Rhode Island, and was one of the organizers of the Providence Whist and Chess Club, of which he is still president. He is a member of What Cheer Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Providence, and is also a Royal Arch Mason. His political affiliations are with the Republican party.

In December, 1887, Dr. Harris was married at Providence, R. I., to Amy, daughter of James Eddy, of Boston, Mass., a lady of refinement and culture. She was educated in Boston and in Europe, and traveled extensively abroad. As an artist her work has been classed with that of many who stand high in the profession. Dr. Harris has an elegant home in Providence, where when not traveling the family pass the winter months. He also maintains a charming home at Putnam Heights, where the family reside through the summer, when not on the seashore or in the mountains. The two children of Dr. and Mrs. Harris are: James Eddy, and Edward M., Jr.

TORREY. From a little after the middle of the eighteenth century, the name of Torrey is frequently of record both in church and town, especially in the old church in Killingly. About 1763 there came to Killingly settlement Dr. Samuel H. Torrey, a young man of much more thorough medical training than was common at that period. He established himself in the town and soon gained an extensive practice. His brother, Joseph Torrey, had preceded him to that locality, coming from Kingston, R. I. There also came another brother, Capt. William Torrey. These forerunners of the Killingly, Conn., families bearing the name were the sons of Dr. Joseph Torrey, a native of Weymouth, Mass., grandsons of Joseph, great-grandsons of William and great-great-grandsons of Capt. William Torrey, the American ancestor of this branch of the Torrey family. The last named was a son of Philip Torrey, of Combe, St. Nicholas, Somersetshire, England. William Torrey was of Weymouth, Mass., 1640, was made a freeman in 1642, and in that same year was a deputy to the General Court, and afterward was many times a deputy between that year and 1683. He was also a lieutenant and captain.

Capt. William Torrey (2), referred to in the foregoing as one of the forerunners of the name in Killingly, Conn., married (first) Hannah Plank, and (second) Zilpah Davidson, and a daughter Zilpah, born to the second marriage, married William Harris, the father of Dr. Edward M. and William Torrey Harris of this article.

For a more detailed account of the Torrey pedigree the reader is referred elsewhere in this work.

GLENN H. REYNOLDS, a well-known retired merchant at Danielson, Windham county, was born in Mansfield, Tolland county, Conn., Nov. 25, 1823, and comes of a family numerously represented in this part of Connecticut. To no other cause than his own perseverance can his success be attributed, for he was born into a large family of children, dependent upon the altogether inadequate earnings of their farmer father. As soon as physical strength and dawning judgment permitted, he was put to work to swell the family maintenance fund, and his earliest days were therefore not remote from care and responsibility. At the age of fourteen years, in 1837, he went to live for a year with an uncle, Stephen Brigham, of Mansfield, and while on this farm received thirty dollars for summer services, and the privilege of going to school during the winter in exchange for the inevitable chores. During the winters of 1838-39 he made his home with his uncle, Capt. Samuel Reynolds, at Danielson, then Danielsonville, and while there assisted in putting out the large and beautiful maple trees that now furnish such grateful shade around the park and on Broad street, Danielson.

During the summer of 1840 Mr. Reynolds was employed on the farm of Alpheus Dimmick, in Mansfield, and the following winter lived with Deacon Stanley, at Coventry, earning the right to attend school by assisting around the farm. In the spring of 1841 he found work on a farm with Deacon Palmer, of Mansfield, and at the end of the season went to Albion, R. I., and was employed as a clerk in the store of E. Storrs Barrows, with whom he remained for a short time, later filling similar positions in stores at Valley Falls, Lonsdale and Providence, in the latter town being in the employ of Stephen A. Cook. In 1852 he came to Danielson and became a partner in a grocery store, soon after purchasing the interest of his partner, and continuing the business independently, the same being located in the room now occupied by the Adams Express Co. After a decidedly successful business experience Mr. Reynolds disposed of his interests in 1864, and in the spring of 1866 went to Cranston, R. I., where he became head clerk in the store of A. & W. Sprague. This store had an unusual era of prosperity during the construction of the Narragansett trotting track in 1866, its sales for that year alone being in the neighborhood of $367,000. In 1867 Mr. Reynolds removed to Providence, R. I., and became identified as bookkeeper with the mill supply firm of Hicks & Sprague, a few weeks later changed to C. White & Co., Mr. White being the late Cyrus White, of Rockville. Mr. White proved a friend indeed to his competent bookkeeper, and fittingly rewarded his faithfulness and general worth with several increases in salary. When the business finally passed into the hands of the Butler, Brown & Co., Mr. Reynolds continued to serve their interests, changing his work, however, to that of traveling salesman, in which capacity he covered the whole of New England. The business afterward was conducted by Brown Brothers & Co., and in 1885 Mr. Reynolds resigned his position to look after the property of his brother Edwin in Mansfield. Up to this time he had made his home in Providence, and in 1890 came to Danielson, and the following year erected the home at No. 7 Hawkins street, in which he has since retired from active business life.

On May 19, 1846, Mr. Reynolds married Elizabeth F. Eaton, born Dec. 31, 1823, a daughter of Artemas and Miriam D. (Draper) Eaton, and who died Nov. 20, 1899. Mrs. Reynolds, who is buried in the Westfield cemetery, was the mother of four children, viz.: Ella Elizabeth, who died May 2, 1864, aged fourteen years, three months and twenty-one days; Edna Maria, who died March 16, 1872, at the age of nineteen years, five months and ten days; Cora May, who died Sept. 18, 1866, aged seven months and twenty-six days; and Carrie H., who died Sept. 24, 1863, aged ten months. Mr. Reynolds is a Republican in politics, but has never sought nor held public office. Nor does he belong to any fraternal organization. His services in behalf of the upbuilding of the community include those connected with the organization of the First National Bank of Killingly, of which he was one of the stockholders, and he was clerk of the first meeting held by the organizers. He is entirely self-made, and comes from the ranks of those who build upon a foundation of common sense and unquestioned integrity. No citizen has better earned the honor and esteem of the community, and it is his pride to have never been out of work, never to have looked for a position, and never to have been discharged.

HORACE BROWN, who is extensively engaged in manufacturing in Talcottville, Tolland Co., Conn., is a grandson of Russell Brown, who was a native of Colchester, where he married Wealthy Strong.

Russell and Wealthy (Strong) Brown had a family of nine children, two of whom died young: (1) Wealthy E. (deceased), married a Mr. Foote; (2) Egbert, a resident of Columbia; (3) Chauncey Everett, father of Horace Brown; (4) Elizabeth (deceased), twice married, to a Mr. Utley and E. D. Post, of Andover; (5) Albert, a resident of Columbia; (6) Jane (deceased), married to George Bingham; (7) Egbert, born in Hebron in 1824, who married Jane E. Wright, and had three children—Alice L., who died when twenty-eight years old, Leverett, who died at the age of sixteen years, and Frederick. Mr. Brown was a carpenter and joiner, and died in Columbia when somewhat advanced in years.

Chauncey Everett Brown, the father of Horace, was born in Hebron in October, 1826, and married Mary A., the daughter of Simeon P. and Lucy (Lee) Downer. The Downers came from Groton and settled in Windham. Mrs. Mary A. Brown died at the early age of thirty-three, and Mr. Brown was presently married for a second time, to Fannie W. Bascom, by whom he was father to one child, Frank A., now a telegraph operator in New London.

To the first marriage of Mr. Brown was born the following family: (1) Belle, the wife of Frank W. Woodward, of Melrose (Boston), Mass.; (2) Horace; (3) Louise, the wife of Edward P. Lyman, of Columbia; (4) Julia A., the wife of Abbott Little, of Columbia.

Chauncey Everett Brown has resided in Columbia for the greater part of his life, coming there when a young man. For seven years, however, he had his home in Norwich. Farming has been his occupation to which he has devoted his lifetime. This is still his business in Columbia.

Mr. Brown is a Democrat by inheritance and voted that ticket in his earlier manhood, but for many years he has proved himself a staunch Republican. In the local politics of his day he has always been interested, and has held various town offices at the demand of his fellow townsmen. For two terms he was a representative from the town in the General Assembly. Mr. and Mrs. Brown belong to the Congregational Church, and are much esteemed in that direction.

Horace Brown, the gentleman whose name introduces this article, was born in Columbia, Conn., Nov. 6, 1856. From the seventh year of his age up to his fifteenth year his parents had their home in Norwich, and there the greater part of his schooling was obtained. When Mr. Brown's parents returned to his native place his school days, which included one term at the Willimantic high school, were nearly over.

Remaining at home with his parents until he was twenty years of age, Mr. Brown for a time engaged in various occupations. In 1885, he came to Talcottville, and in company with James A. Utley engaged in the meat business, in which he continued for three years. Disposing of his interest in the market he bought an interest in the Granite Mill at Talcottville, a plant devoted to the making of binders' board. In 1897 and the following year Mr. Brown was president of the Company which for a time was engaged in manufacturing leather. Lately it has resumed binders' board work. Mr. Brown is still a stockholder, and for much of the time has been overseer and secretary.

Mr. Brown is a Republican, though not an active party worker. Both himself and wife are members of the Congregational Church. Mr. Brown was married Feb. 22, 1894, to Miss Isabella F. Kelley, a daughter of Caleb Kelley, of Providence, Rhode Island.

HENRY ARMSTRONG, an industrious and reliable wagonmaker of South Coventry, Tolland county, comes of English parentage, and was himself born at Haydon-bridge, County of Northumberland, England.

Henry Armstrong, Sr., his father, was born in the parish of Haltwhistle, Aug. 5, 1795, and died here Oct. 30, 1864, in the seventieth year of his age. He was a teacher of music. His wife, who was Dorothy Davison, of Haydon-bridge, was born Jan. 4, 1796, and died Jan. 18, 1867, aged seventy-one. Their children were: (1) Cuthbert, born May 28, 1826, died Nov. 27, 1828; (2) Cuthbert D., born May 18, 1829, was a nason by trade, and died in Middletown, Conn., in 1887; (3) Edward, born March 17, 1830, learned the stone cutting trade, and has his home in Middletown, Conn., where he is rearing a family consisting of Henry, Elizabeth, Cuthbert, Grace, Belle and Emma; (4) Jane, born July 1, 1832, resides in Haydon-bridge, England; and (5) Henry, whose name may be found at the opening of this article, was born Oct. 16, 1835.

Henry Armstrong was reared in his native parish, where he received such public school advantages as the times afforded, and early learned the trade of a carpenter and joiner. In August, 1861, he married Jane Catherine Pickering, daughter of William C. and Elizabeth (Story) Pickering, and a native of Tanfield, County Durham, England.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Pickering were:

Henry, born Jan. 10, 1839, died in England; Jane Catherine, born Sept. 30, 1842; Ann, born Oct. 8, 1845, married William Tilley, of England, and died Oct. 16, 1894; William S., born Sept. 18, 1849, died Jan. 1, 1901, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, England; John, born Nov. 2, 1851, resides at Cork, Ireland, where he has a family; and Thomas, born May 15, 1855, resides at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, where he has accumulated a large fortune in the wholesale tea trade, and has a family. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Armstrong have the following family: (1) William Henry, born April 5, 1862, married Agnes Kingsbury, of South Coventry, and is in business with his father. (2) Dorothy, born Jan. 18, 1864, died July 1, 1865. (3) Edward Pickering, born Dec. 6, 1865, lives in Dewdrop, Warren Co., Pa., where he holds a lucrative position as a filer in a large sawmill; he married Fanny May Watrous, of Bay City, Mich., and their two children are Henry (born July 13, 1894) and Lloyd Edward (born Oct. 11, 1898). (4) Dorothy, born Oct. 6, 1867, died in England March 5, 1869. (5) John Cuthbert, born Aug. 1, 1869, in Middletown, Conn., died Aug. 6, 1870. (7) Cuthbert Davison, born Aug. 4, 1876, died Sept. 1st following. (8) Thomas D., born March 23, 1872, in Middletown, Conn., is a saw filer in the lumber works in McKean County, Pa.; he married Rhoda Jane Hartley. (9) Leonard Thomas, born in Hebron, Conn., April 13, 1879, is a saw filer in Pennsylvania. (10) Elizabeth Ann, born in South Coventry, Oct. 4, 1884, has recently completed a commercial course at the Willimantic Business College.

Henry Armstrong carried on his trade as a carpenter and joiner as well as a wagonmaker in England until 1869, when he came to this country, settling first at Middletown, Conn., where he remained nine years, engaged at his trade and doing contract work. At the end of that time he rented a farm in Hebron, on which he lived for five years, engaged in its tillage. Desirous, however, of establishing a business in which his sons could assist him, and to which they might succeed, he, in 1883, located at South Coventry, where he saw a good business opening, and bought his present mill site and water privilege. In the old buildings, which he has entirely remodeled and greatly enlarged, he began spoke making and wagon building. At the present time he owns a very attractive factory, in which a number of hands are employed the year around. His plans and aspirations have not come out entirely as he wished, as three of his sons have found outside positions of responsibility, carrying large salaries, so that he could not dissuade them from leaving home. His business is very satisfactory, and he fills many orders from a distance, having a trade that covers a radius of twenty miles. Mr. Armstrong has been very successful in business, and is one of the real self-made men in that town. In his religious belief he is a Second Adventist, and he takes a great interest in the spread of his accepted faith.

JOHN CLARK LINCOLN, a representative business man of Willimantic, Conn., comes from one of the oldest families of Windham county, and indeed of all New England, being in the eighth generation of the Lincoln family, counting from the first ancestor who settled in Taunton, the line being as follows: the Taunton settler; his son Samuel; Samuel (2); John; Jonah; Dan; Mason; and John Clark Lincoln.

Mr. Lincoln was born in North Windham, Conn., Feb. 22, 1851, a son of Mason and Hannah E. (Clark) Lincoln.

Mason Lincoln was born in North Windham, March 26, 1816, a son of Dan and Mehitabel (Flint) Lincoln, and was reared a farmer boy. When a young man he became a very successful teacher. For about eight years after his marriage in 1838 Mr. Lincoln lived on a farm in Hampton, and in the summer of 1846 came back to North Windham, where he lived twenty years. On his return he built a house in North Windham, which he made his home until his removal to Chaplin, Conn., in 1866. Early in life Mr. Lincoln "picked up" a knowledge of the blacksmith trade, and followed that avocation many years, when his failing vision compelled him to give it up. In 1871 he came to Willimantic, and here his last days were spent, his death occurring July 10, 1890, his widow surviving until Jan. 28, 1896, both being buried at Willimantic. In Hampton, Conn., he was married Oct. 29, 1838, to Hannah E. Clark, who was born May 31, 1820, in Ashford, Conn., a daughter of John E. and Hannah (Moseley) Clark. After coming to Willimantic Mr. Lincoln had no regular calling, but dealt considerably in real estate. He would not take public office, though he was a pronounced Republican from the first organization of the party. At one time he was a director and vice-president of the Willimantic Savings Institute, but in 1877 resigned that position. At the time of his death he was a director and vice-president of the Windham National Bank. Mason and Hannah E. Lincoln were the parents of the following family: (1) Emily Cornelia, born Sept. 12, 1843, married Justin B. Holt, of Chaplin, and died Aug. 12, 1867, in that town; (2) Juliet, born Jan. 20, 1847, married Abner A. Robinson, of Willimantic, where she died May 30, 1870; (3) Lucy, who is an invalid, has never married, but lives in the home of her parents on Church street, is much beloved by all who have the pleasure of her acquaintance, and is a devoted member of the Methodist Church; and (4) John C. is the youngest child of his parents.

Mason Lincoln did not belong to the church, but was a Christian man, and attended the Methodist Church, of which his wife was a member, and to which he liberally contributed. In his home he found much satisfaction, and took great pride in its good order and fine appearance. His own personal appearance was fine, somewhat tall, but substantial, weighing nearly 200 pounds. Mr. Lincoln was a man in a thousand to make and keep friends. In all things he advocated the right, and the community looked upon him as an unswerving advocate of its best interests. As a neighbor he was tenderly kind and solicitous, and was quick to perform those deeds that would be considered a favor. He wielded a good influence and left a good name.

John Clark Lincoln attended the district school at North Windham, Porter B. Peck being his teacher for some time, and later he was a student in the Chaplin School, completing his studies at the Natchaug High School, taught, at the time, by D. P. Corbin, and, later, by John Welch. Mr. Lincoln made his entry into the business world as a clerk in the Merchants' Loan and Trust Co., in which he was later for some time a teller. In the Willimantic Loan and Trust Co. he held a responsible position, but as clerical work proved bad for his eyes, he secured employment with Andrew Chester in the jewelry business. While with him, Mr. Chester died, and Mr. Lincoln closed up the business for the family. In 1874, in company with Abel Clark, he went into the furniture business, under the firm name of Clark & Lincoln, their location being in the Bassett Block. In 1879 Mr. Lincoln became the sole owner of the business, which has remained in his hands to the present time, and in the passing years he has built up the largest business of the kind in the city. The triangular building at the corner of Main and Union streets is occupied by his house furnishing establishment; it is a building of four stories, and is one of the most imposing in the city, nearly all of it being occupied by Mr.

Lincoln, where he deals in everything that enters into the furnishing of the home. Mr. Lincoln is genial and obliging and has a trade reaching far into the country around the city.

On Feb. 22, 1857, John Clark Lincoln was married in Willimantic, to Miss Carrie L. Burnham, a native of Willimantic, born in 1859, a daughter of Edgar and Sarah Jane (Tucker) Burnham. She was the only child of her parents that lived to adult age. To this marriage have come the following children: (1) Ida B., who graduated from the Willimantic high school in 1898 with second honors; (2) Grace A., who graduated from the Willimantic high school, the youngest member in the class of 1898, and was the recipient of first honors; (3) Harold C., who graduated from the Willimantic high school in 1901; (4) Arthur B., at home; (5) Evelyn, who died in infancy; and (6) Lillian, at home. Mr. Lincoln is a Republican, and although he has never been willing to take office, has been a hard-working and enthusiastic worker for the party. He was a charter member of Obwebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., at Willimantic, and also belongs to the A. O. U. W. He is a grandson of a soldier of the Continental army, and is eligible to the Revolutionary Societies, but has never united with any. He and his family reside on Maple street in a house built by him.

HENRY FOWLER ROYCE, one of the prominent business men in Willimantic, Windham county, has been conspicuously identified with the business affairs of that city for thirty-five years, and comes of an old New England family.

The first representative of the Royce family in this country was Robert Royce, who landed in Boston from England in 1631, and three years later became a freeman of that Commonwealth. In 1637 he was included among the secretaries of Hutchinson and Wheelwright. In 1644 he came to Connecticut, settling in Stratford, and thirteen years later was one of the founders of New London. One of his sons assisted in the founding of Norwich, and several of his sons went to Wallingford. The branch of the family to which Henry Fowler Royce belongs, remained in New London county, and were early settlers of Lyme, Conn., where many of them in successive generations rose to prominence.

Deacon Ruel Royce, the great-grandfather of Henry E., was born in 1743, a son of Nehemiah Royce. After leading an industrious and useful career as a farmer, his death occurred, April 13, 1829, at the age of eighty-six. Sarah Royce, his wife, attained the very great age of one hundred years and eight months, dying in March, 1846. Both are buried in the old Colt burying ground in Lyme. In their family was a son, Ruel, who became the grandfather of Henry F. Royce.

Ruel Royce, son of Deacon Ruel, married Sarah Fowler, by whom he had eight children. He as a farmer, and lived and died in Lyme, Connecticut.

Amos F. Royce, eldest child of Ruel, was born in Lyme, and was married to Jane B. Peckham, who was born near Newport, R. I., and was the youngest of a family of twelve children. Her parents, William and Sarah Peckham, settled in Lebanon, Conn., where her father followed farming. Sarah Peckham was born in 1774, and lived to be ninety-five years old; among the very earliest memories of her childhood is that of Gen. Washington who made his headquarters at her father's home near Newport, R. I. She kept her mind wonderfully well to the last, and often told her grandchildren her recollections of Washington. After his marriage Amos F. Royce located in Lebanon, where he lived about four miles west of Willimantic. In 1841 he made his home in the town of Franklin, where he died at the age of eighty-one years; his wife died when eighty-three years of age. Both are buried in Franklin, Conn. They were farming people all their lives, and are remembered as upright and honorable; kindly-hearted and good neighbors. Mr. Royce was a man of more than the usual prominence, and in early life took much interest in political and public affairs. In his earlier days he was a Whig, but on the dissolution of that party became a Republican. For several terms he represented the town of Franklin in the General Assembly, and was a county commissioner in New London county at the time the court house at Norwich was built. To Amos F. and Sarah Royce were born the following family: Henry Fowler; Emma J. married the late J. Henry Warner, of Brooklyn, Conn., and now has her home in Franklin; Amos I., a prominent citizen of Norwich, Conn., where for eighteen years he filled the position of Deputy Internal Revenue Collector, under Col. Eldon, with whom he became a partner later in the insurance business, died in August, 1900, leaving two children, Frank Irving (who has taken up his father's insurance work) and Helen B. (an accomplished violinist of more than local fame); Frederick P., who died March 24, 1901, from injuries sustained in a collision with a trolley car in Norwich, resided in Franklin, Conn., where his life had been spent; and Sarah A. is Mrs. Noah D. Webster, of Willimantic, of whom mention appears in another page.

Henry Fowler Royce was born Feb. 18, 1840, in the north part of Lebanon, Conn., on the ancestral homestead, some four miles west of Willimantic, and was but a child when his parents removed to Franklin, where he was reared. Mr. Royce worked hard when a boy and knew but few idle moments. His education was secured in the Franklin school, and the Lebanon Academy. With a quick and ready mind he had made rapid progress, and was fully competent to teach the Franklin school, which he did, when he was twenty years old, having for his pupils many of his former school-mates. Mr. Royce made a good teacher, and left his work in the school room only to take up the work of a soldier for the Union. He enlisted Aug. 25, 1862, in Company B, 26th Conn. V. I., being mustered in Nov. 10th following. He was a faithful and vigilant soldier, and was soon detailed on the signal service, being attached to the Department of the Gulf. The first Signal Corps was made up of one officer and three privates from each regiment. Mr. Royce was soon after detailed in the Quartermaster's Department of the Department of the Gulf, where he remained for several months after his official discharge, which was dated Aug. 11, 1863. Returning home, he was presently given a position in the United States Revenue office at Norwich, under Collector Ezra Dean, by whom he was employed for a year, being also under Henry Hammond for a time. Mr. Royce then spent a year in the Second National Bank, at Norwich, where he formed the acquaintance of John Tracy, then the treasurer of the Willimantic Savings' Institute, and that gentleman offered him a situation in the Savings Institute in 1866. Two years later Mr. Royce became treasurer of the Institute in place of Mr. Tracy, who was made president, a position which Mr. Royce held until March 23, 1888, to the eminent satisfaction of all parties with whom he came in contact. As early as 1880 Mr. Royce had become identified with the National Thread Co., and in 1882 was chosen as its secretary, a position which he continued to hold until the National Thread Co. was absorbed by the American Thread Co. In 1875 he began the business of investment broker, handling western securities and investments, which he has successfully carried on to the present time. In this line Mr. Royce has handled over two and a half million dollars in investments and loans. Until 1895 this business was extensive, but in that year it was greatly crippled by the failure of several of the leading financial institutions of Willimantic. His business, however, weathered the storm, and is still continued.

On Feb. 21, 1865, Hery Fowler Royce was married in Franklin, Conn., to Miss Martha R. Johnson, who was born Feb. 14, 1844, a daughter of John P. and Lucy A. (Warner) Johnson; she died Jan. 21, 1890, her remains being interred in Willimantic. Mr. and Mrs. Royce had the following family: (1) Charles J., a graduate of the local high school, and for a time the bookkeeper and and paymaster of the Morrison Machine Co., then graduated from the University of Pennsylvania and is now a successful dentist in Willimantic. (2) Clayton Woodford graduated from the local high school, and from the mechanical engineering department of the Lehigh University, and is now a draughtsman in the employ of the American Thread Co., at Willimantic. (3) Adele V. graduated from the local high school and is now Mrs. T. F. Howie, of Willimantic, her husband being the head of the dyeing and bleaching department of the American Thread Co. at Willimantic. Their children are: Donald R., Florence and John. (4) Harry F. is a graduate of the Willimantic high school, and is a bookkeeper with the Willimantic Linen Co.; he has a reputation of much more than the usual merit as a pianist. (5) Lottie is a teacher in the kindergarten connected with the public schools of Willimantic. On Oct. 21, 1893, Mr. Royce married Mrs. Celia M. Cross, of Providence, a native of Woodstock, Conn., and a lady of much ability, with many friends. She belongs to the W. R. C. and the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Royce is a member of Frank S. Long Post, No. 30, G. A. R., at Willimantic.

Henry Fowler Royce has always been characterized by a ready public spirit, and has taken an active interest in enterprises that tended to promote the general welfare. Among the enterprises in which he has actively interested himself are the Windham Silk Co., the Vanderman Plumbing & Heating Co., and the Hall & Bill Printing Co. He was at one time treasurer of the Willimantic Electric Light Co., being one of the largest stockholders of that corporation, but has sold his interest. Politically he is a Republican, but is not a politician. His career is a noble illustration of what push and energy, when conjoined with character and ability, may accomplish, and today he is one of the representative and wealthy men of Willimantic.

JAMES SANFORD MORGAN, the town clerk of Coventry, and a retired manufacturer, has passed a long life in his native county, and has ever maintained a high reputation for business and personal integrity.

The Morgan family was founded in America by James Morgan, who was born in Wales in 1607, and who settled in Roxbury, Massachusetts.

Capt. John Morgan, son of James, was born March 30, 1645. About 1692 he removed to Preston, Conn., where he died in 1712.

James Morgan, son of Capt. John, was born about 1680. He settled in Preston.

Samuel Morgan, son of James, was born in Preston, Dec. 16, 1705. He grew to manhood and married, and in his family of children was a son, Asher.

Asher Morgan, son of Samuel, was born in Scotland, Conn., May 18, 1734. He carried on farming in his native town for some years, but finally sold his property there, and in 1816 bought a farm of 120 acres between Eagleville and the South Coventry depot, which he cultivated until his death in 1839. He was married in Scotland to Cynthia Gager, who died April 4, 1831. Their children were: Sophia, the wife of Henry Prentice, who resided in Willimantic, Conn.; Lucy, the wife of Reuben Peck; and Mason, the father of James S.

born in Scotland, May 31, 1790. Politically Mr. Morgan was a Whig, and a man of much character in the neighborhood.

Mason Morgan was married in Scotland Nov. 28, 1816, to Chloe, a daughter of Vaniah Palmer; she was a native of Scotland, and died in South Coventry, in 1891, at the advanced age of ninety-eight years. After his marriage Mason Morgan located in South Coventry and engaged in farming. After his father's death he continued on the home farm, and in addition he taught school, confining his work almost entirely to Mansfield and Coventry. In his political preferences he was first a Whig, and then a Republican, but he never could be induced to take public position. Both he and his wife were members of the Congregational Church of Coventry, in which he was a leader of the choir for many years. He died in July, 1870. To him and his wife came: James Sanford, was born Dec. 2, 1818; Miles Chandler, a machinist and mechanic, born in 1826, was a man of more than ordinary judgment, died in December, 1898, and is buried at South Coventry.

James Sanford Morgan was born in South Coventry, where he attended the home schools only, for one winter being a pupil in his father's school in Coventry, but his education was largely self-acquired. The first of the year 1836, he was called to complete the teacher's term of the South Street School, after which he took a position in the woolen mill of the Coventry Sateen Manufacturing Co., which he held for six years, the last year of his stay having charge of the weaving room. Following this he devoted four years to farming on the home farm, when he entered the foundry of Smith & Washburn, then standing near the present Washburn Silk Mill, remaining there only a short time, however, as he obtained work in the Washington woolen mill. The year after this he took up foundry work again, to which he devoted two or three years, and thoroughly mastered the business. For four years he was employed in a machine shop, and then resumed work in the Washington woolen mill, where he remained ten years and two months, being overseer all of this time, which terminated the first of the year 1865. After this he engaged in the manufacture of paper boxes fifteen months, the output being sold to the Metallic Cartridge Co., then in business in the village. There were in his employ sixteen or eighteen girls, and his prospects were bright, when the Cartridge Company moved their plant to Bridgeport, a movement disastrous to his enterprise, though he sold his machinery most advantageously. In the spring of 1866 Mr. Morgan bought a water power, including some small buildings, put in machinery, and started in as a silk throwster. In this enterprise he did well, and continued in it until 1879. That year, being desirous of turning over the active management of the business to younger hands, he admitted A. D. Bottum as a partner, and in 1883 sold out entirely. The Following June he was appointed town clerk, a position he has held to the present time. After the death of Mr. Bottum, in 1889, Mr. Morgan prevailed upon to look after the business for the widow, a work he sustained until 1895, when on account of advancing years he gave it up. In spite of his age, he bears himself as well as most men do at sixty. Since coming into office Mr. Morgan has been town treasurer, and has had charge of the town deposit funds. In 1875 he represented his own in the General Assembly, where he did good committee work. He has been a Whig and Republican, and his first presidential vote was cast for William Henry Harrison in 1840. Both Mr. and Mrs. Morgan are members of the Congregational Church, which he has served as a deacon since March 1, 1874, having also been clerk and treasurer. A leader of the choir since 1837, a remarkable record of sixty-five years, he has given the active years of his life to the worship of the sanctuary.

On Dec. 25, 1839, Mr. Morgan was married to Mary Bailey, who was born July 3, 1818, a daughter of Erastus Bailey, of Lebanon. They were blessed with three children: Mary Ellen, born Feb. 5, 1843, married E. P. Packer (now deceased), of Santa Monica, Cal., and has a daughter, Mary; Lucy Jane, born Feb. 4, 1845, is the widow of William S. Sweet; and Mary F., born in 1857, died in 1861. It is but just and merited praise to say of him that, as a business man, he ranked among the best; as a citizen he was honorable, prompt, and true to every engagement; and as a man he held the honor and esteem of all classes of people.

ARTHUR CHARLES ANDREW established the music business in which he has become so popular and widely known in 1878, and for the first year had his quarters on the second floor of the Willimantic Savings Institute. The following year he formed a partnership with T. H. Rollinson and the two were together in business about a year at No. 798 Main street, in the Franklin Block. They were associated for about a year when Mr. Rollinson sold out his share of the business to Mr. Andrew, and is now at the head of a department in the store of Oliver Ditson in Boston. After the retirement of Mr. Rollinson, Mr. Andrew returned his business to the Institute Building, and was located later in the Buck and Turner Buildings. In July, 1893, Mr. Andrew located at his present place of business, Nos. 804-806 Main street, finding here exceptionally bright and attractive quarters. Two store rooms are connected by a fine arch, and the basement is divided into storage room and workshop. He deals in pianos, organs and musical instruments generally, as well as everything in the line of musical merchandise. A wide range of repairs is offered the public, and an expert tuner is constantly employed. Medium and high grade instruments are on sale, but both new and second-hand instruments are bought, sold and exchanged on terms to suit the customer. All standard music is carried, and anything not on hand can be ordered and supplied at short notice. Mr. Andrew received a very complete musical education at the Perkins Institute in Boston, where he attained marked proficiency as a tuner, and two years before his coming to Willimantic had charge of the instruments used in the Boston public schools.

The Andrew music store is widely known, and enjoys an enviable reputation for absolutely fair dealing. Misrepresentation is not permitted, and the confidence of the customer is never abused. It is now among the largest retail houses in Connecticut, two traveling salesmen regularly cover the surrounding territory, and instruments are sold not only in every New England state, but in New York, and different parts of the Union as far west as California.

The early generations of the Andrew family followed the sea, and engaged in the East India trade. James Andrew, the grandfather of Arthur Charles, was engaged in a cotton mill, where he filled positions of responsibility, and was known in his day throughout New England. Those of his children who lived to adult age were: (1) James was an engineer in Newark, N. J., where he died when over sixty, leaving one daughter, Lizzie, who married Frank Fritz; (2) Erastus, a prominent wholesale grocer in Norwich, left one daughter, Annie, wife of A. S. Comstock, a prominent citizen of Norwich, and the head of the Knights Templar order of Connecticut; (3) Charles N. became the father of Arthur C.; (4) Mary married George Hall, and is now a widow in Mobile, Ala., with one daughter, Minnie, and two sons, George and Arthur; (5) Julia was the first wife of A. L. Clark, a prominent manufacturer of Manchester, Glastonbury and Hartford, and president of the Glastonbury Knitting Co., and was the mother of Aldison L. (now deceased) and Josephine (who married Cooper Robeson). James Andrew died at Bean Hill, Conn., near Norwich. For about forty-five years he was a noted and influential member of the I. O. O. F., and was a man of high moral character, holding the unstinted respect and confidence of his fellow citizens.

Charles N. Andrew was born in Poquetanuck, in the town of Preston, Conn., and was reared in his native community, where he remained until he was thirty years old. His schooling was had in the local school, and at a very early age he was set to work. When he was a young man he engaged in the mercantile business with his brother, Erastus, at Norwich, in the general grocery trade until 1864. That year he removed to Philmont, N. Y., where he spent the ensuing three years in the grocery business. In 1867 Mr. Andrew came to Willimantic, and was in the grocery line here until 1871. That year he opened a fire insurance agency, and in 1883 engaged in the hardware trade. In 1891 he resumed his fire insurance agency, and followed that line until his death, May 9, 1898. His ashes repose in Willimantic, where his widow is still living. He married Ellen Foss, who was born in Mansfield, a daughter of John and Sarah (Slate) Foss; she came to Willimantic when but a girl, her father entering into the mercantile business in this city. They had two children: (1) Arthur C., whose name introduces this article; (2) Sarah, who married Rev. C. F. Clark, of Whitneyville, Conn., a talented and consecrated Congregational minister, and they have two children, Helen and Rachel. Mr. Andrew was a Republican, belonged to the Masonic fraternity, and was a member of the Congregational Church. In every relation of life he was highly respected.

Arthur C. Andrew was born May 17, 1858, in Norwich. He received his first instruction in the private school of Mr. Kellogg, at Norwich, and was but a child when his parents removed to Philmont, N. Y., where he began his study in the public school, but displaying such a gift and enthusiasm for music as is seldom found, he was sent to Perkins Institute in Boston, where he obtained a very fine musical education.

Mr. Andrew married Miss Hattie Post, a native of South Coventry, Conn., where she was born June 10, 1859, a daughter of Francis G. and Elizabeth (Watrous) Post. In 1861 Mr. Post removed to Willimantic, and was a leading contractor and builder until a few years before his death, which occurred Feb. 20, 1902. Mrs. Andrew is the only child in his family who lived to adult age. Mr. Andrew is a staunch Republican, and takes a keen interest in local and national politics. He has represented the First ward in the city council, and is awake to the best interests of the city. Any movement calculated to benefit the community receives his hearty and ungrudging support. Mr. Andrew is a public spirited man, whose interest in the general welfare does not exhaust itself in talk, but is ready to contribute cash and time to any worthy cause. Strongly characteristic of his entire career have been his liberal spirit and generous hand. In his religious proclivities he is a Baptist, and years ago united with that Church. His business is very successful, and it is today one of the best managed in Willimantic.

LUTHER E. RAWSON, a well known and successful agriculturist of Woodstock, Windham county, traces his lineage in direct line to the early Puritans. His earliest American ancestor was Edward Rawson, one of the grantees of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, and the second town clerk and registrar of Boston. Mrs. Luther E. Rawson is also distinguished as being a direct descendant of that great divine and elect man of God, Roger Williams. "Blood tells," and in this case the virtues of a noble and Godly ancestry dwell in the persons of our subject and his wife, who are worthy representatives of the agricultural class of Windham county.

Edward Rawson was the progenitor of all bearing the name of Rawson in the United States, with a single exception. He was born in Gillingham, Dorsetshire, England, April 15, 1615, and he married Rachel Perne, daughter of Thomas Perne, and granddaughter of John Hooker, whose wife was a sister of Edmond Grindal, Archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. John Hooker, grandfather of Rachel Perne, was an uncle of the celebrated and able divine, Rev. Thomas Hooker, who came to Boston in 1633.

The most remote known ancestor of Edward Rawson was Sir Edward Rawson, who lived in the reign of one of the Henrys. He is said to have been a man of military skill and experience. A castle with four towers was held by the King's enemies, which Sir Edward proposed to take, and did take, with a given number of men. The king, in addition to other favors, conferred on him as his coat of arms the emblem of a castle with four towers, ever since known as the arms of the Rawsons.

Edward Rawson came as early as 1637 to Newbury, Mass., of which town he was a grantee. He was chosen town clerk April 19, 1638, re-elected several times, finally chosen secretary, was a selectman the same year, and subsequently appointed one of the commissioners and attorneys for the trial of small causes in Newbury; was elected deputy to the General Court in 1647, and the same year was elected secretary of state; was again deputy to the General Court in 1649, when he also served as Clerk of Deputies, was again elected secretary in 1651, and annually re-elected until the usurpation of the government by Sir Edmund Andros in 1686. To the office of secretary was added by the General Court that of recorder of the County of Suffolk, which he held many years. Grants of land were made to him at different times for "extraordinary services." His family Bible, still in the possession of the family, contains the following certificate in the hand writing of his son William. "This may certify whome it may concerne, that Edward Rawson (Secretary) was born in old England in the yeare of our Lord 1615, April 16th, and departed this life August 27th day, in the yeare of our Lord 1693, in New England, aged 78 years." This Bible is doubtless over 250 years old. To Edward Rawson were born twelve children: the eldest was a daughter, name not given, who remained in England; Edward graduated Harvard College 1653, and returned to England in 1655; Rachel married William Aubray of Boston; David, born 1644, went to England; Perne, married Rev. Torrey; Susan died young; William; Rebecca died young; Rebecca (2) married Thomas Rumsey; Elizabeth, married Rev. Mr. Broughton; John; and Grindal married Susannah Wilson.

Luther & Rawson

William Rawson, son of the emigrant, was born May 21, 1651, in Newbury. He married July 31, 1673, Ann, daughter of Nathaniel Glover. It seems "they complied with the first and great command given to man—to be fruitful and multiply—for in the space of twenty-five years they had twenty living children, eleven sons and nine daughters." He resided in Boston, where the births of ten of his children are recorded. He removed to Dorchester where two more were born, thence to Braintree, now Quincy, to the ancient Rawson farm which he purchased of the immediate descendants of the Rev. John Wilson of Boston, his great uncle. This farm adjoins the homestead of Hon. Josiah Quincy, late President of Harvard College. The mother of Ann Glover was "the only child of Mr. Quartermaster Smith by his first wife, formerly of Lancashire, in England, and afterwards of Dorchester, in New England." Five of the children of William Rawson married and left posterity. The following died in infancy or in early childhood: Ann, Wilson, Margaret, Edward, Edward (2), Rachel, Dorothy, Dorothy (2), Ebenezer, Thankful, Ebenezer (2), Ann (2), Patience, Grindal and Mary; those who grew to maturity were, William, David, Nathaniel, Edward and Peletiah.

Nathaniel Rawson, son of William, was born in 1689, in Braintree, and died at Mendon, Mass. He married Hannah, daughter of Samuel Thompson of Braintree, and they had five children: Samuel, Nathaniel, Barnabas, Edward and Rachel.

Barnabas Rawson, son of Nathaniel, was born Aug. 11, 1721, in Mendon, and died in Woodstock. He lived in Mendon until after the birth of four of his children, when he moved to Woodstock, where he settled on a full section of land. His wife Mary, bore him children as follows: Louis, who died young; David; Asa; Josiah; Ruth; Elizabeth, who died young; Lois (2); and Elizabeth (2).

David Rawson, son of Barnabas, was born Dec. 18, 1745, in Mendon and died in North Woodstock, where he was a prosperous farmer and highly respected citizen. His children were: Asa, deceased early; Asa (2); Lois; Josiah; Luther; and Calvin.

Luther Rawson, son of David, was born Nov. 19, 1777, in North Woodstock, and died in the same place Sept. 4, 1847. On Jan. 20, 1803, he was united in marriage with Mollie May, who was born in North Woodstock Jan. 23, 1779, and died there Sept. 4, 1851. Luther Rawson was a farmer, and he also carried on the trade of carpenter. He served for years as justice of the peace, and was known through life as "Squire" Rawson. He took a very active part in the Masonic fraternity, holding several offices of high rank. His children were: (1) Erasmus was the father of our subject. (2) Danforth, born Sept. 22, 1805, died in North Woodstock; he married in 1832, Almira Buckman, daughter of Abel Buckman, and she died Feb. 18, 1847, the mother of one daughter, Susan F., who first married Henry F. Paine, and second Royal B. Paine, both sons of James and Phoebe (Palmer) Paine of Woodstock. (3) Stiles, born Aug. 20, 1807, married Lucy, daughter of Isaac Hibbard, of Woodstock. (4) Charles Dighton, born March 14, 1810, died in Woodstock Feb. 15, 1881. He married Elmira Lyon, of Woodstock, and their children were: Luther, who died May 27, 1845, aged one year and eight months; William died Nov. 11, 1859, aged nineteen years and eleven months; and Charles Evans, a farmer of North Woodstock, married Clara M. Perrin, daughter of Moses S. Perrin. Charles D. Rawson was in early life a jeweler, then a dentist, and for years before his death practiced his profession in Woodstock with great success. In political faith he was a Republican and active in the affairs of the party. He was a member of the Congregational church and a man of fine character, with pure and unselfish motives, and he was a universal favorite. (5) Calvin, born Oct. 10, 1811, died young. (6) John Emerson, born June 19, 1814, died young. (7) Mary May, born Feb. 12, 1815, died a spinster. (8) Luther Emerson a farmer, married Elizabeth May, and died in Grosvenor Dale.

Erasmus Rawson, the revered father of our subject, was born Oct. 10, 1803, and died in North Woodstock April 7, 1878. On Aug. 27, 1827, he married Nancy Hibbard who was born Dec. 4, 1805, in East Woodstock, and died April 5, 1883, in North Woodstock, a daughter of Isaac and Jemima (Jordan) Hibbard, of Woodstock. To this union were born: (1) Samuel Tufts, born May 15, 1829, died Aug. 23, 1833. (2) Joseph Emerson, born May 24, 1833, now living in Putnam, is a carpenter in the employ of B. M. Kent; he married, Nov. 19, 1856, Susan W. Hibbard, daughter of Charles Hibbard, of Woodstock. His children are: Alice, who married John Diamond, and had two children, Earl and Fannie, and died Feb. 4, 1887; Nancy; a daughter that died unnamed, and Alsie. (3) Lucy Hibbard, born Jan. 3, 1836, married, April 5, 1860, Henry C. Penniman, of East Woodstock. (4) Nancy Ellen, born Dec. 25, 1839, married Dec. 17, 1863, George Torrey, of Central Village, Conn., and their children are: Willis, Lucy Ellen, Emily Isabelle, George Rawson and Grace Louise.

Erasmus Rawson was a successful farmer, jovial in disposition, and a hard worker. He was a staunch Republican, and held the offices of justice of the peace, assessor, and member of the school committee over twenty years. He was also a notary public. He attended the Congregational church.

Luther E. Rawson, the gentleman whose name introduces this review, was born April 13, 1846, in North Woodstock, in the same house in which he now resides. He was educated in the schools of his home district, and in private schools, and later in the select school of East Woodstock. At the age of eighteen he began farming in connection with his father on the home place, and at the death of the latter succeeded to his property. The farm contains seventy-five acres of good land, which is in a good state of cultivation. He has been engaged on the home place all his life except the years of 1892-93, which he spent on the dairy farm of Darling Bros., at Auburn. Mr. Rawson interests himself in progressive methods of agriculture, and is a worthy member of Woodstock Grange, No. 150. In religious matters he attends the Congregational Church, of which his wife is an active member. In political faith he is a Republican in national and State affairs, but is non-partisan in his support of men for local offices.

On June 4, 1868, Mr. Rawson married Mary Frances Bucklin, daughter of John H. and Ardelia (Williams) Bucklin, the later a direct descendant of the noted divine and philanthropist, Roger Williams, her grandmother, Betsey Williams, being named by the original Betsey for herself. Mr. Bucklin was a cotton cloth manufacturer in early life, and later went to Putnam, where he was in business until his death, with John O. Fox. Our subject and his wife have one daughter, Clara Isabelle, who was born Aug. 12, 1870, and educated at Woodstock Academy; she taught school successfully nine years in Woodstock and two in Auburn, Mass. On June 27, 1900, she married Calvin Luther Rawson, a prominent resident of Norwich; he is a lawyer by profession, but has never been obliged to follow it. Mr. and Mrs. Luther E. Rawson are genial, whole-souled people, and as a result of their hospitality and good cheer number their friends in myriads.

WALTER SCOTT HEWITT is the leading merchant of Hebron, Tolland county, and one of the prominent and influential citizens of that town. He traces his ancestry to Capt. Thomas Hewitt, who first appeared in Mystic River, Conn., in command of a coasting vessel, in 1656, and purchased the surplus products of the Stonington planters for the purpose of trade and barter among the West Indies. While in Stonington he became acquainted with Hannah-Palmer, a daughter of Walter and Rebecca (Short) Palmer, and they were married in 1659, by Thomas Miner. To them were born two children, Thomas, Jr., born in 1660; and Benjamin, two years later. During the fall of 1662, Capt. Hewitt left for the West Indies in a heavily loaded vessel, and with his departure from the coast of Connecticut he disappeared from the knowledge of the world. No doubt his ship foundered at sea, and all on board were lost. His widow received an offer of marriage in 1670 from Roger Sterry, of Preston, Conn., which she did not feel at liberty to accept on account of the uncertainty of the death of her husband, and petitioned the General Court for such action as might afford her relief. She had not heard from him in eight years, and it was the belief of the community that the ship went down at sea. The General Court, taking up the matter and reviewing the evidence, voted that the said Hannah Hewitt "is at liberty to marry, if she shall see cause." Mr. Sterry renewed his offer of marriage, and they were married Aug. 25, 1670. They became the parents of two children, Samuel, born in 1671; and Hannah, born the following year. Mr. Sterry died in 1680, and a year later his widow became the wife of John Fish. She was his third wife, and he her third husband. Previous to this marriage they entered into a matrimonial jointure, which appears at large in the Stonington land records.

Benjamin Hewitt, son of Capt. Thomas, was married Sept. 24, 1683, to Mary Fanning, a daughter of Edmund and Ellen Fanning, of Stonington. To this union were born: Benjamin, Israel and Tabitha, who were baptized July 24, 1692; Mary, Aug. 12, 1694; Joseph, in 1696; Elkanah, in 1699; Hannah, in 1701; Henry, in 1704; Content, in 1708; and Thankful, in 1711.

Major Israel Hewitt, of the above family, was married March 8, 1714, to Anna Breed, a daughter of John and Mercy (Palmer) Breed, of Stonington. To this marriage were born the following children: Annie, born Aug. 10, 1716; Zerviah, born May 3, 1719; Israel, born July 12, 1723; Rufus, born July 9, 1726; Charles, born Aug. 16, 1730; and Anna, born Nov. 8, 1734.

Charles Hewitt, son of Maj. Israel, was married Oct. 28, 1756, to Hannah, daughter of Joseph and Anna (Wheeler) Stanton, by whom he had the following family: Charles, born Aug. 16, 1757; Hannah, born Dec. 22, 1758; Stanton, born Oct. 8, 1760; Isaac, born Jan. 28, 1762; Eli, born July 31, 1764; Perez, born April 29, 1770; Palmer, born Jan. 14, 1774; Anna, born Aug. 27, 1777; and Polly, born Dec. 1, 1781.

Palmer Hewitt, son of Charles, was the grandfather of Walter Scott Hewitt, and was married Feb. 23, 1800, to Eunice Williams, a daughter of George and Nancy (Hewitt) Williams. She outlived her husband, and died in New London at the home of one of her children. Palmer Hewitt was a farmer, and lived near the town of Preston, Conn., and there the following children were born to him and his wife: Elisha, born Dec. 28, 1800, married and was engaged in the trucking business in New London, where he died; Eliza W., born March 11, 1803, married Alfred Gallup, a farmer, lived in Salem, Conn., but died in New London at an advanced age; Emeline S., born July 24, 1806, married Josiah F. Keeney, a carpenter, and both died in New London; Eunice, married Edward Ashby, a sea-faring man, who died in New London; and Avery P., born July 14, 1814, was the father of Walter Scott Hewitt.

Avery P. Hewitt was reared to farm work, and when young learned the carpenter trade in New London, where he worked at that trade for many years. In his later life he was engaged in trucking and teaming until 1860, in which year he embarked in a mercantile enterprise on the corner of Main and Williams streets in New London, in which he continued as long as he lived. For several years he suffered from poor health prior to his death, June 29, 1877. His remains were buried in the Cedar Grove Cemetery at New London. Mr. Hewitt was a Republican, and he belonged to the Baptist Church in New London. On April 29, 1838, Avery P. Hewitt was married to Harriet Miner, a native of Salem, Conn., and a daughter of Christopher Miner, a farmer of that town. Mrs. Hewitt died Dec. 9, 1863, the mother of two children: Walter Scott; and Edwina Gertrude, born April 8, 1848, died Sept. 18, 1869.

Walter Scott Hewitt was born Sept. 21, 1843, on Amity street, New London, Conn., and received his education in the public schools and Bartlett High School in that city. When he was sixteen he left school to begin work in his father's store, and a few years later he became a partner in the firm of A. P. Hewitt & Son. In his last years the health of his father was poor, and the management of the store fell on the shoulders of our subject. About a year after the death of the father the store was sold out, and Mr. Hewitt moved to Hebron for a brief stay, when he went back to New London, to buy back the old store. There he successfully conducted business until 1882, when he again disposed of the store, to return to Hebron, and buy his present property, the Jonathan Page homestead. This property he remodeled, making the front a store room, in which, with the opening of the year 1883, he established a store, which is now the leading interest of the kind in the town, doing a general mercantile trade, and holding a high reputation both for goods and treatment of its patrons.

In November, 1867, Mr. Hewitt was married, in Hebron, to Emily DeL. Northam, who was born March 24, 1850, a native of Hebron, and a daughter of John K. and Harriet G. (Briggs) Northam. To this union has come one child: John N., born May 16, 1869, was married Jan. 28, 1890, to Bertha M. Chapin, a daughter of Rev. George E. and Susan A. (Robinson) Chapin, the former a clergyman of the Congregational Church, and to this marriage have come Sidney Northam (born May 15, 1892) and Walter Chapin (born March 16, 1895). John N. Hewitt assists his father in the store.

Mr. Hewitt is a Republican, and was a representative from Hebron to the State Legislature in 1889, where he served on the committee on Railroads. Since 1889 he has held the position of town treasurer. Mr. Hewitt was a member of Lyon Lodge, F. & A. M., of Columbia, before that lodge went out of existence. With his family he belongs to the Hebron Congregational Church, in which he is an active worker.

FRANK H. DEMING is endowed with the qualities that win success at every step in life. He is descended from John Deming, who came to this country from England and settled, about 1716, at Wethersfield, Connecticut.

Sylvester Deming, grandfather of Frank H., was a Wethersfield farmer, in which town he was born, and where he lived many years. Later he moved to Hartford, and there died. He had six children, four sons and two daughters. His wife's father was a shoemaker and a soldier in the Revolution; and it was his privilege to make the first pair of boots ever worn by George Washington.

Daniel M. Deming, the father of Frank H., was during his long and active life engaged as a butcher and farmer, and was also active in public affairs. Born in Wethersfield, Aug. 15, 1819, he moved with his parents to Hartford in his boyhood. At the early age of sixteen, upon his father's death, he went to work in a butcher shop of a Mr. Moss, at the corner of Temple and Market streets, Hartford, and in the Moss slaughter house, which stood in what is now a part of Ward street, and he continued to engage in this line many years. Strict attention to business and prudence enabled him in the course of time to purchase a farm on Cedar Hill and to start a small milk route in the city, which he carried on in addition to his work as a butcher, adding materially to his income. While living in Hartford, Mr. Deming was married, March 5, 1843, to Ann McMoran, who was born at Vernon, Conn., June 8, 1820, daughter of John and Jane (Howe) McMoran. Mr. and Mrs. Deming had four children: Ellen R., now the wife of Charles Loomis, a carpenter and builder of Hartford; Albert C., manager of the Ingraham, Swift & Co.'s meat depot at Hartford, who married Anna Bennett, and after her death Electa Raymond (he has one child, Alice); Frank H.; and William B., now a carpenter at South Manchester, Conn., who married Delia Kimball, and has two children, Clara B. and Florence A.

Mr. Deming finally sold the "Cedar Hill" farm and moved with his wife and children to Kensington, in the town of Berlin, where he remained five years. There, as in Hartford, he engaged in the butcher business and farming. He returned for two years, and in March, 1865, purchased the large "Asa Burnham" farm, in Hampton, where he passed the rest of his active life. He carried on general farming and cut the timber which covered part of this tract. The success of his business and agricultural ventures, and his frugal habits, together with the help of his wife, enabled Mr. Deming to spend his last days in leisure. In 1893 he and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Mrs. Deming still survives. He died May 14, 1899, and was buried in the Zion's Hill cemetery, at Hartford. Mr. Deming was one of the most forceful and influential men in Hampton. He was an active Republican, and for many years filled very acceptably many town offices, including those of selectman and justice of the peace. In 1881 he represented Hampton in the State Legislature, where his sound judgment and financial ability won him a place on the important committee on Banking. In Hartford, where he got his start in life, he was also highly respected. He was at one time a member of the Governor's Horse Guards and also of Putnam Phalanx. At the age of sixteen, about the time his father died, he joined the Hartford Baptist Church, and after its division worshipped with the South congregation. He was a man of abstemious habits, using neither tobacco nor liquor in any form. One of his pastimes was the breeding of fast horses, but he never raced them. Possessed of splendid judgment, a fearless, outspoken manner, a powerful physique, and an unlimited capacity for work, he fought his own place out in life without the slightest assistance from others, and his force was seldom misdirected.

Frank H. Deming was born at the "Cedar Hill" farm in Hartford Sept. 12, 1854, shortly before the family moved to Kensington. Beginning attendance at the schools of the latter town, he obtained most of his rather limited education—after the age of ten he could attend schools only in winters—at Hartford and Clark's Corners, Hampton. By helping his father with the butchering and on the farm, he acquired considerable knowledge of the meat business, and at the age of nineteen, went to Quidnick, R. I., and hired out as a clerk in the meat market of A. & W. Sprague. He worked there faithfully for two and one-half years, when the firm failed and he returned to the farm to work. After a short time he secured a position in a grocery store at Valley Falls, R. I., where he clerked three years. He then went back to work on the home farm for a while, and subsequently purchased the meat business of Darius Shippee, of Clark's Corner. He spent the most profitable years of his life in this business, his route extending over the towns of Hampton, Chaplin, Scotland, Brooklyn and Pomfret. Mr. Deming's capacity for work exceeded the management of his extensive meat business. In 1885 he purchased a neat little twenty-four acre farm in Hampton and engaged in agriculture. Here he has made many improvements, and the farm has now some very attractive buildings, all of which he erected. In September, 1898, he decided to give his entire attention to his farm. His very desirable meat route, which he had been conducting for so many years he very generously gave as a present to Charles E. Burnham, of Hampton, who now operates it. Besides carrying on his farm, Mr. Deming has in the last few years, engaged in buying and butchering calves, wholesale. Mr. Deming has always believed in keeping in touch with progressive movements, especially with those of direct assistance to him in business.

While clerking at Valley Falls, R. I., April 25, 1880, Mr. Deming married Emma C. Darling, a native of Mansfield, Conn., daughter of Charles Darling, a woodworker. They have had one child, Howard Eugene, who died in infancy, in 1883.

When starting out as a young man, at Quidnick, R. I., Mr. Deming joined Anthony Lodge, No. 21, I. O. O. F. As an intelligent farmer, he is a member of Little River Grange, of Hampton, and second vice-president of the Windham County Agricultural Society. He upholds religion and attends the Congregational Church at Hampton, of which his wife has been organist for over twelve years. In politics he is an active Republican. Mr. Deming has declined many offices. He has, however, served as constable, took the local government census of 1900, and in 1901 was appointed special game warden for his district. He is also agent for the Humane Society. A man not given to currying favors, but public-spirited and generous, Mr. Deming is very widely respected.

GEORGE SUMNER (deceased), in whose death Nov. 9, 1890, the Hartford Fire Insurance Co. lost one of the ablest clerks that has ever entered its office, was descended from an old and distinguished English family, whose coat of arms is described below:

ARMS—Ermines, 2 Chevrons Or. CREST—A Lion's head erased. Ermines, languid Gules and ducally gorged Or. MOTTO—In Medio tutissimus ibis.

This coat of arms was copied from one in the Herald's College, the last year, and was identified by Sir Charles Young, of that office, to be the Somner arms of the county of Kent, recorded at the visitation of that County in 1663. The motto was adopted by Gov. Increase Sumner.

The Sumner family has been one of considerable prominence, and especially has it been well represented in the military annals of the country, many serving in the Revolution and other wars, including the Civil war. Maj. Gen. Edwin V. Sumner, U. S. A., of the Civil war, was of this family, as was also Gov. Increase Sumner, of Massachusetts.

(I) William Sumner, born in 1605, only child of Roger and Joane (Franklin) Sumner, of Bicester, Oxfordshire, England, became a husbandman. He married there Oct. 22, 1625, Mary West. In 1636 he came to New England, and settled at Dorchester, Mass., being made a freeman of the Colony May 17, 1637. At various times he held many offices of respectable importance, being a selectman in Dorchester; in 1637, and for more than twenty other years; was one of the commissioners to try and issue small causes; was chosen clerk of the train band in 1663, and was deputy to the General Court from Dorchester in 1658, 1666-70, 1672, 1678, 1681, 1683 and 1686. He died Dec. 9, 1688, and his wife died June 7, 1676.

(II) George Sumner, son of William the emigrant, born in Bicester, England, in 1634, became a freeman of Massachusetts May 6, 1657. He was married at Northampton, Nov. 7, 1662, to Mary, daughter of Edward Baker, of Northampton, and lived in Milton where he was lieutenant deputy to the General Court in 1693, 1703 and 1708-09. He was ordained Deacon July 30, 1699. His death occurred in Milton, Dec. 11, 1715, and his widow passed away April 1, 1719.

(III) George Sumner (2), son of George, born Feb. 9, 1666, in Milton, married Ann Tucker, of Roxbury, and lived in Milton, dying Dec. 18, 1732.

(IV) Samuel Sumner, son of George (2), born Nov. 13, 1695, in Milton, married at Roxbury, Nov. 20, 1723, Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Griffin, of Roxbury, and lived for a time in Milton. He removed to Pomfret, Conn., where he was a deacon. He was a representative to the General Court in 1742, 1743 and 1747. He died Feb. 8, 1782, and his wife died Nov. 13, 1772.

(V) Samuel Sumner (2), son of Samuel, born Aug. 22, 1726, in Milton, married at Pomfret, Conn., April 15, 1754, Dorothy, daughter of William Williams, of Pomfret, and lived in that town. He died July 23, 1805, and his wife Aug. 29, 1800.

(VI) Samuel Sumner (3), son of Samuel (2), and grandfather of George, was born on what is now the George P. Sumner farm in Abington, in the town of Pomfret, Conn., Nov. 1, 1776, and there reared to farm work. On Jan. 23, 1793, he married Mary Tyler, of Brooklyn, daughter of Mehitabel (Putnam) Tyler, and granddaughter of Gen. Israel Putnam. Mr. and Mrs. Sumner resided on the Abington homestead and besides being engaged in farming throughout his mature life, he kept for a number of years one of the old stage line hotels. He was widely known as a large-hearted man, one generous deed of his being the gift of a bell to the Congregational Church. He died very suddenly in December, 1821, and his wife June 12, 1832.

(VII) Hon. Samuel Putnam Sumner (4), son of Samuel (3), and father of George, was well-known as a farmer and hotel-keeper in Abington and was also prominent in public affairs. Born on the homestead, Feb. 3, 1807, for a number of years he did a boy's work about the farm and hotel. How thoroughly he mastered his tasks is shown by the fact that at the early age of fourteen, upon the death of his father, he shouldered the responsible management of both lines of business, and conducted them with success for many years. Finally the railroad came through Pomfret, putting an end to the old stage line and the contingent country inns—his among them. In the meantime, April 19, 1830, he married Jemima Ann Goffe, of Pomfret, who died Feb. 5, 1875; in her sixty-fifth year. Mr. and Mrs. Sumner had seven children: (1) Samuel, born April 24, 1831, clerked in a hardware store in Hartford, and was contemplating settling in Australia, but contracted the measles, when about to start, and died at his home, June 19, 1852. (2) George is mentioned below. Three sons, (3) Joseph (born July 12, 1836), (4) Edward Tyler (born March 11, 1839), and (5) Israel Putnam (born Jan. 20, 1842) were sergeants in Connecticut Volunteer Regiments during the Civil war. Joseph, after an honorable discharge, Sept. 28, 1862, engaged as a sutler, and at the close of the war, clerked for some time in a hotel in New York, and later engaged in business in Hartford, but in the spring of 1875 he returned to the farm in Pomfret, and now resides in New Haven; his wife, formerly Harriet M. Storrs, of Brooklyn, died Dec. 11, 1895. Edward Tyler, sergeant in the 11th Conn. V. I., died in Pomfret, Aug. 13, 1864, from illness contracted in the service. Israel Putnam, sergeant in the 7th Conn. V. I., died as a prisoner of war at Belle Isle, Va., Feb. 13, 1864. (6) Charles, born Feb. 19, 1845, died May 23, 1852. (7) Mary Elizabeth, born March 27, 1847, married, March 17, 1869, Albert E. Potter, a well-known school teacher.

After closing his hotel Mr. Sumner clerked for one year in an insurance office in Southbridge, Mass. Then, for the rest of his life he confined his business ventures exclusively to the management of the Sumner homestead. He built an addition to the house and kept the place generally intact. His death occurred Oct. 21, 1880, and he is buried in Abington. As an unwavering Republican he evinced a keen interest in public affairs, and in 1847 very creditably represented Pomfret in the State Legislature. He was a well informed, practical business man.

George Sumner was born in the ancestral home in Abington, in the town of Pomfret, March 1, 1833. By attending the district school of his neighborhood, and, for one term Woodstock Academy, he acquired a thorough, rudimentary education, which later served him more than once in his successful business career. When Mr. Brinsmade began the preliminary survey of the railroad through Pomfret, George was quite young, but so ambitious to make a start in life was he that he engaged as stakeman. Immediately bending his energies to the study of railroad construction, he was soon promoted to division engineer. Continuing in this line he assisted in the building of several railroads, among them, the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill, during the construction of which his headquarters were at Bristol, Conn. In December, 1860, when about twenty-seven years old, he went to Hartford and secured a position with the Hartford Fire Insurance Co., there, remaining in its employ for the rest of his life.

On May 20, 1873, Mr. Sumner married Frances Lucy Osgood, who was born in Abington, July 14, 1846, daughter of Charles and Lucy (Holbrook) Osgood, whose family is mentioned elsewhere. Mrs. Sumner graduated from Kimball Union Academy at Meriden, N. H., in 1868. In 1892, two years after the death of Mr. Sumner, she and her only child, George Putnam Sumner, born at Hartford July 5, 1874, moved to the family homestead in Abington, where they now reside.

She is a member of the Abington Congregational Church. After attending the high schools at Hartford and Putnam, graduating from the latter in 1895, George Putnam Sumner entered Amherst College (1896), from which he graduated in 1900; he was a member of the Delta Upsilon fraternity, and also of the College Musical Association. He votes the Republican ticket.

After entering the Fire Insurance Co. at Hartford, Mr. Sumner's studious habits enabled him to master readily the details of the work, and his accuracy and honesty so gained him favor with his employers, that he was soon entrusted with responsible business of the company. For over thirty years he worked for this company, winning both laurels for himself and a highly remunerative salary. He died of typhoid fever at his Hartford residence on Jefferson Street, and is buried in Abington. No higher proof of Mr. Sumner's integrity could be given than the record of his business career. He was notary public for many years. In politics a staunch Republican, he was keenly interested in public affairs, but, as a quiet, unostentatious man he was wholly averse to office seeking. As a highly respected member of the Congregational Church, and because of his winning social attributes and generous disposition, he gained friends in the best circles, especially in Hartford where he achieved his greatest success.

MYRON FULLER DAVIS. Among the prosperous and highly respected men of Tolland county, Conn., is Myron Fuller Davis, of Stafford, who was born in West Stafford, Oct. 14, 1856, a son of Noah Chapin Davis.

Grandfather Deacon Daniel Davis was born Oct. 26, 1768, in West Stafford, and died Oct. 27, 1847. He was married Sept. 26, 1798, to Margaret Chapin. To them were born: Daniel, who was born July 8, 1799, and died Feb. 5, 1803; Sophia, born April 24, 1801, and died Feb. 18, 1803; Daniel, born March 7, 1803, died Jan. 28, 1877; an infant, born June 23, 1805, and died the same day; Alden, born April 17, 1807, and died Oct. 17, 1887; Spencer, born April 3, 1809, and died Oct. 13, 1897; Sophia, born June 22, 1811, and died April 11, 1838; David, born Aug. 8, 1813, and died Feb. 3, 1888; Noah, born May 19, 1815, died Jan. 12, 1892.

The great-grandfather, Noah Davis, was born April 29, 1741, in Stafford, and died there Oct. 30, 1828, having married Sarah Alden, of Stafford; he was a representative in the Legislature in 1812. Sarah Alden, who was born Feb. 17, 1748, and died Dec. 9, 1776, was in the sixth generation from John Alden, who came over on the "Mayflower" in 1620, and was the first to set foot on Plymouth Rock, through Daniel, her father, a deacon and prominent man of Stafford; Daniel; Deacon Joseph and Capt. John.

Noah Chapin Davis was born May 19, 1815, in the same house where Myron Fuller Davis, his son, now resides. All his life he was a hard-working farmer and success crowned his efforts. Religiously, he was a member of the Congregational Church of West Stafford and very active in the work, serving for many years on the society committee, and on the committee which moved the church to its present location. In politics, he was a very staunch Republican and took an active part in local affairs, representing the town of Stafford in the State Legislature in 1883, and also holding many minor offices.

His first marriage occurred on Nov. 1, 1842, to Mary Harrison Graves, of Three Rivers, Mass.; she was born Jan. 9, 1810, and died Feb. 15, 1849, having borne one child, Albert Noah, who was born Aug. 17, 1843, and died April 15, 1867. The second marriage of the father took place June 5, 1851, to Martha Caroline Fuller, a native of Columbia, Conn., who was born Aug. 18, 1817, and died March 5, 1863. The children of the second marriage were: Mary Cordelia, born June 21, 1852, who married Aug. 30, 1876, John R. Gilbert, of Hebron, Conn., a farmer; and Myron Fuller. Noah C. Davis was married a third time on June 19, 1867, to Elizabeth F. Brown, a native of Hebron, Conn., who was born March 31, 1808, and died Oct. 12, 1893. No children were born of this union.

Myron Fuller Davis received his early education in the district schools of West Stafford, and later attended the South Hadley high school two terms and also went to Wilbraham three terms. When he attained the age of twenty, he left school and for one year devoted his entire time to farm work upon the homestead. From the time he was eight, it had been his custom, as it was that of nearly every farmer's son, to work upon the farm in summer and attend school for the three months' winter term, and it is remarkable what good foundations were laid in those district schools for an excellent education, for the boys took advantage of every opportunity offered.

When he had attained his majority, Myron learned the trade of machinist with D. E. Whiton, at West Stafford, and there he remained six years; but when Mr. Whiton removed his shops to New London, Conn., Mr. Davis returned to the home farm and in addition to working upon it, taught school for one year. At this time the position of assistant superintendent of the Hampden county truant school, at Springfield, Mass., was offered, and he held it until he entered the employ of Smith & Wesson in their fire arms factory, in Springfield, Massachusetts.

After a few months, Mr. Davis removed to Holyoke, Mass., where he engaged in the laundry business for nearly a year, but in April, 1888, he returned to the homestead, and has been engaged in farming ever since, his fine farm consisting of about 190 acres of excellent land, where he carries on general farming and keeps twenty-five head of cattle, selling his cream to Somers' Creamery.

The first marriage of Mr. Davis occurred Oct.

14, 1889, to Caroline Cleveland Breed, born Oct. 14, 1859, a daughter of Rev. David Breed and Caroline Louisa (Lyman) Breed. Mrs. Davis died March 14, 1895, in West Stafford, Conn., having borne her husband three children: Ethel Mary, who was born April 14, 1891; Albert Noah, born April 3, 1893; and George Breed, born March 5, 1895. The second marriage of Mr. Davis was solemnized on Aug. 23, 1899, when he was united to Miss Edith Eleanor Bradway, who was born March 6, 1875, and is the charming and accomplished daughter of Deacon Charles Philip and Sarah (Haughwout) Bradway, of West Stafford, Conn. They have one son, Emerson Bradway Davis, born March 9, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are earnest members of the Congregational church of West Stafford, Conn., and Mrs. Davis is one of the active members of the Endeavor society. In politics, Mr. Davis is a staunch Republican and has been honored with the office of assessor two successive terms. Mr. Davis is a man whose standing in the community is very high, and the success which has attended him is but the fruit of his honorable endeavors.

FRANK FLETCHER WEBB, one of the best-known men in financial circles in Willimantic, Windham county, is vice president of the Windham National Bank, and has had a most successful career, being regarded as one of the most honorable and altogether cleanest business men to be found anywhere. His history shows nothing but straightforward methods, fair and square dealings, and an unusual anxiety to give full value for all he receives. The success which has met him springs from ability and industry, and a shrewd sense of values that prevents mistakes common to most enterprises, and his mercantile and public career have alike been honorable and successful.

Mr. Webb is in the eighth generation from Christopher Webb, the emigrant ancestor of the family, the line of descent being from Christopher Webb, through Samuel, Nathaniel, John, Jared, John, John Paschal, to Frank F., whose name introduces this article.

(I) Christopher Webb, who was born about 1630, is early recorded at Weymouth, or Braintree, Mass. In 1678 he was chosen clerk of the town of Braintree, and was an ensign at the time of his death in 1694. He was married in 1654 to Hannah Scott.

(II) Samuel Webb, son of Christopher, born in 1660, was married in 1686 to Mary Adams, who was born in 1668, a daughter of Joseph and Abigail (Baxter) Adams, and a granddaughter of Henry Adams, one of the very first settlers of Windham. She was the sister of Joseph Adams, the grandfather of John Adams, who was the second President of the United States. Samuel Webb lived at Braintree, but in 1706 purchased a lot of Thomas Huntington in Windham Center, where he died about 1738, his widow passing away in 1744, at the age of eighty years.

(III) Nathaniel Webb, son of Samuel, born in 1696, in Braintree, was married in 1718, to Elizabeth, a daughter of John Fitch. He lived on the west side of Town street, where the Webbs had long been established, and died in 1750, his widow surviving him many years, dying in 1780, at the age of eighty-four years.

(IV) John Webb, son of Nathaniel, was born in 1719, and was married in 1746 to Ann Devotion, and died Feb. 27, 1787. She died in 1805, at the age of eighty-one years.

(V) Jared Webb, son of John, born June 10, 1759, was married June 3, 1790, to Prudence, daughter of William Mudge. Mr. Webb died Jan. 24, 1818, and his widow, March 28, 1847, at the age of eighty-two years.

(VI) John Webb, son of Jared, was born May 8, 1791, and was married Oct. 2, 1817, to Nabby, a daughter of William D. Foster, of Canterbury. Mr. Webb died Sept. 19, 1855. He was a farmer and lived in the town of Scotland, about a mile north of the original Webb location, on Pudding Hill, a half mile east of the village of Scotland. Three of his children lived to adult age: (1) John Paschal, became the father of Frank F. Webb. (2) Elizabeth D. married D. F. Lincoln, a son of Stowell Lincoln, who years ago constructed the felt mill at North Windham, afterward operated by his son, D. F.; Mrs. D. F. Lincoln now resides in Hartford. (3) Joel Wales, born Sept. 15, 1834, was a prominent man in Willimantic, where he lived from 1864 until his death, in 1895. He was a life long Democrat, and served as postmaster at Willimantic, during the second Cleveland administration; in 1890 and 1891 he was first selectman. In his religious views John Webb was a Universalist, and as a good citizen of the community, a prosperous farmer, and a model man his reputation was beyond question.

(VI) Thomas Webb, son of Jared, a brother of John Webb, was a farmer, and lived on the old Webb homestead in Scotland. His wife, Mary Dorrance, bore him the following children: Myron W., now of Hartford; Benjamin, who died in Hartford; Lucy R., who married Henry Lincoln, and is now a widow in Scotland; and Susan, who married William Palmer, and is a widow in Scotland.

(VI) Mary A. Webb, a sister of John Webb (2), died in Scotland in October, 1888.

(VII) John Paschal Webb was born Dec. 8, 1820, in Scotland, on the old Webb farm, in a house that was the temporary home of his parents while another was being built, and was reared and educated after the fashion of the farmer people of the day. He was married Feb. 20, 1850, to Miss Rhoda Kingsley, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Backus) Kingsley. She was born in Westminster parish, in the town of Canterbury, and died in May, 1893, in Windham, Conn., her remains resting in the Center Cemetery. Mr. Webb was a farmer and commanded the highest respect from all with whom he was acquainted. His fellow townsmen frequently called him to positions of responsibility, his political associations being with the Democratic party. His personal character was beyond reproach, and he was a Christian man in the fullest sense. He was a Universalist in religious faith, but the Scotland Congregational Church found in him a conscientious and earnest worker. When Mr. Webb died March 13, 1867, he had just completed all arrangements for removing to Willimantic the following month. His ashes rest in the Cemetery at Scotland Center.

Frank Fletcher Webb, the only child of his parents, was born Nov. 6, 1852, in the town of Scotland, and was reared a farmer boy, remaining with his parents during his youth and attending the public schools of his native town, being under the instruction of Dr. R. Robertson, now of Danielson, Conn., and William H. Bennett, now a prominent attorney of Minneapolis. He also took a course of study in the high school at Willimantic, and terminated his school days at the age of seventeen years. After the death of his father the old homestead was sold, and the family removed to Willimantic, where our subject soon entered the store of B. C. Grant as a clerk, and later was employed by Carpenter & Fowler in their hardware establishment. In March, 1879, he formed a partnership with J. B. Baldwin, and they engaged in the clothing and gentlemen's furnishing business under the name of Baldwin & Webb. Their store was located in the Union Block, where now are Davis & Fullerton, but Mr. Webb retired in 1886, and in June of the following year became connected with the Willimantic Savings Institute, very soon being appointed assistant treasurer. In March, 1888, he was chosen secretary and treasurer, in which position he served for two years, when his health demanded a change of occupation. Accordingly Mr. Webb resigned from the Institute, and April 1, 1890, removed to Windham, where he made his home for eight years. In the summer of 1898 he returned to Willimantic, where he has resided to the present time. While not in a steady business either now or while in Windham, his private and extensive interests have fully occupied his time. Mr. Webb has been a director in the Windham National Bank since 1879, and succeeded Mason Lincoln in 1889, as vice president of that institution, a position he still retains. He is also vice president, trustee and director of the Willimantic Savings Institute.

Mr. Webb has often shown his public spirit by his ready cooperation in measures looking to the general good, notably in the promotion of the Windham Silk Co., of Willimantic, of which he was one of the organizers, and secured much of the subscription for its stock. Mr. Webb is connected with the Congregational Church, belonging to the Ecclesiastical Society of that denomination, and while in Windham served as one of the trustees of the local church. Mrs. Webb belongs to the Woman's Club of Willimantic. Mr. Webb has owned much real estate in Willimantic, and prior to May 1, 1901, dealt extensively in desirable property.

HON. OSCAR TOURTELLOTTE, a prominent public man and citizen of North Grosvenor Dale, town of Thompson, Windham county, and still active in business pursuits, has long been one of that community's substantial men and a useful member of society.

Born Sept. 7, 1839, in Thompson, a son of Joseph and Amy (Joslin) Tourtellotte, the subject of this sketch is of Huguenot stock, and in paternal line descends from Abraham Tourtellot, a French merchant from Bordeaux, who arrived in Boston from London, England, in the ship "Friendship" in 1687, and in maternal line from Thomas Josseline, a descendant of Sir Gilbert Jocelyne, who accompanied William, Duke of Normandy, in his expedition for the Conquest of England in 1066, and became the founder of the Joslin family in that country. Thomas Josseline came to America in the ship "Increase" in 1635, stopping in Hingham, Mass. From this latter ancestor Mr. Tourtellotte's lineage is through Israel (probably) Israel (2), Edward, Jesse and Amy Joslin; and his lineage from Abraham Tourtellot is through Abraham (2), Abraham (3), Isaac and Joseph Tourtellotte. For the early history of these families the reader is referred to the family headings Tourtellotte and Joslin. Through his mother Amy Joslin, Mr. Tourtellotte also traces his descent from Isaac Alerton, who came to New England in the "Mayflower" in 1620.

The family of Isaac Tourtellotte (born Nov. 20, 1752), who married a Miss Brown, and died June 6, 1837, were: Isaac; Abraham, who died when young; Alexander; Jacob; Zeromini; Polly, who married Nathaniel Mills; Sybil; and Joseph, born March 2, 1796.

Joseph Tourtellotte, son of Isaac and the father of Oscar Tourtellotte of North Grosvenor Dale, was born March 2, 1796, and died Sept. 8, 1874. He was married April 8, 1823, to Amy, daughter of Jesse Joslin, who was born Nov. 25, 1803, and died May 17, 1879; both are buried in the Tourtellotte cemetery. They were plain, unassuming farming people of their community, and held the respect and esteem of their neighbors and friends. Mr. Tourtellotte in boyhood attended the neighborhood district schools, and also went to a private school kept by Rev. Mr. Dow. Later he himself taught school in East Thompson, through seven successive winters, and worked on the farm in season. On reaching manhood he purchased a farm at New Boston, settled upon it, and there passed the residue of his life. Up to the Civil war he was a Democrat, and he then became and remained a Republican; among the town offices he held was that of selectman. He was identified with the Baptist Church. His children were (1) Isaac Newton, born March 8, 1824, was graduated from Brown University, became a prominent lawyer, and is now living retired at Los Angeles, Cal. He married Frances Barrett, who was born in Thompson, Conn., a daughter of Wheeler Barrett. (2) Augusta C., born June 4, 1825, married Hiram Carpenter (deceased), formerly a prominent citizen of Milford, Mass. (3) Jesse H., born Sept. 13, 1826, married Fanny Frances, of Canterbury, Conn., and is now a resident of Minersville, Cal., where he is engaged in mining, keeping hotel, etc. (4) Lovan, born Feb. 18, 1828, married E. L. Snow, of Sutton, Mass. (5) Joseph N., born May 3, 1831, died in Worcester, Mass., April 23, 1875. He was graduated from the Boston Medical College with the degree of M. D., and during the Civil war was assistant surgeon of the 23d Mass. V. I. (6) Frederick W., born Jan. 10, 1833, married Isabella Judson, and became a prominent lawyer at Chicago, Ill., in which city he died in 1899, leaving a son, Frederick Judson. During the Civil war Frederick W. was lieutenant-colonel of the 127th Ill. V. I. (7) Francis L., born Oct. 3, 1834, was graduated at a Medical School at Louisville, Ky., practiced medicine in the State of Alabama, where he died May 3, 1858. (8) John B., born Jan. 23, 1837, went to California in 1859, located at Minersville, Trinity Co., Cal., where he died Oct. 14, 1868. (9) Oscar, was born Sept. 7, 1839. (10) Ella Jane, born March 11, 1845, died in April, 1865.

The Connecticut ancestors of Oscar Tourtellotte were all farmers, and to rural pursuits he himself was reared. He grew up a farmer's son, and received such educational advantages as the neighborhood schools afforded, which later was supplemented by a course in the Nicholas Academy at Dudley, Mass. On the breaking out of the Civil war in 1861, young Tourtellotte enlisted as a private in Co. D, 25th Mass. V. I. He served his country to its credit, and with honor to himself through three years and returned to his native town with an honorable war record. This one paragraph from the history of his regiment is sufficient to evidence his strength of character: "Mr. Tourtellotte alone with his rifle captured a first lieutenant, a sergeant and twenty-four privates belonging to the 56th N. C. V."

Oscar Tourtellotte left the farm in 1876, and opened an insurance office and grain store in North Grosvenor Dale. Later on he discontinued the latter business. In the insurance business he has the active and successful. Since 1868 he has been a trial justice of the town, but his public career, however, began at an earlier date. On his return from the war he was chosen, in 1865, a member of the General Assembly of the State, serving in 1865 and 1866, and he was a member of the State Senate in 1876. The statement made in the History of Windham County, published some years ago, to the effect that Mr. Tourtellotte has been a member of Congress, is incorrect. He served his community as first selectman nineteen years. He was chosen a justice of the peace in 1868, and for thirty-four years has filled that office, his decisions being almost invariably sustained by the higher courts. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he belongs to the parish of that denomination at North Grosvenor Dale, where he is a class leader and a trustee. It is needless to say he bears the esteem and respect of his neighbors and acquaintances.

In February, 1861, Mr. Tourtellotte was married to Laura A. Carpenter, who, too, is a representative of an old and prominent New England ancestry. She was born in Dudley, Mass., a daughter of Deacon Charles and Polly (Perry) Carpenter, both of whom lived and died in Dudley. Mrs. Tourtellotte is a woman of refinement, devoted to her family and home. She is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church of North Grosvenor Dale. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Tourtellotte, three of whom died in infancy. Those living are:

(1) J. BURTON TOURTELLOTTE was born July 14, 1865, at New Boston, in the town of Thompson. In boyhood he attended the district schools and the East Greenwich (R. I.) Academy. After completing his schooling he for a time assisted his father in the store, and while yet in his teens he secured a position in the spinning department of the North Grosvenor Dale mills, where he was employed for two and a half years, receiving for his services fifty cents per day for the first few weeks. From this position he went into the office as clerk of the cotton department, and was there faithful to his charge for seven years, when, in 1892, he was promoted, being appointed superintendent of outside work connected with the mills, which included the company's farm and stock. He has since continued such relations with the company, giving satisfaction to his employers. Like his father he is popular, a true Republican, but no politician. He was for three years assessor of the town of Thompson. He is a member and steward of the M. E. Church. In August, 1890, he married Emma, daughter of Andrew Ladaux, born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, and their children are: Jesse Laura, Amy Clair, J. Burton, Jr., and Emma Rosalie. Mr. Tourtellotte is a charter member of Cornerstone Lodge, No. 122, A. F. A. M., of North Grosvenor Dale, and has filled the office of treasurer of the lodge since its organization. He is a member of the Grange, and is Past Captain of Camp No. 5, Sons of Veterans. He also filled the office of major of the Connecticut Department of Sons of Veterans for one year.

(2) Percival Perry Tourtellotte, born Nov. 19, 1870, at New Boston, town of Thompson, attended the neighborhood schools and the Dudley (Mass.) and East Greenwich (R. I.) Academies, and was graduated from Hinman's Business College, Worcester, Mass. His first work after leaving school was as bookkeeper for the T. K. Earl Manufacturing Co., of Worcester, after which he came to the North Grosvenor Dale Mills as inventory clerk. For some time he worked in the machine shop of the company, having a natural liking for mechanics, and then entered the engine room, where he learned engineering under Clarence Truesdale. He is now chief engineer at the North Grosvenor Dale Mills. On Sept. 1, 1891, he married Nellie, daughter of Frank S. Richmond, of the North Grosvenor Dale Mills, and to this union came two sons: Perry Richmond, born Aug. 6, 1892, who died Oct. 7, 1898; and Frank Oscar, born Sept. 1, 1902.

(3) Alfreton A. Tourtellotte, born at New Boston, attended the public schools of his locality, and is now a clerk in the office at Putnam of the New York, New Haven & Hartford R. R. Co. He married Eva Brown.

JOHN CALVIN TRACY is a jeweler in Williamantic, Windham county, who has made himself one of the leading and representative business men of the city by his own push, pluck and energy. In the fullest sense of the word he is a self-made man, and is one of the most substantial young merchants of the city in which he lives.

Mr. Tracy comes from one of the old Connecticut families, being a descendant in the eighth generation from Lieut. Thomas Tracy, one of the first proprietors of Norwich, Conn., the line of descent being through Lieut. Thomas Tracy; John; Winslow; Josiah; Calvin; Calvin; Calvin L.; and John C. Few of the colonists had relation to the nobility or shared the blood royal of England, and the fact that Lieut. Thomas Tracy was descended from Egbert, an early English King, from Alfred the Great, from Charlemagne, and from various distinguished characters in English history, gave him an undoubted social standing. The facts given above were gleaned from English archives by Judge Frederick P. Tracy, of California, a native of what is now Scotland, Conn., and who was most indefatigable and thorough in his investigations. The facts here condensed are taken from Chancellor Walworth's Hyde Genealogy, and are believed to be clearly established. Few English families can trace their ancestry or run their family history beyond the Conquest, but the Tracy family can trace its history in both male and female lines back for a thousand years, through thirty-five generations in the female line, and in the male line through twenty-three generations. If King Egbert was a descendant of Odin, there are forty-four generations, extending through a period of more than 1,500 years. The outside column of figures in the paragraphs below show the generations from Odin, and the inside the descent from Egbert, the first Saxon King.

(10-1.) Egbert, the first Saxon King of all England, supposed to be of the tenth generation from Odin, the master of a large part of the north of Europe in the third century, and crowned king of England in 800. He married Lady Red Burga, and in twenty years united the whole Heptarchy under his rule. Their eldest son was

(11-2.) Ethelwulf, whose youngest son was

(12-3.) Alfred the Great, one of the greatest and wisest kings who ever sat on the English throne. He was succeeded by his son,

(13-4.) Edward the Eldest; by his son,

(14-5.) Edmund, and later by his son,

(15-6.) Edgar, the Peaceable, and he by

(16-7.) Ethelred the Unready;

(17-8.) Princess Goda, the youngest daughter of King Ethelred the Unready, by his last wife, Emma, of Normandy, a daughter of Richard, the first Duke of Normandy. She was a sister to King Edward the Confessor, and married Drenx Count Vixen, called by English writers Walter de Mante, Count of Mants, who was descended from Charlemagne. The second son of Princess Goda was (18-9.) Rudolpho, or Ralph de Mantes, Lord of the Manor of Sudley and Toddington, and made Earl of Hereford by Edward the Confessor, but deprived of that title by the Conqueror. His only son was

(19-10.) Harold de Mantes, whose oldest son was (20-11.) John, Lord of Sudley and Toddington, who married Grace Tracy, daughter and heiress of Henry de Tracy, feudal lord of Barnstable in Devonshire. He had two sons, Ralph, and

(21-12.) Sir William Tracy, who inherited the lands of his mother, and assumed her family name. He was a knight of Gloucestershire, and was one of the number who assassinated Thomas a Becket, at the instigation of Henry II. His oldest son was

(22-13.) Sir Oliver Tracy, whose son was (23-14.) William Tracy, who took up arms against King John in 1215, and lost his property. His son was

(24-15.) Henry Tracy, whose son was

(25-16.) Henry Tracy, whose son was

(26-17.) Sir William Tracy, whose son was (27-18.) Sir William Tracy, a knight of Gloucestershire, a member of Parliament, and sheriff of the County. His son was (28-19.) William Tracy, who lived in the time of Edward the III.

(29-20.) Sir John Tracy, son of William, was knight of Gloucestershire; his son,

(30-21.) Sir John Tracy, of Toddington; whose son,

(31-22.) Sir Paul Tracy, Count of Stanway, Gloucestershire, England, was the father of Lieut. Thomas Tracy, the American ancestor of the Tracy family.

(32-23.) Lieut. Thomas Tracy was born about 1610 on the Tewkesbury estate, probably at the manor of Stanway. In 1636 he came to New England. A younger son of the family, without prospects of inheritance, and coming to this country in hopes of making a place for himself, he arrived in 1636, in Salem, Mass., removing to Wethersfield, Conn., where he was married in 1641 to Mary, the widow of Edward Mason. The young married couple removed to Saybrook, Conn., where the wife died in 1656, the mother of seven children. Lieut. Tracy was twice married, after the death of his first wife, but both unions proved childless. In 1660 Lieut. Tracy and his family removed to Norwich, of which town he was one of the proprietors. A prominent man and well educated, he held many important legislative, military and magisterial offices through a long life. His business standing and personal reputation were of the highest description. His death occurred in 1685. His children were: John; Thomas; Jonathan; Miriam; Solomon; Daniel; and Samuel.

(33-24.) John Tracy, who was born in 1642, was married in 1670 to Mary Winslow, a niece of Gov. Winslow. She became the mother of three sons and one daughter. Mr. Tracy died in 1702.

(34-25.) Winslow Tracy was the third son of John, and he married Rachel Ripley.

(35-26.) Josiah Tracy, second son of Winslow, married for his first wife, a Miss Allen, and for his second wife, Esther Pride.

(36-27.) Calvin Tracy, the third son of Josiah, married Elizabeth Huntington, and their eldest son and second child was also named Calvin.

(37-28.) Calvin Tracy, the grandfather of John C. Tracy, was born in Coventry, Conn., in 1785, and died in 1860. His wife, Sarah Loomis, was a native of Coventry, and to them were born: Rosanna, who married Asa Manley; Barnabas M.; Erastus; Erastus R.; Sarah M.; Selden; Calvin L.; Royal; Caroline E. All of these are dead, with the exception of Calvin L., the father of John C. Tracy.

(38-29.) Calvin L. Tracy was born Jan. 29, 1822, on his father's farm in the town of Bolton, Conn. While he was still a boy the family moved to Columbia, Conn., and then to Coventry. Mr. Tracy spent his boyhood and youth at home until he reached maturity, and enjoyed excellent educational advantages, the common school being supplemented by select school and academical instruction. When he reached the age of nineteen he began teaching winter school, and working at carpenter trade in the summer season. This was his occupation for six years. About 1847 Mr. Tracy moved to Rockville, where he worked at his trade fourteen years. In 1861 he bought a farm of sixty acres in Manchester, where his home has been maintained to the present time. In 1847 he married Hannah M. House, of Glastonbury, a daughter of Flavel House, and a descendant of one of the old families of that part of the State. She died March 21, 1859; and on Jan. 31, 1861, Mr. Tracy was married to Miss Martha J. House, a sister of his first wife, and a former pupil of his. To his first union were born: Sarah, who married George B. Greener, of Norwich; and Milton S., who lives at Glastonbury, and is connected with the Leader Manufacturing Company of Hartford. To the second marriage were born: Hattie, who married H. H. G. Ingalls, a paper manufacturer of Castleton, N. Y.; John C.; Elbert H., who died in 1886; and Mary E., wife of Robert Richmond, of South Manchester, Conn., who holds a responsible position with the Cheney Brothers. Mr. Tracy is a Republican, though he has supported the Prohibition party for many years. He has served as justice of the peace one term. He belongs to the First Congregational Church, in which he has filled various positions, being deacon and superintendent of the Sunday School.

(39-30.) John C. Tracy was born Sept. 12, 1863, in the town of Manchester, Conn., where he was reared and received the major part of his schooling, which was supplemented by a year's attendance at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass. At home Mr. Tracy learned the principles of an industrious and useful life, and remained there until he was almost of age, when he went to learn the trade of a jeweler in the store of Calvin Tiffany, at South Manchester, where he remained almost three years. For this work he had a natural aptitude and made rapid progress in it. Mr. Tracy came to Willimantic in 1886, and became a member of the firm of Freeman & Tracy, setting up their business on the corner of Church and Main streets. In September, 1890, having purchased the interest of Mr. Freeman, he became the sole owner of the store and business, continuing without a partner to the present time. The business is one of the leading establishments of the kind in the city, and owes its prosperity to the honest methods and mechanical skill of Mr. Tracy, who gives the closest attention to its every detail. Before the retirement of Mr. Freeman the store was moved to its present quarters in the Union Block.

On Oct. 6, 1897, Mr. Tracy was married at Hartford, Conn., to Miss Annie Lounsbury, who was born July 5, 1869, and when but a child lost her parents, making her home with the family of her uncle, Cook Lounsbury, of Hartford. A good education was given her at a boarding school in New Jersey, and she was graduated from the Normal School at New Britain, becoming a successful teacher; for some time she was engaged in teaching in the kindergarten school in Willimantic. Their only child, Winnifred, was born June 29, 1898. In his political relations, Mr. Tracy is a Republican, but lets politics alone, preferring to devote his time to business. In the Royal Arcanum his name appears, and he and his wife attend the Congregational Church, where for two years he was chairman of the Society's committee.

EDMOND W. WARREN, a prominent and highly esteemed citizen of Eastford, Windham county, is a worthy representative of one of the old and honored families of New England—a family which has always taken a leading part in the progressive, educational and moral advancement of the communities in which it has found a home.

Isaac Warren, the grandfather of Edmond W., was at one time a wealthy citizen of Springfield, Mass., where he was an extensive farmer and inn keeper. His kind heart induced him to give security for neighbors and in this way he met with financial reverses which induced his removal to another State, in the hope of regaining independence. At that time Madison county, N. Y., was a wilderness, and there as a pioneer he located, living the remainder of his life in that county.

Benjamin Warren, son of Isaac, and father of Edmond W., was one of a numerous family, and was born in Springfield, Mass. He accompanied his parents into the backwoods of Madison county, and gave his youthful assistance to his father until he attained manhood. After some eighteen months spent in Canada, he went to Killingly, Conn., and there was employed in farm work until his marriage. Following this event, he located in Thompson, Conn., where his ability as a practical farmer was recognized and for a considerable period he was employed as foreman on one of the large estates in that vicinity. Later he rented a large farm in Pomfret and resided upon it for a number of years, and then accepted a position as manager for the extensive model farm of Smith Wilkinson, the well-known manufacturer at Putnam. After leaving the employ of Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Warren successfully conducted a public house at Phoenixville, in the town of Eastford, and later owned a store and hotel at Pomfret Landing. In the spring of 1831 he moved to the farm now occupied by his son Edmond, having purchased the same of Benjamin Posworth, a few months previously. This valuable property was known locally as the Joseph Grow place, it having been the birthplace of Hon. Galusha A. Grow, a statesman of national reputation, ex-speaker of the House of Representatives, in Washington, and a prominent politician of the State of Pennsylvania. On this farm Benjamin Warren resided for the rest of his life, dying Sept. 14, 1851, and he was buried at Eastford. Mr. Warren was a life-long Democrat and was a prominent and influential member of that party. Almost all of the local offices were efficiently held by him at various times, and he represented the town in the Legislature before Eastford was set off from Ashford. Mr. Warren was a consistent and liberal member of the Congregational Church. His generosity in charitable enterprises was well known, and his trust in business associates was at times taken advantage of. Upright, honest and fair dealing, it was always difficult for him to realize that all men were not the same. His decease was a loss to his community.

On Feb. 24, 1813, Benjamin Warren married Elizabeth Fisher, of Killingly, a descendant of Lieut. John Fisher, who was a member of Gen. Washington's staff, during the Revolutionary war. She also was a devout member of the Congregational church. Her death occurred Oct. 23, 1866, at the age of seventy-three years. Their children were: (1) William, born Dec. 13, 1814, was conductor on the first train that passed over the Norwich & Worcester Railroad, meeting his death on Oct. 6, 1841, in a collision on the Albany & Boston Railroad. (2) Dura, born May 25, 1817, married Miletiah Childs, of Stafford Springs, who in early life was a farmer and cattle dealer, and during the Civil war supplied the Federal government with horses. Later, in company with his sons, he engaged in the stock brokerage business in Wall Street, New York, where, on Black Friday, the firm met with great financial loss. Later he located at Maple Hill, Kans., buying 1,280 acres of land in that vicinity, and there engaged extensively in farming and horse dealing. His death occurred in New York City, March 12, 1891, while there with a consignment of horses. His remains were taken to Maple Hill for interment. (3) John F., born Feb. 11, 1819, married Serepta Bowles. In early life he was a clerk, later a school teacher and at the time of his death was a successful attorney at Providence, R. I. (4) Isaac, born Feb. 28, 1821, married Lydia Sumner. His early life was spent in farming, later he embarked in the produce business and for twenty-eight years prior to 1902 he was a merchant in Eastford, serving also as postmaster, and now lives there retired. (5) Edmond W., of this record, born Sept. 2, 1826. (6) Mary Elizabeth, born March 31, 1829, married John B. Ormsbee, a merchant in Boston, where he died, his widow still residing in Eastford. (7) Benjamin, born Feb. 1, 1839, married Martha Olney, resided in Eastford for a number of years, but now is a resident of Maple Hill, Kansas.

Edmond W. Warren was born in Phoenixville, in the town of Eastford, Conn., and was given educational advantages wherever his parents were located, until eleven years of age attending the full school year, but after that until the age of sixteen, securing only the short winter session. Farm work pressed all through the summers, and under the just but stern discipline of his energetic father, he found time for little but labor through his boyhood days. Upon attaining his majority his father hired his services, and he remained at home for several years, finally leaving during two winters when he was employed in a woolen mill at Oxford, in New Haven county. Mr. Warren was his father's assistant on the farm until the latter's death, and remained there for several years managing the farm for his mother. After a residence of four years at Eastford Center, he went back to the farm, as his mother had grown feeble, and he gave her filial care during the remainder of her life. Since then Mr. Warren has continually followed farming, owning a fine estate of 200 acres.

On Jan 1, 1857, Mr. Warren was united in marriage with Emily Edwards, born Aug. 4, 1830, in Montpelier, Vt., daughter of Samuel and Dulsina (McKnight) Edwards. The ceremony was performed at Eastford, in the house Mr. Warren occupies, by Rev. Charles Chamberlin. Mrs. Edwards died in Vermont, after which, Mr. Edwards came to Eastford and made his home through the remainder of his life with his son-in-law. Mr. and Mrs. Warren have had no children. In politics Mr. Warren has been prominently identified with the Democratic party, has served on the board of selectmen for several years, and during one year was chairman of this honorable body. He has filled many town offices, was assessor for a number of years, and served for two years as judge of probate. Both Mr. and Mrs. Warren have taken active interest in the Grange movement, and few are more prominent in the agricultural meetings in this vicinity. They were charter members of Crystal Lake Grange, No. 60, of which Mr. Warren was first treasurer, serving in that responsible office for a period of twelve years. He is a charter member of the Quinebaug Pomona, of which Mrs. Warren is also a member, and he also belongs to the National Grange, taking a leading part in its deliberations. In 1902 Mrs. Warren was chosen as Ceres in the local Grange. Both Mr. Warren and wife are active and useful members of the Eastford Congregational Church, to which Mr. Warren has belonged for many years, serving for forty years on the church committee. It is both their duty and pleasure, as they view it, to engage actively in the church work, freely contributing time, energy and means in support of its most worthy enterprises. They are held in the highest esteem in Eastford, and have a wide circle of warm friends. Their influence is elevating and they represent the best society of the community.

JONATHAN HATCH. It is recorded that the first representatives of the name of Hatch in America were three brothers who came from England and settled in New London, Conn., Boston, Mass., and Nova Scotia, respectively.

Samuel Hatch, who located at New London, was a baker by trade. He had the following children: Samuel, Elijah, Peter, Joshua, Joseph, Daniel, Stephen, John, and three daughters.

Samuel Hatch, the son of Samuel the settler, was born Sept. 26, 1738, and grew up in New London, where he learned shoemaking. Several of his brothers served in the war of the Revolution, and had he not been lame he, too, would have given his services to his country. He married Naomi Phelps, a native of Lebanon, Conn., who bore him ten children: Eleazer: Samuel: Asel: Joseph; Tryphenia and Salena, who died unmarried; David; Jonathan; Naomi, who married Eleazer Fitch; and Elijah. The father died April 30, 1815. The mother died when her grandson, our subject, was seventeen or eighteen years of age. She was a devout Presbyterian, holding membership in Rev. Ezra Ely's Church.

Jonathan Hatch, son of Samuel (2), was born Jan. 6, 1777, and died Oct. 5, 1833. He married Betsy Payne, and to this union came: (1) Samuel Orville, born in Lebanon, Conn., June 2, 1809, died June 13, 1877. He married Eunice T. Armstrong, and their children were, E. Eliza; John O., born March 4, 1840, who died Sept. 25, 1885; Jonathan A., who died at the age of thirty; Mary A., who died at the age of eighteen; Henry C., born Dec. 2, 1846; Hattie A., wife of William C. Backus, of South Windham; Adelia B., wife of Eugene Kinne, of South Windham; Charles P.; Carrie L.; and Lillie L. (2) Naomi Eliza died at the age of thirteen. (3) Chester Payne (deceased) went to California, where he accumulated a fortune as a manufacturer of agricultural machinery at Petaluma. (4) Jonathan, our subject, was the fourth. By his second marriage to Mrs. Elizabeth (Giant) Phillips, there were (5) Elijah Phelps, who lived for the greater part of his life at South Windham, and died in 1900, at Haverhill, Mass.; he was a machinist by trade. He married Lucy Young, and had a family. (6) James Chandler is a farmer of Avon, Conn. (7) Caroline Eliza (deceased) married Amos Babcock, of Lebanon, Conn. (8) Nelson, who never married, moved to Oregon, where he died.

Jonathan Hatch, the father of these, was a lifetime resident of Lebanon, Conn. His wife, Betsy Payne, was a daughter of Capt. Stephen Payne, who was twice married, the second time to a widow, a resident of Bolton, Conn. Mr. Hatch engaged in farming, and also learned shoemaking of his father, but only followed that calling sufficiently to supply the needs of his family. The home farm was a large one, and he carried on farming extensively, having a team of horses and two yoke of oxen, besides about ten head of other stock, which was a large number for his day. In politics he was a Whig, and he was very highly respected throughout the community.

Jonathan Hatch, whose name introduces these lines, was born Oct. 21, 1817, in Lebanon, where he was educated in the public schools. He was apprenticed to learn the trade of machinist when but sixteen, and continued in that line until he was twenty-two, at South Windham. Subsequently he was engaged in setting up machinery in St. Louis, Cairo, Ill., and Little Rock, and was at those places some two years, in all. He then contracted fever and returned home, re-entering the employ of Smith, Winchester & Co. For a short time he was employed in the Springfield Armory, but later located at South Windham, and was for years foreman of the paper machine factory at that place. For thirty years he was a partner in the company, at first for ten years, at the end of which time he withdrew; three years later he again purchased an interest, which he retained for twenty years.

Having always had a taste for mechanics, Mr. Hatch early displayed a genius for inventions, and has secured various patents for inventions, all of which have proved very valuable, and some of which have been transferred to the firm with which he has been connected for so many years. In August, 1889, he patented a machine for the manufacture of paper by a new process, which is especially valuable. His attention is still given to mechanical work and almost daily he can be found in his shop, busily employed.

Mr. Hatch was married in the town of Franklin, New London Co., Conn., to Alma W. Armstrong, a daughter of John and Lucinda (Tinney) Armstrong, of Franklin, Conn., and to this union were born: Charles Winchester, who died young; Helen, wife of George Stiles, one of the leading merchants of Willimantic; Mary, unmarried, at home; George, for many years superintendent for Smith, Winchester & Co., now postmaster at South Windham (he is unmarried); Walter, who was accidentally shot at the age of seventeen; and Clara, who died at the age of twenty.

In politics Mr. Hatch is a stanch Republican, although he did not endorse its first candidate, John C. Fremont, but voted for James Buchanan. He recollects very well when Andrew Jackson was elected, and his coming to Norwich to lay the corner stone of the Uncas monument. In addition to holding various local offices, Mr. Hatch has represented the town of Windham in the Legislature; he served as selectman five years, and as justice of the peace.

Having lived a life of industry and uprightness, which has been crowned with well deserved prosperity, Mr. Hatch enjoys the respect of a large circle of friends as well as the affection of his family, and none stands higher in the community, where for so many years he has made his home, than does this most excellent man.

SHEPARD. When the town of Plainfield, Windham county, received its charter, in 1699, it numbered among its landholders Isaac and Samuel Shepard, and it was at the home of the former that the first town meetings were held. Later, Feb. 22, 1732, there was born in that town Simon Shepard, a descendant of one of the early settlers of the place, who married Rachel Spaulding, born July 16, 1729. His business was hotel-keeping. His building, which stood on the site of the present town farm, later became historic, due to the fact that the patriots, before marching to Boston after the battle of Lexington, were drawn up on its "green." Mr. Shepard is buried in the Moosup Cemetery.

Simon Shepard, Jr., son of Simon, and grandfather of William Shepard, now of Plainfield, was born in that town May 16, 1764. There he grew to manhood, and later engaged in business. On Sept. 15, 1791, he married Elizabeth Moore, who was born Feb. 20, 1769, daughter of Joseph Moore. After her death he was again married, this time to Mrs. Lydia (Stringer) Hazard. By his first marriage there were eight children: Joseph, born Oct. 5, 1792; Eunice, April 28, 1794; William, June 18, 1796 (mentioned later); Jared, July 19, 1798; Hiram, Jan. 22, 1801 (he died young); Chester, Sept. 3, 1803 (died at Middletown, Conn.); Chauncey, May 28, 1806 (died in 1901); James F., June 2, 1810 (lived at Toledo, Ohio, where he died). The father engaged in farming and hotel-keeping, taking charge of the family inn for a number of years after the death of his father. His last years were spent at the home of his son William, where he died at the age of eighty-four. He is buried in the cemetery at Moosup.

William Shepard, father of William, and of the fifth generation of Shepards to occupy the Plainfield hotel, was for many years an extensive agriculturist in the Flat Rock District. Born at the family residence, June 18, 1796, he acquired his education in the schools of his neighborhood, and at Plainfield Academy, where he was so fortunate as to have for an instructor the very able William Burleigh. His occupation was farming, which, with the exception of four or five years spent in Brooklyn, Conn., he carried on in the town of Plainfield. For a short time in early manhood he worked the family homestead, but he later purchased the splendid 240-acre farm in the Flat Rock District, which he conducted with great success. On Aug. 26, 1818, he married Martha Gallup, daughter of Benjamin Gallup, and they had nine children: (1) Elizabeth, Dec. 17, 1819—Oct. 14, 1865, married William M. Johnson, and resided first in Plainfield, and later in Brooklyn. They had children, Harry, William, Hiram, Isaac, Annie and Hannah. (2) Lucy G., April 13, 1821—Dec. 18, 1890, married Samuel Palmer, of Plainfield, and they have one son, Samuel F. (3) Martha M., Jan. 27, 1823—July 3, 1877, married William W. Potter, and resided first in Plainfield, and later in Greenville, Conn. They had one son, Edward. (4) Abby Thatcher, born June 26, 1825, married Capt. William F. Hall, who is mentioned elsewhere. (5) Hannah, born April 30, 1827, married Walter Palmer, who is mentioned elsewhere. (6) Margaret, born Aug. 20, 1829, died Oct. 13, 1842. (7) Susan H., born June 20, 1831, married Olney Dodge, who is now deceased. (8) Simon, born Aug. 7, 1833, now a farmer in Brooklyn, Conn., married Louise Gardner. (9) William is mentioned below.

Besides farming Mr. Shepard engaged extensively in cattle speculation, buying his stock in Canada and western New York, and selling it at a good profit in Connecticut. Possessed of sound judgment and clear headedness, he made a thorough success of whatever business he undertook. He died June 6, 1878, his wife July 2, 1858. Possessed of great capacity for work, Mr. Shepard found time to serve the general public, and for many years held various posts of honor in his town, including that of first selectman. He also served on the grand jury. His conscientious management of local affairs commended him to the general public, and he was elected to the State Legislature. In politics he was always well informed. At first he was a Whig, later a Republican.

Through his grandmother, Elizabeth (Moore) Shepard, William Shepard of Plainfield is descended from Daniel and Anna Moore, who came from England. Mr. Moore died May 10, 1791, in his eighty-fourth year, and his wife passed away July 8, 1787, at the age of seventy-nine.

Joseph Moore, son of Daniel, born April 4, 1745, came from Sag Harbor, L. I., and settled at Canterbury, Conn. He married Abigail Fitch, who was born June 6, 1745, and, after her death, Hannah Shepard, who was born April 29, 1759. By the first marriage there were children: Mary, born Oct. 18, 1767; Elizabeth, Feb. 20, 1769 (grandmother of William Shepard); Anna, born April 27, 1770; Clarissa, Dec. 21, 1771; Daniel, Dec. 4, 1773; Lucy, April 25, 1775; William F., April 30, 1776; Joseph, Jan. 24, 1778; Lucy, April 22, 1780; and Joseph, Jan. 18, 1783. By the second marriage there were seven children: Abigail Fitch, born Nov. 13, 1786; Ebenezer, July 30, 1788; Hiram, Feb. 28, 1790; Mary, Jan. 26, 1792; Sally, Dec. 15, 1793; Esther, Oct. 31, 1796; and Hannah, Nov. 30, 1798.

WILLIAM SHEPARD, of Plainfield, son of William and Martha (Gallup) Shepard, has through his varied business interests, and his active participation in public affairs, become thoroughly well known to the people of his vicinity. Born in the Flat Rock District, in the town of Plainfield, Nov. 27, 1835, he obtained his education in the school of his neighborhood and in Plainfield Academy, which, during the period of his attendance, was in a highly flourishing condition. It had an enrollment of over fifty pupils, and for an instructor the estimable Lucian Burleigh. When a young man he made a trial of several different employments. First he taught school for one term, and later, after attaining his majority, represented for about six months, in Columbia county, Wis., Mr. Bill's Publishing House, of Norwich. Deciding, however, to go into business for himself, he returned to Plainfield and opened a butchering establishment and a meat shop. So successful was he that he continued in that line for six years. About this time he also became interested in buying and selling farm products, and from 1861 to 1865, in company with Henry C. Starkweather and Waldo Tillinghast, carried on a prosperous business in that line. After a varied career, including three years as proprietor of the familiar hotel in Plainfield village, which he purchased of Capt. Elkinor C. Eaton, and the keeping of a cash grocery store in Waterbury, Conn., he started a steam sawmill near the Plainfield station, and conducted a prosperous lumber business for some time. From 1875 to 1878 he was similarly engaged in Sterling, buying wood there and having it sawed into dimension timber. His success encouraged him to enlarge his business, so he purchased the late Joseph Hutchins lot, removed his sawmill to that place, and added grist and shingle mill departments, doing a flourishing business until April 11, 1884, when his buildings were burned. Deciding not to rebuild, he then engaged for a short time in hotel-keeping in Plainfield, and finally gave his time exclusively to farming. Previous to this, while engaged in other enterprises, he had carried on agriculture to a certain extent, and on giving it his undivided attention, he found it highly profitable; he has since continued that line.

On Sept. 3, 1856, Mr. Shepard married Phoebe E. Tillinghast, daughter of George Tillinghast. She died Jan. 24, 1884, after which he formed a second union with Mary E. Turner, who was born in Sterling, Conn., a daughter of Edward and Mary L. Turner. By this marriage there was one child, Annette Elizabeth, who was born Oct. 3, 1891.

Mr. Shepard has always been a man of decided political convictions, and for over twenty years worked strenuously for the success of the Prohibition party in his section. For several times he served as candidate for representative, and in 1886 for State senator. Finding, however, that in spite of his efforts his cause made but little if any advancement, he has for the past few years voted the Republican ticket. In religious circles he has also been extremely active. He has served as Sunday school superintendent of the Moosup Baptist Church, which he joined in 1858, and also of the Packerville Church, to which he later transferred his membership; of this Church he has also been clerk. Fraternally he affiliates with Moosup Lodge, F. & A. M., and also with the Danielson Chapter. As progressive farming people both he and his wife became charter members of the Plainfield Grange when it was organized, in 1894, and have since filled many offices, he that of master and overseer, and he is at present treasurer.

Says the compiler of the Shepard family genealogy printed in the Commemorative Biographical Record of Hartford County: "The Shepards of America, in so far as they have descended from emigrant settlers who were here prior to 1650, are mainly descendants of Ralph Shepard, of Dedham, who came in the 'Abigail,' 1635, was later of Malden, Mass., and generally known as of that place; the Rev. Thomas Shepard, of Cambridge, who came in the 'Defence,' Oct. 3, 1635, and is recorded at the Custom House in England under the name of 'John Shepard,' and Edward Shepard, who was in Cambridge as early as 1639. There were three other Shepards in New England about the same time, but we have no knowledge of their posterity. Other Shepard emigrants who have left descendants were here not long after 1650. The Shepards of Killingly and vicinity in eastern Connecticut and of East Haven, Conn., are the descendants of Ralph of Malden, and the Hartford family of Shepards are from Edward through his only son, Sergeant John."

Mr. Savage, in his Genealogical Dictionary of the First Settlers of New England, makes this reference to "Ralph Shepard, of Dedham, came in the Abigail from London, 1635, aged 29, with his wife Thanks, 23, and daughter Sarah, 2; first sat down, probably at Watertown, but by Farmer is called of Weymouth, when he had there Isaac, born 20th of June, 1639; and Trial, a daughter, 19th of December, 1641; but had also Abraham; Thanks, 10th of February, 1651; and Jacob, June, 1653. Shattuck makes him live some time at Concord; but earlier he was of Rehoboth, perhaps in 1644; and yet more probably he now appears his residence at Malden, where one of the not frequent name was buried 11th of September, 1693, aged 90, with moderate allowance for usual exaggeration. [See Genealogical Register, IV, 66.] Trial married 11th of March, 1661, Walter Power."

HENRY WESTCOTT. Although many years have elapsed since Henry Westcott passed beyond the ken of those who knew and loved him in life, his character and attainments were such that he must ever be regarded as an integral part of the industrial, political and social development of Killingly. He was born in Gloucester, R. I., April 18, 1801, and died in retirement in Danielson, June 5, 1878. His career contained so many elements of human interest, his personal traits were so appealingly on the side of the joy and expectancy and success of life, that though viewed through the haze of years, he is remembered and recalled as the embodiment of New England's best and noblest citizenship.

Stukely Westcott, the emigrating ancestor, was born in Devonshire, England, in 1592, and was received as an inhabitant and freeman of Salem, Mass., in 1636. With him across the sea came his wife and eight children, with whom he settled at the Providence Plantation in 1638. He became one of the most prominent men of the Colony, held many offices of trust and responsibility, and was the most intimate friend of Roger Williams, who referred to him in his papers as "my dear friend Stukely Westcott." From Stukely the line of descent is as follows: Jeremiah, Samuel, Benjamin, Capt. James, Joseph and Henry.

Capt. James Westcott, grandfather of Henry, was born March 5, 1740, and during his active life was a mariner upon the seas, his headquarters being at what is now No. 537-539 North Main street, Providence, R. I. During his long service in the merchant marine he commanded such vessels as the "Enterprise," "Betsey" and "Harmony," these three vessels coming under his charge between 1785 and 1790. No more seasoned salt directed the course of vessels in his time, nor was any more thoroughly conversant with all things nautical. About 1809 the captain retired to East Killingly, where for the remainder of his days he devoted his energies to farming. He married Martha Tillinghast, born in Providence in 1747, and died in the same town, Aug. 18, 1790. Her birthplace was at what is now No. 299 South Main street, Providence, R. I., in the Tillinghast homestead erected by her grandfather, Phillip Tillinghast, in 1710. To Captain Westcott and his first wife were born the following children: William, Benjamin, James, Tillinghast, Joseph, Parley and Martha. For a second wife Captain Westcott married one by the name of Lorinda, who died in East Killingly, leaving no children.

Joseph Westcott, father of Henry, was born in Gloucester, R. I., April 9, 1779, and for many years was a farmer in East Killingly. Later in life he removed to Norwich, Chenango county, N. Y., where he farmed for a time, but lived in retirement at Utica, N. Y., for several years before his death, at the home of his son, David. He married Esther Richmond, born June 3, 1783, and died Nov. 25, 1834. To this union there were born four children: (1) Henry Westcott was the oldest. (2) Almira, was born in September, 1805, married Jude Sabin, a farmer, and both died in Killingly. They were the parents of three children: Nancy, who married Warren Webster; Esther, who became the wife of Dr. Fenner H. Peckham, of Providence; and J. Prescott, who died unmarried. (3) Elizabeth Westcott was born May 7, 1815, married James Wood, and died in Oxford, N. Y. Mr. Wood was first a farmer, and then he was engaged in the hotel business in Norwich and Oxford, N. Y., but is now living retired in Utica. Of the two children born to this union Atala is deceased; and Frances B. is the wife of George Browning, of Kansas City, Mo. (4) David, was born Nov. 11, 1818, married Polly Windsor, and was engaged in the mercantile business in Utica, having formerly farmed for several years. He died Sept. 26, 1902. Four children were born to himself and his wife: Albertus J., who married Elpha Field, is engaged in the mercantile business; Esther A. is the widow of Orrin Miner; Myra S. is the wife of James St. Lawrence, of Norwich, N. Y.; and one died young.

While yet a child Henry Westcott removed from his native town of Gloucester, R. I., and with his parents settled in Killingly. Here the primitive and early subscription schools afforded the nucleus for that practical education later dependent upon experience and observation for its further development. In early life he was a farmer, but some years after attaining his majority he associated himself with Thomas Pray in the cotton manufacturing business in East Killingly in the Valley Mill, known in recent years as the Elliotville Mill. The firm built the Ross and Whitestone mills, and so conducted their business that they in time were regarded as one of the most prosperous and extensive owners of mill property in Windham county. Mr. Westcott's marked business ability, keen discrimination and indomitable perseverance won for him an enviable reputation in financial circles, and carried him safely through many a crisis which would have swept a less resolute man into the abyss of failure. He was thoroughly above board in all his dealings, and the charm of his manner, and winning regard for the best interests of those with whom he had to do, were in no small measure responsible for his success. He was easily approached, and the transaction of business with him was invariably a pleasure. On disposing of his milling interests, he retired to Danielson and erected the home in which his last days were spent, and where he suffered with paralysis for some months before the end, being confined to his bed for a couple of weeks before his death. He was a Whig and a Republican, and held many of the more important offices in his town, representing the same in the Legislature in 1840.

The possession of a sweet and resonant tenor voice afforded a vast amount of entertainment and pleasure to the friends and associates of Mr. Westcott. His wife and two children were also good singers, and the four constituted a quartette known for miles around. Himself and daughter sang in the Baptist church choir for many years, and he was the leader thereof when stricken with the malady that caused his death. He was one of the most active and honored members of this same Baptist Church, and he contributed generously towards the erection of the new church in the borough in which he lived. The history of Windham county, published in 1889, has the following in regard to the First Baptist Church: "Special mention should be made in this connection of Mr. Henry Westcott, without whose hearty interest and liberal gifts the church would hardly have been organized, or its attractive house have been built." His death occurred before the church was completed, but not until he had contributed fully one-half the entire cost. Shortly after his death, in a letter to the annual meeting of the Ashford Baptist Association, occurs this testimony: "From the first, he, more than any one else, has borne our young church upon his heart and supported it with his influence, his sympathy and his means, and his loss is more to us than we can express in words." Both Mr. and Mrs. Westcott have memorial windows erected to them in this little church, placed there by their devoted son and daughter.

On Feb. 3, 1824, Mr. Westcott married Almira Browning, born in Rutland, Mass., March 1, 1801, a daughter of James and Nabby (Watson) Browning. Mrs. Westcott died July 19, 1882, and is buried beside her husband in Westfield cemetery. James Browning, her father, was a son of another James, who had six sons who served in the Revolutionary war. Of the father of Mrs. Westcott the Massachusetts State Records of Soldiers and Sailors in the Revolutionary War has the following in regard to his service: "Captain James Browning was second lieutenant in Captain David Bent's Company of Colonel Nathaniel Sparhawk's Regiment, which marched to Cambridge April 20, 1775, and was in service six days. Also corporal in Captain Bent's Company, Col. Job Cushing's Regiment. Entered service Sept. 5, 1777, discharged Oct. 22, 1777. Service northward (Bennington). Also 2nd lieutenant 5th Co., Col. Grout's Regiment (Worcester County), commissioned June 22, 1780." Nabby Watson, the mother of Mrs. Westcott, was born April 1, 1774, a daughter of Samuel Watson, a tanner and currier, and prominent man. He served as sergeant in the Leicester Company which marched to Cambridge April 19, 1775, and the gun he carried, dated 1775, is still in the possession of his descendants. Three children were born to Henry Westcott and his wife: Nancy N., who died Nov. 26, 1831, at the age of seven months; Almira Elizabeth; and Henry Tillinghast.

ALMIRA ELIZABETH WESTCOTT is a woman of great culture and refinement, and represents the most exclusive social element in Killingly. She was educated in the district schools and at West Killingly Academy; also at the Oread Institute at Worcester, under Prof. Eli Thayer. She resides at Danielson, but spends a great deal of time in travel in different parts of the United States. From her father she inherits the gift of song, and her soprano voice has been heard for many years in the choir of the Baptist Church. She is a member of the Sarah Williams Danielson Chapter, D. A. R.

HENRY TILLINGHAST WESTCOTT was born May 10, 1838, and attended the East Greenwich Academy where he was a room-mate of the present United States Senator Nelson Aldrich, of Rhode Island, who is an intimate friend of the Westcotts. During the life of the older man Mr. Westcott was the close associate of his father, and materially assisted him in his various business transactions. He also has a tenor voice, and is the leader of the choir in the Baptist Church. Himself and sister are unmarried. Both lead broad and intellectual lives, and both are generous contributors toward the maintenance of the church in which their father was so vitally interested.

CHARLES H. GIRARD, M. D., a prominent physician in Willimantic, has had a marvellous career in that city, considering that at the time of his arrival he could scarcely speak English, and had come from Canada with but a slight knowledge of American customs and habits. His practice has become one of the largest in the city today, and shows what tact, courtesy, industry, and a thorough knowledge of his business may accomplish. Dr. Girard is a man of much public spirit, and is ever ready to help forward any movement that is intended to help the city which counts him among its best and most representative characters.

For several generations back the Girards had lived in Canada, and the family came originally from France. Antoine Girard, the grandfather of Dr. Charles H., removed from Varennes to Vercheres, where his life was devoted to farming. On the farm where he settled were born his son Denis and his grandson, Charles H. The Roberts, maternal ancestors of Dr. Girard, were also of French extraction.

Denis Girard was an extensive and very prosperous farmer in his native community. His family consisted of fourteen children, and eleven of them lived to adult age. Dr. Charles H. Girard was a twin to Albert, who is a prominent attorney in Montreal. Denis Girard lived to be sixty-eight years old, while his first wife, whose maiden name was Dorothee Robert, died at the age of forty-five. Both died on the farm where Dr. Girard was born. After the death of his first wife Denis Girard was married a second time.

Charles H. Girard was born March 6, 1866, in Vercheres, about twenty-four miles east of Montreal, Province of Quebec, Canada. He began his education in the schools of his native community, and completed his academic studies in St. Hyacinthe College, at St. Hyacinthe, Province of Quebec. At Victoria College, which has since become a part of Laval University, he acquired his medical training, and was graduated from the medical department of that old and famous school in 1890. Dr. Girard promptly began his practice at Winooski Falls, Vt., near Burlington, but only remained there a few weeks, and in May of that year came to Willimantic, where he opened an office in the Opera House Block. His introduction into professional life was attended not only with the usual difficulties that confront all beginners in the winning of a practice, but was rendered doubly difficult by his lack of English and his unfamiliarity with Connecticut habits and manners. He had, however, the merit of making friends readily and keeping them; he knew his calling, and had an instinctive professional skill, which displayed itself on the first opportunity. Very soon he had a practice, and from his first case his patronage has increased until today such large demands are constantly made upon his time and strength, that he is fully employed. In 1893, Dr. Girard bought the Jackson street property, where his home has been maintained to the present time. In the fall of 1890, Dr. Girard was married to Miss Eliza Gadbois, a native of Montreal. To this union came one child, Yvonne, born Sept. 22, 1892. Mrs. Girard died Jan. 5, 1897, and was buried in Willimantic. On Oct. 3, 1898, Dr. Girard was married to Rose Anne Chagnon, a native of Vercheres, Quebec, and one child, Antoinette, born Sept. 8, 1899, has blessed this union. In his political relations, Dr. Girard has from the first affiliated strongly with the Republican party, and takes a commendable interest in the general affairs of the country. He is active in the Board of Trade, and ready to help on all projects that look to the general improvement of Willimantic. Dr. Girard belongs to the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Columbus, the Foresters of America, and Independent Order of Foresters, and in these various organizations serves as physician. Both the Doctor and his family belong to St. Joseph's Catholic Church. Dr. Girard is a young man whose rapid rise in his profession is seldom equalled, and he has made himself what he is by his own industry, integrity and courtesy.

WINFIELD S. KENYON. The beneficent effect on society of the life of a good man is hardly to be estimated. Like the ever widening ripples of a placid lake, disturbed by the pebble's fall, its kindly influences move out through society's depths, purifying by their touch and bringing spiritual healing to the masses. The family here represented, both in its living and deceased members, is one which has earned the encomiums of friends and neighbors throughout the counties whose history this volume records.

Winfield Scott Kenyon is a member of one of the oldest and most honorable families in Connecticut. He was born Feb. 2, 1847, in the village of Kenyonville, town of Woodstock, Windham county, the first taking its name by reason of having been founded by his father. Joseph Kenyon, the father, was born in Huddersfield, England, and died in Woodstock, Oct. 2, 1870, aged sixty-five years. Upon arriving at maturity, he married Lorinda West, of Charlton, Mas., who died Nov. 13, 1878, in Woodstock, aged sixty-six years, ten months, and four days. She was the mother of: Albert, born May 10, 1841, in Southbridge, Mass., deceased Aug. 7, 1887, in Woodstock Valley, who married Lydia May Paine, daughter of Chester W. and Mary (Perry) Paine; Isabell, drowned in Woodstock in girlhood; Winfield S.; Lamertine and Lamertine (2), both deceased in infancy; Josephine Matilda, born in Woodstock, who married Prescott Bartlett, of Putnam, Connecticut.

Joseph Kenyon, the father of this family, learned the rudiments of the woolen manufacturing business in England and came to America when a young man to seek his fortune, settling in Southbridge, Mass. Within a very few years he started a business of his own, leasing a mill which he conducted successfully for a time. He later came to Woodstock and leased an old mill near Woodstock Valley, which had been built by Chauncey Kibbie. There he continued the manufacture of woolen goods and, being successful, purchased a mill together with other property, and the village, which soon became a thriving one, thenceforth became known as Kenyonville. Mr. Kenyon was a thrifty, enterprising, and progressive man and by his well directed efforts soon established a successful business. He returned to England and brought his parents back with him, supporting them in their old age. He also persuaded all his brothers and sisters to come to the United States to make their homes. His business was chiefly the manufacture of cassimeres, in which he employed from twenty to twenty-five hands. He built several houses in the neighborhood and established quite a village. He was a man of shrewd foresight and good executive ability, and as a result accumulated quite a competence. In political belief he was a staunch Republican, and was the representative of his town in the State Legislature, also serving the borough in other capacities. He was a regular attendant at the Universalist Church, of which he was a liberal supporter. In health he was robust and in disposition was quiet and unassuming. He was a man highly esteemed in his community, and bore the respect of all who knew him.

Winfield S. Kenyon attended the district schools of his native town and of East Greenwich, R. I., this training being supplemented by a year at Nichol's Academy, Dudley, Mass., and further by a course in Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Graduating from this institution at the age of twenty, he returned to Woodstock and entered his father's mill, where he remained until the latter's death, familiarizing himself with the fundamental principles of the business. After his father's death, he, together with his brother Albert, took up the business under the firm name of Kenyon Brothers, and conducted it until the time of his brother's death. Mr. Kenyon then carried on the business alone for a year, but being so far from the railroad he found it rather difficult to compete with the market prices; so he discontinued the manufactory. He then started a saw mill and box factory on the same water privilege, which he has since conducted, and employs a number of hands in the manufacture of boxes and shipping cases. His mill is equipped with steam power in addition to an excellent water power. For several years prior to engaging in his present business, Mr. Kenyon was employed on his farm. He spent a period in his younger years, from 1872 to 1879, in Cedartown, Ga., as secretary of the Cherokee Iron Company, of which he was a stockholder. The climate, however, did not agree with his health and he was compelled to return home. Mr. Kenyon has had a successful business career, and in disposition is even more quiet and unassuming than his father before him. In fraternal affiliation he is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 60, F. & A. M., and is also a member of the Eastford Grange. Mr. Kenyon's religious beliefs are with the Universalist Church, which he supports liberally, and of which he and his family are attendants. He cares little for political preferment. He has, however, served on the district school committee, and is staunch in his Republicanism. Mr. Kenyon celebrated his marriage in 1880, choosing as a life companion Miss Grace K. Morse, a daughter of Marvel Morse, of Putnam, Conn. They are the parents of Florence Winifred; Amos Winfield, in business with his father; Josephine Louise; Marvel Morse, deceased in infancy; Ambrose, also deceased in infancy; and Ferdinand Morse.

ALBERT KENYON, the eldest son of Joseph Kenyon, was born in Southbridge, Mass. He removed with the family to Woodstock when quite young, where he received his elementary schooling, and later studied in Greenwich, R. I., and Fort Edward, N. Y. He also entered his father's mill and learned the business. During the war he went to the front and did his duty as a soldier, and upon returning continued to assist his father in the mill until his death, when a partnership was formed as above, and which continued with harmony and success until his premature death. Albert was a member of Putnam Lodge, K. P., I. O. O. F. of Putnam and of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R. His religious belief was with the Advent Church, of Woodstock Valley. In earlier life his political belief inclined to the Democratic party, but after the war he acted with the Republicans. He married Miss Lydia M. Paine, who became the mother of the following children, all of whom were born in Woodstock: Etta Isabelle, who married Augustine M. Bartlett, a carpenter by trade, and now lives in Putnam; Estelle F., Mrs. Sabin S. Carpenter, of Putnam, deceased; Joseph L., a fireman of Putnam, who married Emma C. Keith, of Woodstock; Allen W., who married Nellie E. Spencer, of Pomfret; Anthony W., of Putnam, a mason by trade, who married Cora B. Davidson, of West Woodstock, who is the mother of Ethel May, born April 4, 1902; Mary L., born Jan. 24, 1877, who married June 7, 1899, George A. Young, of Pomfret, a carpenter by trade, living in Putnam; Harry W., the youngest of the family, who was born Jan. 29, 1879, and died at six months.

THEODORE RAYMOND PARKER, M. D., is among the leading physicians of Willimantic, and comes from an old New England ancestry, of which James Parker was the first American ancestor.

James Parker was born in England about 1617, and about 1640 is recorded in Woburn, Mass., later at Chelmsford, and finally at Grotton, where he died in 1701. In 1643 he was married to Elizabeth Long, of Woburn, who was born in 1623, a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Long, of Charlestown, Mass., who came with their family, from Dunstable, England, in 1635.

Josiah Parker, son of James, was born at Grotton, in 1655, where he remained until 1683, and perhaps later. From 1693 to 1695 he was an inhabitant of Woburn, and of Cambridge from 1696 until his death in 1731. His wife, Elizabeth Saxton, was born in Sexton.

Thomas Parker, son of Josiah, was born in Cambridge, in 1700, and in 1718 was graduated from Harvard. Three years later he was settled as minister at Dracut, Mass., where he died in 1765.

Jonathan Parker, the son of Thomas, was born at Dracut, where he married Dollie Coffin, a woman of much strength of character. Mr. Parker became a physician of distinction, and enjoyed a wide reputation as a surgeon, having an extensive practice in the town of Litchfield, N. H., where he made his home. His death occurred in September, 1791.

Eliphalet Parker, son of Dr. Jonathan, born in 1776, married in 1808 Sarah Comstock, a daughter of Jared and Rachel (Chester) Comstock. Mr. Parker was a farmer in Montville, Conn., where he was a devoted member of the Congregational Church, and served as leader of the choir. His death occurred March 1, 1835, and his widow died Aug. 14, 1860. To them were born: Abisha A., born Dec. 12, 1808, married Caroline Fellows; Jared C., born March 2, 1812, died young; Eliphalet, born Aug. 28, 1814, married Helen M. Risley; Dolly E., born April 4, 1817, married Walter Hough Jan. 17, 1849; Harriet, born Dec. 2, 1819, married Simon Clark, March 4, 1855; Augustus Alden, born Feb. 18, 1822, married Harriet R. Dolbeare; Samuel C., born May 14, 1824, married Fannie E. Herrick; Frederick F., born April 19, 1828, married Lucy A. Gardner for his first wife, and Mary (Green) Hazzard, for his second wife; and Sarah B., born Nov. 17, 1831, married Jerome Pease July 3, 1869.

Augustus Alden Parker, the father of Dr. Parker, was born in Montville, Conn., on the farm until recently occupied by Frederick F. Parker, where he had the rearing common to farmer lads. He attended the town schools, and while still under age he began teaching, and was a very successful school master for a number of years. After his marriage he located on a farm near the Montville Church. For a time he was the proprietor of a general store, but soon gave it up and resumed his farm life, and this has been his life work, and at it he is still engaged notwithstanding his advanced age. For over fifty years he has lived on the farm where he is found today, and he is one of the most respected citizens of his town. For over fifty years he has been superintendent of the Sabbath School of the Congregational Church. His wife was Harriet R. Dolbeare, and they have lived to celebrate their golden wedding. They are deeply interested in all matters pertaining to the morals and religion of the community in which they have their home. In politics he is a Republican, and he represented the town of Montville in the Legislature in the early seventies. He was a good citizen in the community, and always stood for the right and true, and he and his good wife are much respected by those who know them best.

Their children, who lived to adult age, were as follows: Jennie E., who attended the Norwich Academy, and was a successful teacher for several years, died unmarried at the age of twenty-eight years. Her remains are resting in the Raymond Hill Cemetery at Montville. Theodore R. was the only son.

The DOLBEARE Family, of which Mrs. Parker is a conspicuous representative, was of Welsh origin, and the first American of that name was John Dolbeare, who came to Boston in 1720. George Dolbeare, his son, was born in 1715, and in 1740 was married to Mary Sherwood, who was born in 1710; he was a large land owner, and died in March, 1772, and his widow in 1790. John Dolbeare, son of George, was born in 1745, and was married in 1769 to Sarah, daughter of Christopher and Eleanor (Fitch) Raymond. They settled in Montville on a farm which they inherited from his father, and there Mr. Dolbeare died April 9, 1806, and his widow June 9, 1828.

Lemuel R. Dolbeare, son of John Dolbeare, was born in 1793, was a thrifty and successful farmer. He was married Dec. 6, 1818, to Eleanor, daughter of Mulford and Eleanor (Bradford) Raymond. Both himself and wife were members of the Montville Center Church. His death occurred May 14, 1859, that of his wife on Jan. 29, 1851. Harriet R. Dolbeare, daughter of Lemuel R., was born Nov. 19, 1819, and was married to Augustus A. Parker.

Theodore R. Parker was born July 19, 1856, in Montville, and is the only living child of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Parker. His education was begun in the schools of his native town, was continued at Norwich Academy, from which he was graduated in 1876. He then turned his attention to the study of medicine, with Dr. Lewis S. Paddock, of Norwich. In 1877 Dr. Parker matriculated in the Yale Medical School, but completed his medical studies in the Medical Department of the University of New York, graduating in the class of 1880. In May of that year Dr. Parker located at Columbia, Conn., where his professional career was begun under favorable auspices. As an entire stranger, he stood upon his merits, and won a considerable patronage. In June, 1882, he came to Willimantic, and here he has since resided. By his professional ability and personal qualities he has risen to the heights in his career, and is regarded as one of the leading physicians in the city. His practice is very largely among the best people of the city and has come to him strictly as a result of his merit.

Dr. Parker was married to Miss Charlotte E. Buck, a native of Ashford, Conn., and a daughter of Hon. E. A. and Delia A. (Lincoln) Buck, of Willimantic. Their only child, Raymond, was born in June, 1889. Dr. Parker cast his first presidential vote for Garfield, and has continued to vote the Republican ticket to the present time, but is no office seeker. He attends the First Congregational Church and has served on the Society's Committee. In the Windham County Medical Society and the State Medical Society he is an active and appreciated member. Dr. Parker is a man of modest disposition, and though he has troops of friends and is very popular, he takes his success after the manner of true genius and devotion to his calling.

WILLIAM LATHROP WILLIAMS, proprietor of the very popular livery and feed stables at No. 55 Church street, Willimantic, Windham county, holds a leading position among the prominent business men of the city. Long experienced in the business, and an expert judge of horses, he has stocked his stables with some twenty-five animals, out of which he can satisfy the most varied demands, and furnish his customers with stylish turn-outs in every variety of conveyance. Mr. Williams has a very considerable patronage in his boarding stables and the horses entrusted to him are well-kept and watched over with a careful eye.

William L. Williams was born Sept. 13, 1849, at Williams' Crossing, in the town of Franklin, Conn., a son of George Lathrop and Wealthy Avery (Randall) Williams, and is a grandson of Lathrop Williams.

Lathrop Williams was born at North Stonington, a son of Adam Williams, and came from North Stonington to the town of Franklin about 1825. He was a prominent citizen and well-to-do farmer who was commonly known as Capt. Williams, this appellation coming from his services both in the War of 1812 and in the State Militia. His family were as follows: Leonard went to Almont, Mich., at an early day and became a merchant; George Lathrop is noted above as the father of William L.; Sarah married first a Mr. Corey, and is now the widow of William S. Breed, having her home in Sprague, Conn.; and Ben. Adams died young. Capt. Williams lived to be eighty-six years old, and died in Sprague, Conn., at the home of his daughter. He was an interesting gentleman, typical of his time, courteous and upright, and he sustained to the last the confidence and respect of his fellow-townsmen.

George Lathrop Williams, born in North Stonington, was but a lad of four years when his parents removed to the town of Franklin, and made their home at what has since, in compliment to them, been known as Williams' Crossing. There he was reared, and there he had his education in the public schools, becoming a good scholar and following teaching at North Stonington in his early manhood. It was in North Stonington that he was married to Wealthy Avery Randall, a daughter of William and Wealthy (Avery) Randall, the former of whom served in the War of 1812 and was a man of much character and standing in his day. After his marriage Mr. Williams located on the old homestead in the town of Franklin, which he cultivated in company with his brother Leonard for many years. The two were very successful, and became extensive land owners. In the early 'fifties they divided their possessions, the old family homestead falling to George L. Williams, and which he retained until 1868, when he sold it and bought the "Johnson Farm" in the town of Franklin. There he made his home for eight years, when he disposed of the farm to James Austin, who still owns it, and bought another farm in the town of Windham, on which he remained until his removal to South Windham, where he died at the age of sixty-nine years, being buried in the village cemetery. Mrs. Wealthy Williams is still living in Willimantic. Mr. Williams was a Republican, and though not a politician or an office seeker, took a keen interest in the success of his party and in the effort to induce good men to take office. The following children were born to George L. and Wealthy Williams: William L.; Sarah Abby, now Mrs. John B. Johnson, of Willimantic; and Arthur J., a farmer in Lebanon, Conn. George L. Williams had poor eyesight, but was a most capable and energetic farmer, not only working hard but planning wisely and well, having the reputation of being one of the very best farmers of his day.

William L. Williams was reared in the town of Franklin, and attended both the Flanders and Gager district schools, from which he went to the Pine Grove Seminary, then conducted by Dr. Fitch, at South Windham, and finished his schooling at the Natchaug High School in Willimantic under D. P. Corbin. Mr. Williams was a good scholar, and at the age of nineteen was engaged in teaching, his first school being in the Brick Top district in Windham, and was among the last teachers to be "boarded round." As a young and inexperienced teacher he had what was very good compensation, twenty dollars a month and board. As the oldest son in the family he had early experience of hard labor, and while still a lad became very efficient in farm work. When his father gave up farming, Mr. Williams went to Windsor Locks, Conn., to take a position with the leading furniture dealer and undertaker of the place, C. W. Watrous. This business came easily to him, as he was a natural mechanic, and handy in almost every line. In a very short time he became a valuable man in the establishment, but after a year and a half he was compelled to leave Mr. Watrous and go home, as his father had again bought a farm and needed him. The father gave him a share in the business, and the two continued together until 1881. After his marriage he located on the old Williams homestead, and cultivated his father-in-law's (Mr. Treadway) place as well. When Mr. Treadway died Mr. Williams bought a portion of the estate, and with other land, was engaged in farming until 1881. In the spring of that year, in company with John B. Johnson, under the firm name of Johnson & Williams, he engaged in the general mercantile business at South Windham, continuing for some five years. On April 1, 1886, Mr. Williams disposed of his South Windham interests and came to Willimantic, where he had bought the livery business of David H. Clark on Church street, and has carried it on to the present time, meeting with large success and winning a host of friends.

On Sept. 10, 1872, Mr. Williams was married to Fannie E. Treadway, who was born in Lebanon, Conn., a daughter of Oliver W. and Hannah W. (Stanton) Treadway. Two children were born to them: (1) Mary A., born Dec. 10, 1876, was married July 24, 1901, to John Lee Chapman, Jr., of Plainfield, a graduate of Brown University, and now principal of the high school at Bristol, R. I.; they have one daughter, Helen Marion, born May 20, 1902. (2) James Everett, born April 6, 1883. Mrs. Williams died March 11, 1901, and was buried in Willimantic; she was a woman of many graces, and was a devoted wife and mother. On March 16, 1902, Mr. Williams was married to Ida M. Manning, of Willimantic, who was born at Guilford, July 25, 1859. Mr. Williams has always been a Republican, and served as warden when Willimantic was a borough. At the present time he is alderman from the first ward. The home in which Mr. Williams lives was the first residence built on Windham street. Mr. Williams has been a member of Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M., since June 6, 1883. He belongs to the Board of Trade in Willimantic, and he is a director in the Windham Fair Association and for some years was its secretary. He is a member of the Congregational Church in Windham Center.

Mr. Williams is a skilled horseman, and his fondness for horses is a natural trait, his grandfather having been noted for his ability in that direction. He has raised some very good horses, among them "Lou V.," who made 2:18 $\frac{1}{4}$ on a half-mile track and was then retired. Mr. Williams' knowledge of breeding is considered most excellent, as he is thoroughly familiar with those strains that combine to give speed and individuality.

WESLEY BRADWAY. One of the highly successful, substantial and representative citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is Wesley Bradway, who was born in Monson, Mass., Feb. 25, 1849. His grandfather, David Bradway, was a farmer near Stafford, and a much respected citizen.

Ira Bradway, the father of our subject, was a farmer all his life, his native place, Monson, Mass., being the scene of his activities until 1849, when he came to Stafford, Conn. He settled in the north part of the town, where he purchased a farm, and there he died. His political belief was in sympathy with the Democratic party. Mr. Bradway was married to Mary Chaffee, of Monson, Mass., and she died in Stafford. Their children were:

Milton and Julia, both of whom died in infancy; Eunice, who lives single, in Stafford; Wesley; Wyles, a farmer, who married Ella Town, and died in Stafford; Eleanor, who married George Cooley, a farmer and lives in Stafford; Eliza, married to Charles Jennings, a blacksmith of Springfield; Mary Elmira, who died in infancy; George, a farmer, who lives in Union, and married Amelia Hiscock; Henry, a farmer in Union, where he died, married to Phebe Capwell; Melissa, who married Charles Sears, a farmer of Stafford; Elmer, a farmer of Brimfield, Mass., who married Minnie Henry; and Herbert, who married Isa Jennings and lives in Brimfield, where he is a blacksmith.

The second marriage of Ira Bradway was to Juliette Shippey, of Eastford, and she still resides in Stafford. Their children were: Nettie, who married George H. Bradway, a farmer in Stafford, where she died; and Julia, who married Charles Ensminger, a weaver, of Stafford.

Wesley Bradway, of this biography, was brought by his parents to Stafford, when he was but six weeks old, and there he obtained his education, continuing at school until the age of sixteen years. His tastes led him into farming and lumbering and he has continued successfully in the same lines ever since. In 1872 Mr. Bradway purchased the Clark place, consisting of 130 acres of land and conducted his operations there until 1881, when he bought the "Oliver Hyde place," in Stafford, of 100 acres. He has since purchased the adjoining estates, known as the "Pinney place" and "Vinton place," the last named being the birth place and long time residence of his wife's father, and the home of her grandfather. He also owns other property, amounting in all to about 500 acres. On this land he raises excellent crops, carrying on a general farming business, and keeps twenty to twenty-five cows, disposing of his products in the dairy line to the Monson creamery.

Socially Mr. Bradway is a member of Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. and A. M., of Stafford, and is also connected with the Grange, having served in several capacities in that organization. In national affairs Mr. Bradway votes the Democratic ticket, but in town affairs he supports the candidate he deems best suited for the office, without regard to party lines. Taking a deep interest in educational matters, he has given his time and influence as a member of the committee on district schools.

On April 21, 1878, Wesley Bradway was married to E. Jennie (Vinton) Kemp, widow of Irving Kemp, and daughter of Porter Vinton, late of Union. To this marriage were born: Milo Everett, born Sept. 18, 1880, at home; Mattie Sarah, born March 17, 1884, who married Harvey Barrett, a farmer; Mary Almira, born April 19, 1890, at home; Ruth Amy, born Oct. 31, 1900.

Mr. Bradway is a man of the highest integrity and keen business instincts, and the success which has attended his efforts is richly deserved. Both he and his most excellent wife stand very high in the community in which they make their home, and number many warm friends among the people of Stafford and its vicinity.

GEORGE STORRS ELLIOTT, one of the foremost younger business men of Willimantic, Windham county, comes from a family identified for three generations with the commercial and business interests of that thrifty city. The name of Elliott has for more than half a century been much esteemed in this part of the State, and closely associated with straightforward and sound manliness, and all that is characteristic of honorable industry. The reputations of George S. Elliott, his father and grandfather have alike been of the most enviable and creditable character. Every transaction of the present representative of the family in Willimantic is open and honorable, and expressive of the utmost integrity and candor.

Mr. Elliott is engaged in an extensive carriage and wagon repository at No. 1015 Main Street, Willimantic, where he deals in carriages, wagons, sleighs, and every article needed in the handling, care and dressing of a horse. His stock is very large and complete, comprising every grade that his trade may demand. It is bought directly from the leading manufacturers, and is sold on terms that are proving satisfactory to a wide and pleased circle of patrons. In the adjoining yards he handles only the best grades of anthracite and bituminous coal, and supplies a large trade with this commodity. Hr. Elliott is also engaged in the fire insurance business, and offers his patrons the choice of twenty of the strongest fire insurance companies of the world.

George S. Elliott was born May 20, 1867, on the south side of Main Street, nearly opposite North Street, Willimantic, a son of George C. and Frances G. (Kemp) Elliott.

George E. Elliott, his grandfather, was the pioneer clothing merchant in Willimantic, coming to this city in 1845. He was born in Trowbridge, England, Oct. 21, 1806, son of George Elliott, who came to the United States late in life and died at Mamaroneck, N. Y. When a boy George E. Elliott learned the tailor's trade in London, in rooms so dark that light was used the year around. In his native country he was married to Miss Matilda Smith, a native of Maiden Head, near Windsor, England, where she was born March 21, 1809, a daughter of Huntley Smith. About 1836 Mr. Elliott and his wife with their two girls, Maria S. and Emma M., came to the United States, crossing the ocean on a sailing vessel, and landing in New York after being six weeks on the way. In this country they made their first home in Cromwell, Conn., where the husband and father found employment as a tailor. They soon moved to Middle Haddam, and from there to Goodspeeds, coming as noted above to Willimantic, where Mr. Elliott opened a tailor shop for himself nearly opposite the present Hooker House on Main Street. Later he was located on the northeast corner of Walnut and Main Streets, where he was established some years. Mr. Elliott had become sufficiently fore-handed after a few years in Willimantic to buy a lot from the Congregational Church, and he built a house near the present site of the Arnold Building, which he used both for a shop and a residence. In this building, which contained two store rooms, he opened the first clothing store ever found in Willimantic, and here he greatly prospered. Some years later he built the Elliott Block on the south side of Main Street, nearly opposite the foot of North Street and to this he removed his clothing store, passing here his last active years. His death occurred Jan. 20, 1867, and his remains were buried in the Willimantic Cemetery. In his political views he was a Whig and later became a Republican, being always identified with the best element of the party, and never seeking or accepting office. Personally he was a man of good character and the strictest integrity. His standing in life was second to none. His capital was his thorough knowledge of his trade, his excellent judgment and his notable industry, and his start in life was made with his needle. In his active and laborious life he accumulated a very comfortable competence, and left a reputation of which his grandchildren are justly proud. Neat in his dress, systematic in his business, everything about his place was kept in perfect order. His good wife lived until Dec. 10, 1882, when her death occurred in Willimantic, where she was buried. George E. and Matilda Elliott were the parents of the following children: Maria S., born in England, lives in Willimantic, unmarried; Emma M., born in England, never married and she died in Willimantic at the age of forty-six years and two months; George C.; Frederick N., born Feb. 8, 1840, at Middle Haddam, Conn., went west, and was married in Quincy, Ill., to Sarah F. Metcalf, and died Aug. 2, 1878, leaving an only son, Frederick M., who is still living in Quincy.

George C. Elliott was born May 30, 1837, at Middle Haddam, and was but a small child when his parents removed to Goodspeeds, in the town of East Haddam, and there he had his first schooling, completing his education at Dr. Fitch's school, at South Windham, walking back and forth from his parents' home in Willimantic. This school was known as the Pine Grove Seminary and was quite noted in its day. Mr. Elliott did not have very robust health when a boy, and spent several summers working in the country for his physical improvement. Receiving much benefit, in 1854 he was able to go to Providence to take a place as clerk in that city, a position he held for a year. At that time the journey was made by stage, and it was a long day's travel. In Providence he was employed in Warner, Scott & Hathaway's wholesale cloak and tailors' trimmings establishment, at No. 12 North Main Street. Three years later Mr. Elliott came back to Willimantic to open a shoe store in his father's building, at a time when there was only one other shoe store in the town and he continued in this business until the spring of 1886, in which year he sold out. For many years his father divided the store with him, but in 1885 his building was destroyed by fire, and Mr. Elliott rebuilt the block as it stands at the present time. He helped to start a number of industries in Willimantic, and was always a public-spirited and enterprising man. In the foundry on Mansfield Avenue he was one of the stockholders, as well as in the Silk Company, formerly on the corner of Church and Valley Streets. In the Natchaug Silk Co. he was a stockholder, and in the Willimantic Trust Co., holding the office of director in this latter corporation. His business and personal reputation is of the very highest character, and to him applies with peculiar force the old saying, "his word is as good as his bond."

Mr. Elliott cast his first vote for Lincoln in 1860, and since that time has been a Republican, and his services on the board of burgesses were most valuable. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott belong to the Congregational Church.

On Dec. 25, 1865, Mr. Elliott was married at No. 272 West 18th Street, New York, to Miss Frances G. Kemp, who was born in that city, Jan. 30, 1844, a daughter of Peter and Margaret (Kadue) Kemp. Mr. Kemp was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and his wife was a native of Philadelphia; when a young man he learned the baker's trade, and was engaged in that occupation a number of years, but in his later years he held a responsible position with the Knickerbocker Ice Co., of New York. There were nine children in his family, of whom seven grew to maturity. To Mr. and Mrs. Elliott were born two children: George S. is the subject of this writing; and Mary Isabelle, born May 15, 1869, was married June 20, 1894, to John T. Collyer, of Boston, and has her home in Waterbury.

George S. Elliott was born in Willimantic as already noted, and acquired his education in the local schools, graduating from the Natchaug High School in the class of 1884, being the last class to graduate under Prof. Welch, a most excellent and popular instructor. At Hannum's Business College at Hartford he took a course in practical matters and then secured a position in the New York office of Holmes, Booth & Haydens, of Waterbury, Conn., which he held for about a year. At the end of that time he returned to Willimantic and entered the office of George F. Taylor. While he was engaged in this establishment the firm became Hillhouse & Taylor, and for several years following this change Mr. Elliott was in the employ of Lincoln & Boss, where he remained until 1894. In that year he formed a partnership with E. P. Chesbro, to engage in the trade in bicycles, carriages, wagons, coal, and wood, and fire insurance. In 1895 the firm sold over 5,000 bicycles, and was not able to meet all its orders. This was to a very large extent a wholesale trade, the firm being New England agents for the Wilhelm Bicycle Co., of Hamburg, Pa., and the Packer Wheel Co., of Reading, Pa. They had a most extended trade in this line until July 1, 1899, when it was dissolved by the retirement of Mr. Chesbro. Mr. Elliott continues in the business, but has dropped the bicycle agency. He is also one of the auditors of the Windham Silk Company.

Mr. Elliott was married Oct. 4, 1897, to Miss Clara A., the oldest daughter of Gardiner Hall, Jr., of whom a sketch is published in another place. Mrs. Elliott, a most charming woman, died Nov. 4, 1899, and was buried in Willimantic, and her departure left a void in loving hearts not easily filled. Mr. Elliott cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1888, and has always been a Republican, but not a politician nor an office seeker. He is a member of Natchaug Lodge, No. 22, K. P., and belongs to the Uniform Rank of the same order at Willimantic. In religion, Mr. Elliott belongs to the First Congregational Church, which he serves most acceptably as treasurer. In the local Y. M. C. A. he is a vice president, and has served as recording secretary. In all, he is one of the successful business men of the city, and his exemplary habits and close attention to business are characteristic of his entire career.

MERRITT A. DAVIS, Somers, Tolland county, is a representative of one of the oldest families in New England, the direct line of ancestry being traced to Thomas Davis, who came from Marlborough, County of Wilks, England, in 1635, arriving in Boston on June 3d, of the same year, thence moving to Newbury. He was made a freeman in June, 1641, and that same year removed to Haverhill, Mass., where he died, in 1683, at the age of eighty years. He was married in England, and he left two sons, Joseph and John.

John Davis, son of the emigrant, was born in England, and after coming to America lived in Newbury, Mass. By his wife Mary he had the following children: John, Zachary, Jeremiah, Mary, Cornelius and Ephraim.

Cornelius Davis, son of John, was born April 15, 1653, and lived in Rowley, Mass. He was a soldier in the Narragansett war, and for his services received a large tract of land which was located in what is now Stafford, Conn., and deeded the same to his son, Cornelius, which was filed on record on Feb. 21, 1733: "Know all men that I, Cornelius Davis of Rowley, in the county of Essex in the province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, Husbandman, for divers good causes but especially in consideration of the love and affection I bare to my son Cornelius Davis, Jr., of Stafford, in the county of Hartford [now Tolland], in the Colony of Connecticut, in New England, and in consideration of the good services he hath done for me, Do give, grant, makeover and confirm to and upon him, my said son, all that my right and interest in or unto that tract of country land which the General Court of late was pleased amongst others to grant to me for services I did as soldier in the Narragansett war against the Indians, as may by said courts grant fully appear to have and to hold all my right and interest in said premises, to him, my said son, and his heirs and assigns forever. And I, the said Cornelius Davis, do hereby warrant this my conveyance, and do oblige myself and my heirs forever. Cornelius Davis." This brave old soldier died in Rowley, where he married Sarah Hilton, and reared three sons, Samuel, Cornelius, Jr., and James.

Cornelius Davis, Jr., was born Oct. 9, 1693, and settled in what is now Stafford, on the tract of land deeded him by his father. He was one of the twelve settlers of the town, where he became a large landowner, and he died there June 11, 1779. His marriage was to Mehitable Bartlett, and their children were: Cornelius, Samuel, Joseph, Benjamin, Moses, Mehitable, Sarah, Mary, Aaron, Noah and Love.

Lieut. Noah Davis, son of Cornelius, Jr., married Sarah Alden, who was born Feb. 17, 1748, and who died Dec. 9, 1776. She was a daughter of Deacon Daniel Alden, who died in Lebanon, N. H., and he was a son of Deacon Daniel, "Esq.," who was a son of Deacon Joseph, of Bridgewater, Mass., who was a son of Deacon Joseph, who was a son of John Alden and Priscilla Molines, of Duxbury, Mass., of "Mayflower" fame. The children of Lieut. Noah and Sarah Davis were: Daniel, born Oct. 26, 1768; Sarah, born July 25, 1770; and Aseneth, born May 9, 1774. For his second wife Lieut. Noah wedded Anna Ladd, born Sept. 7, 1752, and her children were: Anna, born Aug. 7, 1779; Sarah, born Dec. 10, 1781; Philip, born Sept. 19, 1784; Lois, born May 11, 1786; and Nabby, born April 5, 1794. Lieut. Noah Davis died Oct. 30, 1828.

Daniel Davis, son of Lieut. Noah, born on Oct. 26, 1768, in the northwest corner of Stafford, and as a farmer he spent his entire life in that vicinity. In his care his parents passed their last years. The house in which he resided he erected shortly after his marriage, and he became a large landholder and took a prominent position in the political affairs of Stafford, holding many of the offices in the town, and he represented Stafford in the State Legislature. For many years previous to his death he was a deacon in the Congregational Church. He passed away Oct. 27, 1847, and is buried in West Stafford. On Sept. 26, 1798, Daniel Davis was married to Margaret Chapin, who was born April 24, 1773, a daughter of Samuel Chapin, and died April 2, 1839. The following children were born of this marriage: Daniel, born July 8, 1799, died Feb. 5, 1803. Sophia, born April 24, 1801, died Feb. 18, 1803. Daniel, Jr., was born March 7, 1803. One born June 23, 1805, died the same day. Alden, born April 17, 1807, died Oct. 17, 1887; he married Eunice Cady, daughter of Deacon David Cady, of Somers, and their children were—Samuel Alden, Margaret, Mardelia (who married E. O. Dimmock, of West Stafford), Edwin Cady, Franklin Chapin and George Williams. Spencer, born April 3, 1809, became a prosperous farmer in Somers, and died Oct. 13, 1897; he married (first) Nancy Patten, who bore him four children, Luther, Sarah Wells (who married Seth Chapin), Laura Amelia (who married Dr. Frank Floor, of Youngstown, Ohio) and Mary Ann. Spencer Davis married (second) Mary Cady, daughter of Deacon David Cady, and sister to his brother Alden's wife. Sophia, born June 22, 1811, died April 4, 1838. David, born Aug. 8, 1813, married (first) Esther Patten, and (second) Elizabeth Davis; he was a prosperous farmer in Stafford and died Feb. 3, 1888. Noah C., born May 19, 1815, married (first) Mary Graves, and had one son, Albert N.; by his second wife, Martha Fuller, he had a son, Myron F., who married Carrie Breed, and after her death, Edith Bradway. By his third wife, Elizabeth Brown, Noah C. Davis had no children. He engaged in farming in Stafford and there died Jan. 12, 1892.

Daniel Davis, Jr., was born in Stafford, and educated in the district schools, residing at home until his marriage. On May 21, 1827, he purchased the farm now occupied by his son, our subject, from Emery Pease, Jr., adding to the acreage of the estate, and in 1830 he erected the present comfortable brick house. During the whole of his life he followed farming, and he died Jan. 28, 1877, his death probably being hastened on account of a sad accident which occurred when he was but fifteen years of age. At that time he burned his left leg, and for many years his health was impaired on account of the wound never healing, and some twenty years previous to his death he had the leg amputated, this severe measure resulting in a partial return to robustness.

The political affiliation of Daniel Davis was with the Republican party and he held some of the minor offices. On Nov. 7, 1832, he was married to Marcia Case, who was born June 26, 1807, a daughter of Stephen and Huldah (Washburn) Case. Huldah Washburn was a daughter of Solomon Washburn, Jr., who died Dec. 20, 1816, at the age of eighty-two years, his wife, Mary Warner, dying Aug. 1, 1812, at the age of seventy-five. The children of Daniel and Marcia Davis were: Emeline E., born Nov. 29, 1833, died Sept. 21, 1852. Daniel M., born July 31, 1837, is a mechanic in Springfield, Mass.; he married Mary Isham, and has three children, Winthrop, Edith and Howard M. Merritt A. Marcia E., born Dec. 30, 1845, married Elliott Kibbe, a farmer in Somers, and she died June 1, 1881, leaving one child, Nelson E. Mrs. Marcia (Case) Davis died Oct. 21, 1852, and on Aug. 30, 1854, Daniel Davis was married to Parmelia Sexton, daughter of Freegrace and Anna (Cushman) Sexton, who was born June 5, 1817. She survives him, and is a member of the family of our subject.

Merritt A. Davis was born Feb. 10, 1841, in the home he now occupies. He attended the district schools, and for two winters a select school kept by a Mr. Barrett, at Somers. There was plenty of farm work to keep him employed, and he remained at home until his enlistment for service in the Civil war, on Aug. 19, 1862, joining Co. K, 22nd Conn. V. I., for a nine months' service. This regiment saw service in the vicinity of Washington and in Virginia, and July 7, 1863, he was mustered out at Hartford, then returning to Somers. With the exception of the year 1866, when he resided in South Wilbraham (now Hampden), Mass., Mr. Davis has been engaged in farming on his estate in Somers, his land comprising 125 acres, and upon it he carries on very successfully a general line of farming and dairying. Many valuable improvements add to the attractiveness and worth of the farm, as Mr. Davis is very generally conceded to be one of the best agriculturists of this section.

On April 29, 1866, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Rodelia A. Cooley, who was born Sept. 1, 1841, in Ludlow, Mass., a daughter of Jonathan Luke and Sarah S. (Kibbe) Cooley, the latter of whom was a daughter of Silas and Sally (Watrous) Kibbe, and a granddaughter of Daniel Kibbe, a Revolutionary soldier. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis are: Emeline Adelia, born March 2, 1867; Horatio Merritt, born Aug. 24, 1871, resides in Glastonbury, Conn., and married Julia Aborn, who has borne him one child, Merritt A., born April 2, 1900; Bertha Maria, born Oct. 12, 1876; and Josephine Marcia, born March 4, 1879. Mr. Davis has been a prominent Republican, and has efficiently served in a number of town offices, has been selectman, and assessor several terms. He is a member of the Somers Grange. The religious connection of the family is with the Somers Congregational Church.

OLON S. CHAFFEE, for a number of years a well-known manufacturer of Mansfield, Tolland county, and now engaged in business in Montville, Conn., is a representative of an old and honored family, for many years prominent in the history of Windham and Tolland counties.

Thomas Chaffee, the founder of the family in America, settled in Hingham, Plymouth Co., Mass., in 1637.

Frederick Chaffee, the grandfather of Olon S. Chaffee, was a prosperous farmer, and followed that calling all his life, residing in the north-east portion of the town of Mansfield. He died April 3, 1862, in Mansfield, at an advanced age. He married Katherine Knowlton, who died Oct. 21, 1875. To them were born: Orwell S., father of Olon S.; and William, who married Sophia Simons, and was a farmer in Mansfield when he died leaving one son, Frederick, who is now living in New London.

Orwell S. Chaffee, son of Frederick, was born June 10, 1807, in Ashford, Conn., came to Mansfield with his parents when a boy, and was reared upon a farm. When he attained to man's estate he engaged in the silk mill (soon after his marriage) of his father-in-law, Joseph Conant, at Conantville, and was later taken into the company, continuing in that line for many years. Later Mr. Conant retired from the business and the management of affairs fell upon the shoulders of Mr. Chaffee, who so continued for some years. Finally the business was disposed of, and in 1838 Mr. Chaffee purchased a factory site at what is now Chaffeeville, tore down the old building and erected a large building; he also constructed a good dam. There he engaged in the manufacture of silk, which he continued the remainder of his life. In later years he took his son, Hon. J. Dwight Chaffee, into partnership, and in 1872, a factory was started at Willimantic, under the title of O. S. Chaffee & Son, the institution at Chaffeeville being also kept in operation. The product of these factories was silk thread and braid, which found a ready market all over the world. Mr. Chaffee was active in business until his death, which occurred April 2, 1887, and he is buried at Gurleyville, Conn. In politics he was a Republican, and was always active in his work for the success of the party. He held many of the town offices, representing the town in the State Legislature for two terms. Socially he was a member of the Eastern Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Willimantic. He attended the Methodist Church of which his wife was a member, and to which he gave his active support. In personal appearance Mr. Chaffee was about five feet, nine and one-half inches in height, and weighed 225 pounds when in good health, and his death was occasioned by acute Bright's disease. Being essentially a self-made man, his success was well merited, and he shared his prosperity with those less fortunate.

Mr. Chaffee married Lucinda Amelia Conant, who was born August 30, 1814, in Northampton, Mass., daughter of Joseph Conant, and died Feb. 27, 1879. The children born of this union were as follows: Maria died at the age of fifteen; Col. J. Dwight is mentioned below; Olon S. is mentioned below. Mr. Chaffee was married, a second time, to Bertha Perkins, a resident of Mansfield. No children were born of this marriage. Mrs. Chaffee later married a Mr. Gridley.

Col. J. Dwight Chaffee, the second child of Orwell S. Chaffee, was born Aug. 9, 1847, attended the common schools, and at the age of sixteen entered his father's factory at Mansfield, where he thoroughly learned the process of silk manufacturing, later becoming his father's partner. Later he became president of the Natchaug Silk Company and director of the W. G. & A. R. Morrison Machine Co. Since 1890 he has resided in Willimantic.

In politics he is a Republican, and in 1874 was elected to the State Legislature; in 1885 he was the choice of his constituents for State senator. In January, 1887, he was appointed on the staff of Gov. Phineas C. Lounsbury. He married Martha, daughter of George B. Armstrong, of Mansfield, and three children have been born to them: Arthur D., Howard S. and Gertrude A.

Joseph Conant, the maternal grandfather of Olon S. Chaffee, was born March 28, 1792, in Mansfield, near what is now Mansfield Centre, one of the twelve children, six sons and six daughters, of Sylvanus Conant, all of whom grew to maturity and attained the age of at least sixty. Being brought up upon a farm, all of his school life was ended by the time he was twelve, and, as his mother died about that time, child though he was, the little fellow set out to win his way in the world. His first work was upon a neighbor's farm, where he remained until he attained his majority, when he erected a small factory upon the site of Chaffeeville and began the manufacture of augers and steelyards, although he had but little capital and employed but few men. For a number of years he followed this occupation, meeting with a fair measure of success. Later he embarked in silk manufacturing at that place, and after some years went to Northampton, Mass., where he was employed in the silk mill for a year, became the manager of same, and later the owner. Being successful, he took several partners. In time he sold the plant, and erected another in the same town, operating the factory in conjunction with Dwight Swift, under the title of Conant & Swift. Mr. Swift died a few years later, and Mr. Conant sold the property and located in Mansfield, erecting the silk mill at Conantville, which place was named after him. At that time only one house was standing upon the site of the now prosperous town. There he continued the manufacture of silk for eighteen years, or until his death, which occurred Oct. 10, 1870, after a short illness, of Bright's disease, and he is buried in Willimantic. Being captain of the local militia, he was familiarly known as Capt. Conant. Mr. Conant was a man of commanding presence, being six feet tall, and weighing at least 230 pounds, when in the prime of life, and until his later years enjoyed almost perfect health. Not only did he interest himself in his factory matters, but also dealt extensively in real estate, buying old property, and repairing and disposing of it at a considerable advance. Public-spirited to a marked degree, he took a great interest in improvements, and a number of the good roads in the vicinity were made and kept in repair at his expense. Having won his own way in the world, he was able to appreciate the struggles of others, and was very generous. In politics, he was a Whig and later a Republican, and twice represented the town of Mansfield in the State Legislature; socially he was a Mason. He attended and supported the Congregational Church, and in his death the town lost one of its best and most highly respected citizens. His first wife, Sophia Huntley, was born in Mansfield, and their only child, Lucinda A., was the mother of our subject. Mr. Conant married Parmelia Gaylord, of Ashford, Conn., for his second wife; there were no children by this union. On April 13, 1845, Mr. Conant married Caroline Williams, a native of Mansfield, born in June, 1820, who is still living, and resides in Mansfield. Mr. Conant was one of the pioneers in the manufacture of silk, and to his efforts is due much of the advancement made in that industry. Being of a very genial nature, he made many friends, and was loved by all who knew him.

Olon S. Chaffee, our subject proper, was born Nov. 20, 1855, in what is now Chaffeeville, in the house that stands immediately south of his present residence. During his boyhood he attended the common schools of his native town, and then went for three years to the select school of Dr. J. C. Fitch, at Norwalk, Conn. After returning home he went to work in his father's factory, first on a finishing machine, and later was employed in all the various departments, until he secured a thorough knowledge of the business. In 1888, after the death of his father, he assumed full charge of the factory, conducting it under the name of O. S. Chaffee. In February, 1902, he moved all his business to Montville, Conn., where he conducts a much larger business, his factory there having twice the capacity of his former mill.

In politics, Mr. Chaffee is a Republican, and he represented Mansfield in the State Legislature in 1882, at a time when Hon. John M. Hall, now president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Company, was speaker of the House; Mr. Chaffee served on the committee on State's Prisons. In 1903 he represented the 24th District in the State Senate, and was on the committees on Manufactures and Senate Appointments, serving as chairman of the former.

Mr. Chaffee has never married. He is at all times a pleasant, genial companion, and a staunch friend. Personally he presents a fine appearance, being six feet four inches in height, and weighing at least 265 pounds. In all of his transactions he proves himself a worthy descendant of those two excellent men, his father and grandfather, whose insight into business life and methods he clearly inherits, along with their pleasing personalities.

FRANK ADDISON NEWMAN was born Aug. 24, 1858, in New Bedford, Mass., and is a son of Daniel E. Newman, who was a native of Providence, R. I. The senior Newman was a carpenter, and worked at his trade until 1868, when he removed to Tolland, buying the Baker farm on Sugar Hill, and making that his home until 1873. At that time he made his home in Cromwell, dying the year of his leaving Tolland. Mr.

Newman was a Democrat, but never took an active part in political matters. He was deeply interested in the affairs of the Baptist Church, of which he had long been a member.

Daniel E. Newman and Abbie Crandall were married in 1845. She was a native of Rhode Island, and became the mother of the following family: George, Alwilda, Sarah, Daniel, Stella, Frank A., William, Adelbert and Charles.

Noah Newman, the grandfather of Frank A., was born in Plainfield, Conn., where he followed the occupation of a carpenter. He was a Democrat.

Frank Addison Newman received his early education in Providence, to which city his parents removed very soon after his birth, and completed his schooling in Tolland, where his family located when he was twelve years old. Leaving school at the age of sixteen years, he began working as a farmer for Newton Griswold, who has become widely noted as the seed man. With him the farmer had remained for three years, and had an invaluable training. Three years following his work with Mr. Griswold were spent in farming in Tolland, and then Frank A. entered the employ of the Underwood Belt Company to learn the trade of a belt maker. This was in 1883, and Mr. Newman has worked at his trade to the present time and under the firm where he began, which has since become the William Summer Belting Company. In 1892 Mr. Newman became the foreman of the factory, and this position he has held to the present day, discharging the duties that have come upon him in a most creditable manner.

Mr. Newman is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and holds membership in the A. O. U. W. at Rockville. He is a staunch Democrat, and takes much interest in the affairs of the party. In 1899 he was elected to the General Assembly, where he served on the committee on Joint Rules. For three years he was assessor of the town, and for the same period was a constable and a grand juror. In 1901 he was elected second selectman, and still holds the office. Mr. Newman is a progressive and public-spirited citizen, and is coming to the front as one of the representative men of the town, honest and conscientious, and a clean and upright man.

Frank A. Newman and Mary Salinda Southwick, of Mansfield, Conn., were married March 21, 1881. Mrs. Newman is a daughter of Albert Southwick, and is the mother of the following children: Norval Smith, born Jan. 15, 1882; Gertrude Estella, born April 17, 1886; Mabel Bernice, born Oct. 13, 1887; George Frank, born Sept. 15, 1891; Clifton and Carlton, twins, born Nov. 21, 1892. Three children died in infancy. Mr. Newman purchased the Seymour Fuller farm in April, 1887, which contains 136 acres.

The Newmans are all highly respected people, and have many friends in the community. They are kind neighbors, and belong to the better people of Tolland.

CLIFTON H. WRIGHT, the present first selectman of Ashford, and one of the most extensive and successful agriculturists and stock raisers of Windham county, was born Feb. 25, 1861, upon the farm where he now lives, and which was improved about the middle of the eighteenth century by his paternal great-grandfather, Nathan.

Nathan Wright was born in 1735, and was the first of the name to cast his fortunes with the town of Ashford. With his wife, Betsey, he located on the farm now occupied by his great-grandson, where his death occurred March 22, 1796, while his wife survived him until April 19, 1825, at the age of eighty-one years.

David Wright, son of Nathan and the paternal grandfather of Clifton H., was reared on the homestead replete with time-honored associations, and after his marriage with Lodica Utley continued to make the old farm his home until his death, Oct. 1, 1842. His first wife died June 27, 1821, at the age of thirty-nine years; she bore her husband the following children: Caroline, born Dec. 1, 1806, married Shubael Keeney, and died in Hartford, Conn., Jan. 15, 1883; David, born June 11, 1808, was in early life a large clover seed producer and a pump manufacturer in Ashford, later engaging in extensive stock operations in Kankakee, Ill., where he gained wealth and influence, and where his death occurred Sept. 22, 1866; Giles, born March 11, 1810, lived with his wife, Cordelia, in New York City, where he acquired considerable wealth as a commission merchant; Philo, born Feb. 16, 1812, died March 9, 1825; Clark, born Aug. 9, 1813, married Fannie Manning, and was a successful physician at Jamesport, L. I.; Laura, born Aug. 13, 1815, married Edwin Storrs, of Mansfield, and became the mother of Hon. Ralph W. Storrs, of that town; Sophronia, born June 13, 1817, married John Atwood, and died on the farm of her husband in Mansfield; Leander and Ledoyt, born June 14, 1819, the former the father of Clifton H. and the latter a bachelor who died on the home farm Dec. 15, 1853; and Lodica, born Feb. 26, 1821, became the wife of Israel Robinson, and died in Willimantic. For a second wife David Wright married Sarah Amidon, of Ashford, daughter of Captain Jedediah Amidon, who survived her husband until May 15, 1877, aged eighty years. She was the mother of three children: Louise, born Aug. 30, 1822, became the wife of Theodore Conant, and died in Mansfield in early life; Polly Maria, born June 6, 1824, is the widow of Anson Cortiss, and lives in Willimantic; and Philo, born March 2, 1828, married Sophronia Stiles, a farmer of Willington, and died Feb. 16, 1892.

LEANDER WRIGHT, the father of Clifton H. lived on the home farm until his sixteenth year and attended the district schools of his neighborhood. He then went to New York and entered the employ of his brother Giles, with whom he remained until his return to Connecticut the year before his marriage. For the following two years after his marriage at Mount Hope he lived on and worked the home farm in Ashford, and then settled in Mount Hope, where he found employment in the ax handle factory then owned by the Lelands. He later removed to Ashford, on the Bothwell farm at Pumpkin Hill, which he rented for several years, or until after the death of his twin brother, who had in the meantime run the old farm belonging to his father. This property was auctioned off and came into the possession of Leander Wright, who, however, had to go in debt for it, and was therefore handicapped by his responsibility for several years. He not only succeeded in meeting this indebtedness within a reasonable time, but managed to rear his large family in a comfortable way, and at his death, Aug. 17, 1887, was in very affluent circumstances. He was suddenly attacked by apoplexy, and his end came within a couple of weeks of the catastrophe. He was a very industrious and capable man, a staunch Democrat, and bore a name above reproach in the community. He married Sally Howe Fisk, born in Mansfield June 9, 1828, a daughter of William and Selyma (Whitemore) Fisk, and who now lives with her son, Clifton H. Of this union there were born ten children: Sarah S., born March 2, 1847, married Nathaniel L. Knowlton, of West Ashford, the latter mentioned at length in another part of this work; Roscoe H., born March 1, 1849, married Anna E. Sikes, and has one son, Earl R., who married Mary E. Button, of Turnerville; Hobart L., a traveling salesman for the wholesale provision dealers, Charles A. Baldwin & Co., of Boston, married Isabelle Brackett, and had one son, Victor B., who died in infancy; Carlton A., a traveling salesman who died in Princeton, Ill., married Elizabeth Huffman, and had three children, Lottie (deceased), Edith, and Leander; David A. died April 24, 1859, aged eight months; William F., passenger engineer on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, located at West St. Paul, Minn., married Annie Webb and has one daughter, Beulah; Clifton H.; Clark L., born June 29, 1863, was an optician in different parts of the country, and died on the home farm, Oct. 25, 1900; Minnie L. married first George B. Rider (by whom she had one son, Raymond Harrison), and second Dr. C. W. S. Frost, of Waterbury, Conn. (by whom she had two children, Barbara and Sela); and Fred M. is a farmer residing on the old home farm.

In the same house in which he was born Clifton H. Wright has continued to live up to the present time. For the greater part his educational opportunities have been confined to the public schools, although at the age of ten he went to live in the family of Dr. F. O. Bennett, of Westford, and during that year attended the school of that town. The homestead came into his undisputed possession before the death of his father, and he has since increased his holdings by later purchases, so that he now has over a thousand acres, some of which is in the town of Mansfield. For the past twenty years he has been specially engaged in the lumber business, and he also buys and sells considerable cattle, his reputation in the latter line being far reaching. He is a Democrat in political affiliation, and has served on the board of relief. In 1896 he was chosen first selectman, a position maintained with credit and satisfaction ever since. During the term of 1899 he represented the town in the legislature, at that time being a colleague of Theodore M. Lyon. He is an attendant of the Baptist church, and bears an enviable standing in the community.

One branch of the Wright family in Windham county was created by Abel Wright and his wife, Rebecca. Mr. Wright bought a large tract of land in the towns of Windham and Lebanon, May 30, 1717, and there are evidences which point to his being a son of Abel Wright, of Springfield in 1655. The latter married, in 1659, Martha, daughter of Samuel Kitcherd, of Hartford. Abel Wright (2) was born in 1664, and in 1691 married Rebecca, daughter of Samuel Terry, of Springfield, by whom he had the following children, born between the years 1692 and 1698: Rebecca, Samuel, Abel, and Samuel. After the birth of the last child nothing is heard of this branch. One of his sisters married Ebenezer Dewey, of Lebanon, Conn. It is supposed that Abel, the son of Abel, removed to Lebanon, where an Abel and Rebecca Wright had, between 1701 and 1712, the following children: Ebenezer, Ephraim, Martha, Jemima, Ann, Miriam, Benjamin and Benjamin (2). Abel Wright (2) died June 2, 1745.

CHARLES ELISHA WHITEMORE, one of the thrifty and public-spirited younger business men of Willimantic, Windham county, belongs to a family whose representatives have long been conspicuous in the social and commercial annals of this part of New England, and especially of Windham county, where the family was located very early in its history. Charles E. Whitemore is the only child of his parents, and as his father was also an only son, the name is not as frequent as it once was.

Willard Whitemore, the great-grandfather of Charles E., lived in Masonville, Conn., where he kept an inn, and where he lived and died. His death occurred at an advanced age, and came as the result of over-exposure to the heat. Sally Bixby, his wife, was the daughter of Joseph Bixby, of Thompson, and lived a widow many years. Their children were: David; Nancy, died unmarried; Lucia, the wife of Rebert Sawyer, a machinist, died in Springfield, Mass.; Amanda was married to William Gray, and later to William Beattie, dying in Little Falls, N. Y.; Sarah Ann married Frederick Hutchins, and died in Thompson, Conn.; Willard died young; Jane married Thomas Aldrich, who died in the Civil War; and two other children died in infancy.

David Whittemore was born in 1810, in Masonville, or what is now called Grosvenor Dale, Conn., in the town of Thompson. When a young man he learned the shoe-maker's trade, and for several years after his marriage he worked at that trade in Masonville, and then for many years he was engaged in the same way in various towns in Connecticut and Rhode Island, before locating in Willimantic, where his last years were spent, and where he died May 14, 1894, at the venerable age of eighty-four years. He was buried in the city where his life had drawn to a close so peaceably and quietly. David Whittemore and Lovica Hibbard, daughter of Ebenezer Hibbard, a Woodstock farmer, were married while they were still young, and she lived to be seventy-four years of age, dying April 29, 1883. Their children were as follows: (1) Sybil Ann, born Dec. 12, 1832, married John L. Flagg, who died in Springfield, leaving children as follows: Charles W., Willard W., Delia Maria and Maria Delia (twins, of whom the former is deceased), and Frank E. (Mrs. Flagg afterward wedded the late Henry W. Granville, and she now resides in Springfield; (2) Albert is mentioned below.

Albert Whittemore was born in Woodstock, Conn., in 1833, and learned the shoe-making trade while still a lad, in Oxford, Mass. For several years he followed that trade, and as he was early thrown on his own resources it afforded him a ready subsistence. His schooling was limited, but his common sense was strong. Albert Whittemore was married to Keziah Youngs, of North Grosvenor Dale, Conn., who died June 29, 1857, at the age of twenty-three years, leaving no issue. Mr. Whittemore was married in Grosvenor Dale, second, June 5, 1859, to Emily Frances Bigelow, of Thompson, Conn. She was born April 22, 1838, daughter of Charles N. and Oril (Talbot) Bigelow. Her father was a native of Montpelier, Vt., and her mother was born in Thompson, Conn.; their family consisted of eleven children, five of whom were girls, and Mrs. Whittemore was the sixth member of this interesting family. Mr. Whittemore made his home in Douglas, Conn., after his marriage, and there he began the restaurant business. He first came to Willimantic in April, 1861, and a few months later he removed his family to this city, where he bought a hotel and restaurant directly opposite the railroad station, known as the "York House." In 1865 he purchased the "Brainard House," a historical hotel of the town, which he conducted four years, or until 1869, when he located in the north end of the city, on Jackson street, and built the home now occupied by J. C. Bugbee. During this time he had changed his business quarters several times, each time finding a better location. About 1872 he conducted a restaurant and cafe in the McAvoy building on Main street, and was there established for some four years, when he removed to his property on Ash street, near Jackson street. There Mr. Whittemore lived for some twelve years, being engaged in the real estate business, and doing some farming. After this he had a home on Maple avenue, from which he moved to his home on Meadow street, where he was living at the time of his death, Aug. 15, 1891. For some time he had been a severe sufferer from locomotor ataxia, from which death resulted. All his life he was a man of energy, and served at one time as a Burgess in Willimantic, being elected on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Whittemore belonged to Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M., and to Trinity Chapter, No. 9, R. A. M., at Willimantic. He was also a member of Natchaug Lodge, No. 22, K. P. His burial occurred in Willimantic, and he is survived by a widow and an only son, whose name introduces this article. His widow is a most estimable lady, and is much venerated by those who know her best. Mr. Whittemore left a good competence and was a very successful business man, having an especially sound judgment in real estate matters, in which he was an extensive dealer.

Charles Elisha Whittemore was born Aug. 16, 1863, in what is known as the Bassett Block, at the corner of Railroad and Main streets. He received his education at Natchaug School under that well-known educator, John B. Welch, concluding his schooling with a course in Hannum's Business College in Hartford. Very soon after completing the business college course, he went to work in the printing office conducted by Wilbur F. Hanks, on Church street. This work, however, he soon gave up, as he wished to go into business for himself. This he did in November, 1880, beginning in electro-plating, as a member of the firm of W. Y. Buck & Co., of Willimantic. After a time this firm became Buck & Whittemore, and still later the Willimantic Plating Co., doing business at No. 30 Meadow street, in a building erected for its accommodation. Mr. Whittemore retired from the plating business, to enter the employ of John Todd, in a store on Main street, where now is established the Grand Union Tea Co., and in 1886 he entered the confectionery and ice cream business, his first place of business being on Union, near Center street. Shortly after this he bought the store of John Todd, and soon located in the McAvoy Block, where he remained until 1895, removing in that year in his present quarters, in which he conducts the leading business of the kind in the city. He deals in confectionery, soda water, ice cream and similar goods.

On April 18, 1888, Mr. Whittemore was married to Clara E. Maine, born in Hope Valley, Conn., Sept. 22, 1867, a daughter of Lyman and Detta (Snow) Maine. To this union have come two children: Willard L., born July 15, 1889; and Oril A., born Aug. 4, 1892. Mr. Whittemore cast his first vote for Grover Cleveland in 1884, and he has remained a Democrat to the present time. For a year he was clerk of the borough, though he is in no sense an office seeker. In Masonic circles he has taken strong ground, and is affiliated with Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M.; Trinity Chapter, No. 9, R. A. M.; Olive Branch Council, No. 10, R. & S. M.; St. John's Commandery, No. 11, K. T.—all Willimantic institutions—and Sphinx Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford, being past officer in all of them, except the first and last named. He is also a member of Radiant Chapter, No. 11, O. E. S., of which Mrs. Whittemore is also a member. Mr. Whittemore united with Obvebetuck Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., soon after its organization, and is also a member of Windham Encampment, No. 10, of the same order, being past officer in each. His name appears on the records of the active members of the Willimantic Royal Arcanum, of which he was collector ten years, and he was a charter member of the Red Men in their lodge at Willimantic. For fifteen years Mr. Whittemore was secretary of the Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company, and for eighteen years was a member of that organization at Willimantic.

EDWIN JOSEPH GILLIGAN, superintendent of the Windham Manufacturing Co., at Willimantic, comes from a noted family of cotton mill men. While but a short time a resident of Willimantic, his skill and ability have been enough to revive the oldest manufacturing institution of the city, the mill with which he is associated being the outgrowth of a work undertaken in 1822. For a number of years previous to his regime it was anything but a paying concern. There are few, if any, more competent mill men in New England, considering their years, than Mr. Gilligan, who has inherited the mechanical skill of his forefathers, which he has carried to a high pitch of development.

Mr. Gilligan was born Feb. 13, 1869, a son of Edward and Mary (Madden) Gilligan, natives of County Sligo and Queens county, Ireland, respectively. The father was a son of John Gilligan, who was one of the old-time hand weavers, and who lived to the venerable age of one hundred and eight years. His wife lived to be one hundred years of age, the two constituting one of the most extreme cases of longevity the history of Ireland affords. Two of the five children of John Gilligan came to the United States, Edward and Patrick, and John, another son went to Australia.

Edward Gilligan was born in Ireland, but was reared in Staileybridge, England, whither his parents removed when he was very young. He enlisted in the English army, and spent ten years of his life as a soldier, seven of them being passed in India. About 1850 he was married to Mary Madden, and came to Warren, R. I., to follow the trade of a loom fixer, in which occupation he was engaged for a number of years. About two years after his arrival his son, Daniel, joined him in his new home. Their other children were born in the United States. Mr. Gilligan lived to be about sixty years of age. His first wife died in 1869, at the age of thirty-five, and following her death he was a second time married. He was buried at Pawtucket, R. I. He was a man of exemplary habits, and warned his boys against the evils of drink, and following his admonitions they have turned out remarkably well. By his first wife, Mr. Gilligan had the following children: (1) Daniel, became one of the most prominent mill men of the State, and achieved a task that won him a standing all over New England in the upbuilding of the Pocasset mills to a point of dividend-paying. He made his own way in the world. For some months before his death, May 25, 1901, he had been suffering from pulmonary troubles, and for about three months had been in a sanitarium at Asheville, N. C., with the hope of improving his condition. When word was received at home of his critical illness Mrs. Gilligan, accompanied by Dr. Coughlin and W. J. Dunn, an intimate friend of the family, hurried on, but it was too late to bring him, and he expired as already noted. Mr. Gilligan was twice married, his first wife, Elizabeth Madden, bore him one son, John E., born July 19, 1877, at Peterboro, N. H., who is now boss weaver of the Windham Manufacturing Co., at Willimantic. By his second wife, Daniel Gilligan had the following children: John, the superintendent of a cotton mill at Asheville, N. C.; Alice, now Mrs. P. L. Feely, of Providence, R. I.; James H., a mill superintendent; and Patrick Charles, loom fixer. (2) Edwin Joseph Gilligan is the youngest son of the first marriage of his father. Edward Gilligan married for his second wife, Rose Ann McNally, who became the mother of two children: Thomas, a millman of Fall River, Mass.; and Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Patrick Wells, of Fall River, Mass., is still living at Providence, R. I.

Edwin Joseph Gilligan had his first schooling in Peterboro, N. H., which was practically confined to the first eight years of his life, as he had early to go to work, and from the age of eleven years substantially took care of himself. Much of his boyhood was spent in the home of his brother, Daniel. His first work in the cotton mill life in which he was to become so successful, was in the mill at Mechanicsville, where he began at the very bottom, and has worked his way up in a most brilliant and successful manner. After much careful observation and study he was made second hand loom fixer at the Harris Mill in Oakdale, Mass., and soon became loom fixer in the Border Mill, No. 1, at Fall River, and was later employed at the Wampanaug Mill in the same city, and still later in the Durfee Mill in the same capacity, and also in the Pocasset Mill, all Fall River institutions. At Durfee Mills he was the second hand weaver, and all the time had been picking up a thoroughly practical knowledge of the business. At North Pownal, Vt., he was superintendent of the weaving-in cloth room, spooling and drawing-in. At the Berkshire Mill in Adams, Mass., he was loom fixer, but all the time had a strengthening desire to establish himself in business. He read and studied much, both of the theory and the practice of cotton printing. At last he became skilled in every department of the business, and his abilities commanded such recognition that at Mill No. 1, Quidnick, R. I., he was made overseer both of the weaving and the designing and drawing-in. Up to this time his work had been purely in the mechanical lines, and when he came to Willimantic, in November, 1899, his first position was that of boss weaver, but in the course of a few weeks he was given full charge of the mill. It was his first opportunity at the business end of the plant, and he at once demonstrated his peculiar fitness for that position. The business showing was very quickly transformed by him, and he has made it a paying institution.

Mr. Gilligan is still a young man, and his future is bright. When younger than he is now he took much interest in out-of-door athletics, and was able to run fifteen miles in an hour and thirty minutes, showing a marvellous power of endurance, that has never failed him on any occasion.

Mr. Gilligan was married June 17, 1887, in Peterboro, N. H., to Miss Elizabeth Williamson, a native of Pennsylvania, and a daughter of James and Mary (Farrell) Williamson. Her father was born in Scotland, and her mother in Ireland, but was reared in Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Gilligan have two children, Mary Gertrude and Marguerite. Mr. Gilligan generally votes the Republican ticket, and he and his family are associated with the St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church.

GEORGE W. H. WILLIAMS, M. D., who for some twenty-five and more years has been in the active practice of medicine in the town of North Grosvenor Dale, Windham county, comes of one of the old families of that name in Rhode Island.

Born July 11, 1836, in Pomfret, Conn., Dr. Williams is a son of Caleb, a grandson of Cyrus (2) and a great-grandson of Cyrus (1), the latter of whom was a Providence, R. I., man. Cyrus Williams (2) settled in the town of Killingly, Conn., where he became a land holder, and was occupied in agricultural pursuits.

Caleb Williams, son of Cyrus (2), was a native of Killingly, Conn., where he was reared and where he received his school training. When a young man he cast his lot among the people of the town of Pomfret, Conn., and there learned and engaged in the business of shoe manufacturing. Later in life he removed to Griswold, Conn., where he continued in the same line of business and where the remainder of his active business life was passed.

His declining years, however, were spent in Voluntown, an adjoining Connecticut town, where his death occurred. His remains now rest in the cemetery at Griswold. In the days of the agitation of the slavery question before the Civil war, Caleb Williams, though a Democrat, was an anti-slavery man. On the organization of the Republican party he joined it, and was ever afterward a strong advocate and supporter of its principles. He was identified with the Congregational Church, and commanded the esteem and respect of his many acquaintances, friends and neighbors. His wife was formerly Abeline Hall, of Moosup, Conn., and their five children were: George Washington Henry; Emily, who died when sixteen years of age; Abeline, who married George Taylor, of Putnam, Conn.; Edgar, a resident of Putnam; and Calvin C., of Worcester, Mass. Mrs. Williams was an affectionate wife and mother, and an excellent Christian woman, a member of the Congregational church. Her remains rest in the cemetery at Griswold.

George Washington Henry Williams, the subject of this sketch is strictly a self-made man, one whose position in life is due entirely to his own efforts. In early boyhood he received the rudiments of an education in the district schools of his native town. His boyhood dream was to become a physician and he early set out in life with the determination to gratify his ambition, and also to have some college training. He worked as a boy in the shoe factory of the Corbins at Webster, Mass., and at eighteen began learning the trade of house painting. He saved his money, and as time passed pursued his studies and read works bearing on his prospective profession. Although hindrances came, he awaited patiently the opportune time, then studied for a time in the Harvard Medical School and later the Medical Department of Boston University. Following this, in 1874, he was examined and admitted to practice by the Connecticut Eclectic Medical Association. He at once located in North Grosvenor Dale, Conn., where he has since remained, actively and successfully engaged in professional work, his practice extending all through that region of country, where he is esteemed both as a man and as a physician.

Doctor Williams has been twice married, (first) in Griswold, to Susan Condon. To this union came one child, Hattie Newell, who married Frank Arnold, of Thompson, Conn. Dr. Williams married (second) Amelia Walker, and to them came two children, Le Roy and Merton, the latter of whom was accidentally killed by an explosion of a cannon July 4, 1896. Le Roy Williams, now the railroad station agent at North Grosvenor Dale, married Mary Kenyon, and their two children are, Katherine and Mildred. The Doctor is a member of Cornerstone Lodge No. 122, A. F. & A. M., at North Grosvenor Dale, and of Putnam Chapter, R. A.

G. M. H. Williams M.D.

M. He is a Republican, and has served as town physician and as a member of the board of health. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of their community.

HENRY McKINNEY, long and favorably known in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., was born in Amherst, Mass., April 12, 1838, and is a son of Anson McKinney, who was born in Monson, Mass., in 1812, and who married Hannah Cows, a native of Belchertown, Mass., in 1835. She died in 1889 at West Stafford, and he in 1894, in the same place.

Anson McKinney was a cabinet-maker by trade and in 1853 came to West Stafford, where he put up a cabinet shop. In New Britain he was employed by the Stanley Level and Rule Company, and worked in Unionville in the casket factory. At East Hartford he did carpenter work, and about fifteen years before his death removed to Stanford, where the remaining years of his life were spent. Mr. McKinney was a staunch Democrat and in 1860 was sent to the Legislature. For several years he filled the offices of selectmen and other minor positions. As a member of the Congregational Church he served on several committees. He also belonged to the I. O. O. F. His children were: Lucius, born March 16, 1836, in Amherst, Mass., where he died the following year; and Henry.

William McKinney, the grandfather of Henry, was a farmer, married Olive Fuller, of Warren, Mass., and died in Stafford. These were his children: Olive, who married William Cushman, of Belchertown; Marvin, a farmer, married to Millie West; Clarissa, who married Cyril Johnson, of Stafford; William, a farmer, who married Louise Melville; Anson; Caroline, married to John L. Bragg.

Henry McKinney was born in Amherst, Mass., but was educated at Stafford, Conn., to which point his parents removed when he was but two years old. When he was eighteen he left school and entered the cabinet shop to learn the trade under his father's instruction, being with him about three years, when he took up the carpenter trade. This was his occupation almost constantly until 1893, when he retired from active life to enjoy a little rest and leisure, to which his long and industrious career had well entitled him. Many houses were built by him in Stafford, and blocks in Springfield were put up under his direction, as were some of the most pretentious blocks in Rockville and in Monson. For some years he was in business in company with William Patten, under the firm name of McKinney & Patten.

Mr. McKinney was a charter member of Winter Post, No. 44, G. A. R., having been a soldier in the Union army during the war of the Rebellion. Aug. 31, 1862, he enlisted in Co. D, 25th C. V. I., was wounded at Port Hudson, La., and was mustered out in August, 1863. A bullet struck him in the right hip, and he now receives a pension. He was with Banks in the movement up the Red River.

Mr. McKinney attends the Congregational Church. In politics he is a Democrat, having served as selectman for several years, and as representative to the General Assembly in 1884. For several years he has been a member of the Democratic town committee.

Mr. McKinney was married May 1, 1861, at West Stafford, to Miss Annis Thresher, born in South Wilbraham, Mass., April 23, 1841, a daughter of Thomas and Rachel (Mixer) Thresher. To their union were born: Alice Louise, born June 17, 1864, who married Harry A. Buck, an inventor, Aug. 14, 1882, and is the mother of one child, Daisy; Lucius Henry, born Dec. 21, 1868, who married Flora Leach, in January, 1893, and is foreman of the Bushnell Works at Thompsonville, Conn., where they have a family of three children, Leon, Harold and Hazel; Bessie Lillian, born Nov. 17, 1870, who married, Aug. 14, 1891, Charles W. Slater, born in Ellington, Conn., the son of B. F. and Ellen Slater.

FRANK MILTON WILSON (deceased) was, in his life time, one of the most highly esteemed business men and citizens of Willimantic, Windham county, and left a name to which his posterity may justly point with pride. As a business man he was honorable and successful, as a citizen he was public-spirited, and he commanded the respect of the community by his genuine and unaffected manhood. Mr. Wilson was born March 20, 1849, in the town of Mansfield, and came from good old New England families, the Metcalfs, the Jewetts and the Badgers being numbered among his ancestors. Both the Metcalfs and the Jewetts were represented in the French and Indian and the Revolutionary wars.

William Metcalf, his maternal grandfather, was born in 1790, and was the last resident owner of the family name on the farm where Deacon Timothy and his wife Hannah settled in 1737. He was known as the "father of Mansfield," because of his long service in public office, having been first selectman for many years, and having on more than one occasion represented the town in the General Assembly. He was a man of strict integrity, and he passed away, highly respected, May 3, 1864. His wife was Chloe Jewett, a daughter of Capt. David and Elizabeth (Hughes) Jewett, of Tolland, Conn.; she died in Mansfield Aug. 17, 1872, at the age of eighty-four. Capt. David Jewett was an officer in the Revolutionary army, serving with credit at Crown Point, Ticonderoga and elsewhere; his children related of him that he was never known to shed a tear except when he heard of the death of George Washington. His marriage to Elizabeth Hughes occurred Oct. 6, 1762. To William Metcalf and wife were born children as follows: Frederick Austin, born May 30, 1817, became a minister in the Methodist Church; Harriet, born May 6, 1820, married Milton B. Wilson; and Roxena Marilla, born Sept. 14, 1823, married (first) Oct. 16, 1845, Anson Porter Keeney (a manufacturer of machinery at Mansfield, who later removed to Grinnell, Iowa, where he died in 1864), and (second) Noah Moulton, and she now lives in Tolland, Connecticut.

Milton B. Wilson, father of Frank Milton, was a member of a Scotch family who established the art of paper making in the United States. He resided in a number of places, but spent his last years at Willimantic, where he died. On May 7, 1846, he married Harriet Metcalf, daughter of William, mentioned above. To their union were born: Frank M., whose name appears at the beginning of this article; Hattie R., born in August, 1855, now the wife of James P. Northup, an attorney of Jersey City, N. J.; William, born in February, 1863, who married Nellie Johnson, of Windsor, Vt., and is now engaged in business as manager of the Grand Union Tea Co., at Springfield, Massachusetts.

Frank M. Wilson attended the country schools of Mansfield and Coventry, and when a boy of fourteen became a student at the Rockville High School, where his school days were ended, and his business career began as a clerk in Wilson's drug store. About 1867 he came to Willimantic to take a position as clerk in Dr. Fred Rogers' drug store, where he remained some ten years, being a member of his employer's home. In 1878 Mr. Wilson formed a partnership with John L. Leonard, purchasing from W. C. Fuller the oldest drug store in the city, a business established as early as 1829. Mr. Wilson and Mr. Leonard remained together until 1885, when Mr. Leonard sold out to his partner and retired from the business. In 1890 W. P. Jordan bought an interest in the store, and it was conducted by F. M. Wilson & Co., until 1898, when Mr. Wilson again became sole owner.

The sudden death of Mr. Wilson while engaged in playing with his children, May 1, 1900, came as a result of an attack of neuralgia of the heart, symptoms of which had been recently detected, though no one dreamed of immediate fatality. Mr. Wilson was held in high esteem in Willimantic, and his absence from the social, commercial and political activities of the city is keenly deplored. Universally he was recognized as an honest, able and genial gentleman, and his sterling qualities commanded the recognition of appointment to those official positions to which are elected only the best of the citizens of the day. Mr. Wilson was deeply interested in town and State affairs, and especially in all matters pertaining to the local schools, being chairman of the town school board. As vice-president of both the Willimantic Building and Loan Association and the local board of trade, his services to the trade and commerce of this city were conspicuous and valuable, and the list of public positions acceptably filled by him in past years is a long and notable one, showing in what regard he was held by his fellow townsmen.

A Republican in politics, Mr. Wilson was elected by that party to the General Assembly in 1895, where he served on the committee on Cities and Boroughs. For three years he was a member of the old High School committee, and of the board of burgesses during 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1891. In 1892 and 1893 he was first selectman. The Connecticut Pharmaceutical Association had in him a prominent and active member, and in 1886 Mr. Wilson served as its president. Fraternally he was an active Mason and an interested member of the I. O. O. F. For several years he was chairman of the Congregational Ecclesiastical Society.

Mr. Wilson was married first, June 4, 1879, at Babylon, L. I., when Miss Gertrude Seaman became his wife. One son, Raymond, born Nov. 24, 1885, blessed this union. Mrs. Wilson died in September, 1893, and her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery in Willimantic. Mr. Wilson was married (second) in December, 1894, to Miss Lucy Byles, a native of Ashford, Conn., and the daughter of Andrew and Martha (Sharp) Byles. The Byles family is an old one, and five generations of the family have lived on the same farm in Ashford. Andrew Byles was a farmer and spent the later years of his life in Willimantic, where he died. Robert Sharp, the paternal grandfather of Martha Sharp, served in the Revolutionary army, enlisting from Pomfret, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were born two children: Dorothea, born Aug. 3, 1896; and Milton Andrew, born Dec. 10, 1897. Mrs. Wilson received training as a professional nurse in the city hospital at Boston, and followed that profession until her union with Mr. Wilson. She is a member of the Congregational Church, and of Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter of the D. A. R., at Willimantic.

FRANK E. WILLIS. The Willis family has been for generations an old family in Tolland county, Conn., as is also the Martin family from which the mother of our subject descended. The father of Frank E. Willis was Jesse Willis, who was born June 26, 1814, in Tolland, a short distance north of what is still considered a landmark, the old White school house, and was a son of James and Sally (Johnson) Willis. James Willis was a shoemaker and lived on a small farm, and in those days when a job of shoemaking was required by his neighbors, they would come for him and he and his kit of tools would settle down in the family until the work was completed, others often waiting for like services before one task would be completed. At his death in 1845 he was sadly missed, as he was a very reliable and obliging workman. His wife survived him some years and both rest now in the old North Cemetery in Tolland. The grandmother was a most estimable woman and highly regarded in the community.

The children born to James Willis and his wife were: James, born in 1802, who died in Stafford; Sally, born in 1804, who married a Mr. Richardson, and died in Wales, Conn.; Minerva, born in 1806, who married a Mr. Whipple, and died in Tolland; David, born in 1808, who died in Tolland; Ephraim, born in 1810, who died in Hartford; Jeduthan, born in 1812, who died in Tolland; Jesse, born in 1814; Sophronia, born in 1816, who married Samuel Case, and died in Rockville; Roxie, born in 1818; Mary Ann, born in 1819, who married William Orcutt, and lives in Rockville; Samuel, born in 1822, who died in Rockville; Wealthy Jane, born in 1824, who married Robert Vantine, and died in 1864; and Lucia, born in 1826, who died when about nineteen.

Jesse Willis was a well known farmer of Tolland, where he lived a long and respected life; he was twice married and died in Tolland, Aug. 21, 1887, and was buried in Grove Hill cemetery at Rockville. The first marriage was to Nancy Robbins Martin, one of twins, the other child dying in infancy, the daughter of Elisha and Almira (Robbins) Martin; her death took place in Tolland, that neighborhood having been her home during her whole life. From this union a large family was born: Leveretta, who died in boyhood; George E., who resides in Tolland; Henry, who lives in Tallapoosa, Ga.; Charles, who lives in Tolland; Albert W., a farmer of Tolland; John L., who resides near Fort Collins, in Colorado; Arthur, a resident of Rockville; Frank E.; Samuel J., a resident of Rockville; Emily, who died young; Abbie, who is Mrs. William Crossett, of Rockville; and Emma, who married William Martin, but died early. The second wife of Mr. Willis was Miss Jane Bowley, of Rockville, but a native of Weld, Maine; she still survives.

Frank E. Willis was born Nov. 25, 1854, in Tolland, the home standing along the Rockville turnpike, a son of Jesse White and Nancy R. Martin; he was reared in his native town where he attended in White school house during his whole educational career. Being lusty and strong he was early introduced to farm labor, and faithfully worked for his father, and later for others in the neighborhood who needed his services. He remained at home until he was about twenty, when he made a little trip to Massachusetts, spending one winter there; he then came to Rockville, which was beginning to be known as a great industrial center. There he was soon employed by George M. Paulk as a driver in his lumber business, and giving satisfaction in this line, he decided to save his money and enter into something similar. As soon as his savings permitted, Mr. Willis bought a team of his own, and as he was favorably known to the public by this time on account of his reliability and energy, he very soon was at the head of a prosperous business, enabling him in 1891 to buy out his brother Arthur's ice interests, when he combined it with his own business and has very successfully carried out his projects ever since.

Mr. Willis owns property on School street, which he bought from the Francis Keeney estate, and after extensive alterations he has now probably the most complete, commodious and best arranged barns for the accommodation of his stock and equipments, of any in the city.

The marriage of Mr. Willis took place March 3, 1891, in Vernon, to Mrs. Mary Webster, who was born in Manchester, Conn., May 5, 1856, the widow of Edward Webster, and a daughter of Hiram and Mary (Daniels) Dart; she was but a child when her parents settled in Vernon and was fourteen years old when she came to Rockville, where she has since lived.

Politics have never been of much interest to Mr. Willis, although he regularly votes the Republican ticket, but he desires good government and does what he thinks for the best interests of town and country. His case is that of one who has bravely made his own way in the world, and built up a business which entitles him to the respect of the community, where he is regarded as one of the most substantial and reliable citizens.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN BENNETT, well known in the town of Windham, Windham county, comes from an old family in Stonington, Conn., where several generations have lived. The old homestead, built during the Revolution, is still in the possession of the family. Each generation has followed farming, and has been prominent and useful in the history of the town. Benjamin F. Bennett was born in Stonington, Conn., April 18, 1826, a son of Charles and Martha (Babcock) Bennett, and a grandson of Aaron Bennett.

Aaron Bennett was a son of Stephen Bennett, and made his home in Stonington, dying there at a good old age. He was twice married, his second wife, Abigail Smith, being the mother of Charles Bennett, mentioned below.

Charles Bennett, son of Aaron, followed farming all his life. He was a man of fine physique, well-proportioned and weighing about 225 pounds. His principles were high, and he exerted a good influence on the community, and was highly respected. He married Martha Babcock, daughter of Ichabod Babcock, who lived at Gales' Ferry, and served as post carrier between New London and Newport during the Revolutionary war. Of the fourteen children born to Charles Bennett and wife, all but one lived to marry, and seven are yet living: (1) Amanda is Mrs. Washington Chapman, of Ontario Center, N. Y.; (2) Benjamin F.; (3) Martha married Samuel W. Culver, a Baptist minister of Rochester, N. Y.; (4) Eliza married James Miner, of Northfield, Conn.; (5) Calvin, formerly a merchant, is now a grain dealer of Fort Scott, Kansas; (6) Alonzo was formerly a merchant in Nevada City, Mo.; and (7) Ellen is Mrs. Walter Cone, of Ontario Center, N. Y. Mr. Bennett lived to be seventy-four years old, and his wife attained the age of seventy-six. Both are buried at Mystic, Conn. Before Fort Sumter was fired upon Mr. Bennett was a Democrat, but after that was a staunch Republican. He served as selectman, and was many years a trial justice.

Benjamin F. Bennett began his education in the district school, where he soon ceased summer attendance, as his work was needed on the farm, but he continued to attend during the winters until he was eighteen years of age. He had made rapid progress, and at that age he took charge of a school himself, proving in every respect a very desirable teacher. His first school was nine miles from home, and every Monday morning he was accustomed to walk this distance, build his fire, write his copies, and have the room in order before his pupils arrived. His compensation was thirteen dollars a month and "board round." In all he taught five terms in Stonington, and took his wages home to his parents. Mr. Bennett remained at home for six years after he was of age, and worked for his father. In 1854 he removed to Mansfield, where he bought a farm near the Coventry depot, engaging in farming and cattle dealing. In 1877 he removed to Windham town, a mile and a half northwest of Willimantic, where he followed general farming, owning an extensive tract of land, and in 1894 Mr. Bennett came to his present home on Ash street. He not only built his home, but put up three other houses, and this is one of the best tracts of suburban property in Willimantic. Mr. Bennett has been an extensive dealer in real estate, and now owns 800 acres of land in Mansfield, Windham, Ashford, Willimantic, and Columbia. He has built twenty-two houses in Willimantic, and still owns eight of them, and in this way has proved a decided benefit to the city. Always a man of energy and determination, he has made an extensive circle of acquaintances, the most of whom count him as a friend.

In early life Mr. Bennett was a Democrat, as his associations were all in that direction, but became a Free Soiler when the issues were more sharply defined between freedom and slavery, and later united with the Republican party, in which he has always been active. In the course of his long and useful life Mr. Bennett has held many public offices. In 1858 he was a representative in the General Assembly from the town of Mansfield. His services on the board of selectmen and on the board of relief were creditable and useful, and as constable he was a faithful officer, as he was also when made collector. He was elected justice of the peace, but never qualified. Mr. Bennett is not an office-seeker, and was never at a caucus when his name was proposed.

On Oct. 27, 1852, Mr. Bennett was united in marriage at Preston, Conn., to Miss Mary Graves, who was born in Griswold, Conn., Aug. 10, 1828, a daughter of John and Mary (Pennaman) Graves. Two children blessed this union: (1) Walter, born April 23, 1855, in Mansfield, was an attorney-at-law, and died May 20, 1899, in Willimantic; he married Dora Monk, of Medfield, and had two children, Daisy and Walter F. (2) Clinton, born Aug. 21, 1863, in Mansfield, is shipping clerk for the Bradley Fertilizer Co., and lives in Boston; he married Etta Perkins, of Mansfield, and has three children, Clinton F., Cecil Raymond and Leslie. Mr. Bennett and his wife belong to the Baptist Church. He is a well posted and genial gentleman, exceptionally well preserved. Where usually appears on farm lands, "No hunting or fishing allowed," on his lands appeared this sign: "Hunt and fish all you wish; grub furnished free." As this sign indicated, Mr. Bennett is kind hearted and liberal. Out of his long and industrious life he has brought forward a comfortable competence, the result of his own economy and thrift.

WARREN WHEELER WOODWARD, who for the past thirty-four years has been in the drug business in Danielson, Windham county, is one of that borough's representative and influential men, and is a descendant of old Colonial stock.

The first of the name, of whom there is any record, is Richard De Woodward, who came into England from Normandy, with William the Norman. The name is derived from an office held by the first one of the family, he being a ward of the king's wood, and the family coat of arms represents a man with club and shield, with a squirrel at the top.

Richard Woodward, the first of the name in America, born in 1589, in England, embarked Oct. 10, 1634, at Ipswich, England, for New England, making the voyage in the "Elizabeth." With him came his wife Rose, and twin sons, George and John, born in 1621, and they settled immediately at Watertown, Mass. Richard Woodward is of record on the earliest list of the proprietors of Watertown, Mass. where he was made a freeman, Sept. 2, 1635. He was the owner of several hundred acres of land, and in 1660, was a resident of Cambridge, Mass. His wife Rose, died Oct. 6, 1662, aged eighty years, and about 1663 he married Ann Gates, born in 1603, the widow of Stephen Gates, of Cambridge. Mr. Woodward died Feb. 16, 1664-5, and his widow Ann, passed away in Stow, Feb. 5, 1682-3.

George Woodward, twin son of Richard, the settler, born in 1621, was twice married. His first wife Mary bore him eight children. He married (second) Aug. 17, 1659, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Hammond, of Newtown. Mr. Woodward was made a freeman May 6, 1646, and died May 31, 1676, his widow later marrying Samuel Truesdale.

John Woodward, son of George, born March 28, 1649, married Rebecca, daughter of Richard

W. W. Woodward

Robbins, of Cambridge; she died probably in 1686, and he married July 7th, of that year, Sarah Bancroft, of Reading, who died Sept. 22, 1723. He died in 1728.

John Woodward (2), son of John, born July 18, 1675, married in January, 1698, Hannah Hyde, born Feb. 1, 1677, daughter of Jonathan and Dorothy (Kidder) Hyde. She died Jan. 15, 1724-5. John Woodward moved to Canterbury, Conn., about 1708-9, and probably was the John Woodward who married in Newtown, Mass., March 27, 1732, Abigail, widow of Jonathan Ward. His children were: Hannah, born in Newtown, Jan. 20, 1699; Mary, born in Newtown, Feb. 1, 1700; John, born in Newtown, March 31, 1702; Ephraim, born in Canterbury, Conn., Jan. 8, 1710; and Deliverance, born in Canterbury, Nov. 5, 1713, married March 7, 1737, Abigail Juel and had two children, Abigail (born Feb. 9, 1738) and William (born Sept. 13, 1740).

Lieut. Ephraim Woodward, son of John (2), born in Canterbury, Conn., Jan. 8, 1710, married Jan. 14, 1735-6, Hannah Williams, and their children were: Hannah, born June 2, 1737, died Jan. 15, 1753; and Eleazer, born Jan. 8, 1738-9, settled in Lyndeboro, N. H. Mr. Woodward later married Huldah Cram, and their children were: Abigail, born March 24, 1742-3, married a Davison; Ithamar, born Jan. 21, 1748-9, settled in Lyndeboro, N. H., and married, Nov. 23, 1774, Huldah Sharpe, and had a son, Eliphalet, born Nov. 15, 1775; Ward, born April 16, 1751; John, born Jan. 19, 1753, settled in Lyndeboro, N. H.; Hannah, born Jan. 24, 1757, died unmarried, and Elizabeth married a Briggs. Lieut. Ephraim Woodward spent his entire life in his native Canterbury. For a considerable period he was Lieutenant in the State militia. A bill of sale, with other relics, now in the possession of Warren W. Woodward, is dated Jan. 1742-3, in which is stated the purchase of a negro boy of Gersham Breed, by Ephraim Woodward, for the sum of £154. Ephraim's will was signed in September, 1775, and it designates his wife and son Ward as executors, the witnesses being: Josiah Whitney, Seth Pain and Eleazer Gilbert.

Ward Woodward, son of Ephraim, born April 16, 1751, married Oct. 19, 1780, Rebecca Putnam, who was born March 17, 1761, and who died Oct. 18, 1848. To this union were born the following children: (1) Aaron, born Sept. 20, 1781, died in New Hampshire. On Oct. 15, 1807, in Lyndeboro, N. H., he married Elizabeth Woodward, and they had these children: Rebecca, born Feb. 19, 1809; Artemas, born Nov. 17, 1811; Cordelia, born May 2, 1815; Huldah, born June 1, 1817; Henrietta, born April 19, 1820; Aaron B., born March 18, 1822; Sewall, born Dec. 3, 1823; Elizabeth A., born Dec. 14, 1826; and Deidamia, born Aug. 29, 1829. (2) Sewall, born Feb. 8, 1783, lived in Brooklyn, Conn., where he died unmarried April 26, 1847. (3) Ephraim Putnam, born June 2, 1784, located at Lyndeboro, N. H., where he died. (4) Ward, born Sept. 12, 1785, moved to Aurora, N. Y.; he married Sarah York and had children, William, Kendall, George and Henry, all of whom live in Grand Rapids, Mich., except Henry, who is deceased. (5) Deidamia, born Oct. 8, 1787, died in Brooklyn, Conn., unmarried Nov. 5, 1855. (6) Eleazer, born July 10, 1790, settled in Locke, N. Y., where he died. He married Henrietta Ingraham and his children were: Ward, Jason, Malina, Timothy, Clement and Orestes. (7) Abigail, born Jan. 11, 1792, married Joseph Austin, and lived at Moravia, N. Y. (8) David, born Nov. 12, 1793, moved to New Hampshire, but afterward returned to Brooklyn where he died. For a short time he served in the war of 1812. He married (first) Hannah P. Woodward, who died May 4, 1846, (second) Nancy Lucas Littlehale. All his children were by his first marriage: Hannah E., born in 1817, died in 1843; Lorinda A., born in 1820; Verney C., Jacob R., Syllanus M. and Elisha A. (9) Sarah, born April 1, 1796, died Sept. 8, 1797. (10) Artemas, born Feb. 19, 1800, died Nov. 18, 1810. (11) Augustus, is mentioned below. Capt. Ward Woodward served as captain of the Brooklyn Artillery many years, and his sword is in the possession of Warren W. Woodward. He resided in the homestead in Brooklyn, and like his ancestors followed farming when he was not assisting in military operations. Both he and wife were members of the Congregational Church.

Capt. Augustus Woodward, the father of our subject, was born June 25, 1804, and he died in Brooklyn Dec. 17, 1880. On Sept. 18, 1829, he was married in Canterbury, Conn., to Caroline Wheeler, daughter of Warren and Nancy (Seymour) Wheeler, the Seymours being a prominent family of Litchfield county, Conn. To this union were born these children: (1) Warren Wheeler was born June 27, 1834. (2) Calvin Hamilton, born Jan. 14, 1838, settled in Norwich, Conn., but now resides in Canterbury, Conn., retired. On July 3, 1867, he married Clara Louisa Cushman, of Thompson, Conn., who was born Feb. 23, 1845, and who died in Norwich, Conn., Aug. 12, 1888. Their children were: Carrie L., born Sept. 6, 1868, married Sept. 6, 1888, Forest L. Ensworth; Mabel S., born April 24, 1870, married Sept. 19, 1894, E. Frank White; Ralph A., born May 27, 1872; George E., born April 22, 1875, died Jan. 19, 1896; Alice M., born Aug. 29, 1879; and Florence G., born April 17, 1882. In April, 1861, Calvin H. Woodward enlisted in the war for the Union, in Co. B, Conn. V. I., and participated in the Virginia campaign. He was with Banks in the Shenandoah Valley, and was so disabled in the retreat that he was sent home on furlough, but returned to the front before his furlough expired, he went into the battle of Cedar Mountain, and in that terrific struggle, Aug. 9, 1862, received six severe wounds. For forty hours he lay upon the field in agony, and a miracle indeed was performed when he regained his health. As a brave, gallant and faithful soldier, he received his honorable discharge Nov. 13, 1862. (3) John Putnam, born June 1, 1841, never married and now resides at Whittier, California. He also enlisted in the service of his country, joining Co. C, 12th Conn. V. I., and went with Gen. Butler's expedition to New Orleans, serving under Gens. Butler and Banks through the Louisiana campaign, and through the siege of Port Hudson. When Gen. Banks called for 1,000 men literally to take their lives in their hands and storm the frowning works of Port Hudson, this brave and devoted soldier, with his comrade William Putnam (a great-great-grandson of General Putnam) were among the number. It was the General's idea that if enough devoted men could thus place their lives in such great peril, the army might then close in and take the works, but other advices prevailed and this fearful sacrifice of the very flower of the army was not required. Mr. Woodward participated in the battles of Georgia Landing and Franklin, in Louisiana, and the regiment was then transferred to the Army of the Potomac, and was under Sheridan in the brilliant campaign in the Shenandoah Valley. (4) James Brown, born Dec. 30, 1843, is the proprietor of a foundry in Indianapolis, Ind. He married, in Plainfield, Conn., April 18, 1873, Helen L. Craig, and they have four children, of whom Robert was born Aug. 26, 1874. James B. Woodward, like his brothers, was a loyal soldier for the Union cause, enlisting for service in Co. K, 21st Conn. V. I., Aug. 12, 1862, and on account of a wound received at Drury's Bluff was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps. His service was under Gens. Burnside and Butler in Virginia, and for a short time in North Carolina. He participated in the siege of Suffolk, Nansemond, the first battle of Fredericksburg and Drury's Bluff, being discharged at Washington, June 28, 1865. (5) Nancy Seymour, born March 11, 1846, died unmarried March 29, 1876, at Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Augustus Woodward was the youngest of a family of eleven children, and his father died when he was but six years old, but his mother was a woman of great force of character and reared her large family creditably. He enjoyed the advantages of the local schools, and when the property was divided, obtained by purchase and inheritance about two-thirds of the original purchase, and there he resided during his entire lifetime, carrying on farming successfully. This farm, although not as extensive as some others in Brooklyn, was a fine property and well managed. His residence was in the house built by the first Woodward in the town, but later, after marriage, he replaced it by a better one. The Woodwards for generations had belonged to the Whig party, but Augustus became a Democrat, and supported the principles of that party until the issues of 1861, at which time he identified himself with the Republican party and so continued through life.

Warren W. Woodward has taken a deep interest in preserving the family documents, and among the many in his possession he values a commission, issued at New Haven, Conn., in May, 1838, by Gov. William W. Ellsworth, appointing Augustus Woodward captain of the 2nd Company, 1st Regiment of State Artillery in the militia of the State, rank to take effect Sept. 9, 1837. Mr. Woodward upheld the military spirit of the family. For many years he was an attendant of the Brooklyn Unitarian Church.

Before proceeding to give in detail the personal history of our immediate subject, Warren Wheeler Woodward, the life stories of some members of a collateral line of the family are worthy of record here:

The Woodward name has been conspicuous in the military life of this country and one of its representatives, Capt. John Woodward, was one of the active men in and about Boston during the Revolution, as shown by the Newton, Mass., records. Extracts from these show that in March, 1776, Capt. John Woodward, with four others, were chosen a committee to draft such measures as they should think best for the town in this emergency. Among the resolutions was this: "We can not and will not submit to this [tea tax] nor any other tax laid on us without our consent given by ourselves or our representatives." On April 19, 1775, Capt. John Woodward was in the battles of Lexington and Concord. On March 4, 1776, at the request of Gen. Washington, Capt. John Woodward's company marched to take possession of Dorchester Heights. On June 17, 1776, at Newton town meeting, Capt. John Woodward was chosen moderator. On Jan. 6, 1777, Capt. John Woodward loaned the town £100 and Samuel Woodward loaned £120 to pay the soldiers. On Dec. 8, 1777, Capt. John was one of a committee to provide for families of soldiers then in the war. In 1779 and 1784 he served on various town committees, for in addition to his activity in military life, he served as selectman seven years, and representative two years. His brother Samuel was a graduate of Harvard College, and was ordained in 1751 to the ministry, and was settled over the Congregational Church at Newton, Mass. He also took part in the battles of Concord and Dorchester Heights.

John Woodward, the first of the name to come to Windham county, Conn., purchased a rectangle of land in Canterbury, now Brooklyn, which was described as follows: "Beginning at the Quinebaug river the north boundary extended west over Allen Hill 335 rods, then south 98 rods, and east to the Quinebaug river 273 rods, covering 187 acres." On this property he built the house in which our subject was born. The greater portion of this property remained in the family until 1880, when it passed into other hands.

Warren Wheeler Woodward, the subject proper of this sketch, was born in Brooklyn; Conn., June 27, 1834. His primary education was secured in the district school on Allen Hill, and was supplemented by an academic course at Brooklyn Academy. He began his business career in his native town as a news-dealer, and later, when he moved to Eagleville, now Versailles, Conn., he conducted a general store and was made postmaster. After two years residence there, Mr. Woodward returned to Brooklyn and engaged in merchandising on the Green for a period of two years, and during this time he was grand juror, and also served on the jury in the U. S. District Court at Hartford. Selling his store interests in Brooklyn, he then moved to Danielson, and purchased the drug business of Crandall & Ladd, locating where Craig, the tailor, is now in business. The following spring he purchased the property at the corner of Main and Center streets where his business has been since located.

In September, 1865, while located in Eagleville, (now Versailles), Mr. Woodward was married to Miss Anna E. Ross, who was born in Newport, R. I., Dec. 15, 1842. To this union a family of three children was born, namely: (1) Mary Ivison, born June 15, 1866, in Brooklyn, Conn., passed out of life Feb. 6, 1899. She was a lady of great natural gifts and lovely character. For a number of years prior to her death, she was the valued correspondent for the Hartford Courant, since which time her father has performed the duties. (2) Arthur Putnam, born June 15, 1871, married Dec. 2, 1896, Miss Abbie J. Mowry, of Providence, R. I. He is a druggist, a graduate of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, and is employed by his father. In him the military spirit of his ancestors has come to the fore, and for the past seven years he has been connected with the State militia, and is at present regimental hospital steward of the Third Regiment. He is a young man held in high esteem in Danielson. (3) William Fenner, born March 16, 1875, is now an attorney at law, in Danielson.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Woodward are members of the Danielson Baptist Church, in the organization of which Mr. Woodward took a very active part. Through the efforts of a committee of three, of which he was one, the church was organized Feb. 5, 1874. For a number of years Mr. Woodward was clerk and treasurer of the church, and also served on the Society's committee. In politics he is a sturdy and useful member of the Republican party. His first Presidential vote was cast for John C. Fremont, and he has supported every candidate of that party to the present time.

Mr. Woodward has always taken a deep interest in the progress and development of Danielson, one that has not consisted of mere tacit approval of the work done by others. His influence and means have always been ready to assist worthy enterprises. His standing as a man of business has always been on the highest plane, while his many pleasant personal characteristics, have won for him a large circle of warm friends. For thirty-four years he has been a representative citizen of Danielson.

EDWARD W. AVERY, one of the prosperous and energetic merchants of South Windham, Windham county, is a native of the town, which he has aided so materially in its commercial growth.

Edward W. Avery, his grandfather, was a native of Windham, where he spent his entire life; he is buried in Willimantic. His first wife was named Desire, and they had the following family: Abbie married Wheaton Andrews, of Mystic, Conn.; Elizabeth married Charles Perkins; Sarah married Freeman Kennison, of South Willington, Conn.; Mary married a Mr. Clark, and lived in Hartford; Desire married James Graham, of Springfield, Mass.; Nancy married William Capin; Joseph married and lived in Old Mystic, Conn.; Allen married and lived in Mystic; William C. is further mentioned below.

William C. Avery was born April 10, 1827, in Windham, near Willimantic, where he grew to maturity, meantime attending the common schools of the neighborhood. When a mere boy he went into the cotton mill as a worker, and later he learned the machinist's trade, which he followed through life, dying April 29, 1880. His first marriage, on March 30, 1848, was to Eunice Brewster, who was born in Windham Oct. 6, 1828, and died July 13, 1852; there were no children by this union. On Sept. 25, 1853, Mr. Avery married Harriet Brewster, who was born May 14, 1830, a daughter of Ephraim and Hulda (Giddings) Brewster, and died May 9, 1878. To this union came: Edward William; Eunice, born March 16, 1861, who died the same year; Josephine, born July 20, 1862, who married Frank S. Backus, of South Windham; and Helen, born Aug. 8, 1867, who died July 9, 1881.

The political affiliations of the father were with the Democratic party, and he always took a deep interest in local and National affairs, although he never aspired to political preferment, holding to the view that he could best serve his party in the ranks, and not in a public position. Honest to the highest degree, industrious, public-spirited, a good father and kind husband, Mr. Avery made many friends, and his death was deeply mourned.

Mr. Avery's ancestral line on the maternal side can be traced back to Grandfather Brewster, who was born May 22, 1792, and married, Sept. 15, 1817, Hulda Giddings, who was born Oct. 29, 1796, and died Oct. 14, 1876. The children born to them were as follows: Hulda, born Nov. 21, 1818, died March 19, 1837; Elizabeth, born March 13, 1820, married (first) Edward Steele and (second) Thomas Rhodes; Elias, born May 16, 1822, died March 2, 1826; Park, born Sept. 15, 1823, is a resident of Manchester, Conn.; Joseph, born Nov. 28, 1826, died Oct. 25, 1827; Eunice, born Oct. 6, 1828, died July 13, 1852; Harriet, the mother of our subject, born May 14, 1830, died May 9, 1878; Abbie, born Jan. 11, 1832, married Charles A. Fuller Oct. 2, 1855; Silas, born Sept. 9, 1833, died Oct. 10, 1844.

Edward William Avery was born in South Windham, July 28, 1858, and his early education was obtained in the district schools of the home neighborhood; later he had the opportunity of attending the Willimantic high school for two years. So proficient was he that when but sixteen he taught school, his first experience being gained during the winter of 1874-75; he began in September, in North Franklin, Conn., and continued for several seasons, having charge of the Franklin Hill district school in 1877; the Windham school in 1878; the North Windham school in 1879; and the Windham Center school in 1880.

Later Mr. Avery learned telegraphy, and upon one occasion acted as telegraph operator in Hartford, remaining in that city for eighteen months. The next change he made was to learn the trade of machinist, in South Windham, remaining at that work for three years, in the employ of Smith, Winchester & Co. About this time he was offered the position of time and shipping clerk, in which he continued for seven years. During all these years Mr. Avery had been economical and had saved his money, and in 1890 was able to purchase the store and stock of J. B. Johnson, at South Windham. He has ever since conducted the establishment upon progressive lines, building up an excellent trade. This store is well located, the stock fresh and up-to-date, and the best facilities are afforded to customers.

On January 15, 1882, Mr. Avery was married to Miss Minnie W. Woodworth, a native of Norwich, a daughter of Charles and Mary (Armstrong) Woodworth. Mrs. Avery was born Nov. 3, 1861. To Mr. and Mrs. Avery have been born two children: Clarence E., May 24, 1884, and Harry W., Oct. 30, 1886.

Like his father before him, Mr. Avery is a Democrat in politics, and has always taken a deep interest in civic affairs. Although strictly adhering to party lines in National affairs, he feels that in town affairs the best man should be placed in office, and therefore supports the candidate best suited, in his mind, to discharge the duties required of him. On April 20, 1887, Mr. Avery joined the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in Eastern Star Lodge, of Willimantic, and he and Mrs. Avery are also members of Radiant Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, of Willimantic. They are numbered among the leading people of South Windham, and have many friends, not only in their own vicinity, but throughout the county. Their prosperity is the well-merited reward of industry and thrift.

WILLIAM WALDO ADAMS, M. D., one of the youngest and most widely patronized physicians in Moosup, Windham county, has studied at a larger number of medical colleges in this country than has, by far, the average physician, and no detail which would aid him in a successful professional career has been neglected in his education.

Born in the town of Canterbury April 15, 1869, Dr. Adams is descended both paternally and maternally from some of the oldest and most distinguished Colonial families. Of the Adams family, the first of whom we have record is Henry Adams, of Braintree, Mass., who is said to have come to New England about 1634. In February, 1641, he was granted 400 acres of land by Boston, of which Braintree was a part. He brought with him eight sons, and was the great-great-grandfather of John Adams, second President of the United States, who erected a granite column to his memory in the churchyard at Braintree.

(II) Edward Adams, son of Henry, the settler, born in 1630; in England, settled about 1652 in Medfield. He was made a freeman in 1654. Mr. Adams' home was burned by the Indians in 1676. For many years he was selectman; was a commissioner in 1689; and deputy to the General Court in 1692. His first wife, Lydia, passed away in 1676, and he died in 1716.

(III) Henry Adams (2), son of Edward, born Oct. 29, 1663, married Dec. 10, 1691, Patience Ellis, who was born in 1668, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Wight) Ellis, who came from Dedham to Medfield about 1652. Mr. Adams settled in Canterbury, Conn., of which town he was one of the early settlers. It is stated in the history of Medfield, Mass., that Patience Adams died in 1695, leaving two children, David and Hannah. Henry then removed to Canterbury, Conn. In the genealogy of the Adams family given in the Morse book, the children of Henry Adams, born in Medfield, are David, born in 1692; and Hannah, born in 1693. At least some of the Adams family of Canterbury came from this source. Henry Whittemore in his work on the Adams family, gives a line through John Adams, born in Canterbury, Conn., a son of Henry, above. This John Adams married Abigail, ———, and died in 1762. Their son John, born in Canterbury, Feb. 12, 1745, married Oct. 5, 1769, Mary Parker. John Adams (2), served as captain in a Massachusetts company in the war of the Revolution. He died in Canterbury Dec. 10, 1818. His children were: John (born in 1772), Joshua, Polly, Parker, Abigail, Anna, Moses, Luciba, Aurelia and Charles.

The late Mr. Weaver, of Willimantic, in his genealogies of Windham families, mentions among others a Dr. David Adams, from Canterbury, who practiced medicine in Scotland and removed to Mansfield, Conn., where he died in 1790. He married, Oct. 29, 1761, Lucy Fitch, and they had: Lucy, born in 1762; David F., born in 1764; Lydia, born in 1768; and Mary, born in 1771.

Fitch Adams, great-grandfather of Dr. William W., who was undoubtedly of this line, also resided in Canterbury. He was twice married, and by his first wife, Amy (Bacon), he had children as follows: David Fitch, grandfather of Dr. William W.; Jabez (father of Session L. Adams, clerk of the town of Plainfield), who was twice married, his second wife being a Miss Lester; George, who married a Miss Pellett; and Mary, who married James P. Carey. Fitch Adams married for his second wife a Miss Morgan, and had a daughter Sarah, who married William C. Osgood, of Norwich, Conn.; she died in 1901.

David F. Adams was born and reared in Canterbury. When a young man he learned the carpenter's trade, which he later followed for a number of years, and evidences of his skilled workmanship were to be seen upon the first mills of the town of Killingly, Windham county. Finding in time that carpenter's work disagreed with him, Mr. Adams finally discontinued his trade and purchased a farm in Canterbury, where he afterward resided and followed agriculture. He was a man thoroughly well informed, and in politics a Democrat. On April 4, 1832, he married Abigail K. Carey, who was born in Canterbury, daughter of James and Phoebe (Howard) Carey.

Hon. William S. Adams, son of David F. and father of William Waldo, was a prominent educator in the town of Canterbury, and was also exceedingly active in public affairs. Born Feb. 20, 1840, he acquired his early education in the schools of that vicinity. Showing a strong inclination toward scholarly pursuits, he was later sent to the academies at Danielson and Plainfield, and was also given special instruction in music. For a vocation he naturally turned to school teaching, and for over thirty-eight years followed that calling in Canterbury and the neighboring towns. On March 20, 1867, he married Helen S. Waldo, who was born Dec. 23, 1850, daughter of Hiram and Nancy (Dresser) Waldo, of Canterbury. Mr. and Mrs. Adams had one son, William Waldo, who is mentioned below. Besides school teaching Mr. Adams gave music lessons on the piano and organ, and for many years materially increased his income by selling musical instruments. The political field furnished an additional scope for his energies, and as an ardent Republican he served his community very efficiently as town clerk for about thirty years, and he also acted on the board of education for a number of years. In 1872 he ably represented his town in the State Legislature, his broad culture receiving there its due recognition.

The WALDO Family, from which Mrs. William S. Adams is descended in paternal lines, is traced to Cornelius Waldo, the emigrant settler, who was born probably in England, in 1624. Previous to 1647, as is proven by records, he was a resident of Salem, Conn. He first resided in Ipswich, Mass., where he met Hannah Cogswell, whom he married. Later he came into possession of considerable land in Chelmsford and Dunstable, and spent the last years of his life in these places. In Dunstable he was elected to the deaconship of Mr. Weld's Church. His death occurred at Chelmsford, Jan. 3, 1700; and his wife passed away Dec. 25, 1704.

(II) John Waldo, son of Cornelius, married, in 1676-7, Rebecca Adams, of Charlestown, Mass., and they resided at Dunstable, in that State, for a number of years, where he was one of the first inhabitants. For a business he followed milling, and he owned a grist mill in Dunstable. From 1695 to 1697 he is known to have been a resident of Boston, and is referred to in the records as John Waldo, of Boston, the miller. Soon after this he moved to Connecticut, and Jan. 20, 1697-8, was admitted as a resident of Windham, where he also owned and operated a gristmill. He died in this town, April 14, 1700. He was a patriotic, loyal American, and as a young man served under Capt. Wheeler in King Philip's war, fighting at Quaboag, where he was wounded. Continuing his military services, he acted as one of the Groton garrison for some time, and, in 1682, with his brother, became one of the mounted guards of the town of Dunstable. In 1689 he represented this same town in the General Assembly.

(III) Edward Waldo, son of John, born April 23, 1684, married, in Windham, Conn., June 28, 1706, Thankful Dimmock, who was born in Barnstable, Mass., in November, 1684, daughter of Shubael and Joanna (Bursley) Dimmock, of Mansfield, Conn. Among the children of Mr. and Mrs. Waldo was Joanna, who married a Mr. Brewster, and after his death, Josiah Cleveland. Mr. Waldo and family resided in the town of Windham, at what is now Scotland, Conn., where he engaged extensively in farming. As a highly esteemed Christian, he was elected to the deaconship of the Scotland Society. Also prominent in public affairs, he received in October, 1722, a commission as lieutenant of a military organization, and in 1722, 1725, and 1730 he represented his town in the General Assembly. He died in Windham, Aug. 3, 1767, and his wife Dec. 13, 1757.

(IV) Edward Waldo (2), son of Edward, born July 27, 1709, married, about 1733, Abigail Elderkin, daughter of John and Susannah (Baker) Elderkin, of Norwich. His second wife, Ruth, died Oct. 14, 1824, at the advanced age of ninety-seven. By his first marriage there were four children born in Canterbury, as follows: Zachariah, who is mentioned below; Ann, born Sept. 5, 1735, who married Col. Elisha Paine; Nathan, June 23, 1740, who married Zervia Paine; and Abigail, July 15, 1744, who married a Mr. Johnson. Mr. Waldo resided for some time in Windham, Conn., but in 1734-5 purchased a farm in Canterbury, where he probably made his home for the most part during the rest of his life. In one of his deeds, however, dated in 1744, he is mentioned as a resident of Norwich, Conn. Mr. Waldo was a highly respected Christian, and one of the first members of the Third or Scotland Society, in Windham. He died in Canterbury, Sept. 4, 1807.

(V) Zachariah Waldo, born Feb. 1, 1734-5, married Nov. 21, 1758, Elizabeth Wright, and after her death, Cynthia Park. His children were: John, Ebenezer, a judge of Hartford; Samuel and Zachariah, Jr.

(VI) Zachariah Waldo, Jr., born and reared in Canterbury, married, Jan. 1, 1800, Joanna Butterfield, and they had seven children: Moses, who married Mary Taylor; Betsey, who married Evan Parish, of Mansfield; Hiram, mentioned below; Abel, who married Mrs. Betsey (Roundsville) Miller; Anson, who resided in Pennsylvania; Asenath, who wedded Apollos Richmond, a successful stove manufacturer; and Edward, who resided in Canterbury.

(VII) Hiram Waldo, son of Zachariah (2) and grandfather of Dr. Adams, was born in Canterbury, Aug. 12, 1803, and there grew to manhood. He married Nancy Dresser, daughter of Abel and Sally (Brown) Dresser, and they had two children: Helen S., who is mentioned above, and Wendell Dresser, born Dec. 16, 1854, who is now a resident of Nebraska. Mr. Waldo and family made their home in Canterbury, where he followed farming with much success. A man of courage, true to his convictions, he joined the minority and firmly upheld the anti-slavery movement. He commanded the highest respect of all who knew him.

The Dresser Family, from which Mrs. William S. Adams descended in maternal lines, originally settled in Roxbury, Mass., where they were residents in 1639. Among the first of this line was John Dresser, who married and had six children.

(II) John Dresser, (2), son of John, married Martha Thorold, and they had eight children.

(III) Jonathan Dresser, second son of John (2), born in January, 1673, married and had seven children.

(IV) Thomas Dresser, son of Jonathan, born Nov. 7, 1704, was the first of his name to settle in Windham county. He married Mary Chandler of Andover, Mass., and they had eight children.

(V) Nathan Dresser, son of Thomas, was born Jan. 12, 1738, and he died Feb. 3, 1805. He married Orindia Sessions, and they had eleven children: Thomas, who died at the age of twenty-one; Nathan, who died in Pomfret; Mary; Abel, who is mentioned below; Elfreyda; Huldah; Serena; Esther; Jonathan, who died in Homer, N. Y.; Comfort, who died in Vermont; and Orindia.

(VI) Abel Dresser, born Jan. 26, 1775, died Oct. 27, 1859. He married Sally Brown and had seven children: Horace, who died in the State of New York; Emily (deceased), who never married; Joseph A., who died in Monson, Mass.; Sally (deceased) who married John W. Adams, of Pomfret, Conn.; Nancy, who is mentioned above is the wife of Hiram Waldo; Abel; and Ezra.

Dr. William Waldo Adams procured his early education in the district school of Canterbury and Plainfield Academy. Deciding to become a physician, he later entered the Medical Department of the University of Vermont, where he did special work in Normal and Pathological Histology, and was under the tutorship of the well known J. Henry Jackson, A. M., M. D., Professor of Physiology and Microscopic Anatomy. He was now prepared to enter the Bellevue Hospital Medical College in New York—one of the best equipped institutions of its kind in our country. It numbers among its faculty such prominent men as President William T. Lusk, Secretary Austin Flint, Fordyce Baker, M. D., LL. D., and R. Ogden Doremus, M. D., LL. D. It contains most excellent medical libraries to which all students have access, and its scope of work far surpasses that of any similar institution. From six hundred to six hundred and fifty cases weekly fall to the treatment of the students and faculty, and the young physician acquires, in a short time, an experience which could not be obtained by years of country practice. In this institution Dr. Adams did special work in medical and toxicological chemistry, and performed the required analytical manipulations in the laboratory. As an additional preparation he later completed courses at the Society of the Lying-in Hospital, New York, and at the Vanderbilt Clinic. He passed a satisfactory examination before the board of regents of New York, and is entitled to practice in that State. He has not, however, availed himself of this opportunity. In the summer of 1891 he came to Moosup, where he has since remained. He began his practice with Dr. Burgess, but, on April 1, 1892, he opened an office of his own. Since then he has had a large and constantly increasing practice, not only in Moosup, but also in the neighboring towns.

Dr. Adams' years of preparation and his remarkably successful practice have won for him a leading place in his profession, and he has been appointed medical examiner for the towns of Canterbury, Sterling, and Plainfield, and of the last named place has served, since October, 1897, as health officer. Dr. Adams is a member of the Windham County Medical Society, and the Connecticut State Medical Association. He was appointed in July, 1901, a member of the Willimantic Pension Board. Fraternally he is highly connected, affiliating with Moosup Lodge, No. 113, F. & A. M., Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., Montgomery ouncil, No. 2, R. & S. M., of Danielson, and with Columbian Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar, of Norwich. Politically he is a Republican.

On June 29, 1898, Dr. Adams was united in marriage with Hattie Sprague, daughter of A. B. Sprague, of Moosup.

HERBERT RALPH CHAPPELL, a popular and widely known business man of Willimantic, whose qualities, unswerving integrity and genial manners have made him troops of friends in the community in which his useful life is passing, was, as the second mayor of Willimantic, identified with the early political history of the city, and his influence has always been felt in local affairs. Mr. Chappell is a contractor in painting, and a dealer in paints and supplies, and is the leading man in his line in Windham county, where his name is as familiar as that of a dealer in good and honest goods, and a contractor of work upon whose word dependence may be placed.

John Chappell, the American ancestor of the Willimantic Chappells, as well as numerous other branches of the family scattered all over the United States, landed in Boston in 1634.

Thomas Chappell, the great-grandfather of Herbert Ralph, was a weaver by occupation, and lived at North Kingston, R. I. He served as a soldier in the War of the Revolution.

Benjamin Chappell, son of Thomas, was the first of this branch of the family to settle in Windham county, Conn. He came to Windham, Conn., when a boy, and, later, settled here permanently. In youth he worked as a stone mason, but began life in Windham as a farmer, and he was known as one of the most successful farmers of his day, becoming very prosperous. At South Kingston, R. I., he was married to Susan Morey, by whom he became the father of a numerous offspring. He died at a ripe old age, as did his wife, both of them being over seventy-three years of age when they passed away. They were associated with the Baptist Church, and were buried in the Windham Center Cemetery. Mr. Chappell was one of the most highly respected citizens of his day, and exerted a strong influence for good. The children of this excellent couple were as follows: (1) Ralph was born July 9, 1823; (2) Levi, born in 1825, died young; (3) Susan, born in 1827, married Edward Grovenor, and moved to Warendon, Ohio, where they had two sons; (4) Eliza, twin to Susan, died young; (5) Benjamin, born in 1831, went to Dover, Ohio, his present home, where he has had a family of five children: (6) Nancy, born June 15, 1833, married Charles Kenyon, and died in Willimantic, the mother of three sons; (7) Charles, born June 16, 1835, was at one time a farmer, but later became connected with the Willimantic Linen Company, and the only survivor of his three children is Mrs. Everett Ladd, of South Park street, in Willimantic; (8) Charlotte, twin to Charles, married, first, Orrin Kenyon

(to whom she bore two girls), second, William Tew, and third, O. A. Chappell, of Lebanon, Conn., and she died in 1901; (9) Dorcas, born in 1837, was the first wife of O. A. Chappell, and the mother of a large family of children; and (10) Lydia, born in 1841, married Milton Young, of Willimantic, who removed to Forestville, Conn., where he died. (Their two sons, Alvin and Herbert, compose the firm of Young Brothers, engaged in manufacturing novelties at Forestville).

Ralph Chappell was born and reared in Old Windham, and his education was completed in Bacon Academy, at Colchester. His trade of joiner was learned under the instruction of Col. Fitch, of Mansfield, known in that day as one of the best workmen in the eastern part of the State. For some years after he had finished his trade Mr. Chappell was in the employ of Sweet & Carpenter, very extensive contractors and builders, of Providence, and while in that city he was married to Maria Horton, born March 10, 1815, at Rehoboth, Mass., a daughter of Eliphalet Horton. Mr. and Mrs. Chappell spent some years in Providence, where he was engaged in jobbing and building for a time, in company with his cousin, William Guile. About 1852 Mr. Chappell removed his family to South Windham, where his last days were spent. In Willimantic for a number of years he was a member of the firm of Chappell & Potter, builders and contractors, who for years did the greater part of the building of Windham county. For some time before his death Mr. Chappell was retired from active business, a paralytic stroke having incapacitated him for active work of any kind. His death occurred in April, 1883, at South Windham, where he was buried. His widow is still living, and after making her home for some years on the old homestead in Windham, is now a member of the family of her only daughter, at Seekonk, Mass. Their children were as follows: (1) Herbert Ralph was born Dec. 27, 1850, at No. 58 John street, Providence, R. I.; (2) Alice died when three years old; and (3) Ann Frances, born July 27, 1856, is now Mrs. Francis B. West, of Seekonk, Mass., and the mother of two children, Helen B. and Mary.

Herbert Ralph Chappell was reared in Windham, to which place his parents came when he was but a child of eighteen months. His education was principally obtained in the Pine Grove Seminary at Windham, when that noted school was under the charge of Dr. J. C. Fitch, and at the Natchaug high school, when D. P. Corbin was principal. From a boy he had assisted his father at carpenter work, but that was distasteful to him, and as soon as he was old enough to act for himself he became an employe in the painting department of Chappell & Potter, extensive contractors. When Mr. Potter took sole charge, Mr. Chappell remained with him as a foreman and thoroughly mastered every detail of the work, so that when he began for himself, April 8, 1888, he was well prepared to take care of anything that might come to him. Business naturally sought one so thoroughly educated in its every part, and Mr. Chappell has greatly prospered in the last ten years.

Herbert Ralph Chappell and Miss Isabella Webster were married Jan. 15, 1876, in Willimantic. Mrs. Chappell is a native of Lee, Mass., where she was born April 27, 1857, a daughter of Charles and Emily H. (Huyck) Webster, and a descendant of Gov. John Webster, who was governor of Massachusetts in 1656. Charles Webster was born Aug. 3, 1831, in Becket, Mass., and Emily H. Huyck in Bethlehem, in 1838. David Webster, father of Charles, was born Sept. 22, 1796, in Florida, Mass., and his wife was Uduxia Wright. Jacob Webster, the father of David, was born July 23, 1772, and his wife was Lavina Heminway. Jacob Webster, Sr., the father of Jacob, was born Feb. 2, 1748, and served in the Revolutionary army, and died in 1776; his wife, Abigail, married a second time, hence the name does not appear on the roll of Revolutionary pensioners. Stephen Webster, father of Jacob, Sr., was born June 11, 1728, was also a Revolutionary soldier, and he died in 1818; his wife was Rebeckah.

Herbert R. Chappell has always been a Republican, and cast his first presidential vote for Gen. U. S. Grant in 1872. When Willimantic was a borough, he served several terms as a Burgess; and in 1895 was elected mayor of the new city of Willimantic. Mr. Chappell is a Mason of high degree, belonging to various Masonic organizations, including Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, A. F. & A. M.; Trinity Chapter, No. 9, R. A. M., of which he is Past High Priest; and St. John's Commandery, No. 11, K. T. Mr. and Mrs. Chappell are members of the Congregational Church, where he has served as chairman of the Society's committee for several years. Mrs. Chappell is a member and the treasurer of Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, D. A. R., and is also chairman of the Ladies' Society, auxiliary to the First Congregational Church. Mr. Chappell is vice-president of the Willimantic Building and Loan Association, and was one of the incorporators of the Willimantic Savings Institute. For thirteen years he was a member of the Conn. National Guard, of which time for nine years he was captain of Company E, of the Third Regiment. He was one of the organizers of the Willimantic Machine Co., and also of the Windham Silk Co., of Willimantic. Mr. Chappell is a man of fine social qualities, which retain the friendships his business ability and evident integrity command. He is known as a liberal, public-spirited and progressive citizen, ready to take hold of any measure that looks to the advance of the city.

HANNIBAL ALDEN. Hon. John Alden, the ancestor of most of those in America who bear the name, was one of the first band of Plymouth Pilgrims, and was the first of those to set his foot on Plymouth Rock. He was the last male survivor of those who came to these shores in the "Mayflower," and who signed the solemn compact in her cabin, in 1620. John Alden was not of the Leyden Church, but, as Bradford in his "History of Plymouth Plantation" informs us, "was hired for a cooper at Southampton where the ship victualled; and being a hopeful young man, was much desired, but left to his own liking to go on, or to stay, when he came here, but he stayed and married here."

John Alden was distinguished for practical wisdom, integrity and decision, and he early acquired and retained during his long life a commanding influence over his associates, was much employed in public business, and was an assistant to the governor for many years. Every position which he accepted and occupied was honestly administered, his duties being promptly performed to the satisfaction of those for whom he labored. John Alden was born in 1599, and died in Duxbury, Mass., Sept. 12, 1687, to again quote, "in a good old age, an old man, full of years, and was gathered to his people, and his sons buried him."

John Alden was married probably in 1621, to Priscilla, daughter of William Molines, or Mullens, who with his wife also came on the "Mayflower," but both died in the February succeeding their landing. Tradition represents that Priscilla must have been very beautiful in her youth, and John also was a type of manly comeliness. Song and story have related how, when the youth was sent to the lovely Priscilla by Capt. Standish, to request her acceptance of the position of the second Mrs. Standish, she preferred the messenger to the message, the tale as told saying,—“As he warmed and glowed, in his simple and eloquent language, quit forgetful of self, and full of the praise of his friend his rival, archly the maiden smiled, and, with eye overrunning with laughter, said, in tremulous voice, ‘Why don't you speak for yourself, John?’” This little passage between the maiden and John Alden has been the foundation of some of the best literature of the century, the humanity of it touching every heart.

John and Priscilla Alden, for the world cannot recall one without the other, had their residence few years later in Duxbury, Mass., on the north side of the village, on a farm which is still and has always been in the possession of their descendant John Alden left no will, having distributed the greater part of his property among his children during his life. Jonathan, his third son, with whom he resided on the old homestead, administered his estate and made final settlement with the heirs July 13, 1688. There were eleven children, of whom the last three are not known, the others bearing these names: John, Joseph, Elizabeth, Jonathan, Sarah, Ruth, Mary and David.

Joseph Alden, son of John, was born in 1621 and died in February, 1697, at the age of seventy-three years. For a long period he was a farmer

Narrabal Alden

Bridgewater. In 1659 he was admitted a freeman, and had his father's proprietary share in Bridgewater, where he settled in the part of the town known now as West Bridgewater. His will was dated on Dec. 14, 1696, and was proved on March 10, 1697. His widow Mary, and son John, were the executors. The wife of Joseph Alden was Mary, the daughter of Moses Simmons, Jr., and their children were: Isaac, Joseph, John, Elizabeth and Mary.

Deacon Joseph Alden was born in 1667, and lived in what is now South Bridgewater where he was a deacon in the Congregational Church and was highly esteemed. His will is dated Nov. 12, 1743, and bears not his signature, but his mark, showing that at that time, from infirmity, he was unable to write. His death occurred Dec. 22, 1747, when he had reached the age of eighty years. He was married in 1690 to Hannah, daughter of Daniel Dunham, of Plymouth, and she died June 13, 1748, at the age of seventy-eight years. Their children were: Daniel, Joseph, Eleazer, Hannah, Mary, Joseph, Jonathan, Samuel, Mehitabel, and Seth.

Daniel Alden, Esq., son of Deacon Joseph, was born Jan. 29, 1691, in Bridgewater, and later removed to Stafford, Conn., where he became one of the early settlers. His death occurred in Stafford May 3, 1767. He had been prominent in public affairs, and was magistrate of the town.

In 1717 he married Abigail Shaw, daughter of Joseph Shaw, and she died July 12, 1755, at the age of sixty-one years. She was a sister to Rev. John Shaw, who was the first pastor of the Congregational Church at South Bridgewater. Stafford records say: "March 2, 1765, died at Stafford, Conn., Rebecca, wife of Daniel Alden, Esq., aged sixty-six years," probably a second wife of Daniel Alden. The children of Daniel were: Joseph, Daniel, Abigail, Zephaniah, Hannah, Hannah (2), Mehitabel, Barnabas, Ebenezer, Mary and Mary (2).

Joseph Alden, son of Daniel, was born Nov. 20, 1718, in Stafford, and died Jan. 2, 1768, of fever, at Worcester, Mass., while on a journey. His marriage, in 1742, was to Susanna Packard, daughter of Solomon Packard, and their children were: Zenas, Martha, Zenas (2), Eliab, Joseph, Benjamin, Zephaniah, Abishai and Patty.

Capt. Joseph Alden, son of Joseph, was born in Stafford, Conn., for many years carried on extensive farming operations, and owned one of the best farms in the town. He was a captain in the State militia, and was a sergeant in the Revolutionary war. His marriage was to Lydia Hyde, of Stafford, and their children were as follows: Martha, who married Dr. Josiah Converse, of Stafford, and had one son, Eliab A. Converse, who became one of the most prominent manufacturers of the town of Stafford; Clarissa, who married Stoddard Ellsworth, of East Windsor, Conn.; Joseph, who died young; Joseph (2); Lydia; Horatio, who was born

May 1, 1792, became a merchant in Hartford, and married Philura Deanes, daughter of Silas Deanes; Hannibal, who died in 1820; Levi H., who died Jan. 2, 1812, at the age of thirteen years; Zephaniah; and Almeda. Capt. Joseph Alden died Jan. 1, 1832, aged seventy-eight years, and his wife Lydia died Feb. 7, 1839, at the same age.

Joseph Alden, son of Capt. Joseph, and the grandfather of Hannibal, was born in 1787 in Stafford, and died May 3, 1870, at the age of eighty-three years. His life had been devoted to farming on a large scale, and he was eminently successful. On June 20, 1817, at Hartford, Conn., he married Lucy Giddings, of Hartford, whose death occurred April 22, 1857, at the age of sixty-three years. She was the daughter of Solomon Giddings and Lucy White, of Preston, Conn. The children born to this marriage were: Hannibal, father of Hannibal; Joseph, born March 1, 1838, who died at the age of six weeks; Elizabeth, who died Sept. 9, 1838, at the age of five years; Lucy Ann, who died July 9, 1851, at the age of fourteen years; Mary Ann, who died Dec. 31, 1853, at the age of twenty-seven years; Louisa W., who died Nov. 22, 1858, at the age of thirty-eight years, the wife of Azariah L. Benton; Martha G., who died Jan. 27, 1859, aged thirty years, wife of James D. Fenton, of Stafford; and Harriet, who married (first) John Gilbert, of Tolland, and (second) William Ellsworth, of Hartford.

Hannibal Alden, son of Joseph, was born in Stafford, Conn., in 1818, and died Oct. 28, 1873, at the age of fifty-five years; he was buried in Stafford Street cemetery. On May 18, 1853, he married Sarah Frances Isham, who was born in 1827, daughter of Dr. Oliver K. Isham, of Tolland, Conn., and died June 7, 1869, at the age of forty-two years. The children of this union were: Elizabeth, who died Feb. 6, 1863, at the age of five years; Edward, who died Jan. 26, 1863, at the age of six years; Emma Frances, born Dec. 27, 1863, who married (first) Ismar Schrier and (second) Salo Schrier, and now resides in Breslau, Germany, where her husband is a shoe manufacturer (she has three children, Margaret, Waldemar, and Agatha); Hannibal, born May 1, 1866; Frank, born June 7, 1869, who died in infancy; and Fanny, born June 7, 1869 (a twin of Frank), who also died in infancy.

Hannibal Alden was a prominent man in his locality, a successful and extensive farmer, owning large estates and buying and selling much land. Many of the sound financial institutions of Stafford had his support, he being for many years one of the directors of the old Stafford National Bank, holding this honorable position until the time of his death; he was also a stockholder and interested in several of the successful manufacturing interests of the town. A man of superb health, his physique fitted him for the active outdoor life he led, his last illness being the only serious one he ever had. Mr. Alden was a man of fixed principles.

Politically he was ardently devoted to the Republican party, interested in its success, but never a seeker for office. With him politics was a duty and a pleasure, not a trade.

Both Mr. Alden and his wife were leading members of the Congregational Church, in which he was actively interested, and he was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society. In manner he was quiet, unassuming, and of a most charitable nature, and he was widely esteemed. His love of reading continued with him until his fatal sickness.

Hannibal Alden, whose name introduces this biography, is in the ninth generation from John Alden, of "Mayflower" fame. His birth occurred in the old home where his father was born before him, and he received his primary education in the common schools of Stafford. From there he went to the high school of Brimfield, Mass., where he continued to study for three years, being obliged to resign graduation honors on account of ill health. At the age of seventeen years he was obliged to put aside his books and take to an active life, at that time entering the grocery store of F. J. Chandler, where he remained for some six months, regaining his health sufficiently to enable him to take a thorough business course at the Rochester Business University, at Rochester, N. Y., where he remained six months.

After his return to Stafford Springs from Rochester Mr. Alden became bookkeeper for E. A. Buck & Co., dealers in wholesale hardware, oils and paints, remaining for one year. His health not being completely restored, he then made a trip to South Dakota, locating at Centerville, and there he entered into partnership with S. F. Maine in the buying and baling of hay for the market, doing a large business for one year. The firm name was Maine & Alden. Then Mr. Alden went to Kansas and at Topeka was engaged with George W. Crane, in the stereotyping department at foreman, remaining with that firm for about one and one-half years, after which he was connected with the supply department of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad for about one year. At the end of this period of successful business life Mr. Alden returned to Stafford and became bookkeeper and assistant treasurer of the Central Woolen Co., remaining with that company for some six years. On Jan. 1, 1900, he became treasurer of the Warren Woolen Co., which position he still fills, being a thorough accountant and a careful and conservative man of business. He is a director of the company and secretary-treasurer of the Stafford Water Power Co.

The marriage of Mr. Alden occurred Nov. 29, 1888, to Miss Helen Dodson, daughter of Charles H. and Lucy B. (Moore) Dodson, of Geneva, Ill., and their children are: Frances Helen, born Sept. 29, 1889; Lucy Moore, Nov. 5, 1892; and Ruth Isham, May 19, 1897.

In politics Mr. Alden is a staunch Republican and an ardent supporter of the men and measures of that party. His services have been appreciated as thorough assessor and as clerk of the school board. In religious matters he was reared in the Congregational Church of which he is a member, and in that body he has been an efficient member of the Society's committee. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Ionic Lodge, No. 110, of Stafford, of which he has been secretary. He is eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution.

CHARLES HENRY DIMMICK, the present popular and successful postmaster at Willimantic, Windham county, is a man who has had reverses as well as successes in his business career, but in all has kept a stout heart, and has never been willing to admit that he was beaten. The family of which he is no unworthy representative, has long been noted in New England, and is connected by marriage with some of the most historic names of that section of the country.

Charles H. Dimmick is in the eight generation from Elder Thomas Dimmick, the line of descent being through Ensign Shubael, John, Timothy, Oliver, Oliver Ward, Edwin Ward to Charles H., of whom this article is written.

Elder Thomas Dimmick, as the name was then written, was probably a son of Edward Dimmick, and was from the vicinity of Barnstable, England. He married Ann (surname not given), and was at Dorchester, Mass., in 1635, at Hingham, in 1638, at Scituate, in 1639, and in 1640 he removed to Barnstable, where he was ordained a ruling elder. In that year he was a deputy to the Plymouth Colony Court, and filled the same position in 1641, 1642, 1648, 1649 and 1650.

Ensign Shubael Dimmick, son of Elder Thomas was baptized in 1644, and in 1663 was married to Joanna, the daughter of John Bursley. In 1669 he was reported at Yarmouth, Mass. The character and reputation of his father was well sustained by him; and he served as selectman, and was deputy to the General Court on several occasions. In the Colonial militia he held the commission of Ensign. About 1693 he removed to Mansfield, Conn., and was on the committee in 1702 to incorporate Mansfield as a town. He was known as Deacon Dimmick, and died in 1732; his wife died in 1727. Their children were: (1) Thomas born in April, 1664, married Desire (surname not given). In King William's War he was a gallant soldier, and was killed in battle at Canso, Sept. 9, 1697. His son Thomas, who was born Dec. 25, 1694, removed to Mansfield, Conn., and was an ensign in the King's service, and died in Cuba, in 1741; he married Ann, daughter of Hezekiah Mason, a grandson of Major John Mason, of Norwich. (2) John, born in January, 1666; (3) Timothy, born in March, 1668, married Abigail (surname not given), and removed to Mansfield, and from there to Ashford, where he died about 1733; (4) Shubael, born in February, 1673; (5) Joseph, born in September, 1675; (6) Mehitabel, born in 1677; (7) Benjamin, born in March, 1680; (8) Joanna, born in March, 1682, married Josiah Conant in Windham; (9) Thankful, born in November, 1684, in 1706 married Deacon Edward Waldo, of Windham, and from whom descended the late Judge Loren P. Waldo, of Hartford.

John Dimmock, son of Ensign Shubael, born in 1666, lived at Falmouth, Mass., and had, among his children, a son Timothy.

Timothy Dimmock, son of John, was born in Falmouth about 1700, and removed to Mansfield, Conn., where he was married Aug. 15, 1723, to Ann Bradford, a daughter of Joseph Bradford, by whom he had the following children: (1) Ann, born May 23, 1724; (2) Timothy, born April 8, 1726; (3) John, born March 24, 1727-8; (4) Joanna, born Aug. 28, 1730; (5) Josiah, born March 2, 1732-3; (6) Simeon, born Sept. 19, 1735; (7) Sylvanus, born June 18, 1738; (8) Oliver, born Dec. 31, 1740; and (9) Daniel, born May 13, 1743.

Oliver Dimmock was born in Mansfield, Conn., Dec. 31, 1740, and was married in April, 1764, to Sarah Gurley, by whom he had the following children: (1) Oliver, born June 3, 1766; (2) Lucinda, born June 25, 1768; (3) Sarah, born June 6, 1770; (4) Samuel, born March 2, 1773; (5) Daniel, born March 1, 1775; (6) Eunice, born Nov. 26, 1776; (7) Oliver Ward, grandfather to Charles H. Oliver Ward Dimmock lived and died in Mansfield, where he was born June 20, 1780. Among his children, was Edwin Ward, the father of Charles H. Dimmick.

Edwin Ward Dimmick was born and reared in Mansfield. When a young man he clerked in a store in Manchester, Conn., and he has engaged in various occupations at different times, having been a merchant, an overseer of railroad work, and a manufacturer of shirts. On Feb. 7, 1838, he was married at Burnside, Conn., to Mary Jane Chandler, who was born in Franklin, N. H., a daughter of Aretas Chandler and a representative in the eighth generation of the Chandler family, of whom William Chandler was the first American ancestor. The children born of this union were as follows: (1) Charles died in infancy. (2) Capt. Orvin Ward, who organized a company at Newark, N. J., during the War of the Rebellion, which was later transferred to a New York regiment, served with Gen. Grant and he died in Hoboken, N. J., when about twenty-five years old. William Chandler and Annis, his wife (supposedly a sister of Deacon Alcock) settled in Roxbury in 1637.

Thomas Chandler, son of William Chandler, was born in 1630. He came to this country with his parents, and was a proprietor and early pioneer in the settlement of Andover, Mass., which he represented in the General Court of 1678 and 1679. He married Hannah Brewer and died in 1703.

William Chandler, son of Thomas, born in 1659, married Eleanor Phelps in 1687.

Moses Chandler, son of William, married in 1721, Anna Sanborn, who was born in 1699, a daughter of Stephen Sanborn, of Hampton, N. H., and lived in Lancaster, Mass., and later is spoken of as from Shrewsbury.

Sanborn Chandler, son of Moses, lived in Moultonboro, N. H., where he died in 1790. His wife's name was Hannah.

Moses Chandler, son of Sanborn, was born in 1751. He was married in 1781, to Sarah Glines, and lived in Moultonboro, N. H.

Aretas Chandler, son of Moses, was married in 1804, to Rebecca, a daughter of Ephraim Bradbury, and lived in Franklin, N. H. For his second wife he was married to Abigail, the widow of Moses Chase. She died in 1860. Of the children of Aretas Chandler, Mary Jane married Edwin Ward Dimmick.

Charles H. Dimmick was born Dec. 10, 1854, at Newark, N. J., being the fourth child of his parents, Edwin Ward and Mary Jane (Chandler) Dimmick. While but a boy he sold the Newark Daily Advertiser, on the streets during the stirring period of the Civil war. His schooling was but limited, yet from early boyhood he was trained in the practical affairs of life. His mother died before he was fourteen years of age, and from that time his home was wherever he was employed. She had helped him to study at home and to broaden his knowledge, so by that training he was competent to take a position as shipping clerk with Cone & Smith, grocers, on Greenwich street, N. Y., before attaining his majority. He then went to Madison, N. J., where he worked on a farm for Monroe Hancock. Small for his age, he was full of energy, and was known as a hustler. At Elizabeth, N. J., he secured a position in a sash, door and blind factory, which he threw up after about six months to join a party of Cuban filibusters. They sailed from New York en route for Cuba, but were overhauled at Sandy Hook, by the United States Revenue cutter "Grant," and brought back to the battery at New York. While the party was being taken up White Hall street, one of the guards, supposing Mr. Dimmick to be a boy from the street, ordered him to clear out, which he did at once, and thus made his escape from a bad scrape.

Soon after this experience Mr. Dimmick came to Willimantic, and found work with Charles E. Carpenter & Co. In the early part of 1872 he went to Quincy, Ill., where he was robbed of all his money. Full of push and energy, he secured a position, and later drove a "prairie schooner" out into Nebraska, where he worked at breaking prairie and herding cattle, and he hunted buffalo in the days when they were numbered by the thousands. For about a year and a half he remained in the West, and in 1873 came back to Connecticut, with but two dollars in his pocket, and a store of most eventful experiences. In Willimantic he worked for a time at the barber trade, in the employ of David Tucker. In New York he was shipping clerk for Samuel Randall, a wholesale confectioner at No. 12½ Cortland street, and was later night clerk at French's Hotel, a building that stood where the Brooklyn Bridge entrance now is. After he left the hotel he came to Willimantic and engaged in the butcher business in company with his uncle, Chauncey W. Turner (whose wife was Eunice Dimmick, a sister of his father). With him Mr. Dimmick remained until his marriage, June 3, 1875, to Miss Hattie L. Crane, of Mansfield, the daughter of Edmund and Minerva L. (Thompson) Crane. Mrs. Hattie L. Dimmick died in Willimantic, Aug. 21, 1895, leaving two daughters, Maud E., now a graduate of the State Normal School at Willimantic, and Hazel L., both at home. For his second wife Mr. Dimmick wedded Martha Gray, who was born in England, a daughter of John Gray, and who came to this country when a child.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Dimmick, in company with his brother-in-law, E. W. Crane, engaged in a butcher business at South Coventry, Conn., where he did not remain long, however, but came to Willimantic and opened a barber shop with James Dougherty, in the basement of what is now the "Plaza Hotel," then the "Commercial Hotel." At a later period he was a clerk for Samuel E. Amidon, in the grocery business, becoming a partner of that gentleman at a later period. In 1893 he was elected town clerk, a position which he held until 1899, when he was made postmaster of Willimantic. Mr. Dimmick cast his first vote for R. B. Hayes, and since that time has continued to be a staunch Republican, always taking a strong interest in the success of the party. In 1894 he was made a member of the Republican city committee, and was chairman of that body until he was made postmaster. As town clerk he was efficient and capable, and through his efforts was introduced the Emery system of preserving old records. He is a member of Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, A. F. & A. M., and Natchaug Lodge, K. P. In religious faith he is a Methodist, and is a member of the First M. E. Church, of Newark, New Jersey, while his wife is a communicant of the Baptist Church.

JOSEPH BANCROFT, a substantial and highly respected citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, descends from an old family which has been numerous in Hartford county since the settlement of the country.

(I) John Bancroft, the first of the name in New England, came hither in the ship "James," from London, England, in 1632, and resided in Lynn, Mass., where he died in 1637. His widow, Jane, received 100 acres of land in Lynn in 1638. Family tradition says she married for her second husband a man who with her and her children removed to Connecticut. Mr. Bancroft's children, all born in England, were: Amos, John, Thomas, Samuel, and perhaps William.

(II) John Bancroft (2), born in England, was in Windsor, Conn., in 1645, and there married Dec. 3, 1650, Hannah Duper (or Draper, or Dupra). He owned land and property there, and died Aug. 6, 1662. His children were John, Nathaniel, Ephraim, Hannah and Sarah.

(III) Ephraim Bancroft, born June 15, 1656, married May 5, 1681, Sarah, daughter of John Stiles, Sr. Mr. Bancroft had the homestead in Windsor, Conn. He contributed money to the Connecticut Fund for Relief of Poor of other Colonies in 1675. He died in 1727. His children were: Ephraim, John, Sarah, John (2), Benjamin, Nathaniel, Daniel and Thomas.

(IV) Ephraim Bancroft (2), born Feb. 8, 1681-82, married March 17, 1715, Frances Phelps, of Windsor. Mr. Bancroft lived at Scantic, East Windsor. He was one of the signers for a ferry at W. Pt. (Warehouse Point) May 1, 1755. His wife died May 14, 1752. His children were: Sarah, Ephraim, Ephraim (2), Isaac, Hannah, Eliza (or Ellis), Ruth and Ruth (2).

(V) Isaac Bancroft, born Aug. 17, 1720, married (first) Dec. 17, 1741, Abigail Eggleston, who died June 17, 1758. He married (second) June 20, 1765, Lydia Chapin, of Springfield, Mass. Mr. Bancroft was a member of the church at Scantic, East Windsor. He died June 5, 1808, aged eighty-eight years. His children were: By his first union Isaac, Abigail, Eunice, Jerusha, Lois and Hannah; and by the second Isaiah, Daniel, David, Benjamin, Lydia and Ruth.

(VI) David Bancroft, the grandfather of Joseph, was born Nov. 4, 1774, in East Windsor, Conn., and made his residence in the eastern part of the town, where he pursued agriculture all his life, his death occurring there when he had reached the age of nearly eighty-eight years, on Aug. 9, 1862. In 1802 he married Chloe Webster, who was born March 8, 1772, and died Dec. 16, 1850. Their children were: (1) David Owen is mentioned below. (2) Chloe married Richard Hamilton, a farmer in Ellington, where she died in 1899, at the advanced age of ninety-two; she had one child, Rollo, who died young. (3) Eunice married Bevel Allen, and they lived at Warehouse Point, where he was engaged as a cooper, and where he died; he is buried there. After her husband's death Mrs. Allen went to Winona, Minn., remaining several years, and coming back to Ellington, where she died. Their children were Dwight, Nancy, Edwin and Roena, all deceased except Roena, who lives in Ellington, the wife of Warren Braman, an engineer. Dwight and Nancy died in Winona, Minn., and Edwin died at the Soldiers' Home, having served bravely in the Civil war in the Connecticut service; he was a prisoner of war, confined in Andersonville.

DAVID O. BANCROFT

(VII) DAVID OWEN BANCROFT, father of Joseph, was born April 20, 1803, in East Windsor, and from his earliest years was inured to hard work, while still a child being hired out to a neighboring farmer, Capt. Simeon Barber. His wages were about ten cents a day, including board, and his educational opportunities were limited to three months at the district school, during the winters, when no farm work could be carried on. Young David worked with other neighbors until he was eighteen years of age, and then began his independent business career. Purchasing a small tract of woodland, he cut the timber into firewood, which he hauled to Hartford, a distance of thirteen miles, and also cut a large amount of bark which was used in the tanneries of the neighborhood, especially in Rainbow, in the town of Windsor, whither he also hauled it. He continued in that business for a number of winters, farming during the summers, making money, and, what was just as necessary, learning to save it, accumulating in a few years quite a sum for those days. In 1824 he decided to visit his mother's relatives, and started off on foot for his uncle's home, near Erie, Pa., making the journey successfully, sometimes averaging fifty miles a day. He walked to Albany, then went on the canal (just then completed) as far as Buffalo, whence he walked to his destination. Much impressed with the country known as the Genesee Valley, he decided to locate there, and returned home with that intention, but he found his parents much opposed to his plans, they arguing that as he was the only son he would receive the home farm, and it was but just that he remain and care for them in their old age. Although ambitious, and firmly believing that the Genesee country offered superior opportunities for a young man, he gave way to filial wishes and remained in Connecticut.

Taking charge of the home farm, Mr. Bancroft soon had it in a very prosperous condition, and added land and made improvements, he and his sister Chloe caring kindly for the aged parents until they passed away. Later he bought a large tract of woodland, which he cleared off, sold the bark and the wood, put the land under cultivation, and displayed in every way the attributes of a successful man, of good judgment and excellent business ability. Great credit was reflected upon him, for he had struggled through a hard childhood and boyhood, and had won, through his own efforts, all he possessed at the time of his death. No work was too hard or fatiguing, and when he married he found a true helpmate, one who was industrious, frugal and a most excellent manager. Although Mr. Bancroft was a man of small stature, he was blessed with a strong constitution, could endure an immense amount of physical labor, and was noted the country round for his industrious habits. His life, although one of constant toil, was prolonged, and he reached his ninety-first year, dying Oct. 17, 1893, of old age, at the home of his son Joseph in Ellington; he was buried in Windsorville, Conn. Mr. Bancroft's political belief was in the Republican party, and he always discharged the duties of a good citizen. When a Methodist Church was proposed in Windsorville he not only gave the land but also supplied a part of the lumber for its erection, but when the proposal was made to remove it to its present location he opposed the plan, this difference of opinion resulting in his final withdrawal from the church, although it did not alter his sterling Christian character.

David O. Bancroft was married, in 1825, to Lovice Hamilton, the estimable daughter of Theodore and Anna (Cadwell) Hamilton, of East Windsor, who was born in 1806, and died March 18, 1893, at the home of her son Joseph. For nearly sixty-eight years this devoted couple were permitted to remain together—an example of conjugal fidelity and all the domestic virtues. A most excellent family grew up around them, viz.: (1) Charlotte died unmarried at the age of thirty-three years, on March 29, 1860. (2) Jane died July 19, 1898, at the age of sixty-eight. (3) Isaac, born June 1, 1833, died in Ellington Jan. 10, 1894, being killed on the railroad at Sadd's Mills Station. He was getting on the car, when his foot slipped and he fell under the wheels. He was an excellent citizen, and his untimely end was much regretted. He taught school at South Windsor and Ellington, and was a farmer in the latter town. He married Sarah Knight, and they had two children, Charlotte and Charles Hamilton. Charles lives at home with his mother. Charlotte married Harry Wood, and lives in Tolland. She was educated in the district schools and the Suffield Literary Institute, and was a successful teacher in Ellington and Tolland. (4) Elizabeth married Henry T. Allen, moved to Melrose, Conn., and died there in 1877, aged forty years. They had two children, Anna Hamilton and Alfred. The former married Robert Neeland, of Melrose, and they have had two children, Alfred and Samuel. Alfred Allen is a machinist, and is employed in the Colts Fire Arms factory at Hartford, Conn. Mrs. Elizabeth Allen was a successful school teacher for over ten years in Holyoke, Wapping and Vermont. (5) Joseph and (6) Josephine, twins, born May 29, 1847, both survive, and the latter is the wife of Albert L. Clifford, who is a mechanic in Bridgeport, Conn. They have two children, Walter Bancroft and Edith D., the former of whom served three years in the Philippines, and is at home, having recently received an honorable discharge from the service. Edith D. married George Sherman, a resident of Bridgeport, Conn., and he is an engineer, engaged on the private yacht of a Mr. Cowles, of New York. They have three children, George, Russell and Mildred J. Albert L. Clifford was a soldier in the Civil war, serving as a member of Company A, 18th Regiment, New Hampshire Volunteers, which regiment was in the 3d Brigade, 1st Division, 9th Army Corps, Army of the Potomac.

Joseph Bancroft was born in East Windsor and was reared a farmer boy, early learning the duties of life. Sturdy and strong, he was taught by his industrious father the beauty and independence of a farmer's life, to which he took kindly, although he would have enjoyed more educational advantages than were obtainable during the few winter months in the district school. He attended three months at the old Ellington high school, which his brother Isaac and sisters Elizabeth and Josephine also attended. Until 1868 he remained with his father, and then went on a visit to a relative near Utica, LaSalle Co., Ill., where he remained employed for one season, returning home, where there was always plenty of work on the extensive property his father had accumulated.

In 1874 Mr. Bancroft, in partnership with G. G. Allen, engaged in the meat business in Ellington, under the firm name of Bancroft & Allen. One year later Mr. Bancroft bought his partner's interest, and he continued the business alone for twenty-two years, driving a wagon through Ellington, Somers, East Windsor and Rockville, and making the enterprise pay. In 1899 he retired from activity, and now devotes his attention to his farm in East Windsor, which is a portion of his father's large estate—land that has been in the family name for over a century. The old homestead, built 110 years ago, in 1793, is still in good condition, and there has never been a death in it since it has been in the Bancroft name. In 1878 Mr. Bancroft purchased the land upon which he has erected his attractive home and convenient buildings, from Julius Kibbe; it was formerly the site of the Ellington high school.

Mr. Bancroft was married, Jan. 6, 1876, in Ellington, to Miss Addie E. Humphrey, who was born Sept. 2, 1848, in Washington, Mass., daughter of Clark and Mary A. Humphrey, the former of whom was a farmer in Washington. Mrs. Humphrey died before her husband, and when Mrs. Bancroft was twelve years of age. The remains of her parents lie in the cemetery at Lee, Mass. Their children were, in addition to Mrs. Bancroft: Henry, who lives in Ohio, is married, and has children; George, who died in infancy; Mary Angie, who is the wife of John Brust, lives in Haynersville, near Troy, N. Y., and has one daughter, Belle; and Mattie, who lives in Windsor, Conn., married C. J. Tilden, and has two children, Leonard and Hazel.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft: (1) Ernest H., born June 6, 1877, was educated in the district schools and Huntsinger's Business College, Hartford, and is now the efficient cashier in the freight office of the Consolidated Railroad, at Manchester, Conn. He is an excellent musician, giving much attention to the study of the piano and organ; was organist in the Ellington Congregational Church for several years, and is now organist in the Methodist Church at Manchester. (2) Ida M., born May 27, 1879, graduated from the Rockville high school in 1900. (3) Frank O., born Nov. 22, 1881, was educated in the district schools and the Rockville high school, and is in Manchester in the employ of the railway company, being engaged in the same depot with his brother, Ernest H.

Mr. Bancroft is a quiet and unostentatious citizen, and performs his civic and social duties to the best of his ability. He votes with the Republican party. The family is one of the most highly esteemed in Ellington, where he is regarded as one of the representative, substantial citizens.

ROBERT CREIGHTON WHITE, M. D., has probably the most extensive practice of any physician in Willimantic, Windham county, and his career is unique, in that he came a stranger to the city, and by the exercise of professional skill of the highest degree in critical moments, very soon won for himself a standing, and now he has a rapidly growing patronage, that men of years might envy. Dr. White is a young man who has fought his own way in the world against tremendous hindrances, and at his age has certainly made a remarkable success.

He was born Dec. 13, 1865, in West Hebron, Washington Co., N. Y., a son of John and Sarah (Parish) White.

John White was born in Washington county, N. Y., where his family had been long resident, and where he spent his active life, dying at Whitehall in 1886, at the age of sixty-four years. The Parish family were highly respected and prosperous people of the town of Jackson, in Washington county, N. Y., and from them have come many clergymen and other professional men. Mrs. Sarah White died about 1871, at the age of forty-three years. She was the mother of the following family: William J., of Williamsville, Vt.; Mary C., the wife of Frank C. Douglass, of Hampton, N. Y.; David A., of Cambridge, N. Y.; Peter P., a graduate of the University of Vermont, and now a physician at Williamsville, Vt.; Ambrose O., a resident of West Granville, N. Y.; Dr. Robert C.; Duane, a real estate man of Boston; and Everett, a graduate of the University of Maryland, now practicing medicine at Lynn, Massachusetts.

Dr. White was but a child when his parents removed to Whitehall, N. Y., where he was reared, attending the country school in the winter season, and doing the work of the farm in the summer time. As he was large for his age, and full of ambition and energy, he did a man's work while still a boy. There were many trials and discouragements that attended his early days, and great credit is due him for the manly way in which he has overcome them and attained his present enviable standing in the professional world. At the Troy Conference Academy at Poultney, Vt., young White fitted for teaching, a profession in which he was successfully engaged as early as eighteen years, teaching in the town of Hampton, near Whitehall, N. Y. His thoughts, however, were not in the school room as a field for his life's work, and he read medicine with his brother, Dr. Peter P. White, of Williams-ville, Vt. In 1889 he was graduated from the University of Vermont, where he had wasted no time. He was ambitious, not only to add to his knowledge, but to earn money as well, as he was paying his own way to a very great extent as he went along. His first summer vacation was spent in the State Hospital for the Insane at Concord, N. H., and his second summer vacation in the Boston City Hospital. For a short time after his graduation he was the first house surgeon at the Mary Fletcher Hospital at Burlington, and subsequently served a year as assistant physician at the Hartford Retreat for the Insane, at Hartford, Conn. In 1890, for a few months, he was called to take the place of superintendent of the Mary Fletcher Hospital at Burlington, Vt. In the fall of that year Dr. White came to Willimantic, an entire stranger, but attracted by the growth and prosperity of the city. Here he opened an office, and from the first has made rapid strides into the public favor. For the past five years he has been medical examiner for the county, under appointment by the coroner.

Dr. White was married Oct. 3, 1895, in Willimantic, to Miss Lena Belle Chappell, of Windham, daughter of Alvord D. and Hattie Chappell. She is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Dr. White is a Mason of high degree, belonging to Eastern Star Lodge, F. & A. M.; Trinity Chapter, No. 9, R. A. M.; Olive Branch Council, No. 10, R. & S. M.; St. John's Commandery, No. 11, K. T.; Sphinx Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Hartford; and the Norwich Consistory, at Norwich. He is also a member of the A. O. U. W. and the Knights of Maccabees, having been for many years medical examiner for both societies, and he has many friends. In the Windham County Medical Society and in the State Medical Society he is an active and valued member. In politics he is a Democrat, but is not in any respect a politician, or an office seeker.

JOHN MARSHALL GAGER, florist and gardener at Willimantic, Windham county, is a thrifty and aggressive young business man, one who has made his own way in the world, and attained just success.

Mr. Gager is a descendant in the eighth generation from Dr. William Gager, who came over with Gov. Winthrop in 1630, the ancestral line being as follows: Dr. William Gager; John; Samuel; John; Jason; Aaron; William Smith; and John Marshall. Dr. Gager died the year of his arrival in America from a disease contracted from poor food at sea, a disease which swept away many of the emigrants. He is recorded as "a skillful surgeon; a right Godly man; and one of the deacons of our congregation."

John Gager, son of Dr. Gager, was one of the company that settled at New London with John Winthrop, the younger. His name is found on the first list of the inhabitants of that place. New London voted him 200 acres east of the river, which is now in the town of Ledyard. In 1650 he made his home on this land, and there he lived until he joined in the settlement of Norwich. His house lot in the new town bore the date of the oldest survey, in November, 1659. In 1674, and again in 1688, he was constable at Norwich. His death, Dec. 10, 1703, bore him away at a very advanced age. He was the father of two sons and a daughter.

Samuel Gager, son of John, was married in 1695 to Mrs. Rebecca (Lay) Raymond, the widow of Daniel Raymond, and was all his life a man of good repute and fine character. His home was in what is now Bozrah, Conn., then known as the parish of New Canaan, but he was buried at his own request in the old neglected graveyard in the old town of New London. He was the father of the following family: Elizabeth; John; Samuel; William, who graduated from Yale in 1721, and was pastor at Lebanon until his death in 1739; Sarah; Simon; and Rebecca.

John Gager, a member of the above family, married Jerusha Barstow, and lived in Franklin, where he followed farming. His children were as follows: John; Jason; Samuel; Lydia; Daniel; Simon; Aaron; and Levi.

Jason Gager, son of John, was a farmer, and lived in Scotland, Conn., where he died. He was twice married. His first wife, Zeria Roberts, bore him two children, Samuel R. and Cynthia. His second wife, Lucy Park, became the mother of Lucy; Andrew; Lucy (2); Aaron, the grandfather of John Marshall; Jason; Sybil; John P.; David; Rebecca; and Harriet.

Aaron Gager, son of Jason and Lucy, was born in Scotland, Conn., where he lived, and where he died in 1862, at the age of eighty-six. He was a farmer by occupation, and in his life time he was much respected, being regarded as one of the most useful citizens of the town. His first wife was Mary Smith, of Scotland; his second, Deborah Murdock, of Willimantic; and his third wife, Asenath Babcock, of Lebanon. To his first marriage was born one son, William Smith, mentioned below; to the second marriage were born: Mary, the wife of Elder Henry Greenslit; Lucy Ann, who married Archie P. Willoughby; and Eliphalet, who died when twenty years old.

William Smith Gager, son of Aaron and Mary, was born May 5, 1804, and he died Dec. 30, 1891. Sarah Ann Bass became his wife May 6, 1842, and bore him the following children: Edwin Bass, born April 26, 1843, married Julia Ballentine, and is now the president of the Kinnear & Gager Co., of Columbus, Ohio, an important corporation engaged in the manufacture of metal ceilings and similar goods; Harriet Emeline, born Sept. 14, 1845, married George P. Moore, and died in Scotland, Conn.; Lucy Anna, born Feb. 12, 1848, married M. H. Walker, of Manchester, Conn.; Lucia Alice, born March 4, 1850, died single; Sarah Bass, born May 27, 1852, died in infancy; William C., born April 17, 1854, is a dealer in broom makers' supplies at Columbus, Ohio; Homer D., born April 25, 1856, married Nancy Brown York, and is agent of the Grand Union Tea Co., at Norwich, Conn.; John Marshall; Edward Everett, born Jan. 5, 1861, is a farmer in Scotland; and Miss Carrie Belle, born May 16, 1864, lives in Scotland. William Smith Gager was reared on the paternal homestead, and became a highly respected citizen of the community where his useful life was passed. His children did him honor, and he died on the farm where his venerable widow is still residing. Ebenezer Bass, the father of Mrs. Gager, was a soldier in the War of 1812, and lived to be ninety-one years old. The family is one of the oldest in Windham.

John Marshall Gager was born June 13, 1858, on the old Aaron Gager homestead, in the town of Scotland. He attended school in the Christian Street School District, No. 9, in the town of Windham, students attending from both Windham and Scotland. Mr. Gager had the training of a farmer boy, and, as his older brothers grew up they left the farm, so there was plenty of work for him as he came along in turn. He attended a private school at Windham Center, conducted by Earl M. Swift. His schooling was completed by a full term at this institution. He worked at home for several years after he was of age, and then in company with his brother, Homer, leased the home farm, and they together engaged in its cultivation for several years. Finally the brother married and set up for himself, leaving John Marshall still on the home place. Finally it dawned upon him that the old style farming had not the money in it there used to be, and that some radical change must be effected. Turning to market gardening he found it promising, and made preparations for gardening on an extensive scale. Rigging up a few hot-bed sashes, he began to grow early vegetables with good results. His great trouble was the distance from market. He often hauled cabbage, a ton at a load, to Taftville, ten miles away. Worcester, Mass., was also a point of sale. Convenience to market was what he needed, and in 1890 he bought the old Cranston place on South Main street, Willimantic. It contained eighty acres, and needed much work to bring it up to the standard he had set. Mr. Gager was an earnest and enthusiastic worker, and very soon the farm was transformed. Buildings that he needed were erected, and he has pushed his business until it is a success.

On Oct. 4, 1894, John Marshall Gager was married to Miss Nellie B. Anthony, of Scotland, who was born in that town, March 29, 1870, a daughter of Jonathan and Fanny M. (Burnham) Anthony. Mrs. Gager was a member of the first class that was graduated from the Willimantic Normal, and for three years was assistant to the principal in the Natchaug School in Willimantic. They have one child, Harold Anthony, who was born Oct. 22, 1899. Mr. Gager is a Republican. With his wife he belongs to the Congregational Church. Socially he is a member of the A. O. U. W., and of the American Benefit Society. Mr. Gager built his excellent new home on the east part of his farm, which is divided by South Main street, in 1900. His reputation as a man is creditable to his ability, integrity and industry. His personal standing as a man and a citizen in the community is very high.

RALPH I. BARBER, one of the best-known business men and most reliable citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, is a native of that place, and has witnessed with pleasure its growth and development. Mr. Barber comes from one of the old and respected families of Connecticut, and his line is traced back directly for seven generations.

Thomas Barber, the first of the name in New England, came to Windsor, Conn., in 1635, with the Saltonstall party, under Francis Stiles, being at that time about twenty-one years of age; was made a freeman in 1645; served in the Pequot war, and later removed to Simsbury, where he contracted to build its first meeting-house. He was married Oct. 7, 1640, and both he and his wife, Margaret, died in 1662.

Josiah Barber, son of Thomas the settler, was born Feb. 5, 1653, and (first) married, Nov. 22, 1677, Abigail, daughter of Nathaniel Loomis; they resided near the river, in Windsor. She died in 1701, and he passed away in 1733.

Aaron Barber, son of Josiah, was born July 20, 1697, and was married Feb. 2, 1724, to Mary Douglas, of Windsor, late of New London. They lived in Windsor.

Elijah Barber, son of Aaron, was born Jan. 11, 1745, was married Dec. 29, 1768, to Abigail Wood, and resided in Windsor.

Abner Barber, son of Elijah and the grandfather of Ralph I., was born Sept. 18, 1772, in Windsor, Conn. A brother of Abner Barber, John Warner Barber, was born Feb. 2, 1798, and died on Nov. 18, 1885. He was the author of a well-known and authentic book called "Historical Collections."

Ralph I. Barber

these relating to several States, including Connecticut. His residence was in New Haven. Abner Farber was married Nov. 6, 1794, to Miss Hepzibah Bowers, who bore him the following named children: Abner, Jr., born Sept. 17, 1795, died March 27, 1842; Strong, born Aug. 10, 1798, died May 29, 1804; John, born July 5, 1801, died Sept. 13, 1802; William S., born July 14, 1804, was for years a bookbinder in Brooklyn, N. Y., returning later in life to his native State, and he died in Rockville; Ralph was born June 1, 1806; Julia Ann, born Nov. 13, 1809, resides in Rockville. Abner Barber died March 24, 1811, and his wife, Hepzibah, died Feb. 27, 1851.

Ralph Barber, the father of Ralph I., was born June 1, 1806, in Windsor, Conn. His father's death, when he was very young, necessitated his leaving home at the tender age of eight years, and he was "bound out" to a Mr. Grant, who was located on land which is now included in the city of Rockville, although at that time this flourishing industrial center contained but three houses. He was reared to manhood in that neighborhood, and attended school at what is now Ogden's Corners, town of Vernon. His rearing was that of a farmer boy, and he followed farm work until he went into the mills, first entering the Saxony mill and later the Springville mill. Mr. Barber followed mill work until in the 'fifties, at that period retiring to a farm, where he lived some years. The last two years of his life were spent at the home of his son, Ralph I., where he died Oct. 17, 1884, and he was laid to rest in the Center cemetery at Vernon.

Mr. Barber was married, in Ellington, to Miss Maria Isham, who was born in that town June 25, 1806, daughter of Obediah Isham, a prosperous farmer, who married a Miss Hyde. Mrs. Barber died in April, 1864, and she also is buried in Vernon Center cemetery. There were but two children of this marriage, Ralph I. and Maria; the daughter was born in August, 1835, married Charles W. Fuller, and died in Vernon, leaving an adopted son. Mr. Barber was a pronounced Whig in his earlier days, but later in life cordially affiliated with the Republican party. His religious views made him a consistent member of the Methodist Church, where he contributed according to his means in aid of all of its missionary and other enterprises. Although not by any means accounted a wealthy man, according to the present standards, he had lived carefully and provided comfortably for his age.

Ralph I. Barber was born Nov. 20, 1836, on what is now West street, in Rockville, Conn., near the Ellington town line, and was the only son of Ralph and Maria (Isham) Barber. His first instruction was received in the West district school, at Rockville, where Jabez Hunt was one of his earliest teachers. These schools, in this part of Connecticut, so near large educational institutions, afforded advantages which in some respects compare very favorably with the schools of the present date. Their thoroughness compensated for their small scope, and what was taught in them was taught well and never forgotten. A love of learning was inculcated that frequently resulted in the graduation of the pupils from these small and hampered surroundings prepared to enter those intellectual circles which so long have done much to mold the educational trend through New England.

At the age of eighteen years Mr. Barber left his books and entered the Springville mill, where he was employed during one year, after which he took up the trade of printer. In order to become a master of this art Mr. Barber commenced in the lowest capacity, according to the rules governing such business houses, beginning in the office of the old Gazette, at Rockville, at the time that C. B. Wells was proprietor. For six years he continued in newspaper work, a part of that time being with the Journal, while James Gilfillan was editor.

About 1861 he gave up his newspaper work and removed to a farm at Ogden's Corners, in the town of Vernon, and remained engaged in agricultural pursuits for twenty years. In 1881 he entered into a partnership with H. G. Ransom, in the hardware business, in Rockville, the firm being Ransom & Barber, and the location of the business a few doors east of where Mr. Barber is now established. After about one and one-half years Mr. Barber sold his interest to William M. Corbin, and then engaged for a time in clerking in a shoe store. Failing health caused Mr. Corbin to wish to dispose of his business, and Mr. Barber, in association with his brother-in-law, bought it and successfully conducted the same under the firm name of Parker & Barber until the disastrous fire of 1895, at which time the store was destroyed. In January, 1896, Mr. Barber resumed business alone, and since that time has so continued, enjoying at the present date a large and lucrative trade, extending over a large territory.

Mr. Barber was married May 31, 1859, in Rockville, to Miss Elizabeth Hooper, who was a native of Lancashire, England, born March 29, 1837, and was four years old when she came with her parents to the United States. They settled first in the State of New York, later came to Massachusetts, and in 1848 to Rockville, Conn., where the father started the fulling and giggering machinery in the American mill.

In his political life Mr. Barber has always been a Republican, but in no sense a politician, being satisfied with regularly casting his vote. Socially he is connected with the A. O. U. W., and is highly regarded in that order. In 1897 he erected his handsome residence on Davis avenue, where he and his accomplished wife dispense a charming hospitality. Mr. Barber is regarded as one of the leading business citizens of Rockville and is one of the city's most representative men.

FRANK XAVIER MAYNARD. Among the prominent, substantial and successful citizens of the town of Plainfield, Windham county, is Frank Xavier Maynard, who owns and occupies one of the best farms and most comfortable residences on Shepard Hill. In the fullest sense of the word he is a self-made man, his possessions having become his through years of frugality and industry.

Morris Maynard, father of Frank X., came from near Montreal, Quebec, in 1867, and located at the village of Danielsonville, now Danielson, Conn., where he remained some six months, removing to Wauregan the same year. His trade was that of a tanner, but as work was not plentiful in that line he entered the mills about his new home, and continued thus until his death, in 1890, when he was aged seventy years; this event occurred at Wauregan, where he lies buried. Mr. Maynard married Annie Maynard, who was born Nov. 5, 1825, and now resides in Wauregan. A family of twelve children was born to them, and, remarkable to relate, all grew to maturity, and settled down to different careers within a radius of twenty-five miles of their parents. They were as follows: Morris, who married Delia Woisard, is a wealthy baker, now living retired; Frank X. is mentioned below; Joseph, who married Mattie Beaudry, is what is known as a boss painter, and resides in Putnam, Conn.; Timothy, who married Celanise Couture, is an employe of the factory in Wauregan; Fred E. has extended mention elsewhere; Godfrey, unmarried, resides in Wauregan; Isaac, who married Nathalis Roberts, is a foreman in the employ of Webster Knight, the well-known mill owner at Natick, R. I.; Louis, who married Eliza Roberts, is a baker in Natick, R. I.; Benjamin, who married Arselia Roberts, is a hotel-keeper at Natick, R. I.; Annie, unmarried, resides in Wauregan; Celanise married Albert Jacques, a butcher, and they live at North Grosvornordale, Conn.; Alexander, who married Amanda Davignon, is a painter in North Grosvornordale.

Frank Xavier Maynard was born Jan. 19, 1851, in St. Mary, Province of Quebec, Canada, and there attended the common schools until the age of twelve years, soon after which his father moved to Connecticut. The father being in moderate circumstances, and the family large and increasing, young Frank very early began to learn a trade, becoming an apprentice to a blacksmith. This man was illiterate, and stern in his discipline, but for two years the youth remained with him, learning the trade and attending to the bookkeeping, receiving as wages the sum of $50 per year.

After coming with his parents to Connecticut, at about the age of sixteen, Frank easily found employment in the Wauregan mills, where his strength of muscle was made use of for six years. During two winters of this time he took advantage of the opportunities offered in a night school taught by a Miss Duprey. His first work in the mill was in the carding room, and he was later promoted to the cloth room, remaining there to the satisfaction of his employers. At length he decided to change his surroundings, and accepted a clerkship in the grocery store of Daniel Brayman & Son, at Wauregan, where he remained for two years, or until 1875.

That Mr. Maynard possessed the ability of adapting himself to widely differing lines of business and attaining success in all must be admitted, and, having perfect confidence in himself, he did not hesitate to buy a bakery business and begin operations in that line. This was a bankrupt concern in West Wauregan, and the purchase was made through J. S. Atwood. With a very limited capital Mr. Maynard began the operation of his bakery, paying that close attention to every detail, which is a necessary adjunct to success in any line, and thus he gradually gained the confidence of the community and built up a lucrative trade, which soon made it necessary for him to engage three assistants and to place two wagons on the road in order to accommodate his Brooklyn patronage; his trade extended also through Plainfield and Griswold. Until 1891 he continued, with the help of his admirable and capable wife, to conduct this successful business, working early and late, never sparing himself, and always watching closely his output, that his patrons might never be disappointed. Then he disposed of it to his brother, Fred E., who now owns the plant.

In 1899 Mr. Maynard had purchased a part of his present fine farm, the W. A. Lester place, and since that time he has added to its extent until he now has a farm of 175 acres, which is cultivated to a high degree of perfection, and undoubtedly is one of the best farms of the town. Mr. Maynard has made many valuable improvements, erecting a fine new barn and other buildings, and now his home is not only comfortable, showing evidences of thrift in every way, but also one of the most attractive in the neighborhood. From its location it is well fitted for the large dairy business which Mr. Maynard carries on in addition to his general farming interests. Some thirty-five head of cattle are continually kept, and his milk product is shipped to Boston, Mass. In addition to his farm, Mr. Maynard owns two tenements in West Wauregan, which return him rents for seven suites of apartments.

Frank X. Maynard was married Sept. 6, 1874, in Wauregan, to Miss Virginie Davignon, who was born Dec. 28, 1851, in St. Alexandre, Canada, and who was a daughter of Edward W. and Clemence (Lareau) Davignon. Mr. Davignon was born in Canada, and resided in Wauregan for several years, returning to Bedford, Province of Quebec, where his life ended.

The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank X. Maynard numbered eight children: Albina, who was born June 10, 1875, passed away Nov. 26, 1900, of consumption; this beautiful and charming young lady was the very center of the family circle, and her death was a severe blow to her parents, who had spared no pains or expense to prolong her life. Henry was born June 11, 1877. George W. was born Nov. 12, 1879. Joseph E. was born April 13, 1881. Mary R., born Dec. 31, 1883, was removed by death Jan. 26, 1898. Leoni was born March 31, 1885. Frank X., Jr., was born July 29, 1889. Corinne was born Feb. 17, 1891. All of these are particularly bright and intelligent children, a family of which the parents may justly be proud.

Although Mr. Maynard is a staunch member of the Republican party, he has never sought or desired any political preferment. His social connection is with Quinebaug Lodge, No. 22, Ancient Order United Workmen, at Central Village. The whole family are consistent and devoted members of the Sacred Heart Catholic Church, at Wauregan.

The unusual success which has attended the efforts of Mr. Maynard is but the just reward of honest and persistent endeavor. While many years of activity will doubtless yet be his, he and his most estimable wife have already a competency honestly earned, and at the same time they have gained the respect and esteem of their neighbors and a wide circle of friends.

JOHN WELDON, M. D., a well-known physician of Willimantic, Windham county, whose personal standing and professional reputation have made his name familiar in circles far beyond the limits of the city in which his lot is cast, is one of the most prominent surgeons in the eastern part of the State, being frequently called in as consulting surgeon in many surrounding towns. For years he has taken a foremost position in professional matters in this section of Connecticut. Making a specialty of surgery, he has never neglected the interests of the public in his anxiety to heal the miscellaneous diseases to which the community is subject, so he may be pronounced in every sense of the word an all-round physician, fully prepared to meet every call of a general practice. Previous to his location in Willimantic, the Doctor had extensive and valuable experience in surgical work, and filled for years positions of great responsibility in some of the largest and best appointed railroad hospitals in the West.

Dr. Weldon was born Oct. 14, 1859, in Manchester, Conn., where his parents, Thomas and Mary (Campbell) Weldon, were among the very first Irish settlers in that community.

Thomas Weldon came to the United States in 1848, a poor but ambitious and capable young man, leaving his energy and hope as his only capital. Leaving Ireland at the time of the "Great Famine," he was over two months on the Atlantic Ocean. Landing at New York, he made but a brief stay in that city, and soon found his way to Manchester, Conn., which became his home, and where he was married. Of the children born to him and his wife, Mary Campbell, four survived to an adult age, the oldest of whom was John, whose name introduces this article; Robert, a retired merchant of Manchester; Catherine, wife of Patrick Donahue, of Hartford; and Thomas H., a resident of South Manchester. Thomas Weldon combined in his own character pluck, energy and business tact, and secured a competence as the result of his hard labor, honest character and the judicious investment of his savings. Mainly his occupation was that of farming, and he early won the respect of the community in which he made his home, and he is known today as one of the most sturdy and reliable representatives of his nationality to be found in the city, a man of progressive ideas and a staunch friend of the better education.

Dr. John Weldon began his education in the schools of his native town, where the earlier years of his boyhood were spent. Accompanying his parents to Hartford, he graduated from the High School of that city in 1880, and almost immediately matriculated in the Medical Department of the University of New York, from which he was graduated in 1883. The young doctor rendered his first professional services as a member of the medical staff at the New York Lunatic Asylum, which was located at Ward's Island. After a short time spent there, Dr. Weldon was attached to Bellevue Hospital, with which he was connected for a year and a half. At the expiration of that time he was put in charge of the Union Pacific Railway Hospital at Denver, Colo., where he remained for a year, and he was then put in charge of the Kansas branches of the Union Pacific, with his headquarters at Kansas City. This was a fine position and a high compliment to one so young; it afforded practical experience of a high order, far beyond the opportunities of an ordinary life time, and it is not too much to say that Dr. Weldon made good use of these fruitful opportunities, becoming skilled in every branch of operative surgery. Dr. Weldon removed to Willimantic, Conn., in March, 1889, coming here an entire stranger, but establishing himself in what time has proved an extensive, growing and lucrative practice. He is a thoroughly modern man, keeping ahead in his profession, and thoroughly familiar with the rapid development of the healing art. Personally he is a man of the most sunny and genial temperament, warm-hearted and open-handed, holding himself the peer of any man, and meeting all upon the plane of simple and unaffected manliness and fraternity. His methods are approved by the profession, and his prominence in the community attests his worth as a physician.

Dr. Weldon was married in New York in 1893 to Mrs. Flora B. (Skinner) Smith, of Colchester, Conn. For his second wife, Dr. Weldon wedded Miss Annie P. Avery, of Willimantic, the adopted daughter of Henry Avery, and they became the parents of one child, John, born Jan. 22, 1899. Mrs. Weldon died March 13, 1902, at the age of twenty-six years. Dr. Weldon is a Democrat, though not a politician, and is devoted to the success of his party. The physician of the Knights of Columbus in the city of Willimantic, he takes much interest in the welfare of that beneficent organization in his home town. Dr. Weldon belongs to the Windham County and the State Medical Societies, and has made a creditable place for himself as one of the foremost physicians in all this region.

ALBERT D. BOTTUM, whose death occurred at his home in South Coventry, Tolland county, Sept. 10, 1888, was for many years one of that town's substantial men and citizens.

What was known as Newent, or "Between the Rivers," now the town of Lisbon, Conn., was settled in 1695, and among the settlers there, in 1698, was Daniel Longbottom. He was chosen one of the surveyors in 1702. Mr. Longbottom, his wife and six children were baptized in 1718. The father died in 1729. Some of the descendants of this settler changed the name to Bottum. The grandson of the settler removed to Vermont, and his family took the name of Bottom or Bottum.

Born in the town of Mansfield, Conn., Nov. 3, 1848, Albert D. Bottum was the only son of Joshua C. and Sarah B. (Grant) Bottum, and a grandson of Joshua Bottum, both generations farming people of Mansfield, and people of substance and standing in the town. The children of Joshua Bottum were: Elizabeth, Joshua C., Samuel, Harriet, Joseph S., Lucy A., Henry and Charles.

Joshua C. Bottum was married March 24, 1846, to Sarah, daughter of Denison Grant, of Mansfield, and to the marriage came two children, Albert D. and Justina M., the latter of whom married George A. Gardner, of New London, Connecticut.

Albert D. Bottum was reared to agricultural pursuits, and in boyhood attended the public schools of his neighborhood, supplementing this preliminary education by one winter in a classical school at Springfield, Mass. When in his twenty-third year Mr. Bottum entered the silk mills of C. L. Bottum & Co., of Mansfield, with the intention of learning that business. He gradually passed through all of the departments of that business, one or more of which he later superintended. His aptness to the business, and the traits and qualities it developed in him as he advanced, led finally to his assuming charge of the manufacturing department of the concern. He sustained such relations with his employers until the fall of 1879, when he became associated at South Coventry in a partnership with James S. Morgan for the manufacture of silk. In this combination Mr. Morgan looked after the financial part of the business, while Mr. Bottum gave his exclusive attention to the manufacturing department. Four years later, in 1883, Mr. Bottum purchased the interest of his partner in the concern, and thereafter until his death carried on the business himself.

The business of Morgan & Bottum was established by Mr. Morgan in 1866, at which time he began manufacturing sewing silk, employing only ten or twelve hands. After Mr. Bottum became the sole owner of the establishment he made additions to the mill and increased its capacity. In 1879 when Mr. Bottum became identified with the business there were in use three winding frames only, which by 1888 had been increased to sixteen and employment given to some fifty hands. Mr. Bottum was a conservative and successful business man. He was thorough, systematic and methodical, and gave his attention strictly to his business. He was, in his political views, a Republican, but did not allow politics to allure him from business, and he declined all overtures made to him for political preferment. A man of strict integrity and honor, he held the confidence of his business associates and patrons and the respect and esteem of the community.

On Oct. 16, 1872, Mr. Bottum was married to Sarah A., daughter of Col. J. G. C. Macfarlane, of Mansfield, Conn., a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and son of John Macfarlane, of that city, who brought his family to the United States about 1850. The latter was a silk manufacturer of Mansfield, as were several of his sons, one of whom—James S. Macfarlane—began the manufacture of silk in Mansfield along in the early sixties, his mill being the second oldest in the United States. John Macfarlane had married in Scotland Stewart Ann MacArthur, and on coming to this country his family consisted of wife and the following children: Elizabeth, John G. C., William, George and James S. Of these, John G. C. Macfarlane, the father of Mrs. Bottum, on the breaking out of the Rebellion in 1861, espoused the cause of the Union, entered the service, and rose to the rank of Colonel, commanding the 95th Pa. V. I. Mr. Bottum was an attendant of the Congregational Church and a liberal supporter of the church. He was a great reader and a close thinker, and was one of the self-made men of Coventry. Fraternally he was a member of the Eastern Star Lodge of Willimantic, F. & A. M. Mrs. Bottum, through her practical knowledge of affairs, her good judgment and advice and counsel, proved an invaluable aid to her husband in his business, and for nine years after his death carried on the business. At the time she sold it she was employing one hundred and twenty-five hands.

CHARLES LEANDER BOSS, a substantial and prominent business man of Willimantic, Windham county, was born in that city, where his entire life was passed, a son of Harry Boss, and his second wife, Mrs. Isabella (Russ) Sessions. Harry Boss was a well known and very prominent citizen of his day, and his biography may be found on another page.

A D Bottum

Charles L. Boss was born July 1, 1852, in a house that stood at the corner of Main and Winter streets in Willimantic. His first schooling was had in the Upper District, and among his first teachers were Miss Martha Kimball, Miss Louise Chase, and John D. Wheeler. At a later period he attended the Natchaug high school, under Prof. Fuller. Eagerly accepting an opportunity to enter the employ of the Willimantic Linen Co., his schooling was interrupted. In July, 1869, he became utility boy in the office of the linen company, the most humble position, but being attentive and capable, was pushed rapidly to the front, rising through different positions until his standing was in reality second only to that of the agent. In 1882 Mr. Boss retired from the Company to take a position in the business world for himself, becoming a member of the firm of Lincoln & Boss April 1, 1882. They were engaged in the lumber, wood and coal business, and continued together until May 1, 1895, when Mr. Boss became the sole proprietor of the business which he has held in his own hands to the present time. This is the leading business of the kind in the city, and its very great development attests the ability and integrity of Mr. Boss, who has made himself a wide circle of friends and patrons.

On Jan. 20, 1875, Charles L. Boss was married in Willimantic to Miss Ida E. Pinney, who was born in 1853, a daughter of Ebenezer and Julia (Noble) Pinney; she died Sept. 12, 1883, and her remains were interred in Willimantic. To this marriage were born two children: George Eugene, born Feb. 27, 1876, graduated from the Windham high school, and became associated with his father in business, but he died April 12, 1901; Florence Claudine, born Nov. 9, 1878. On Oct. 9, 1884, Mr. Boss was married to Nellie L. Grace, of New London, a native of that city, where she was born May 5, 1862, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Williams) Grace, and the granddaughter of John Grace, all of whom were New London people. Elizabeth Williams was a daughter of Alonzo and Hannah (Fish) Williams, and her father was born in 1808, a son of Jesse and Elizabeth (Avery) Williams, the latter a daughter of Ebenezer Avery, a Revolutionary veteran. Mrs. Boss is the mother of one son, John G., who was born April 21, 1887. Mrs. Boss is a member of the Congregational Church, and belongs to Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter of the D. A. R., being the present secretary of this patriotic organization. Mr. Boss belongs to Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M., and has taken the various degrees bringing him up to the Mystic Shrine, being a member of Sphinx Temple of Hartford. In Natchaug Lodge, K. P., he also holds membership, as he does in Willimantic Council, Royal Arcanum. Mr. Boss has always been a Republican, and his first presidential vote was given Rutherford B. Hayes. When Willimantic was a borough, Mr. Boss was elected a burgess, and since the organization of the city he has filled the position of auditor. For ten years he was a member of the Fire Company, and was treasurer of the Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company for several years, being also an associate member of the Alert Hose Company. In the Co-operative Savings Society of Connecticut, Mr. Boss holds the position of trustee, and he is regarded as one of the best citizens of Willimantic, where his courtesy and pleasant bearing, as well as his reputation for integrity and trustworthy business habits have made him many friends. His family is prominent in social circles, and in the fullest sense of the word Mr. Boss is a successful man.

FREDERICK JAMES CHANDLER was born in England, Jan. 24, 1844, and was brought to this country by his parents when he was but two years of age. The first home of the family was in Stafford, Tolland county, but it was soon changed to Coventry, where young Frederick began his schooling. When his parents moved to Stafford Springs, he entered the spinning department of the Granite mills, later being employed in the weaving department of the same mill. When he was twenty-two years of age he became overseer of the weaving and spooling, but after a year and a half in this position he was compelled to seek other employment on account of his failing health. For two years he attended Nichol's Academy at Dudley, Mass., after which he secured a position as a clerk in the store of W. L. Davis, who was also postmaster. Mr. Chandler was employed about a year in the music and jewelry store of E. N. Foote at Rockville, after which he came back to Stafford Springs, and purchased the news stand of L. J. Holdridge, on Haymarket Square. This was in 1869, and he lost everything by the flood of 1877. His business was resumed, however, in the Orinoca block on Main street, where it was conducted very successfully by him until 1879. That year he sold it to Dwight Parsons, and became bookkeeper for William Upham & Co., at Spencer, Mass., a position which his health necessitated his giving up after about a year of service. Mr. Chandler's next move was to buy a grocery and dry goods store at Millbury, Mass. This establishment he sold after a year as in June, 1882, he met a good opportunity in Stafford Springs to buy the insolvent stock of Milton Wilson, and he proceeded at once to enlarge and build up that fine grocery, in which he has been very successful, and where he is still found, alert and attentive to all the wants and needs of his customers, and maintaining what he soon established, a high reputation for accuracy and integrity.

Mr. Chandler belongs to Lodge No. 32, I. O. O. F., in which he has held the office of treasurer for several years. In the Temple of Honor he is a working member, and is also connected with the A. O. U. W., and the American Benefit Society.

Mr. Chandler is a staunch Republican, and has been chairman of the school board for several terms, one of the burgesses of the borough of Stafford, and chairman of the committee on Roads. Mr. Chandler has been a deacon in the Congregational Church since 1884, and has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years.

Mr. Chandler and Mary Lester Beckwith, a daughter of Charles Walton and Sarah Sophia (Foote) Beckwith, natives of Greenport, L. I., and Lee, Berkshire Co., Mass., respectively, were married Sept. 5, 1877, in Stafford. To them were born: Esther Jane, who married, April 25, 1900, Walter Bruce Robinson, a special pension examiner of the United States at New Haven, Conn., and who has one child, Dorothy Chandler; Charles Frederick, who is at home, and is employed as a clerk in the Stafford Savings Bank; Maude Emily, now attending Holyoke College; James Beckwith, who died Aug. 15, 1884; Forrest, who died Aug. 16, 1886; May Foote.

HILL. The Hill family, which is worthily represented in the town of Plainfield, Windham county, by Mrs. Julia Maria (Hill) Andrews, a highly cultivated society woman of Moosup village, is descended from (1) Daniel Hill, who was born in 1710. He probably accompanied by his parents and two brothers, came from England and settled at Dorchester, Mass. He married Elizabeth Eddy, who was born March 26, 1711, a daughter of Samuel and Sarah Eddy (the former born July 15, 1675, and died March 27, 1744), a granddaughter of Deacon Caleb and Elizabeth (Ballock) Eddy (the former born in 1643, and died in March, 1713), and a great-granddaughter of Samuel Eddy, one of the Pilgrims. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hill were: (1) Parker, born in 1760, died in 1848. He married Elizabeth Chase and had five children: Capt. (9) Patience wedded a Mr. Cole, and they had a son named Spencer.

For many years Daniel Hill was a ship-builder at Swansea, Mass., but in 1779, he moved with his family to Plainfield, Conn., and purchased in that town and in Sterling large tracts of land, which he divided among his sons. He died in Plainfield, in February, 1792, and his wife in Swansea, Oct. 25, 1764. He is buried at Sterling.

(II) Edward Hill, son of Daniel, born in Swansea, Mass., in 1759, moved with his father to Plainfield. Two years later, in 1781, he married Abigail Hall, who was born in 1761, and they had eight children: Hannah, born in 1782; Jeremiah, born in 1784; Olive, born in 1787, married Calvin Hubbard, and lived in Killingly, Conn.; Betsey, born in 1788, married Silas Mathewson, of Sterling, Conn.; Daniel is mentioned below; Mary, born in 1795, died in 1817; Edward, born in 1797, died in 1824; and Wealthy, in 1799, died in 1815. Mr. Hill, an exceedingly prominent man of his vicinity, was a stockholder of the Union Company, of Plainfield, and, having inherited a large tract of land, he was also an extensive agriculturist. He died Dec. 23, 1857, and his wife, Oct. 27, 1845. They are buried in the Union Cemetery.

(III) Daniel Hill, son of Edward and grandfather of Mrs. Andrews, born in 1791, resided in Plainfield. For a business he engaged extensively in lumber dealing. On Dec. 11, 1814, he was married, by Rev. Nathaniel Cole, to Deborah Wood, daughter of Russell and Catherine (Kennedy) Wood, who are mentioned below. To Mr. and Mrs. Hill were born six children: (1) Harry, born in 1815, died Oct. 14, 1873, married Ruth Miller and had four children: Charles, a prosperous merchant, of Norwich, married Jennie Briggs; Ann died Sept. 2, 1853, aged four years; Frelove married Charles Sanderson, of Moosup; and Alfred, of Moosup, married Clara Amsbury. (2) Daniel, born in 1818, died April 13, 1853, a merchant tailor of Danielson, married Eunice E. Crandall, niece of Prudence Crandall (who founded the school for colored children in Canterbury, in which good work she was bitterly opposed), and they had three children: Daniel, who died in 1865, at the age of seventeen; Emma, born Feb. 4, 1850, married Capt.

Francis S. Harrington, a soldier of the Civil war, and died in 1868, at the age of eighteen; and Eugene married Mary Spalding. (3) Alexander, born in 1821, a retired farmer of Moosup, married Ruth Hill, daughter of Parker Hill, and they have three children: Merciette, who married Joshua Hill; Kate, who became the wife of Henry Knight, of Danielson; and Annie M., who lives at home. (4) Edward Eddy is mentioned below. (5) Jeremiah, born in 1827, now a prosperous citizen and ex-office holder of Danielson, lived for some time on the Hill homestead in Plainfield. He married Freelove Potter, and, after her death, wedded in 1851, Abby Bushnell. They have had no children. (6) Abby married, in 1852, Elisha P. Hale, of Danielson.

Mr. Hill was a patriotic citizen and served for some time in the war of 1812. Later he became exceedingly prominent in the public and religious affairs of his town. Among other local offices he held that of justice of the peace for some time, and he efficiently represented his town in the State Legislature. To his efforts and liberality in furnishing lumber was largely due the erection of the Moosup Baptist Church, of which he was a member. He died Jan. 23, 1845, and his wife, April 11, 1864, aged sixty-seven years.

(IV) Edward Eddy Hill, father of Mrs. Andrews, for many years one of the most highly esteemed business men of Moosup Village, was born in Plainfield, Sept. 25, 1823, and received his early education in the public schools of that place and in the neighboring town of Killingly. He also took one term's work in Mr. Cutler's private school at Central Village, and another at James Monroe's on Shepard Hill. For a business he first tried his luck at manufacturing satinets goods in a factory, which stood on the grounds now occupied by Hiram Harris's mill. This industry he continued for some time, meeting with success. After some time Mr. Hill moved to Moosup Village, where, near the station, in 1856, he opened a general store. Of this business he made a thorough success from the start, and, continuing it for twenty-five years, he amassed considerable wealth. He finally sold out, and in 1882, erected a mill for the handling of lumber and grain. Here, in 1888, his usual good fortune failed him, when his buildings, uninsured, were entirely destroyed by fire. Undismayed, however, he immediately rebuilt, and continued to carry on a prosperous business in coal, lumber and grain for some time. Finally ill health forced him to close out, and he sold his mill to John Vaughn.

In 1844 Mr. Hill married Caroline Potter, who died in 1850 at the age of twenty-seven. Later, May 13, 1851, he married Julia Shepard, who descended from a Pilgrim named Josiah Winslow, and from one of the Shepard brothers, who were among the first settlers of Plainfield. By the first marriage there were no children; by the second there were three: (1) Caroline P., born March 3, 1852, married, May 17, 1876, Horace Kennedy Blanchard, a member of the firm of Murray, Blanchard, Young & Co., of Providence, R. I., and also prominent in local affairs, having served on the city council. They have had two children: Arthur Horace, born Feb. 11, 1877, and Maud Caroline, who died in infancy. (2) Julia M. is mentioned below. (3) George Edward, born Aug. 2, 1864, died Sept. 5, 1864.

As a business man Mr. Hill held an enviable reputation for honesty and square dealing. He was a highly esteemed Christian, and at the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 7, 1901, was the second oldest member of the Moosup Baptist Church, having joined it in early manhood. As an earnest Republican, keenly interested in public affairs, he has held several local offices, and in 1884 represented his town in the State Legislature. He was instrumental in organizing the fire department, which was named the Hill Hose Company, and for this is gratefully remembered.

MRS. JULIA MARIA ANDREWS, daughter of Edward Eddy and Julia (Shepard) Hill, was born Dec. 8, 1856. As a representative of several old Colonial families, Mrs. Andrews has become exceedingly prominent with the Daughters of the American Revolution, being among the first organizers of local societies. She was the organizer and first regent of the Deborah Avery Putnam Chapter in Moosup, organized May 8, 1895, which received, July 31, 1896, the second charter issued in the County. This organization has made remarkable progress, increasing its membership, since its start, from twelve to twenty-four. At present Mrs. Andrews is a keenly interested member of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution. In 1876 she married Evelyn Mercelon Andrews.

THE WOOD FAMILY. By her grandmother, Deborah (Wood) Hill, Mrs. Andrews is descended from William Wood, the author of "New England Prospects," a book published in England during Colonial times. He was the first of his name to appear in America. After studying the conditions of the northern settlements he returned to England when he published the book mentioned above. He had two sons, John and Thomas.

(I) Thomas Wood, by occupation a surveyor, was born in England, came to Plymouth Colony and settled at Swansea, Mass. He had two sons, Noah and John.

(II) Noah Wood, son of Thomas, grew to manhood, and by his wife, Elizabeth, had a son named Noah.

(IV) Noah Wood (2), born Feb. 17, 1737, married March 9, 1758, Deborah Mason, who was born July 9, 1740, and they had seven children: Elisha, born Jan. 29, 1760; Esther, April 20, 1762; John, Aug. 20, 1764; Russell, June 5, 1766; Noah, Nov. 28, 1769; Anna, April 16, 1772; and Lucy, April 10, 1775.

(V) Russell Wood, born June 5, 1766, married

Catherine Kennedy, who was born April 19, 1775. He died Jan. 21, 1808, and his wife, Dec. 31, 1865. They had five children: Harry, who married Polly Wood; Deborah, who married Daniel Hill, and became the grandmother of Mrs. Andrews; Polly, who wedded Alvah Grover; Alexander, born in 1802, who married Phoebe Buffington, and died June 2, 1874; and Mary Ann, born Aug. 6, 1805, who married, April 6, 1842, Welcome Babcock.

HENRY BURKE, one of the respected and substantial citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, was but a lad of fifteen when he left his home in Ireland to come to America. Born in poverty, one of a large family, no opening came to him in his native land, even proper educational advantages were not obtainable, and with a companion of his own age, who had relatives in Dedham, Mass., he decided to cross the Atlantic in search of the fortune that others of his country had found in America.

Mr. Burke was born in County Galway, Ireland, May 31, 1835, a son of John Burke, who at one time owned 300 acres of land but later met with reverses. He lived and died in Ireland, where he was at one time a magistrate. Mr. Burke has one brother, Augustus, living in Hartford, Conn. The two raw Irish lads landed in New York July 3, 1850, after a voyage of six weeks on the ocean, from Liverpool, with little money in their pockets but a great deal of determination in their minds, and started on the trip to Dedham, reaching there safely, as fortunately young Burke had enough left to pay their railroad fares. Upon arrival they found warm greetings awaiting them, and soon found work, Mr. Burke being engaged to drive the stage for Deacon Guyle from Dedham to West Dedham, Mass. Thus he laid the foundation of a life of usefulness and activity, the results of which are shown in his great business successes of later years.

Some time later Mr. Burke was engaged at the trade of spinner at Lawrence, Mass., and in 1853 came to Rockville and entered the American Mill as a spinner, but later engaged in the more healthful and congenial work of teaming for Mr. Gaynor, who was in the flock business; his driving took him through Hartford, Manchester, Broad Brook and neighboring towns. When he left the employ of Mr. Gaynor he was able to buy three horses of that gentleman, and engaged in the teaming business for himself, hauling goods and merchandise to Hartford, Manchester and other places, and at one time making a trip as far as Greenfield, Mass. As business increased he added more teams. In 1858 he started a livery business, first locating on Cottage street, near the American Mills boarding-house, and later he occupied the New England Mill barn, on Vernon avenue, but finally he removed to Brooklyn street.

In 1860 Mr. Burke bought the business of David Dart and moved to near the southwest corner of Elm and Union streets but on West Main street. In July, 1898, the business was moved to Park street, where it is carried on by his son, A. M., who is now proprietor of the "Rockville House" Stables. For forty years Mr. Burke was known as one of the most reliable managers of the teaming and livery business in his locality. In the days before the railroads were built he was a very familiar figure on the road to and from Hartford, for no matter what the weather, if he had promised delivery of goods, they were delivered at the appointed time; hence it is not very remarkable that success attended his efforts.

Mr. Burke was married in October, 1856, in Rockville, to Miss Ann Norton, a native of his own section of Ireland, born in December, 1836, a daughter of Michael and Bridget (O'Donnell) Norton. She came in 1852 to America, and lived in Jersey City before coming to Rockville. The following children have been born to this union: Emily Elizabeth, deceased; Jane Louisa, deceased; Anna Maria, deceased; Walter Henry, deceased; Mary Jane, born in 1863, who married, Oct. 8, 1890; Louis P. Mathews, lives in Baltimore, Md., and has children—Henry Burke, Curtis Lord and Louise Burke; Rosella, born in 1865, a teacher on West street, in Rockville, for several years; Francis Henry, born in 1868, a member of the firm of Cavanaugh & Burke, undertakers, who on June 26, 1900, married Alice E. McCarthy, of Holyoke, Mass.; William T., born in 1869, living on the home farm; Arthur Blake, born in 1871, an employe in his brother's business; Augustus M., born in 1873, the successor of his father in the livery business; and Mabel Agnes, who died in 1877, when but one year old.

Since 1898 Mr. Burke has practically retired from business, and resides on his excellent farm, adjoining Rockville, which he has owned since 1861. The original purchase comprised eighteen acres, to which additions have been made until there is now about 130 acres, this being, however, but a small part of his real-estate holdings in Vernon. Although he has never sought or held office, Mr. Burke has been a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and is a man who stands before the public as one who is a representative of the best type of citizen, plain, honest, outspoken and upright. In his most estimable wife Mr. Burke has had a cheerful and helpful companion and a wise and economical manager. Together they enjoy the evening of life as together they weathered the storms which sometimes assailed their household craft during their earlier years, and are now among the most respected citizens of the vicinity.

CHARLES ROBERT HARRIS. In 1890 the manufacture of jewelry was introduced into North Windham, Windham county, and soon became an important factor in the industrial life of the village. The founder of this work was Charles R.

Henry Burke

Harris, who was born in Salem, Mass., but who spent his boyhood days in Windham. When he was fifteen years old he went to Attleboro, Mass., where he acquired a practical knowledge of the jewelry business, which he has since put to the most practical and successful use. Graduating from the bench, in company with J. M. Fisher, he formed a co-partnership, which, under the firm name of Harris & Fisher, lasted some half-dozen years. After its dissolution Mr. Harris continued in business on his own account four years longer in Attleboro. In February, 1890, he set up the business in North Windham, and erected near at hand one of the most attractive residences in the village.

An engine of the capacity of fifteen horse power runs the machinery, which is of the most improved modern character; gas for lighting and work is made on the premises. The factory is complete in every department, and the raw material received is sent out ready for wear. The value of the unmanufactured material on hand runs into large proportions; an immense quantity of uncut stones, many of which are of direct importation, is necessarily carried, and the gold used in either plated or solid goods, is taken from coin or bullion on the premises. Some of the finer lines of his plated goods have no superior on the market. This enterprise has been successful from its inception, and the factory has an excellent standing with the trade. From twenty-five to forty people are employed the year round, while one salesman is on the road continually, and more during the season, and the goods go to every part of the United States and Canada.

Ralph Harris, the father of Charles R., was born in Ashton, England. When a boy he came to this country, and was employed in the cotton mills at Salem, Mass., where he learned all the details of cotton making, and in time became an overseer, serving in this capacity in the mills at Wauregan, Conn., and Dodgeville, Mass. In the early '60's he purchased a farm in Stark county, Ill., where he spent a year, but returned to Connecticut. In 1867 he removed from Wauregan, whither he had gone a second time, to enter the employ of the Atwoods, and settled in North Windham, where he was engaged for a number of years. From North Windham he went to Attleboro, and there he died at the age of fifty-two years. At Salem, Mass., he was married to Elizabeth Hampson, a daughter of Henry Hampson, and a native of Ashton, Underline, England. She died in Attleboro at the age of fifty-eight years, and with her husband was buried in that city. To them were born two children: Charles R.; and Albert, a bench jeweler at Attleboro, Mass., who is married and has a family.

Charles R. Harris was born in Salem, Mass., Feb. 7, 1854, and passed his youth in the various towns where his father found work, but the most of his school days were put in at North Windham, where he attended the local school until he was fifteen years old. At that age he went to Attleboro, then the center of the manufacturing industry of the United States so far as jewelry was concerned, and after spending three years as an apprentice, was three years a worker at the bench. The patronage of the North Windham factory shows a flattering increase, and to its still farther extension all the enthusiasm of Mr. Harris, and of his only son, who is on the road the most of the time, is directed. Mr. Harris himself makes two trips yearly.

Mr. Harris is a Republican, and is known as a strong partisan. Both himself and wife are members of the North Windham Congregational Church, of which he has been deacon for the last three years. As there was no Congregational Church in the village previous to December, 1896, two rooms on the ground floor of their capacious residence were used for meeting purposes. Mr. Harris united with the Masonic fraternity at Attleboro some eighteen years ago.

Mrs. Harris was, in her girlhood, Emma Nicholas, of North Scituate, R. I., and to her marriage with Mr. Harris has come one son, Raymond, born Aug. 11, 1878, who married Lillian Neff, whose father is the manufacturer of Neff's Root Beer. They live at North Windham. Raymond Harris is familiar with every part of the business, but spends the most of his time in soliciting the wholesale trade.

DANIEL PATRICK DUNN, well and favorably known in Willimantic, Windham county, where he was born and where he has always lived, has for nearly twenty years been in business, and in that time he has made an enviable reputation as a man always ready to help any onward movement both with his time and money. In these years he has made a great deal of money, and has spent it freely, but is today as ready as ever to lend a hand where it is needed.

Mr. Dunn was born in Willimantic Sept. 14, 1859, a son of Patrick and Mary (Morrisey) Dunn, the former a native of Carrick-on-Suir, County Tipperary, Ireland, and the latter of Cappoquin, county Waterford. His father came to the United States when a young man, and after a brief stay in New York came to Willimantic, where he secured his first employment in the construction of the New London & Northern Railroad, and for some years was in the employ of the Providence & Fishkill Railroad. Patrick Dunn enlisted in the Union army, Aug. 5, 1862, in Company D, 21st Conn. V. I., at Windham, being mustered in Sept. 15, 1862, and he served with his command throughout his term of enlistment. On Feb. 12, 1864, he was transferred to the 29th Co., Second Battalion, V. R. C., where he served until his discharge Sept. 4, 1865. Mr. Dunn lived until April 8, 1893, dying in Willimantic at the age of seventy-seven years. All his life in this country he was a Democrat, and was among the first of his nationality to settle in Willimantic. Mrs. Mary (Morrisey) Dunn is still living, making her home with her son, Daniel P., who was the only one of her seven children to attain adult age, the next oldest dying in 1877 at the age of ten years.

Daniel P. Dunn attended the First District school in Willimantic, and among his teachers were John D. Wheeler, Martha Kimball, Miss Fitch, and others well known to that day. As a youngster he learned rapidly, and his parents insisted on his attending school, but at the age of fourteen his schooling was practically ended. When he was twelve he was first employed in the old Turner silk mill, where he worked in the forenoon, and attended the school of John D. Wheeler in the afternoon, a practice that prevailed quite generally in those days. When young Dunn began for himself he procured work in the Holland Silk Mill, where he was at first set to cleaning silk on frames. Displaying ability, and proving adapted to the business, he was given a more responsible position, and rose in the mill until he became overseer in the spinning department when he was but twenty years old, and is probably the youngest man that ever held such a position in the city. For about five years he retained this position, and in December, 1884, in company with W. J. Sweeney, established the firm of Sweeney & Dunn in the news and stationery trade, with a location where Carr's clothing store is now found. In February, 1885, the firm suffered a disastrous fire, and on the first day of the following March they re-opened for business in the old "Brainard House," where now stands the Murray building. In 1887 they bought the James Walden store, and for some time conducted both places, Mr. Dunn having charge of the old store. When the firm dissolved Mr. Dunn retained the business until the removal of the "Brainard House" to make way for the Murray building made it necessary for him to change, when he bought the Farrell retail tobacco business on Railroad street, and, combining it with his old stock, established his business there where it has since remained. Under his capable management the patronage has greatly increased, and he now has the largest business of the kind in the city. His transactions in cigars, tobacco, and smokers' articles are both wholesale and retail, his retail business being second to none in the county. As a news stand his place is probably the best known in the city, all the magazines and dailies being carried, as well as the trade and specialty journals.

Mr. Dunn was married April 23, 1889, to Miss Julia A. Rice, of Hartford, who was born in Chicopee, Mass., daughter of Thomas and Julia (Canty) Rice, and came to Hartford when a child.

Mr. Dunn voted for Gen. Hancock in 1880, and has been a pronounced Democrat since that time, and among the steady and reliable Democratic workers of the city he holds a prominent place. Since 1890 he has been registrar of voters, and has served as town auditor. On Nov. 4, 1902, he was elected representative from his town. In fraternal and social circles Mr. Dunn is conspicuous, belonging to several prominent and popular orders. In San Jose Council, No. 14, Knights of Columbus, he is a charter member, and served as its first secretary. He is a member of the Heptasophs at Willimantic, and is a charter member of the Foresters of America, in which he has been chief ranger of the Willimantic Lodge, filling other important positions as well. Mr. Dunn is an honorary member of the Crescent Literary Society, and also of the Montgomery Hose Company, in which he did duty for seventeen years, as either foreman, first assistant foreman, second assistant foreman, secretary or treasurer. Since its organization Mr. Dunn has been a member of the Willimantic Board of Trade, and has belonged to the Putnam Phalanx of Hartford since 1892. When the Sons of Veterans was established at Willimantic he was one of its working members. Mr. Dunn is president and manager of the Willimantic Base Ball and Athletic Club, which was organized in 1901, and the first modern base ball park the city has ever had is due to his push and energy. For a number of years Mr. Dunn has practically been at the head of base ball affairs in the city, and as he is an enthusiast in athletic matters, his leadership was natural and productive of good results.

In 1893 Mr. Dunn put up his excellent and attractive home on Summit street, on a lot that adjoins the house which his father built in 1880.

DANIEL CLIFFORD BARROWS, a prominent and representative citizen of Willimantic, Windham county, is the descendant in the seventh generation from the original founder of the American branch of the family, John Barrows, who located at Plymouth, the line of descent being as follows: John Barrows, Robert, Robert (2), Lieut. Phillip Barrows, son of Lieut. Thomas, lived on his father's farm in Mansfield. On March 29, 1787, he married the widow, Sarah (Parker) Fisk, a daughter of Joshua Parker, and he died Aug. 16, 1809, at the age of forty-nine years. She died Nov. 29, 1835, at the age of seventy-two years. By her first marriage she had one daughter, Philomela, who married Nathan Hall, and became the mother of thirteen children; their grandchildren, Gardiner Hall, Jr., of South Willington, and Edwin H. Hall, of North Windham, are mentioned elsewhere. The children of Phillip Barrows were as follows: Sarah, born Oct. 29, 1788, married Ira Bennett, of Mansfield, and was an invalid for over half a century; Phillip, born June 2, 1792, married Sophia Stowell; Harmony, born June 6, 1794, died Feb. 26, 1796; Phares, born May 20, 1797, was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch; Deacon Stephen F., born Jan. 21, 1799, married Lucy Stowell, and removed to Middlebury, Vt., later going to Groton Falls, N. Phares Barrows was born in Mansfield, Conn., and on May 8, 1820, was married to Alma Parrott, of Pomfret, who died April 21, 1851, at the age of fifty-one. To them were born: Edwin Augustus, born March 28, 1821; Harriet Sophia, born Jan. 7, 1823, was married March 27, 1849, to Joseph B. Deacon Edwin A. Barrows died Sept. 30, 1895, at his residence at the corner of Church and Prospect streets, Willimantic. Born in Mansfield, he spent his boyhood days near Spring Hill in that town. When a young man he taught school, later became a machinist in the employ of the Griggs Brothers in Chaplin, both of whom had married sisters of his. At a later period of his life he was located at Mansfield Center, where he was employed as head machinist for the Merrick Thread Co., of Mansfield Hollow, and in 1867 he removed to Willimantic to take the position of head machinist for the Holland Silk Co. Some years later Mr. Barrows engaged in the manufacture and sale of musical instruments, in company with D. F. Terry, under the firm name of Terry & Barrows. The two continued together some years, their factory standing on the site of the plant of the Willimantic Machine Co. After some years the firm was terminated by a division of the interests, Mr. Terry continuing the business, and Mr. Barrows taking the building. Mr. Barrows purchased what was known as the "95 cent store," on Main street, and was engaged in its management as long as his health would permit.

Deacon Barrows was married Feb. 19, 1845, to Anna J. Hanks, who died five years later. Mr. Barrows was again married, May 21, 1851, to Miss Emily Ashley, of Chaplin, a daughter of Jonathan Ashley. She died four years before her husband, and was buried in Willimantic. To this marriage was born: Daniel Clifford, born April 10, 1853; Edwin and Emily, twins, born Dec. 18, 1857, died the same day; Anna Maria, born Dec. 23, 1858, was killed when six years old, in her father's arms, by having her clothes caught in a revolving shaft, and being dragged to death.

Deacon Barrows was a prominent worker in the Congregational Church, holding many responsible positions in that organization, and for twenty years before his death serving as deacon. A good citizen and an upright man, he left a name which his son delights to honor. In politics he was a Republican.

Daniel Clifford Barrows was born on the old Jonathan Ashley homestead in the town of Chaplin, on which his parents lived. When he was a child his parents removed to Mansfield, where he received his first schooling in the Mansfield Hollow district. In 1867 the family removed to Willimantic, and Mr. Barrows passed under the instruction of that excellent teacher, John D. Wheeler, later concluding his schooling in the Natchaug district. When he was about seventeen years old he entered the jewelry store of Walden & Freeman, and as he had an aptness for mechanical labors, he soon became known as an operative jeweler. When the firm dissolved by the retirement of Mr. Freeman young Barrows continued with Mr. Walden until 1879, when he set up in business for himself in a store on Main street. From this place in 1880 he removed to the location in which we find him today. His is not the oldest jewelry house in Willimantic, but is one of the few business houses whose name has remained unchanged since 1879.

On Sept. 15, 1891, Mr. Barrows was married in Willimantic, to Miss Elizabeth Hart, a native of Torrington, Conn., and a daughter of Victor Hart. To this union have come three children: E. Ashley, born June 29, 1893; Hudson H., born May 30, 1895, and Helen E., born June 2, 1896. Mr. Barrows cast his first presidential vote for Rutherford B. Hayes, and has continued a Republican to the present time, taking quite an active part in party affairs. For four years he was treasurer of the Water Works Fund, and was selectman for several years. At the present time he is a member of the board of relief. In December, 1901, he was elected mayor of the city. For over sixteen years he has been the treasurer of the Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member. Mr. Barrows belongs to Oliver Woodhouse Lodge, K. P., of Colchester, Conn.; Obwebetuck Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Willimantic; and the Masonic Fraternity, being affiliated with Eastern Star Lodge, F. & A. M., at Willimantic, of which he is Past Master, with Trinity Chapter, No. 9, R. A. M., and St. John's Commandery, No. 11, K. T. Since its organization Mr. Barrows has been a director of the Willimantic Building and Loan Association.

JOHN BEST CARMAN is a popular and successful merchant at South Coventry, Conn., whose thrift and push have more than atoned for the lack of early opportunity, and whose enviable position in the mercantile and social circles of this part of Tolland county has been won by character and ability.

Samuel Carman, his father, was born in Onondaga, N. Y., and, his mother dying when he was young, his father contracted a second marriage, which proved very unfortunate for young Samuel, who left home very early on account of domestic difficulties, and in later years was not able to recount much of his family history. During a severe thunderstorm he was sent for the cows and never returned. As a boy he found employment in various places, but much of his youth was passed in Philadelphia, where in his early manhood he was able to secure a farm with the accumulated savings of his industrious years. Through unexpected misfortunes he was not able to hold his farm, and going to Hartford, learned the harness trade under Thomas Smith. There he remained until 1843, in which year he bought a farm in North Coventry, on which his family made their home. Eleven years later they moved to Coventry Center, where the father followed farming and did teaming for the Chamberlin Glass Co. His last years were spent in a boot and shoe store, where he was engaged at the time of his death. In politics he was a Republican, and in religion both himself and wife were members of the North Coventry Congregational Church. Mr. Carman was married in Hartford to Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer and Sally Russell, the former a brick mason in Hartford, and a descendant of one of the old Connecticut families of that name; his children were: Catherine, Mary, John and Elizabeth, none of whom are now living. To Mr. and Mrs. Carman were born: Samuel, Jr., born Jan. 5, 1838, married Lydia Layden, and had two sons, Julius (a leading business man of Springfield) and Arthur; John Best, born Sept. 30, 1842; and Alfred, born Feb. 1, 1852, and died in infancy.

John Best Carman was born in Hartford, and was but a babe when he was brought to North Coventry, where the most of his schooling was acquired in the district school and in the select school taught by James Huntington, where he was an attentive and earnest student. When he was twelve years of age he began working for Daniel Green in the cotton mills, and two years later went to Hebron, where he was employed for three years as a clerk for E. P. & C. G. Buell. He then secured a similar position in Springfield, from Mr. Waite, and very soon afterward entered the Springfield armory, where he was employed during the greater part of the Civil war. When he had completed his work in the armory Mr. Carman returned to Coventry, and for about two years took up the harness making trade. At this time Daniel Green was making bed quilts, but found great difficulty in stitching through the thick layers of cotton, and had devised a machine for the work, though with unsatisfactory results. Mr. Carman was consulted, and devised an addition to the machine that caused it to do perfect work, and for the next year they made bed-quilts together. It was difficult to stop the machine at the proper time, and in twenty minutes Mr. Carman had devised an attachment that worked perfectly. During the year Mr. Carman was with Mr. Green there was no partnership, and at the end of that time, not being able to get any satisfaction from Mr. Green in a business way, he went to Montville to see the Palmer Bros. and to explain to them the working of his invention. He was invited to exhibit his machine and to show what he could do with it. After demonstrating its success he made a contract with them to make all the quilts from their factory, being able to do for fourteen cents that for which they had been paying thirty-five cents. This contract was renewed yearly for three years, and in its fulfilling Mr. Carman had about thirty-five employees, and he was very successful in the undertaking.

In September, 1875, Mr. Carman engaged in the grocery business, taking on a line of general merchandise, and is now the oldest merchant in the town. When the town was at its best and the factory was running, his yearly business exceeded $25,000 for twelve years. For the last twelve years he has had grocery teams on the road, and much of the time makes the rounds himself. In politics he is a Republican with strong Prohibition proclivities. For three years, 1887, 1888 and 1889, he was selectman, and for three years has also been town agent.

On June 27, 1868, Mr. Carman was married to Anna E., a daughter of William James and Nancy A. (Noad) Lloyd. Mrs. Carman was born in Wiltshire, England, Jan. 28, 1841, and came with her parents in 1854 to this country. They located in South Coventry, where they died, the father at the age of seventy-one and her mother at the age of sixty-four. Mr. Carman is one of the most successful men in South Coventry, and has carved out his own fortune. He is one of the directors and is president of the South Coventry Water Supply Co., and is one of the most public-spirited citizens in the town. He does not, however, wish it forgotten that his good wife has been his most able assistant in all his work and is entitled to her share of credit.

GEORGE H. GREENE. The history of a state, as well as that of a nation, is chiefly the chronicles of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity upon society, whether in the broad sphere of public labors or in the more circumscribed, but not less worthy and valuable, realm of individual activity through which the general good is promoted. The name borne by the subject of this sketch is one which has stood as an exponent of the most sterling personal characteristics, the deepest appreciation of the rights and privileges of citizenship, and the prolific industry which makes for useful life, while it is also one which has been identified with the annals of New England from the early Colonial epoch. There have been strong men and true, as one generation has followed another, and in touching the records of those who have been factors in the history of Windham county it is practically imperative that specific mention be made of the Greene family. In the maternal line also Mr. Greene is a representative of one of the old and honored families of this section of the State. In his personal career he has maintained the honors of the name, serving in offices of high trust and responsibility, and gaining prestige as a valuable citizen and a successful business man. At the time of this writing he is serving his second term as representative of Canterbury in the Lower House of the State Legislature, while he is also chairman of the board of selectmen of his town—these facts indicating the position he holds in the confidence and esteem of the people of his native place.

Richard Greene, the grandfather of Hon. George H., was born in the town of Canterbury, Windham county, where he was reared to maturity, and where he became a successful farmer, residing in the Parkville District. Later he located on a farm in the town of Hampton, same county, and there passed the remainder of his life, passing away at the venerable age of eighty-seven years, held in high regard by all who knew him. He married Lucinda Squires, who proved to him a true helpmeet, and they were devoted companions during the long years of their married life, Mrs. Greene living to the age of eighty-five, so that in death they were not long divided. They were laid to rest in the beautiful old cemetery of Canterbury. They were people of sterling character and unpretentious lives, both having been zealous and devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Greene gave unequivocal allegiance to the Democratic party. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Greene we enter the following brief record: Henry went to California in an early day, and eventually all trace of him was lost; Taber is a farmer of Hampton, Conn.; Elijah J., was the father of our subject; Frank is a resident of the State of Michigan; Lucinda became the wife of William Medbury, of Rhode Island, and eventually returned to Canterbury, where her death occurred; Jane married William Moore, of Laurel Glen, R. I., where her death occurred; James is a resident of New London, Conn.; William is a member of the police department of New York City; George is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Andover, Conn.; Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Matthews, of River Point, is deceased; Joseph is a resident of New Hampshire.

Elijah J. Greene, father of George H., was born in Canterbury, in 1832, and was there reared and educated. As a young man he devoted his attention to farming, but he finally decided that the returns from his efforts did not justify his continuing in that line of endeavor, and he removed to Norwich, Conn., where he opened a junk store, in Water street, continuing in that enterprise four or five years, and thereafter conducting a meat market in the same town. At the expiration of three years he disposed of the business and returned to his native town, buying a grist-mill located in the Willoughby District, which he continued to operate for a period of four years, at the expiration of which he disposed of the property and purchased the general store on the Green, owned and conducted by John P. Kingsley, who is now a resident of Plainfield. Mr. Greene thus continued in mercantile pursuits about six years, and thereafter he was for a time engaged in contracting for the construction of roads, but ill health finally compelled him to retire from active business, and he entered into eternal rest Nov. 28, 1892, at the age of sixty-one years. He was a Republican in his political proclivities, and was the incumbent of various town offices at different times. He held to the faith of the Baptist Church, having been identified with the organization of that denomination at Packerville, where his wife also held membership. He served three years as a loyal defender of the integrity of the nation during the war of the Rebellion, and was ever arrayed on the side of all that was good, being a man of spotless integrity, mature judgment and great kindness.

In November, 1853, Elijah J. Greene was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Jane Button, daughter of Richard and Hannah (Penre) Button, and the immediate subject of this review is their only child.

The Button family became identified with the history of Canterbury in an early day, as is evident from records now extant. The public or official records of the town show that Jesse Button, the great-great-grandfather of our subject, was here married to his second wife Abigail Ransom, on Dec. 7, 1780. Ransford Button, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a son of the first marriage. He was born in the year which witnessed the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and his death occurred Sept. 15, 1856. On Nov. 3, 1805, he married Eleanor Parke, who was born Oct. 15, 1784, and died Feb. 12, 1857. She was the daughter of Jesse and Eleanor Parke; after the death of the latter Jesse Parke married Eunice Douglass. Jesse Parke was born in Canterbury, Aug. 25, 1752, and died April 27, 1843. He was a son of Peter and Abigail Parke, the former of whom died March 9, 1816, at the patriarchal age of ninety-one years, the latter passing away June 25, 1811, at the age of eighty-one.

To Ransford and Eleanor (Parke) Button were born nine children, concerning whom we give the following data: Jesse, born July 27, 1806, died Dec. 24, 1838. Richard, grandfather of our subject, born Aug. 26, 1807, was married to Hannah Penre Dec. 11, 1831; he died March 21, 1869, his widow surviving until April 24, 1891, when she passed away, at the age of eighty-five years. Sabastine, born April 18, 1809, was married Oct. 24, 1841, to Mary E. Johnson; his death occurred Dec. 23, 1852. Abigail born Dec. 20, 1810, was married Oct. 23, 1836, to Lovell Baker, and died Feb. 26, 1883. Peter, born Nov. 7, 1816, married Feb. 19, 1843, Eliza Wilson, and died March 28, 1882. Edward, born Dec. 7, 1818, was married to Nancy Stanton Jan. 4, 1847. Keziah, born Feb. 16, 1820, was married Dec. 1, 1844, to Nathan L. Young, and died Oct. 26, 1896. Sibyl, born Aug. 11, 1822, was married Oct. 20, 1839, to Belama Baker. Elijah, was born March 15, 1826.

Of the children of Richard and Hannah (Penre) Button we give the following record: Lyman, born Feb. 2, 1833, married Helen Smith, and resides in Westminster Society, town of Canterbury; Merrill, born Aug. 16, 1834, married Mrs. Caroline (Bushnell) Peckham, and they also reside in Westminster; Sarah Jane, born Feb. 13, 1836, the wife of Elijah J. Greene and the mother of our subject, still maintains her home in Canterbury; Louise, born June 8, 1839, is the wife of Rev. Stephen Carter, of Plainfield, Conn.; and Ransford, born Dec. 27, 1841, died Aug. 18, 1843.

George Henry Greene was born in Canterbury, Windham county, Oct. 1, 1854, and for his early educational discipline is indebted to the public schools of his native town. For three years he was a student in the high school at Norwich, where he effectually supplemented his more rudimentary scholastic training. As a youth he took up the vocation of farming, but followed the art of husbandry only a brief interval. He then went to South Manchester, where he established himself in the dairying business, continuing operations in this line for three years, and then becoming superintendent of the town farm at Hartford, an incumbency which he retained two years. He then returned to Canterbury, where for three years he assisted his father in conducting his mercantile business, and the ensuing four years he held the position of freight agent for the South Manchester railroad at South Manchester. Returning again to Canterbury, he once more identified himself with agricultural pursuits, in which he continued until 1894, when he leased the upper Williams mill, where he has since been engaged in the manufacturing of oak mast-hoops. He bought the mill in 1902. The enterprise is one of considerable scope and importance, operations being continued during the entire year and the products being in ready demand on the part of ship owners and builders. Mr. Greene has conducted this industry with marked energy, discrimination and ability, and his efforts have been attended by distinctive success, while he has gained recognition as one of the progressive and reliable business men of the county.

In politics Mr. Greene is a loyal and uncompromising Republican, and has ever taken a lively and active interest in promoting the cause of his party, being prominent in public affairs of a local nature and having been called upon to serve in positions of high trust and responsibility, in the gift of the people of his native county. He is now serving his fourth year as a member of the board of selectmen, of which he is chairman (1902), while he formerly rendered efficient service in the office of justice of the peace. He is now representative of his district in the State Legislature, and is serving his second successive term, a distinction not often accorded. In the General Assembly of 1899-1900 Mr. Greene was assigned to the committee on Cities and Boroughs, and in the last session, 1901-02, he was appointed a member of the Military committee. He has proved an able and faithful representative of the interests of his constituency and of the State at large, and has thus conferred honor upon himself and those for whom he stands sponsor. Fraternally Mr. Greene is identified with Moosup Lodge, No. 113, A. F. & A. M., at Moosup, and with Protection Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F., of Center Village, while he has also recently become a member of the encampment of the latter order, in the same village.

In the village of Scotland, Conn., on Aug. 18, 1885, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Greene to Miss Fanny Dickinson, who was born in South Manchester, daughter of Samuel and Amanda (Wier) Dickinson, the latter of whom is deceased. Mr. Dickinson, who is an honored veteran of the Civil war, still maintains his residence in South Manchester. Mr. and Mrs. Greene have seven children, their names, with dates of birth, being as follows: Gertrude Eletha, Nov. 18, 1886; George Elmer, July 12, 1888; Leona May, April 14, 1890; Carroll Henry, Aug. 14, 1892; Arthur Berdett, Aug. 14, 1894; Earl Clement, June 21, 1896; and Ford Albion, Dec. 24, 1898.

MYRON WALTER LEONARD. Among the most representative and prosperous citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, Conn., is Myron Walter Leonard, who is the First Selectman of that town. Mr. Leonard is of the fifth generation that has resided upon the homestead farm, and his comfortable, modern house was erected by his father in 1874. Many pleasant and revered memories cluster about this old farm where so many good people have lived and died, and Mr. Leonard is favored in being the possessor of the home of his forefathers.

Myron Walter Leonard was born April 2, 1861, in Stafford, Conn., a son of Milton and Martha Melvina (Smith) Leonard. The father was born in 1826, in Stafford, Conn., and died there Oct. 23, 1875. He was a farmer and blacksmith, and although he devoted the greater portion of his attention to his trade he was the possessor of 300 to 400 acres of fine farming land. In politics he was a Republican and served as selectman many years, holding that office at the time of his death. He also held various other positions of public trust.

The wife of Milton Leonard was born in 1825 and died in 1896, being a daughter of Walter and Betsy (Vinton) Smith. To the father and mother of Myron Walter Leonard, of whom we write, the following children were born: Mary Salsbury, born Feb. 3, 1859, married Martin E. Lombard, of Hartford, a grocer; Myron Walter; Grace Elizabeth, born May 17, 1866, married Frank H. Aldrich of Hartford, a house decorator.

Myron Walter Leonard received his education in Stafford, his native place, and also at the Monson academy, attending the latter until he was fourteen years of age. At that time he commenced farming on his father's estate, he being the only son. While engaged in farming he learned the trade of blacksmith in his father's shop, and has followed it for over twenty-five years. His farm is one of the finest in the county, consisting of 400 acres, including some excellent woodland. Upon this property he carries on general farming and keeps fifteen cows, sending his cream to Monson creamery in which concern he was director for several years.

On Nov. 18, 1885, Myron Walter Leonard was married to Luella Ellen Howlett, born Nov. 25, 1860, a daughter of Didmus Freeman Howlett and Emeline Almira (Cady) Howlett, of Stafford. Mr. Howlett was a miller and was born in Sturbridge. To Mr. and Mrs. Leonard were born: Ruth, born Aug. 23, 1886 and Helen, born Feb. 12, 1890.

In politics Mr. Leonard is a very staunch Republican. For nine years he has served as first selectman and still holds the office. He has also been honored with election to the office of assessor upon three occasions, and has served as road commissioner for an equal period. In religious matters Mr. Leonard and his wife are members of the Universalist Church and very active workers in that denomination. Socially they are highly respected and occupy a prominent position among the leading people of the community in which they reside.

M. F. H. EASTWOOD, superintendent of the Hockanum Mill at Rockville, Tolland county, is one of those young men who has first made a study of the best business course to pursue, and then by close application, and constant study of his particular line, has early in life attained a position of prominence and responsibility. Mr. Eastwood has practically grown up in the business of woolen manufacture, and it is unlikely that any other man of his age in New England has a more complete knowledge of this special branch of industry.

Mr. Eastwood was born at Winooski (near Burlington), Vt., July 27, 1868. He is a son of Charles Wesley and Medura (Allen) Horton, and their only child who lived to adult age. The Hortons are an old family of the vicinity of Burlington. When a young child his father was killed by the cars, and his mother subsequently married John Eastwood, of Huddersfield, England, who took legal steps to give his name to his stepson.

Until he was twelve years old M. F. H. Eastwood lived with his parents in his native town, attending public school in Winooski. The family then removing to Lowell, Mass., he continued his studies in the schools of that place, and his last schooling was received at night school in Dedham, Mass., after he had commenced work.

Elisha Allen, maternal grandfather of M. F. H. Eastwood was for many years connected with woolen manufacturing at Burlington, and when Mr. Eastwood was in his teens Mr. Allen went to Dedham, Mass., and revived the business of the Norfolk Woolen Company, whose plant had been idle. In this establishment, under the instruction of his grandfather, Mr. Eastwood gained his first knowledge of woolen manufacture. His grandfather being a strict disciplinarian and practical manufacturer he also learned many things outside of the regular work that have since proved valuable to him. He began in the mill as a harness-cleaner, worked his way upward, gradually, and learned designing from his grandfather—all this time gathering ideas which were to fit him for responsible positions. After two and a half years' employment at Dedham he filled various positions, in different mills at Glenville, Conn., and Ludlow, Vt., advancing with every change. Mr. Eastwood went to the Burlington Mills, at Burlington, Vt., as loom fixer, and shortly afterward was promoted to oversee the weaving. During the last five years of his engagement there—which covered the period from the fall of 1887 to the spring of 1901—he was superintendent of the mills. On April 15, 1901, Mr. Eastwood took his present position in the Hockanum Mill at Rockville, for which he has shown himself eminently well fitted. He has risen by merit, and relies only upon merit to retain the standing he has won.

On April 11, 1885, at Dedham, Mass., Mr. Eastwood was married to Miss Lemyra Ellis, a native of that place, daughter of William H. and Lucy (Morrow) Ellis. They have had nine children, namely: Maude Frances, Myron Wilmont, Harold Everett, Charles Edward, Walter Allen, John Edgar, Frank Ronald, Ira Allen and Ruth Allen.

Mr. Eastwood is a member of the Queen City Park Association (a spiritualist organization) of The State of Vermont, of which he has been vice-president and a director. Fraternally he affiliates with the Masons and the Royal Arcanum. His political support is given to the Republican party, and he votes a straight ticket.

ADOLPHUS GUSTAVUS CHAPIN, the owner of one of the very best farms in Somers, and a representative citizen of that model community, resides on Hall Hill, in the northerly part of the town. He descends from an old and numerous family long and favorably known in that section.

Deacon Samuel Chapin is known to have been the progenitor of all who bear this surname in these parts, and the family has been thought to be of Welsh origin. Samuel Chapin arrived in America between the years 1633 and 1635, took the freeman's oath in Boston June 2, 1641, and the year following brought his family to Springfield—the then western outpost of the New England colonies—where he became prominent in its affairs. In 1652 he was appointed a magistrate of the town, which commission was in 1654 extended indefinitely. In the interim between pastorates of the pioneer church he exercised his talent of exhortation on the Lord's Day, and was declared to be "exceeding moving in prayer." He was a contemporary of Pynchon and Holyoke, was considered a good Puritan, of sound judgment, fervent piety, a tender humanity and a rare gift of enterprise. Near the City Library in Springfield stands a bronze statue by Augustus St. Gaudens, the foremost American sculptor of our times, typifying "The Puritan"—Deacon Samuel Chapin. It was presented to the city as the gift of Hon. Chester Williams Chapin, a descendant of the sixth generation, and unveiled on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 24, 1887, after the death of the donor. The sentiment of religion has been a marked trait in the Chapin family, and as early as 1862 no less than twenty-five clergymen of his offspring had arisen. Deacon Samuel Chapin died in Springfield Nov. 11, 1675, and his widow, Cisily, died Feb. 8, 1683. They had children, of whom only the youngest is recorded as born in Springfield: Japhet, born 1642, died 1712; Henry; Catherine; David; Josiah; Sarah; Hannah.

Henry Chapin, son of the immigrant, took up his residence in Springfield about 1659, and it is tradition that he was impressed on board a British man-of-war and compelled to serve some seven years, during which period he was in a severe engagement with the Dutch. This experience made him a sailor, and he afterward had command of a merchant vessel which made several voyages between Boston and London. After retiring from the sea Henry Chapin lived for a time in Boston, and then removed to Springfield, the home of his parents and family. In the latter town he was prominent, and represented it in the General Court of 1689. He was an extensive landowner, and lived in what is now Chicopee, where he died Aug. 15, 1718. Bethia Cooley, his wife, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Cooley, of Longmeadow, died Dec. 11, 1711, the mother of the following children: Henry, born June 1, 1666, died April 29, 1667; Sarah; Bethia; Henry, Jr., born March 19, 1679; Benjamin, born 1682, died 1756.

Henry Chapin, Jr., born 1679, died Sept. 15, 1754. Mary Gurnsey, of Milford, Conn., became his wife Feb. 19, 1702. To them came the following children: Henry (3), born Oct. 24, 1702, died Sept. 3, 1703; Mary, born Sept. 4, 1704, married a Billings; Elizabeth, born March 12, 1707, married, Feb. 6, 1735, Samuel Bliss; Joseph, born Oct. 25, 1709, was drowned June 29, 1723. Mrs. Mary Chapin died May 2, 1715, and Henry Chapin, Jr., married, for his second wife, May 10, 1716, Esther Bliss, by whom he had issue: Esther, born Mar. 11, 1717, published Oct. 18, 1740, to Jonathan Ely, Jr.;

Harriet E. Chapin

Adolphus S. Chapin

Margaret, born July 8, 1719, published Sept. 11, 1756, to Amos Taylor; Henry (3), born June 7, 1721, married Mary Butler; Abner; Seth, born April 20, 1724, married, June 8, 1758, Hannah Sikes; Joseph, born Jan. 30, 1726, published Dec. 8, 1748, to Elizabeth Field; William, born April 19, 1729, married Martha Chapin.

Abner Chapin, whose name appears in the last paragraph, was born July 25, 1722, and made his home in the southerly part of Wilbraham, near the Scantic river, some time after 1748. There he followed farming. On June 15, 1763, part of Springfield was established as Wilbraham, and on June 11, 1799, another part of Springfield was added. Abner Chapin married, Dec. 23, 1742, Abigail Warner, their intention of marriage being filed in Springfield Nov. 27, 1742. Tabitha Allen became his second wife. Of these two wives were born the following children: Abner, Jr., born May 29, 1749, was the great-grandfather of Adolphus G.; Abigail, born May 14, 1751, married John Langdon; Esther, born Dec. 7, 1753, married Timothy Brown; Margaret, born Sept. 14, 1755, married Stephen Davis; Lucy, born Aug. 19, 1757, married Asa Bullard; Maria, born June 7, 1760, married Abner Cooley; Samuel, born June 30, 1762, served in the Revolutionary war (he married Huldah Wright and Susannah Butts); Timothy, born March 5, 1764, married Martha Cooley, and died in 1846; Asenath, born Dec. 6, 1782, married Crocker Waterhouse.

Abner Chapin, Jr., born May 29, 1749, was married in September, 1769, to Rhoda Kibbe, of Somers. She died Aug. 18, 1824. Abner Chapin, Jr., served in the Revolutionary war, was at Roxbury in 1775, and at the surrender of Burgoyne, Oct. 17, 1777. His death occurred April 1, 1814. These were the children born to Abner, Jr., and Rhoda (Kibbe) Chapin; Abner (3), born Jan. 12, 1771, is mentioned below; Amariah, born Jan. 11, 1773, married Lovina Geluton, and lived in Schenectady, N. Y.; Oliver, born Dec. 5, 1774, died young; Rhoda, born Oct. 8, 1776, married Elijah P. Russell, of Springfield; Diadema, born Sept. 4, 1778, married Zeno King, of Suffield, Conn.; Beulah, born Feb. 26, 1785, married Uriel Cone, of Middlefield; Daniel S., born Jan. 27, 1787, married Marinda Hall, of Ludlow; Mary, born April 7, 1789, married Cyrus Crane, of Wilbraham.

Abner Chapin (3), the grandfather of Adolphus G., born Jan. 12, 1771, in Wilbraham, followed farming all his life in his native town, where he died. On May 30, 1795, he was married to Polly Adams, who died Jan. 10, 1841, aged sixty-six years, the mother of the following children: Polly died on March 23, 1823. Austin was killed by the kick of a horse, in Chicago, when twenty-three years old. Lucy E. was born March 29, 1798. Oliver resided in Wallup, in the town of Enfield, Conn. Vashni Hall Chapin was born in Wilbraham, in that part which was, March 28, 1878, established as Hampden, and there his early life was passed. When a boy he was "put out" to work for his uncle, Crocker Waterhouse, with whom he remained until he attained his majority. As a young man he was employed by the neighboring farmers, and after a few years became possessed of a small farm in Wilbraham, on which he made his home for a number of years. This place he sold, and on the solicitation of Mr. Waterhouse came to Somers, where he received from that gentleman a small farm in consideration of his managing the larger farm of his employer. Farming was his occupation up to the time of his death, Feb. 9, 1893. He was a Democrat in politics.

Vashni Hall Chapin and Orpha Zelinda Kibbe were married Aug. 27, 1835, by Rev. R. G. Dennis. She was born in Somers Aug. 28, 1819, daughter of Silas and Sarah (Waterhouse) Kibbe, and died Jan. 2, 1893; she lies buried beside her husband in the West cemetery in Somers. To them were born the following children: (1) Sabrina Orpha, born Dec. 24, 1836, resides in Somers, the widow of Austin Fuller. Joanna Worthington, was a farmer, and died in Longmeadow May 3, 1893.

Adolphus Gustavus Chapin was born in Wilbraham, where he attended the district school at East Longmeadow, remaining at home until he became of age, then purchasing a farm in Somers with his brother, Kibbe V. Chapin, on which the latter now resides. In buying they incurred a heavy debt, but by industry and thrift paid it, and there Mr. Chapin remained until the spring of 1872, when he sold out to his brother and purchased his present farm of Orrin Hall. It consisted of 113 acres at that time, but is now increased to 140 acres. He has been a general farmer, devoting much attention to stock dealing and dairying. Many substantial improvements have been made by him and the place is maintained in splendid condition. It is regarded as one of the best farms in the town.

Mr. Chapin was married Nov. 23, 1868, to Harriet Elizabeth Pease, born May 27, 1846, died March 31, 1900, the daughter of Chester and Hancy (Hall) Pease. To this union came the following children: (1) Nellie Elizabeth, born Aug. 26, 1870, married, Sept. 11, 1890, John David Hulett, a farmer, and since the death of her mother has been residing on the home farm; (2) Duane Adolphus, born Aug. 23, 1875, died Aug. 2, 1876; (3) Lula Hancy, born Dec. 18, 1878, died July 26, 1879; (4) Hattie Adolphia was born Oct. 6, 1883.

Mr. Chapin is a Democrat, and has served as assessor for several years, and was one of the organizers of the Somers Creamery, of which he has been a director from the first. With his family he attends the Baptist Church at Longmeadow. A prosperous and successful man, he is much respected in the community.

Silas Kibbe, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Chapin, was the son of Frederick and Zelinda (Pratt) Kibbe, and was born in Somers in 1788. In early life he worked on his father's farm and in his saw and grist mill. After his marriage he located on the farm now occupied by Jairus N. Kibbe, then a part of the paternal estate, where he lived until his death, March 2, 1855. Sarah Waterhouse, his wife, was a native of Longmeadow, and a daughter of Nathaniel and Olive Waterhouse. Mrs. Kibbe died May 16, 1868, at the age of seventy-four years. These were her children: (1) Sarah Samantha, wife of Luke Cooley, of Somers; (2) Harriet Sabrina, wife of Harvey Prior, died in East Windsor; (3) Orpha Zelinda, the mother of Mr. Chapin; (4) Marinette Narcissus, who died March 20, 1839, at the age of seventeen; (5) Adelia Theresa, who married William Endicott and Julius Phelps; (6) Olive Melissa, wife of Otis Packard, died in South Framingham, Mass.; (7) Silas Gustavus, who died Sept. 10, 1844, aged seventeen years; (8) Jairus Novatus, who married Flavia E. Billings, and is a farmer in North Somers.

Mrs. Adolphus G. Chapin was the daughter of Chester Pease and Hancy Hall. The Hall family in Somers was founded by four brothers, Zadoc, Vashni, Josiah and Libni, who settled on Hall Hill and cleared it from the woods. They all had families and were prosperous.

Zadoc Hall, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Chapin, located in the woods near the Massachusetts line, erected a cabin, and made a home in which he passed the remainder of his days. He died Dec. 30, 1826, aged seventy-seven years. Elizabeth McCoy, his wife, died Oct. 18, 1822, aged seventy-one years. Of their children, (1) Asenath, the oldest, married Philip Campbell, a farmer of Somers; (2) Lovia married Abner Lard and died in North Wilbraham; (3) Orrin was the grandfather of Mrs. Chapin.

Orrin Hall was born on the farm noted above, which was his home during life, and where he died at the age of seventy-four years. Hannah Sweetland, who became his wife, lived to be eighty-seven. They were honest and industrious and became very wealthy for the times. Their children were as follows: (1) Orrin married Sarah Sawn, and followed farming on the place now occupied by Mr. Chapin; (2) Hancy, born April 26, 1817, married, Oct. 17, 1844, Chester Pease. Mr. Pease was the son of Josiah and Relief (Wakefield) Pease, and was born in Somers, where his entire life was spent in farming, and where he became very successful. He died on the Pease homestead March 28, 1900. These were their children: (1) Harriet Elizabeth became Mrs. A. G. Chapin; (2) Randolph O., born April 16, 1848, married Annie Wood, and was a farmer on the home place, where he died Dec. 25, 1886, leaving one child, Chester Raymond Pease; (3) Elbert, born March 10, 1854, married Nancy Lothrop, and is a farmer in Somers.

KIBBE VASHNI CHAPIN is a successful and enterprising citizen of Somers, Tolland county, residing on the mountain in the southeast part of the town, where he has carried on farming for more than thirty-five years. He is a brother of Adolphus G. Chapin, with whose sketch appears the history of the Chapin family in this vicinity.

Kibbe V. Chapin was born Dec. 23, 1839, in that part of Wilbraham, Mass., now Hampden, the son of Vashni H. and Orpha Z. (Kibbe) Chapin, and came to Somers with his parents when about seven years old. He attended the district school in Longmeadow until about the age of eighteen, in the meantime assisting his father on his farm. On becoming of age he took up the trade of a butcher, and for three years was engaged in that line in Hazardville, Conn., when he went to Springfield, Mass., and engaged in the market business with his brother-in-law, Edward A. Osborn, under the firm name of Osborn & Chapin. At the end of two years he sold out his interest in the market, and for a time engaged in buying and selling horses, purchasing in Vermont and disposing of them in Springfield and vicinity. In company with his brother, Adolphus, in December, 1866, he purchased his present farm from Austin Avery and Warren Pease, and the brothers continued in farming and wood dealing until 1873, when Kibbe purchased his brother's interest, the latter removing to Hall Hill, in North Somers. From that day until the present time Mr. Chapin has been engaged in farming and fruit growing. He is one of the largest fruit growers in the town and his selected fruit finds a ready market. The farm consists of upward of 100 acres, and the tillable portion has been always kept in a high state of cultivation.

Mr. Chapin is a staunch Democrat and has always voted with that party. He was on the board of selectmen in 1885 and 1886, serving as its chairman in the earlier year. During his term of office the new addition to the West cemetery was purchased. He has been on the board of assessors and on the board of relief for several terms, and a justice of the peace for many years, always acquitting himself most creditably. He is a charter member of Mt. Vernon Council, No. 10, O. U. A. M., of Somers, and has held several positions therein. He was very active in the organization of the Somers Creamery, and served as a director for a number of years, until he declined further re-election. Mr. and Mrs. Chapin are members of the State Street Baptist Church of Springfield.

Mr. Chapin takes a deep and commendable interest in public affairs, giving his support to every enterprise which he believes will prove of public benefit. He has gained the respect and confidence of his fellow-townsmen and has many warm personal friends.

Kibbe Vashni Chapin and Mrs. Sarah Cornelia (Whipple) Burgess were married in Springfield, by Rev. Albert K. Potter, on March 14, 1866. She was the widow of Edmund Robert Burgess, and a daughter of Elias and Lucy (Miller) Whipple, and was born in Springfield April 24, 1836. Mrs. Burgess had one child, Edmund Robert, Jr., who died aged six years. Mr. and Mrs. Chapin had children: (1) Edmund Kibbe, born Feb. 15, 1868, died June 11, 1870. (2) Addie Maria, born Feb. 7, 1870, married Mahlon M. Gowdy, a native of Somers, but now a successful business man of Providence, R. I., and they had children, Hazel Belle and Donald Mahlon; Mrs. Gowdy died in Springfield Feb. 21, 1898. (3) Belle Simons, born Oct. 2, 1872, married Clarence E. Peirce, a native of Providence, but now a genealogist and annalist in Springfield, and they had one child, Kibbe Chapin Peirce.

CHARLES M. HOLBROOK, conspicuous in Windham county as a thoroughly modern and up-to-date farmer, with the results of his work amply justifying his progressive and original ideas, comes from one of the old and prominent families of Columbia, Conn., where his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather were honorable and useful citizens of that town. During these generations the family has supplied at different times an incumbent for every town office.

John Holbrook, the great-great-grandfather of Charles M., lived in Columbia, Conn., where he had his home in the Pine Street district, and where the family lived for several generations. He married Sarah Pinneo, by whom he became the father of Daniel, John (2), Silas, Ira, Charles, Nancy (who died young), and Mary (who married Joel Wright, and moved to Pennsylvania).

John Holbrook (2), son of John, was born in Columbia in 1781, and was a blacksmith during his active life. He married Betsy Kenney, of Windham, by whom he had the following children: (1) Charles is mentioned below. (2) Lathrop, who lived and died in Columbia, never married. (3) Angelina married Septimus Loomer, and died in Columbia. (4) Frederick settled in Concord, Wis., where he died; his only child was Charlotte. (5) Cornelia married Uriah Palmer, of Wapping, Conn., and died in Columbia. (6) Justin resided in Columbia, Conn., where he was twice married; his first wife, Mary E. Clark, became the mother of four children: Alfred, of Waterford, Conn.; Alice, now Mrs. A. G. Turner, of Willimantic; Julia, now Mrs. George Chapman, of Columbia; and Jennie, now Mrs. Frederick Hunt, of Columbia. For his second wife, Justin married Louise Little, daughter of Capt. George O. Little, and they had one child, William J., now an engineer for the Willimantic Linen Co. (7) Charlotte married the late Benjamin Strong, a tailor in Adrian, Mich., where she resides; they had two children, Earl and Erville. (8) George C., married Lucinda Loomer, of Columbia, and had two children, George and Ida.

Charles Hilbrook, son of John (2) was born in the Pine Street District, in Columbia, March 8, 1813, in the old homestead of the Holbrook family. He learned the blacksmith trade from his father, and followed it all his life. He owned a small farm of about forty acres, which he cultivated in connection with his trade, although he devoted the most of his time to the shop. He married first Mary Ann Williams, sister of Cyrus Williams, a farmer, and a native of Lebanon, Conn. Her father left Lebanon, and in pioneer days settled in Washington Prairie, Iowa, where he died. Mrs. Mary Ann Holbrook died in the early part of 1839, leaving two sons, Earl M., who is an extensive land owner in Columbia, Conn.; and Marshall, who is the father of Charles M. For his second wife Charles Holbrook married Sarah Bond, of Brimfield, Mass., who became the mother of one child, John C., who died unmarried in Boston at the age of forty-two years; he was a noted canvasser for books and other works, and was considered one of the best in the large concern with which he was connected. Charles Holbrook lived to be some seventy-eight years of age, and held almost every office in the town of Columbia. Politically he was a Democrat, and in 1860 he was elected to represent the town in the General Assembly, and was first selectman for many years.

Marshall Holbrook was born on the Holbrook family homestead Aug. 15, 1837. In early manhood he learned the blacksmith trade under the instruction of Linus Spencer, of Hebron, Conn. As he worked at his trade as a journeyman for a number of years, for some time he was in the employ of George and Sylvester Rice, wagon makers, machinists and machine forgers, who had a shop on Bridge Street in Willimantic, and was later employed in Yalesville, Collinsville, and Colchester, Conn. During the war he was employed by Turner & Day, makers of ship augers and auger bits, in Chester, Conn., and at the close of the war returned to Columbia, where he lived until 1894, with the exception of one year, when he was employed in Coventry with his father-in-law. On April 8, 1859, Marshall Holbrook was married in Windham, Conn., to Miss Clarissa Webler, a native of Columbia, Conn., where she was born Nov. 11, 1840, a daughter of Edward and Lydia (Strong) Webler. Her father was a mason by trade, but gave the most of his life to farming. Mr. Webler reared the following family of children: Horace E., a resident of Bridgeport, Conn.; Dwight, who died in Troy, Penn., in 1888; Clarissa; Caroline M., who died in early life; Frances C., who married Nathan Fuller, of Coventry; Julia M., who married Marvin Coleman, of Coventry; Emma J., the widow of Samuel B. Lyman, residing in Providence; and David J., a carpenter of Willimantic. Mr. Webler lived to be sixty-six years old, and died in Coventry; his widow lived to be seventy-six. Both were buried in the cemetery at Columbia. Mrs. Webler was reared in Columbia, and was living there when she was married. The only child born to Marshall and Clarissa Holbrook was Charles M. Holbrook, whose name introduces this article. Marshall Holbrook filled the offices of assessor, constable and selectman, and in 1879 and 1881 was a member of the first General Assembly that sat in the new State House at Hartford. He was also a member of the board of relief. In his day he was one of the leading men of the town, and could have had almost any office he might have wished. Fraternally Mr. Holbrook was a member of Lyon Lodge, No 101, F. & A. M., of Columbia, until it was disbanded. Today he is still a well preserved and hearty man, and often does odd jobs at his trade. Mr. Holbrook, with his son, in 1894 removed to the farm west of Willimantic, where he is still living. No man stands higher in the estimation of those who know him well.

Charles M. Holbrook was born Dec. 7, 1859, in the Pine Street District, where his ancestors had lived for generations before in the town of Columbia. His education was begun in the Pine Street District School, and among his first teachers was Miss Emma Backus; another of his teachers was Miss Hattie Robinson, as was also Charles Robinson. When he was twelve years old he left home to work for Simon Hunt, and later was employed by Justin Holbrook, of Columbia. When young Holbrook was somewhat older he worked for Frank Noyes, of Lebanon, from whom he had good instruction, not only in books, but in good farming, and he also worked for Peter W. Turner, of Turnerville. Mr. Holbrook was early marked by an aptitude to receive ideas and preserve what was best in the instructions of those for whom he worked, and thus gaining the experience of older men. A steady-going and reliable young man, he had the reputation of being a valuable man on the farm, or at whatever work to which he turned.

On Jan. 25, 1883, Mr. Holbrook was married in Lebanon, Conn., to Miss Hattie Spofford, born in that town, March 19, 1863, being the oldest daughter of Amos and Eliza (Leonard) Spofford. One daughter, Ella S., born Jan. 3, 1889, blessed this union. After their marriage the young couple made their home on the Holbrook homestead where they lived until 1894, when they removed to the place where they are found at the present time. This farm has been greatly improved by the push and energy of Mr. Holbrook, and it is now counted as one of the best homesteads in the town. It is used both for garden and dairy purposes, and is very productive. Mr. Holbrook is a Democrat and has very pronounced convictions regarding trusts. For five years he was first selectman and town agent in the town of Columbia. Taking a warm interest in political affairs, he has proved himself not only a strong candidate before the people, but his record in office is very creditable. He belongs to the American Benefit Society, and is a thrifty and hustling farmer, working to win prosperity, rather than spending his time talking "calamity."

EBENEZER COLBURN, one of the highly respected men of Stafford, Tolland county, was born March 15, 1812, at the same place he now occupies, which is known as Colburn Hill, Stafford.

The founder of the family in this country, was Nathaniel Colburn (then spelled Coleborne), who settled at Dedham, Mass., 1637, where he was admitted a freeman, June 2, 1641, and he and his descendants after him to the present time resided in that part of the town known as West Dedham. On June 25, 1639, he married Priscilla Clark, by whom he had eleven children: Sarah, Rebecca, Nathaniel, Priscilla, John, Mary, Hannah, Samuel, Deborah, Benjamin and Joseph.

(II) John Colburn, son of Nathaniel, was born July 29, 1648, in Dedham, Mass., and married in 1672, Experience Leland. John was admitted a freeman Feb. 13, 1683-84. His wife died in 1708, after bearing him a family of seven children: John, born Dec. 14, 1675, died in 1732; Ebenezer, born Oct. 21, 1677; Deborah, born March 14, 1680; Hannah, born Sept. 16, 1683; Bethia, born Feb. 28, 1686; Daniel, born Aug. 4, 1689; Experience, born March 16, 1692.

(III) Daniel Colburn, son of John Colburn, was born Aug. 4, 1689, in Dedham, Mass., and in 1718 went from Dedham, Mass., to Stafford, Conn.,

Ebenezer Colburn

where he became an early settler on what has since been known as Colburn Hill. His children were: Daniel, Joseph, John, Ebenezer and Mittice.

(IV) Ebenezer Colburn, son of Daniel Colburn, was born in 1753, and died March 22, 1817, aged sixty-four years, being buried in the old Stafford Street cemetery. By occupation, he was a farmer and large landholder. In political matters he was a Federalist, and took a very active part in politics, and also served as captain of militia. At various times he held office, serving as tax collector and in other town offices, and he represented his town in the State Legislature, presenting many bills tending towards the betterment of the welfare of the people. In religion he was an active member of the Presbyterian Church. Ebenezer Colburn was one of the truly broad-minded and far-seeing men of his time, and richly deserved the esteem showed him. His wife, whose maiden name was Penelope Townsend, died Feb. 2, 1854, aged eighty-seven. Their family consisted of three children: Sally, who married Asa Fisk, of Wales, Mass.; John Townsend; and Ebenezer, who died at the age of twelve years.

(V) John Townsend Colburn, son of Ebenezer, and father of our subject, was born on Colburn Hill, and spent his entire life as a farmer in Stafford, Conn., dying Jan. 18, 1842. In politics he was a Whig, but never sought or desired office. During his lifetime he attended the Congregational Church, and was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society. He was a man of integrity and uprightness in living. In 1811, he married Polly Vincent, of Stafford, who died Oct. 25, 1848, aged fifty-six years. To their union came children as follows: Ebenezer; Sally, who died unmarried June 24, 1841, aged twenty-seven years; Mary, who married Arnold Swift, of Mansfield; John Sanford, who married (first) Maranda A. Richmond (who died Feb. 2, 1846, aged twenty-one years), and (second) Lois Barny, and prior to his death he conducted a general mercantile business in St. Paul, Minn.; Martha, who died unmarried July 6, 1846, aged twenty-three; Jane, who died unmarried June 8, 1846, aged twenty-one; Louisa, who married Elacus Smith, of Stafford; and Philura, who became the second wife of Elacus Smith. Of this family all died with pulmonary trouble except John S.; the mother also died with the same trouble.

(VI) Ebenezer Colburn (2), our subject, received his education in the common schools of Stafford, and also received private instruction from Rev. Smith and Rev. Church, of the Congregational Church. Leaving school when he was eighteen, he taught school at Stafford Springs, Conn., and in Wales and Staffordville, for nine terms, his stipend being seven dollars per month, with board, for a term of three months. At the expiration of his career as a teacher, Mr. Colburn assumed the management of the old homestead, which consisted of over 400 acres, and in 1850 he erected his present comfortable home.

In addition to his farming interests, Mr. Colburn, in conjunction with E. A. Converse, started the Staffordville Savings Bank, and was vice-president of this institution until its removal to Stafford Springs. For ever twenty-five years, Mr. Colburn was a director in the old Stafford National Bank. In partnership with John A. Smith and Friend C. Smith, Mr. Colburn purchased the old Shaw mill in Wales, Mass., and leased it until the property was destroyed by fire. During the many years Mr. Colburn has been actively engaged in business life, he never had a lawsuit, or was forced to sue anyone, a record of which he is justly proud, as it is proof of his sterling integrity and just methods of doing business. In earlier years he was a Whig, and when the Republican party was formed naturally became a strong supporter of its principles. Mr. Colburn has served most acceptably as selectman, being chairman of the board for over a year, was justice of the peace for several years, and on the board of relief for several terms. For one year he served as tax collector, and was constable for the same period. Knowing his probity of character and just methods, he has been selected to settle nearly twenty estates, in both Connecticut and Massachusetts. Mr. Colburn is the oldest Mason in Stafford, and is a member of Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M., of Stafford. His religious views are in accordance with the tenets of the Congregational Church, which he attends regularly in Staffordville.

In 1834, Mr. Colburn was married to Mary P. Andrews, eldest daughter of Alvin and Eunice (Brown) Andrews, of Wales, Mass. She was born March 31, 1815, in Stafford, and died there May 3, 1890. To Mr. and Mrs. Colburn was born a son, John Andrews, April 22, 1835, in Stafford, Conn., now a farmer in Enfield, Conn., who married Emegene Smith, of Stafford, daughter of John A. Smith, and has two children, Alice Louise and Zella, both at home.

For his years, Mr. Colburn is wonderfully well preserved, and his energy and clear intellect are remarkable. In his pleasant home, surrounded by the comforts of life, enjoying the regard and respect of all who know him, Mr. Colburn is spending the declining years of a well-lived career, which has nothing in it to be ashamed of, or to regret.

WILLIAM CALLAHAN LATIMER, a successful and popular coal dealer of South Coventry, Tolland county, fills the office of selectman, and is very widely known as a public-spirited and enterprising citizen.

Samuel Latimer, the father of William C., was born in Montville, New London Co., Conn., July 8, 1802, where he was reared. He was engaged in farming, and a number of his winters was devoted to factory work. At the outbreak of the Civil war he changed his politics, and became a strong Republican for the rest of his life. He there married Abbie Rogers, by whom he had two children, Daniel, deceased; and Almira, who married Henry Bolles, of Montville. The mother of these children died, and Mr. Latimer then married Amy Smith, who was born in 1811, a daughter of Daniel and Abbie (Richards) Smith, and who lived to be seventy-seven years of age. Mrs. Latimer was a member of the Montville Methodist Church, and her husband was accustomed to attend church with her. He died when he was aged sixty years. To their union were born: John; Henry; a daughter, who died in infancy; Ella, who lived in Montville, and died in 1899; Carrie, who married James G. Burnette; and William Callahan.

William C. Latimer was born in Montville June 28, 1850, and although his education was limited in its earlier developments, as he only attended the district school winters until he reached the age of thirteen years, yet he has closely observed and studied the world around him, and has keen powers of thought and observation. For a time he attended a select school in Montville, where he swept the floor and attended to the fire for his tuition. When he was fifteen he began as a teamster at Norwich Falls, an occupation he continued for two years. For four years he was in the employ of Mr. Sherman of Versailles (formerly Eagleville), as a teamster, after which he came back to Montville, where he was engaged in teaming for three years. In 1873³ he located in South Coventry, where he began in business for himself as teamster, and the following year began the coal business, now having the only business in that line in town. For two years he furnished the coal for the Connecticut Agricultural College. His trade has so increased that he is obliged to keep four teams busy, and he does practically all of the teaming in the valley. For three years he was in the livery business, but has given it up. Having a great fondness for horses, he has ever engaged in work that necessitated their use. He also carries on farming in South Coventry.

Mr. Latimer is a staunch Republican, and has been active in local affairs. In 1881 and in 1882 he was elected selectman, and in 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901 and 1902 he was on the board of selectmen, being first selectman in 1897—and again, 1901. Several times he has been elected to various offices against his protest, and has failed to qualify for such positions. Under Sheriff Buell he was a deputy for the town, and has been local representative for the Humane Society. Mr. Latimer is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belongs to Warren Lodge, No. 50, of South Coventry, and he is a charter member of the A. O. U. W., No. 15, of Coventry.

Mr. Latimer was married at the age of twenty-one years in Montville, Conn., to Hannah A. Richmond, who was born March 29, 1852, a daughter of Edward Richmond, a native of Windham, Conn.

To this union were born: Mary Elizabeth, born Dec. 12, 1872, the wife of F. P. Williams, a merchant, of Terryville, Conn., of whom a sketch may be found elsewhere; Eugene William, born July 23, 1885; and Alice Marion, born July 15, 1894.

GEORGE W. SMITH, the energetic partner of Washington Smith & Co.'s highly flourishing wooden and iron ware manufacturing establishment in Canterbury Center, Windham county, is descended from an old and highly respected family of that town. Among the first of this line, as shown by the town records, were Joseph Smith and Elizabeth Burnap, who were married April 25, 1716-17, and had four children: Jonathan, born Jan. 31, 1718-19; David, April 8, 1721; Mary, Dec. 8, 1723; and John, mentioned below.

(II) John Smith, born Feb. 28, 1725-26, married Mary Jewett, of Norwich, Jan. 16, 1754, and they had eight children: Joannah, born Sept. 13, 1754; Susanna, Oct. 30, 1756; Zedekiah, Feb. 23, 1759; Sibbel, July 17, 1760; Benjamin, Dec. 31, 1761; Roger, who is mentioned below; Walter, Sept. 4, 1773 (married Lydia Mudge); and Esther, Dec. 5, 1777.

(III) Roger Smith, born Oct. 16, 17—, was a life-long resident of Canterbury, and a man of considerable importance in that place. He followed farming and the cooper's trade. He also owned and operated a gristmill, located in the Baldwin District, near what is now the David P. Parks' home. In politics he was a Democrat. His wife, Alice Bingham, born in Scotland, Conn., died at the advanced age of ninety-two. They had children as follows: (1) Jeremiah B. is mentioned below. (2) Mary, born June 25, 1796, never married. (3) Albert, born July 17, 1798, married a Miss Tracey, and resided in Norwich, where he carried on a foundry. (4) John, born July 29, 1800, married, Dec. 10, 1829, Emeline Williams, daughter of Walter Williams, and they had three children—Edmund, born in 1833, who died in 1895; Harriet, born in 1831, who married D. C. Bugbee; and John Orven, born in 1840. (5) Esther, born Nov. 16, 1802, married Pearley Fuller, and resided first in Hanover and later in Scotland, Conn., where she died. (6) Alice and (7) Annis, born May 8, 1805, were twins; the first never married, and died at the age of thirty-four; Annis married a Mr. Reed, and lived in Rhode Island. (8) Marshall, born Aug. 13, 1808, married Clarissa Ensworth, and they had three children, Courtland, Herman, and Lebbeus, who is mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

(IV) Jeremiah Bingham Smith, grandfather of George W., born in Canterbury, Aug. 30, 1794, died Oct. 31, 1869. He made his home in that place through life. For a short time in early manhood he ran a cloth fulling mill, but for the greater part of his life he followed farming. In young manhood he married Ruth Kennedy, who was born in Plainfield, daughter of John Kennedy; and died at the age of twenty-four. He afterward married her sister, Martha Kennedy, who died at the age of sixty-two. By the second marriage there were eight children: Abram married Mary Wilson, and resides in Hartford, Conn.; he worked for many years in Colt's factory. Orwell died at the age of three years, and John Kennedy at twenty-two. Austin, a farmer near Hartford, Conn., married Alice Clark. Washington is mentioned below. Martha married Andrew Bennett (now deceased), of Putnam, Conn. Orin resides at Attawaugan, town of Killingly, Windham Co., Conn. Hudson died in his forty-seventh year.

When about to undertake farming Mr. Smith purchased a 170-acre tract in the southern part of the town, and there worked for the rest of his life with an enterprise born of the keenest interest in his undertakings. So much of his farm did he cultivate that two yoke of oxen and a span of horses were required to do the work, and the improvements he put on the place raised its value several hundred dollars. Upon his death it sold for the actual sum of three thousand dollars. He died at the age of seventy-five, and is buried in the Brewster cemetery, in the Grayhead District.

(V) Washington Smith, father of George W., and senior member of the Smith firm in Canterbury Center, born Jan. 10, 1833, inherited his father's remarkable industry and genius for success. The farm residence restricted his educational privileges to the Pond Hill District school. Naturally practical, at the age of eighteen he decided to learn a trade, and entered the blacksmith shop of George Perry, at Canterbury Center. His progress and his firm determination to take a leading place in the line of his trade decided him at the end of the year to purchase the shop and carry on the business by himself. In 1856 he married Mary Ann Brown, daughter of John and Emeline (Freeman) Brown, and they have had four children: George Washington is mentioned below. Mary E., born in 1860, and Charles F., born May 22, 1864, have both died, the first at the age of seventeen months, and the second at the age of twenty-two years, six months, five days. Ruth K., born June 2, 1867, married Frank Barstow, of Canterbury, son of Dwight Barstow.

As a blacksmith Mr. Smith has always received a large patronage, and he has from time to time greatly enlarged his business. In 1881, when his son entered the partnership, he began the manufacture and repairing of wagons. His special work, however, is still in the blacksmith shop, and though now nearly seventy years old he may be daily seen at his anvil. On Oct. 27, 1901, occurred the fifty-second anniversary of his entrance upon this business. A man of decided opinions, Mr. Smith is an unwavering Republican, and possessed also of sound judgment. He has served his town most acceptably as grand juror and justice of the peace, Both he and his wife are highly esteemed members of the Congregational Church.

George W. Smith was born at Canterbury Center, Sept. 28, 1857, and acquired his education at the school on the Green. Preparatory to assisting his father in business, at the age of nineteen he went to Jewett City, and entered the wood-working establishment of Miner Bros. So rapid was his progress that in the course of a year and a half he was enabled to open a similar works in connection with his father's blacksmith shop. On Aug. 31, 1880, he married Ellen Kinne, who was born Feb. 23, 1857, daughter of Daniel and Alvira (Gallup) Kinne, and granddaughter of John and Mary (Baker) Kinne, and of Wheeler and Molly Gallup. The children of Daniel and Alvira (Gallup) Kinne were born as follows: George, in June, 1846; he married Mary Dennis, and resides in Westerly, R. I. Mary, Oct. 31, 1850; she married Frank Spalding, and lived in East Brooklyn, Conn.; she died April 5, 1890. John, April 15, 1852; he married Emma Kingsbury, and lived in Brooklyn, Conn. Charles, Nov. 28, 1854; he married Lura Horston, and resides in Lisbon, Conn. Ellen is mentioned above. Mr. and Mrs. George W. Smith have had two children: Leroy George, born Aug. 6, 1884, assists his father in business. C. Freemont was born June 24, 1887.

For the first few years of his business life Mr. Smith made a specialty of wagon making and repairing, but recently the manufacture of wooden novelty goods, such as pickers, polo sticks, etc., has more largely engaged his attention. For his goods—despite the constant employment of extra hands—the demand has far exceeded the supply. It is now over twenty-four years since he entered the partnership, and to his excellent management and skillful workmanship are largely due the remarkable prosperity of the firm.

Mr. Smith's popularity has brought him to the front in the public and social affairs of his town. He has at different times been elected to various offices, and now serves on the board of relief. In politics he is a Republican. For the last fifteen years he has been affiliated with the A. O. U. W. of Central Village, and he is an officer of the Canterbury Grange.

JAMES C. PALMER, the secretary of the Windham County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, is one of the highly respected citizens of Brooklyn, Conn. His birth occurred Feb. 28, 1833, in Eastford, formerly Ashford, Conn., and he was almost seven years of age when his parents moved to Brooklyn. Until the age of fourteen he attended school with regularity, and then entered his brother John's store as a clerk. For about five years he continued there, during 1853 serving as postmaster.

In 1855 Mr. Palmer made a trip to Hudson,

Wis., with a view to locating there, but as conditions did not appear favorable, he returned to Brooklyn, and in 1858 entered as a clerk the Windham County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and remained so associated until Jan. 1, 1893, when he was made secretary of the organization, succeeding his brother, John Palmer, upon the latter's resignation. Mr. Palmer is a thoroughly instructed insurance man and most acceptably fills the position of responsibility with which he has so long been identified.

In politics, Mr. Palmer has always been an active Republican, and during the time that his father was the valued judge of probate, he served as his efficient clerk for two years, and also ably assisted Clarence A. Potter during his term as town clerk. Mr. Palmer is so accurate and reliable that he is highly valued in positions where these attributes are absolutely necessary. Honest and upright in all his business dealings, he is also a pleasant, courteous and agreeable gentleman, popular in all circles.

Mr. Palmer was married Oct. 14, 1856, to Katherine F. Cleveland, a native of Brooklyn, and a daughter of Colba C. Cleveland, a merchant of Brooklyn, an old and honored resident. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Palmer were: Ella J., born Nov. 4, 1858, an invalid, at home; Frederick James, born Sept. 28, 1860, who married Rose Shippee, and was an electrician in Hartford, and died July 13, 1892, his children being: Forest, Katherine Delia and Frederick James, Jr.; Lewis S., born Aug. 27, 1867, who is an electrician at Manchester; Mary L., born March 3, 1876, who resides at home; and James S., born June 30, 1878, who is his father's able assistant. In 1901 he was elected tax collector of Brooklyn and is serving as clerk of the court of probate. James S. is also prominent in the affairs of Trinity Church, with which all the family is connected, is both treasurer and secretary and is a member of the Arch Deanery of New London. Mr. Palmer is one of the rising young men of Brooklyn, and is a popular factor in social circles.

GUY PORTER COLLINS, one of the most highly respected citizens and substantial men of Ellington, Tolland county, is a descendant of the Collins family, which at one time had numerous representatives in Columbia, where Benjamin Collins, the great-great-grandfather of our subject, resided.

Benjamin Collins was born in 1690, and died in 1759. Elizabeth, his wife, born in 1700, died in 1778. Their children were: Zorahbabe; Benjamin; Abraham; Rufus; Julius; Phoebe, married to John Woodworth; and Lucy, married to Ebenezer Gary.

Rufus Collins, son of Benjamin, was born in 1726, and he died in 1795.

Deacon Rufus Collins (2), son of Rufus, was born in 1751, in Columbia. He was married three times and was the father of a large family. From Columbia, he went to Ellington and located in the northeast part of the town, where he bought a good farm and followed farming quite successfully until his death, which occurred July 20, 1808, and he is buried in Ellington. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church. Of all his children, only the father of our subject, and a half-brother, Joseph, located in Ellington. Joseph, who was a farmer, later returned to Columbia, where he died.

Jabez Collins, son of Deacon Rufus and the father of our subject, was born Sept. 18, 1782, in Columbia, Conn., and came to Ellington when a small boy, and was reared on the farm. When a young man, he worked at the trade of a joiner and also owned and operated a sawmill on his farm. During his early manhood, he was a farmer, but later his health failed. Having been very industrious, he died in comfortable circumstances. His farm was located one-half a mile south of where his father resided. In politics, he was a staunch Whig, and held a number of the town offices, and for two terms represented Ellington in the State Legislature. For many years he attended the Congregational Church, and his death occurred June 24, 1854.

On March 4, 1812, Jabez Collins was married to Miss Loisa Porter, who was born in Ellington, Nov. 24, 1788, a daughter of Deacon Jonathan Porter (who was a farmer and died July 5, 1793), and his wife Mercy Porter. Mrs. Loisa Porter Collins died Dec. 19, 1829. The children born to Jabez Collins and wife were: Horace P., born July 2, 1812, died July 12, 1812; Julia, born Sept. 10, 1813, died unmarried Nov. 30, 1849; Lemuel A., born Feb. 4, 1816, married Clara B. Pennel, in Portland, Maine, where he died Sept. 9, 1843, having been employed as steward on a steamboat between Boston and Portland, Maine; Louisa, born March 4, 1820, married Carlos E. Kibbe, and died in Ellington Oct. 28, 1892; Jane, born July 22, 1822, is the widow of Franklin Miller, and resides in Ellington; Mariette, born Jan. 26, 1825, is the widow of George Barker, and lives in Windsor, Conn.; Irwin, born July 17, 1827, died March 12, 1828; and Guy Porter, our subject, born Dec. 3, 1829. Jabez Collins wedded May 26, 1831, for his second wife, Clara Kibbe, born July 7, 1786. There was no issue of the second marriage.

Guy Porter Collins was born in Ellington, and received a common school education until he was fifteen years of age. Until his father's death, he assisted the latter upon the home farm, and having become attached to the home, he purchased the interests of the other heirs, and engaged in general farming, tobacco and stock raising until 1871. That year he removed to Ellington Center and purchased his present home, but while living in it, he continued to manage his farm, until 1894, when he retired from active business life. Upon taking possession of the home farm, he erected a fine new house and made many substantial improvements.

On March 21, 1855, Mr. Collins was married to Marinette Moore, born Jan. 30, 1833, a native of Union, Conn., who was brought to Ellington, Conn., in infancy by her parents, Charles W. and Ann (Corbin) Moore. Mr. Moore was a prominent farmer, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. The following family was born to Mr. and Mrs. Collins: (1) Ella Louise, born March 28, 1856, married Willard Philo Fuller, a merchant in Somers, Conn., (a sketch of whom appears elsewhere), and they have one child, Willard C., born April 7, 1889. (2) Abbie Jane, born April 26, 1858, married Sept. 3, 1879, George C. Marcy, a shoe manufacturer of Hartford who attained success before he died in that city. After his death, his widow removed to Ellington, and for several years made her home with her parents until her health failed, and she went to the Adirondacks, where she died April 15, 1895, and she is buried in Ellington; she had one child, Alice L., who died when five years and five months of age. (3) Alice P., born Feb. 10, 1862, died in May, 1882.

In politics, Mr. Collins is a Republican and has served most acceptably on the board of selectmen and one term as chairman of the board. As a member of the Legislature in 1869 he served on the committee on Roads and Bridges. Both he and his wife, as well as their daughter, are earnest members of the Congregational Church at Ellington, of which Mr. Collins has been treasurer as well as member of various social committees. The family is highly thought of in the community, and the success which has followed them is but their well-merited reward. The example of such a man in a community can scarcely be over-estimated, for his uprightness of purpose, his sterling honesty and untarnished reputation demonstrate that after all it is not by evil ways that men succeed, and that to establish forever a good name, is worth more than untold wealth. However, when deeds of charity, of mercy and strict honesty, meet with reward; when a man accumulates his property by legitimate business methods and through legitimate business opportunities, then is the example more striking. Truly may it be said that the history of a nation is the history of its men. New England's wonderful record would never been placed upon the undying pages of fame had it not been for just such men as Guy P. Collins, a worthy descendant of an honorable ancestry.

CHARLES FLETCHER SUMNER, M. D.
It is a well known fact that the descendants of our pioneer families occupy, as a rule, honorable positions in life, and the subject of this biography, Dr. Charles Fletcher Sumner, a prominent physician of Tolland county, furnishes a noteworthy instance. In his successful career he maintains the prestige of a name which has been associated from an early day with the qualities that constitute good citizenship; the Doctor's ancestry are distinguished for noble qualities of heart and brain.

In the paternal line he traces his ancestry for eight generations back to (I) Roger Sumner, of Bicester, Oxfordshire, England, who married Nov. 2, 1601, Joane Franklin, and died Dec. 3, 1608. Their only child was (II) William Sumner, born at Bicester, 1605, married Oct. 22, 1625, Mary West, came to New England in 1636, and settled at Dorchester, Mass. He was selectman for more than twenty years, and was deputy to the General Court 1658-66-70-72-78-81-83-86. His wife died June 7, 1676, and he on Dec. 9, 1688. Their children were William, Joane, Rogers, George, Samuel and Increase.

(III) William Sumner, born at Bicester, married Elizabeth, daughter of Augustine Clement, of Dorchester. He was a mariner, and moved to Boston, where he died in February, 1675. His widow died before 1687.

(IV) Clement Sumner, the son of William Sumner, born Sept. 6, 1671, in Boston, married Margaret Harris May 18, 1698, and lived in Boston. They had the following family: William; Ebenezer; Margaret; Margaret (2); Elizabeth; Samuel; Benjamin.

(V) William Sumner was born March 18, 1699, and married Hannah Hunt, Oct. 11, 1721. She was a daughter of Thomas Hunt, of Lebanon, Conn. In 1732 Mr. Sumner was dismissed from the church in Boston to the church in Hebron. A prominent physician in his day, his field of practice extended through the surrounding country. In 1767 he removed to Claremont, N. H., where he died March 4, 1778, his widow dying April 2, 1781. Their children were as follows: William; Mary; Reuben; Hannah; Clement; Thomas; Thomas (2); Jonathan; Benjamin; Elizabeth; Sarah.

(VI) Reuben Sumner, the father of Rev. Henry Peterson Sumner, was born May 29, 1727, in Hebron, Conn., where he married March 6, 1754, Elizabeth, daughter of Josiah Mack, and there he spent his life, dying April 2, 1807, his wife July 10, 1805. Their children were: Hannah, Elizabeth, Lydia, William, Reuben, Sybil, Abigail, Mary, Henry Peterson, Abigail and Mary.

(VII) Rev. Henry Peterson Sumner, the father of Charles F. Sumner, was born June 10, 1773, in Hebron, Conn., and was married Oct. 11, 1796, to Jerusha, daughter of Solomon Perrin, of Hebron, by whom he had one daughter, Jerusha, born Jan. 22, 1798, at Hebron, who married David Porter in 1817, and died Sept. 29, 1865, her husband surviving her until May 24, 1869. Mrs. Sumner died Feb. 4, 1798, and Sept. 11, of the same year, he married Mary S., daughter of Timothy Goslee, of Glastonbury. He died Jan. 18, 1838, and she July 9, 1875, at Bolton. Their children were as follows: Henry Tudor, born June 21, 1800; Matilda, Dec. 19, 1801, who died in 1808; William Orsemus, March 17, 1804, who died July 17, 1883; Caroline Elizabeth, Jan. 5, 1806; Hester Ann, Feb. 6, 1808, who died Jan. 22, 1894; Mary Matilda, June 25, 1810, who died Feb. 8, 1889; John Wesley, Sept. 6, 1812, who died Feb. 8, 1892; Nancy Lory, Jan. 24, 1815; Charles F., March 28, 1817; Harriet Newell, Dec. 1, 1819, who died May 26, 1894; Sherman Peterson, Oct. 12, 1822, who died July 16, 1889. The Rev. Mr. Sumner received his early education in the district school, but was in every sense of the word a self-taught man. His woolen factory was burned in 1830, and from that time he devoted his labors more largely to his church, the Methodist, as a preacher. Personally he was a man of dignified bearing, and took a stand in politics as a Jacksonian Democrat. His brothers were farmers, and were all located in Hebron, where he served as constable for several years when rather young. A Bible class leader for many years, and an active worker in the church, he proved his deep religious spirit. The last eight years of his life were spent on a farm, where he died Jan. 18, 1838.

(VIII) Charles Fletcher Sumner began his education in the Hebron public schools under the instruction of Nathan P. Tanner, of Columbia, Conn., entering the private school of Isaiah Daggett, Jr., when he was ten years old, and remaining until about 1833, when he attended the private school taught by Rev. James Ely, at Bolton, for a term. At the expiration of this term he taught school in Glastonbury in 1835. The following year he went to Stockbridge, N. Y., where his brother had gone, and where he taught school for three years.

Mr. Sumner began the study of medicine with his brother, Henry Tudor Sumner, in Stockbridge, N. Y., in 1836, and remained there until he entered the University of New York, from which he was graduated in January, 1840, with high honors. For two years he followed the practice of medicine at Stockbridge, when he came to Bolton to open an office, in May, 1842. There he has been successful, and has continued to make his home to the present time. In 1843 he joined the Tolland County Medical Society, the State Medical Association, and is also a member of the American Medical Association and the International Medical Congress. His services have been in demand as medical examiner, and he has been a member of the school board for more than forty years, during much of this time being acting school visitor. Dr. Sumner has always taken an active part in the town affairs of Bolton; and for several years has been justice of the peace. For the Andover District he was judge of probate from 1865 to 1868. The Doctor is a staunch Democrat, and was representative from Bolton in the General Assembly in the sessions of 1859, 1887 and 1888. In the management of the State Reform School at Meriden his services have been conspicuous, he having been appointed on the board of trustees in 1883 by Gov. Waller, and being retained in the position until 1895.

Dr. Sumner was president of the State Medical Society in 1870 and the following year. He has been a member of the Masonic fraternity for over twenty years, and is also affiliated with the I. O. O. F. at Manchester, Conn. In his religion he is associated with the Congregational Church.

Dr. Sumner was married Dec. 1, 1852, to Miss Josephine Maria White, a daughter of Thomas Jefferson and Phoebe Ann (Farmer) White, of Bolton, Conn. To this union were born: (1) Cornelia, born Sept. 6, 1853, who married Frederick L. Case, a paper maker, of Manchester, June 13, 1871, and died July 4, 1873, having become the mother of Frederick Sumner, who was born June 2, 1873; (2) Elizabeth White, born Aug. 7, 1858, died Oct. 4, 1874; (3) Charles Fletcher, Jr., born Sept. 28, 1864, formerly a teacher, but now an employee of the office of State treasurer at Hartford, who married Edna Dean Conklin, of Hartford, Conn., Jan. 10, 1900, and has one daughter, Elizabeth Conklin, born Dec. 31, 1900; (4) Jefferson White, born Dec. 27, 1867, unmarried, who has been the town clerk of Bolton since 1894, was sent to the General Assembly as the representative from Bolton in 1900, and was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention from Bolton; (5) Clement Melville, born Oct. 9, 1871, who was one of the State Delegates to the Constitutional Centennial Celebration at Philadelphia in September, 1887.

Dr. Sumner was instrumental in the formation of the Bolton Free Library Association in 1881, in which he is president and secretary. As a historian and a writer he enjoys a wide reputation throughout this section of the State.

JOHN S. SEARLS. Among the well remembered citizens of Brooklyn, Conn., is the late John S. Searls, who for a period of twenty-seven years acceptably held the trying position of jailer at the Windham county jail, at Brooklyn, a man who, while he upheld the necessary discipline of the institution, so combined humanity and kindness with his administration that his influence was long felt by those with whom he came in contact.

John S. Searls was born in Brooklyn, March 5, 1813, and he was the second child born to John Searls by his first marriage, to Deborah Baker, the one sister being Alice, who married Almon Bolles, Esq., for many years clerk of the court of Windham county. John S. Searls was educated in the common schools of Brooklyn, and while yet a boy learned the carpenter trade under his uncle, Ebenezer Baker, of Brooklyn, in order to be self-supporting. However, he followed his trade but a short time, circumstances opening in another direction a chance for an entirely different career. Going to Buffalo, N. Y., he there engaged in the brokerage business, continued for seven years, and was prospering, when his father wished him to return and take charge of the farm. This request Mr. Searls granted and spent two years operating the homestead farm. Just as he was about to return to Buffalo, he was appointed jailer of the Windham county jail, by high-sheriff Septimus Davison, of Brooklyn.

In many ways this was a very wise selection, for Mr. Searls was a man of robust constitution and rugged health, and while he possessed the tenacity of purpose and the power to uphold the necessary discipline of the prison, he also possessed the discriminating judgment which enabled him to bestow kindness and sympathy where he found that the best method of government. In domestic and social life, he was a man of genial presence and was much beloved.

While so successfully conducting the affairs of the Windham county jail, Mr. Searls' career there had gained him so much prominence that he was offered other positions of responsibility, notably that of warden of the State penitentiary, at Wethersfield, Conn. These offers were declined, and Mr. Searls remained in Windham county for a continuous service of twenty-seven years. At the end of that time he retired from active life in county affairs, accepting, however, the office of first selectman in his city, and efficiently filling the same for several years. Having accumulated large means, he was identified with a number of leading interests, one of these being the Windham County National Bank, in which he was a director.

During all these years of stress and strain, Mr. Searls had been in the enjoyment of good health, and it was a cause of sad surprise, when his death occurred after an illness of but twenty-four hours, March 19, 1889. In his political life, he had always adhered to the principles of the Republican party, while in his religious connection he was not only a consistent member, but also one of the most liberal supporters of the Congregational Church.

Mr. Searls was married Jan. 22, 1845, in Hampton, Conn., to Miss Jane L. Fuller, who was born May 19, 1815. No children were born to this union, but Mrs. Searls still survives her esteemed husband. Mrs. Jane L. Searls comes of most honorable ancestry, her family being one of the oldest and most highly respected in Hampton, Conn. [Extended mention of the same will be found in another part of this volume.]

James Fuller was born in Hampton, where he was reared a farmer boy and obtained the best education afforded at that time in his locality. In his younger years he engaged in the business of buying horses and shipping them to the West Indies, this being interrupted when he was drafted into the service during the war of 1812. Although a man of peace, he faithfully served when New London was threatened by the British troops, and for his valor he was rewarded by a bounty grant of land in the West, which is still owned by the family, although no land was ever claimed on it. The fine farm in Hampton which is now the property of his son, Dwight Fuller, he purchased from Samuel Ashley, and the excellent and commodious buildings on this property he erected, making valuable improvements all over the farm. Mr. Fuller was obliged to earn all he possessed, and his property was acquired by industrious and frugal habits.

James Fuller married Parmelia Warner, of Hartford, Conn., and their children were: James, who married Hannah Bennett, of Linden, Pa., in early life was a boatman on the Erie Canal, but later engaged in farming and died a wealthy man; Mary, who married Simon Fuller, a tanner and shoemaker, resided a number of years in Scotland, Conn., and died in Hartford; Jane L., Mrs. Searls; Josiah, who was first married to Anna Angevine, and second to Mrs. Jennie Brown, and is a retired musician and school teacher, residing at Tarrytown, N. Y.; Albert, a lumber dealer, who died in Charleston, S. C.; Dora Ann, who married Dr. S. W. Skinner, a surgeon in the 1st Conn. Heavy Artillery, during the Civil war, and resides in Toledo, Ohio; John, who married Fannie Root, of Pittsfield, Mass., located in Somerville, Fayette Co., Tenn., and for a period was engaged there in the marble business, in association with his cousin, L. H. Fuller, of St. Louis, but who later went to Florida, engaged in the fruit business, and died there; George, who died in infancy; Dwight, who married Mary Lester, and was a farmer on the homestead, in Hampton; and George W., who married Eunice Hammond. At present he is engaged in farming in Hampton, but in early life he went to the South and was there engaged in business with his brother. From both talented parents he inherited musical ability and is widely known as an accomplished performer on the banjo, his large family all displaying talent in the same direction.

All through life James Fuller was noted for his musical skill and both he and his wife had fine voices, this talent making them highly valued in religious and social circles, as well as in the privacy of domestic life. Mrs. Searls recalls with pride and affection, the sweet singing of both her father and her mother. Both parents were members of the Congregational Church, Mr. Fuller being a valued member of the Ecclesiastical Society. In his early life he was a pronounced Whig, but upon the formation of the Republican party, he attached himself to that and was ever after its strong supporter. Mrs. Searls is one of the most esteemed ladies in Brooklyn, and has a wide circle of appreciative friends.

OSCAR COMAN, an old soldier and large property owner of Putnam, comes of a family well known in Windham county. His grandfather, Stephen Coman, of German descent, resided in the southern part of Killingly. He married Miss Sparks and, after her death, Zubah Graves, and they had ten children: George, Stephen, Uriah, William, Amasa, Amy, Hannah, Mary, Lucy, and John G.

John G. Coman, born and bred in Killingly, was for some time a resident of Thompson, Conn. For a business he worked as a dresser in cotton mills for many years. He married Diana Tyler, daughter of Alseman Tyler. She died in Thompson in March, 1892. Of this union there were eight children: Almeda married Barney Buck, of Thompson, and, after his death, B. M. Kent, of Putnam; Oscar is mentioned below; Viana married Alan A. Chandler, of Thompson, and died in that town in 1901; John L., a retired citizen of Thompson, was engaged in different trades; Ellen married Perris H. Aldredge, and, after his death, Lorin W. Shead, both of Thompson; Atla, a resident of Thompson, married Reuben Town; Frank, now a carpenter of Montville, Conn., married Anna Smith; Clarence resides on the Thompson homestead.

After a number of years Mr. Coman left the cotton factory, and settled on a farm in Thompson, two miles south of New Boston, at the site of "Coman's brick yard," where he engaged in agriculture for the rest of his life. He died in that place at the age of seventy years and six months. Personally he was quiet and unassuming, in politics a Democrat, but not an office seeker.

Oscar Coman, born in Thompson, Oct. 27, 1836, procured his education in that place. So ambitious was he that from the age of nine to seventeen he worked in the Grosvenor Dale mills in summer and attended school in winter. He then worked steadily for four years tending a dresser. After attaining his majority, however, he decided to go into business for himself, and, in company with his brother John, began the manufacture of brick. This he continued until 1862, when he decided to stake all for the sake of the Union. In Thompson, Aug. 9, 1862, he enlisted in Co. D, 18th C. V. I. The battlefield of this regiment was, for the most part, in the Shenandoah valley, and there in the battles of Winchester, New Market, Piedmont, and others, Mr. Coman did service. In the last named battle, June 5, 1864, he was shot through the arm and received a broken rib, on account of which he was sent to Staunton Hospital. When General Hunter left the city he was still there, and among other sick and wounded was soon afterward taken prisoner. For five months Mr. Coman was in Andersonville prison, one month at Milton, Ga., for three months at Florence, S. C., and for a short time in Libby prison, and in the last part of February, 1865, was sent to a place near the mouth of the James River. July 17, 1865, after nearly three years' service, much broken down in health, he was mustered out.

On Dec. 3, 1866, he married Amy Ann Brown, daughter of Liberty Brown, of Dudley, Mass.; she died in Grosvenor Dale, July 24, 1871; and, Oct. 12, 1875, Mr. Coman married for his second wife, Anna E. Jacobs, daughter of Marcus Jacobs, of Thompson. By the first marriage there was one child, Jesse Oscar, now a machinist in the employ of the Universal Winding Company, in Providence, R. I. He was born in Thompson, Oct. 29, 1867, married Lizzie H. Fairbrother, of Providence, and they had one child, Stewart. By the second marriage there were five children: Abbie Estelle, born in Thompson, Oct. 12, 1876, married Frederick R. Stockford, a jeweler and electrician, of Norwood, Mass., and they have had two children, William Oscar and Leroy Stockford; Amy Ann is a successful milliner of Putnam; Clara Louise, born April 9, 1887, attends the Putnam high school. Edwin Leroy and Frederick J. died young, the first at the age of five years, the second aged ten months.

After the war Mr. Coman continued for about four years the very profitable brick business, in which he and his brother had previously been engaged. He then hired out as a traveling salesman for a firm selling goods by sample and patent rights. He travelled through seventeen States, among them California, where he remained about a year. He then returned to Thompson and went on the Marcus Jacobs farm, a 140 acre tract, which he carried on with good success for about fourteen years. Finally, seeing a good opening in the real estate line, in Putnam, he purchased property in that place. After a seven years' residence he moved to Grosvenor Dale, where he engaged in a similar business for about four years, building there several houses and a large brick block.

Mr. Coman now resides in Putnam, where he is a highly respected citizen. He takes a keen interest in public affairs and has served for two years on the board of selectmen. In politics he is a Bryan Democrat. He exerts an influence in religious and fraternal circles, attends the Christian Advent Church, and belongs to A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., of Putnam. Possessed of keen judgment and foresight he has made a thorough success of business.

ORRIN CONVERSE. The Converse family of the town of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., in which town several generations have figured conspicuously from the very dawn of its settlement, in the early part of the eighteenth century, is one of the oldest of New England families, and one of great prominence. For the past one hundred years, such men as Asa, Solvin, Capt. Solva, Capt. Parley, Eliab A., Hon. Julius and others of the name, have been among the foremost citizens of Stafford, largely instrumental in founding, fostering and developing her great industries and building her trade centers.

Away back in the misty past of bygone centuries, the titled family of DeCoigniries held a distinguished place among the Norman nobles of the day, and were in possession of large estates around the Chateau of Coignir. Roger de Coigniries, a member of this family, who was born in Waverly, France, in 1010, accompanied William the Conqueror in his invasion of England, in 1066, and was one of his trusted and able chieftains, and so distinguished himself at the battle of Hastings, that his name was entered on the roll of honor in the record of that battle, placed upon that battlefield by William, and known to fame as the Roll of Battle Abbey.

After the Conquest, the family name was changed to Coniers or Conyers, and tracing the line on down to the present day, we find: Roger de Coniers, son of Roger; Roger (3), son of Roger (2), born in 1134, and died in 1174; Galfred, son of Roger (3); John Conyers, son of Galfred Conyers; Sir Humphrey, son of John; Sir John, son of Sir Humphrey; Roger, son of Sir John; Sir John, son of Roger; Robert, son of Sir John; John, son of Robert; Sir Christopher, son of John; Sir John, son of Sir Christopher; Sir John, son of Sir John; Sir Reginal, son of Sir John; Richard, son of Sir Reginal; Christopher, son of Richard; Deacon Edward, son of Christopher, born in England in 1590, came to Woburn, Mass., in 1630, where he died, in 1663; Sergeant Samuel, son of Deacon Edward Conyers, was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1637, and died in 1669; Samuel, son of Sergeant Samuel, was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1662, and later settled in Thompson, Conn., where he died in 1732; Edward Converse, son of Samuel, was born in Woburn, Mass., in 1696, settled in Thompson, Conn., and died in 1784; Asa, son of Edward, was born in Thompson, Conn., in 1730, and came to Stafford, Conn.; Solvin, son of Asa; Solva, son of Solvin, and Orrin, of this biography.

Edward Converse, first American ancestor of the Stratford branch of the Converse family, was born in 1590, and in 1630, he came with Winthrop to America, and with him settled in Charlestown, near Boston, where he was a man of considerable prominence, and was one of the founders of the first church, now known as the First Church of Boston, and also as the First Church of Charlestown. The town of Woburn, Mass., was incorporated in 1642, and he was one of the first settlers, and became one of the founders of the first church in that town. With him from his English home came his first wife, Sarah, after whose death he married Joanna Sprague, and he died at Woburn, in 1663. His children were: Josiah, James, Samuel and Mary, from some of whom descended the Thompson, Conn., family of Converse, the name first changing to Conyers, then Conyers and later to its present spelling. (The History of Windham county says that Samuel Converse, son of Samuel and Judith (Carter) Converse, and a grandson of Edward, the emigrant, settled in 1710, in Thompson Parish, town of Killingly, in which he was among the very first settlers).

Asa Converse, son of Edward, of Thompson, Conn., was the father of the following children:

Solvin, James, Darius, Asa, Alpheus and Sybil.

Capt. Solvin Converse, son of Asa, was born in 1758, in Stafford, and in 1780 was married to Sarah, daughter of Josiah Holmes, and granddaughter of Deacon David Holmes, who was a son of John Holmes, one of the first settlers of Woodstock, Conn. Deacon David Holmes was the great-grandfather of the famous Oliver Wendell Holmes. The children born to Capt. Solvin and Sarah (Holmes) Converse were: Josiah; Sally, who married Olney Brown, of Union; Lucy, who married David Brown, of Union; Solva, who married Esther Blodgett; Parley, who married Sally Alden; Washington, who died Dec. 29, 1814, at the age of thirteen years; John, who married Wealthy Dimock, and died July 5, 1845; George, whose wife's name was Mary; and Freeman, who married Emily Miller. Capt. Solvin died in Stafford May 13, 1813, at the age of fifty-five years, and his widow July 5, 1845, in her eighty-fifth year.

Capt. Solva Converse, son of Capt. Solvin, was born April 1, 1790, in Stafford, and received only limited educational advantages. Reared on a farm, he followed agricultural life for but a short period, as he saw a larger field of operation opening before him. In his younger days there were no railroads, and freight of all kinds was brought to and from Hartford or other points, by teams, and in the teaming business, in connection with his brother Parley, he laid the foundation of his fortune. For thirty or more years he was extensively interested in the lumber business, and was also extensively engaged in purveying meat through all this district. Mr. Converse was one of the founders and one of the largest holders of stock in the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Co.'s first woolen mill, erected in the village of Stafford Springs, in 1839, and he became the company's first agent, a position he held for some time, later succeeding to the presidency of the company, holding that position for some years, and under his guidance a great and prosperous business was developed.

Beginning life with limited means, Mr. Converse, through his great industry and good management, coupled with rare judgment and fine ability, forged his way to position and to wealth, leaving at his death, a good name, and probably the largest estate ever accumulated in this town. Mr. Converse possessed good, common sense, was far-seeing in business matters, and his counsel was often sought and his advice followed, as it was justly considered safe. In public matters in his town, he frequently served as selectman, and about 1840, he represented the town in the State Legislature. Always public-spirited, he did much for the town, and a large portion of the borough of Stafford Springs stands today as a monument to the name of Converse.

Capt. Converse (a title also acquired by the father and two of his sons, from their service in the old militia, as commanders of companies) was a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Church of Stafford Springs, and he was among the first to contribute to the building of the first edifice of that denomination in 1832, and again to the erection of the building in 1866, which replaced the former one.

In 1812 Capt. Solva Converse was married to Esther Blodgett, who was born Oct. 12, 1790, and died July 5, 1880. She was a daughter of Deacon Alden Blodgett, and a granddaughter of Joshua Blodgett, said to be the first white child born in Stafford, whose father and brother were among the first settlers of the town, coming from Woburn, Mass. To this marriage were born: Almada, who married L. H. Whiton; Adeline, who died aged twenty; Alden S., who died in young manhood; Orrin, of this biography; Josiah; Julius, who married Mira C. Lord; Hannah B., who married M. H. Washburn; and Francis E., Henry S., Washington, and Welcome, all of whom died in infancy. Capt. Solva, the father of these children, died Nov. 22, 1877, and the mother passed away in 1880.

Orrin Converse, son of Capt. Solva, was born on May 5, 1822, on the old Converse homestead, in Stafford. His primary education was received in the common schools of Stafford, and later he spent a short time at Wilbraham Academy. At the age of seventeen years he began to engage in teaming from Hartford and Providence to Stafford, and he also engaged in farm work for some four years. As there were no railroads at this time, he freighted all the provisions for his customers to Stafford from other points, and did an excellent business.

In 1846 began his connection with the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Co., whose employ he entered as a wool spinner, and later was a sorter, remaining in this capacity for some ten years, and then entering the finishing department, where he gave twenty years of service. Soon after entering the mill he became a stockholder, and continued as such until 1876, when he retired from the firm, going back to the comforts of the farm, where he now enjoys his home erected by him in 1848.

In 1850, when the New London & Northern R. R. was built, it was on his farm that the horses were quartered, this large estate comprising 100 acres. Mr. Converse has been practically retired from activity since 1876, having lived an industrious life for many years. Aside from his personal business, as an active and ardent Republican, he has been called upon to serve in a number of local offices, none of which he ever sought, but all of which he filled with efficiency. In the Methodist Church both he and wife are highly valued, and he is chairman of the board of trustees, and has been steward for many years. In many of the important financial and industrial institutions of the locality, Mr. Converse has been interested, having been for many years a director of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs and for a number of years has been vice-president, and still is serving in those capacities. While his brother Josiah was connected with the Orcuttville mill, he was one of the board of directors.

Mr. Converse was first married on Oct. 2, 1843, in a log house, in Armada, McComb Co., Mich., to Miss Maryette Smith, who was born Oct. 20, 1823, a daughter of Calvin and Mary (McNary) Smith, formerly of Stafford, the family moving to Michigan in 1842. Mrs. Converse died Oct. 5, 1876, the mother of children as follows: (1) Reuben Solva, born Oct. 27, 1845, in Stafford, where he now resides, is gifted in a mechanical line. On April 15, 1874, he married Martha Jane Partrick, of Wilton, Conn., and their children are, Harry Orrin, born June 28, 1875; and Mary Eliza, born Dec. 16, 1879. (2) Mary Annette, born Aug. 5, 1853, in Stafford, was married Oct. 29, 1872, to L. Kossuth Lord, and they reside in Parker, S. Dak., where he is engaged in the banking and abstract business. Their two children, Maude and Louette, have both passed away. (3) Anner Frances, born July 10, 1856, in Stafford, was married on July 10, 1888, to Frederick Lorenzo Clisby, of Parker, S. Dak., where he is associated in business with his brother-in-law, the firm name being Lord & Clisby. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Clisby are, Sylvia Converse, born Nov. 28, 1890; and Florence Alden, born April 18, 1896.

Mr. Converse married (second) on Sept. 18, 1878, Ellen Augusta Forbes, who was born Oct. 18, 1835, a daughter of Mahlon and Sarah (Lawrence) Forbes, of Burnside, Conn. There has been no issue of this marriage. Mrs. Converse comes from one of the old and prominent families of East Hartford and is highly regarded for her many fine qualities of head and heart.

RUFUS J. LEONARD, an old and honored citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, has made an enviable record as a farmer and a useful member of the community.

The first Leonards who came to this country from England were two brothers, James and Henry. Henry Leonard settled in the Jerseys, but James Leonard located in the town of Raynham, Mass., and became the ancestor of the New England Leonards. The line of descent to the gentleman whose name heads this writing is through Uriah, the son of James Leonard, William, Jacob, Jacob, Jr., Rufus and Jenks W., the father of Rufus J. The ancestors of Rufus J. Leonard removed from Salem, Mass., to Woodstock, Conn., and from there to Stafford, where many of the family were buried.

Rufus Leonard, the grandfather of Rufus J., was a farmer in Stafford, where he also worked at blacksmithing. For many years he held the office of justice of the peace, and was known as 'Squire Leonard. He died at the age of fifty-nine years. 'Squire Leonard had two wives, a Miss Hicks, and Silence Newell, who survived him many years. These are his children: Calista married Marvin Knowlton, a farmer of West Ashford, Conn.; Jenks W. was the father of Rufus J. Leonard; Horatio married Lucy Moulton, and was a farmer in Stafford. Rufus Leonard and his two sons died within eleven months of each other, the father dying about Jan. 12, 1837; Horatio, about June 20, 1837, and Jenks W. July 18, 1836.

Jenks W. Leonard was born in 1802 in Stafford, and passed his life in his native town, where he was engaged in blacksmithing for a time, but later became the only butcher in the town. In 1836, as noted above, he died from pneumonia, followed by quick consumption. Lucy Pease, his wife, was born in Monson, Mass., and was a daughter of Amos and Tabitha (Firman) Pease. Her father was a large farmer and land owner in Monson. She lived to an old age, and reared the following children: Rufus J.; Amos P., who went west, was married to a Miss Hengel in Jacksonville, Ill., and is now a farmer at Kearney, Neb.; Horatio, who was thrown from a horse and killed when he was fourteen years old; Dr. Elbridge Knowlton, deceased, of Rockville; David P., born March 5, 1835, who married Elizabeth Baldwin, and owned and ran the hotel at Ellington, where he died of pneumonia, April 13, 1892.

Rufus J. Leonard was born in September, 1828, in Stafford, Conn. Losing his father when he was but eight years old, he spent the next eight years of his life in the home of his grandparents. There he worked hard during the farming season and attended the winter school. When he was sixteen years old he went out to face the world alone. By this time he had attained the size and strength of a man, and worked on a farm for money with which to complete his education. By the following fall he had earned enough to carry him through the term at Wilbraham, Mass. That winter he taught school at West Stafford, Conn., receiving eleven dollars a month, and the privilege of boarding around in the district. At one house where he was entertained he had the spare room in the attic, and one morning he found two inches of snow on the roof. Country schools in those days closed early, and Mr. Leonard had saved enough to carry him through the spring term at Wilbraham. During the summer he worked on the farm, and during the winter taught school at Monson, Mass. The next winter he attended a seminary at Warren. Later he taught school at Warren and also again at Monson. There was no royal road to learning for the subject of this review. It was only by the strictest economy that he was able to make his way.

Mr. Leonard became a very successful teacher, was a thorough disciplinarian and a fine instructor. Some very difficult schools were put into his hands, but he acquitted himself well under every condition. For several years he followed teaching, and then bought a general store at Stafford. Here he was doing well, when the store burned down, destroying all the property Mr. Leonard had in the world. Nothing daunted, he began again, this time in the lumbering interests of Stafford, and was able after a time to buy a farm in Tolland. For about twenty years he was engaged in its cultivation. In 1884 he bought his present place in Ellington, and the following year he put up the buildings. He moved upon this farm in 1885, and since that year has been engaged in its cultivation. The most extensive work which he carries on is the raising of about six acres of tobacco annually. From his residence in Ellington the improvements and repairs of the public highways were put in his hands almost exclusively until 1898, when he declined to continue the work on account of his years. A Democrat, he takes broad and liberal views. In Stafford he held the offices of constable and road agent and in the town of Tolland he has held all the local offices in the gift of the people. In 1872 he was a member of the General Assembly, where he was a member of the committee on Humane Institutions. From his residence in Ellington, Mr. Leonard served as justice of the peace until 1898, when his age excluded him from the office.

Mr. Leonard was married April 1, 1853, in Stafford to Mary A. Howlett, who was born in Stafford, Sept. 5, 1830, and was a daughter of Asa L. and Elmira (Davis) Howlett. Mrs. Leonard died Sept. 13, 1859, leaving one child, Oscar A.

Mr. Leonard was again married May 29, 1860, to Adelaide M. Davis, of Stafford, a daughter of Marcus and Elvira (Frink) Davis. She died May 30, 1890. Mr. Leonard was married for the third time to Lucy Pank, of Cherry Valley, N. Y. He is a prosperous and honorable man, and has had a long and industrious career, which is creditable alike to his courage, his lofty ambitions, and his sturdy and industrious character.

LORENZO WEBSTER (deceased) was one of the venerable and esteemed citizens of Rockville, who resided in that city for more than fifty years, and did much for its development from a hamlet to one of the most thriving of the industrial centers of the State of Connecticut.

Lorenzo Webster was born in the town of Union, near the line of Sturbridge, Mass., Jan. 15, 1824, and came first to Rockville in the spring of 1844. His parents were Andrew and Betsey (Tourtellott) Webster, the former of whom was one of the well known citizens of Southbridge, Mass., where he owned much land and was a skilled workman in the woolen mill. He was born in Dudley, Mass., and late in life returned there, bought a farm and died upon it.

Our subject was one of a family of twelve children, all of whom lived to maturity, and married except one, and three of these are yet surviving: Andrew, who lives in Rockville; Fidella, now Mrs. Benj. F. Ellis, of Worcester, Mass.; Adeline, who is Mrs. Melvin Kidder, of Worcester. The education of Mr. Webster was limited, his instruction being entirely in the district schools of the period, and when he was but nine years old he stood on a stool and attended to the cards in a woolen mill in what was called Globe village, in the town of South-bridge. He continued at mill work in this village until 1844, when he came to Rockville, entered first the New England mill as second hand carder and remained in that position for two years, at which time he returned to Globe village and again began work there.

Overcome by sickness, Mr. Webster was obliged to take a year of rest, at the end of which time he returned to Rockville and went into the new Rock mill as overseer in the carding room, and served most efficiently for twenty-four years, when he felt that the time had come for him to give up the work in the mill and devote his time to other occupations. Previous to this he had bought a tract of land adjoining Rockville and sent for his father to come to Rockville, intending that the latter should take charge of the farm, with his own two sons, but the death of his father, succeeded by that of one son, caused him to change his plans and become a farmer himself; this business was entirely new to him, but he very successfully conducted it for a time. Later taking advantage of the progressive spirit which made Rockville become such a busy manufacturing center, he laid out a part of it in lots, and to assist in the good work opened up both Webster and Lawrence streets.

In 1845 Mr. Webster was married in South-bridge, Mass., to Miss Layette J. Dealing, a native of New Haven, a daughter of Jabez Dealing. Her death took place in Rockville, April 12, 1856, and she was buried in Grove Hill cemetery. The children born of this union were: Lorenzo Jabez, who died a youth of sixteen; and Edward A., who died at Quincy, Mass., at the age of thirty-eight. The second marriage of Mr. Webster was on Oct. 19, 1856, to Miss Jerusha Cecilia Ellis, born in Long Meadow, Mass., Dec. 6, 1837, a daughter of Benjamin and Emeline (Kimball) Ellis. Mrs. Webster lived in Long Meadow until she was sixteen years old and then came to Vernon with her parents, where they died. One daughter has been born of this marriage, Nellie Layette.

Early in life Mr. Webster was a Whig, but later became an active Republican, although he favored the Know Nothing party during its short life. The beautiful residence at No. 15 Webster street was his own property and a farm adjoining town was farmed under his direction. The religious connection of the family is with the Union Congregational Church of Rockville.

Mr. Webster took great pride in the growth and development of his city and his memories of it when it was but a quiet hamlet among the hills, were very interesting to the stranger who saw only the later movement and life of a great industrial city. Mr. Webster numbered many old friends among its residents and possessed the esteem of all. His death occurred March 13, 1902, and he was laid to rest in Grove Hill cemetery. His estimable widow survived until Aug. 12, 1902, when she was laid to rest by his side. Probably the life of no other man of his years was more closely identified with Rockville's growth and development; certainly no man was more highly respected. The success of Mr. Webster, while much more than ordinary, to no small extent can be attributed to his fortunate selection of a wife, whose constant help, as well as her good advice and wise counsel, were to him elements of inestimable value; a cheerful helpmate and a prudent wife, she was amiable in disposition, lovable in the family and a friendly neighbor. Her sickness was of only three days duration.

HON. FREDERICK A. JACOBS. This prominent citizen of Danielson has been engaged in business there since he was eighteen years of age, first as a clerk, then as proprietor of a business which under his management has grown to large proportions. The community is very largely indebted to him for its excellent electric railway facilities and for many substantial improvements. He has been in public service as a member of the State Legislature and in various local offices, and ranks as one of the most prominent, influential and successful residents of Killingly, Windham county.

Mr. Jacobs is a representative of one of the oldest New England families. Evidences of record point to Nicholas Jacobs, who in 1633 migrated from Hingham, England, to New England, and settled at Hingham, Mass., as the ancestor of the Mansfield, Conn., family of the same name. In 1707 and 1708 Daniel Jacobs, son of John, and grandson of Nicholas, of Hingham, was one of several who purchased large tracts of land in Ashford and Eastford, Conn.; and later on Nathaniel Jacobs, a son of Joseph, and grandson of Nicholas of Hingham, settled first in Woodstock and soon after in Thompson, Conn., purchasing a tract of land upon which he and his five sons settled, and which became known as the Jacobs District. From the foregoing and other pointers it is concluded that Dr. Joseph Jacobs, the first of record in Mansfield, Conn., was a grandson of Nicholas Jacobs, the emigrant settler.

(III) Dr. Joseph Jacobs, the first physician of Mansfield, resided in that part of the town called Pleasant Valley. He was a large land owner, and had a botanical garden, from which he gathered healing herbs. He married Sarah, born in 1670, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Huckins) Storrs. Samuel Storrs came from England in 1663, and settled in Mansfield, Conn., about 1698, having stopped for a time at Barnstable, Mass., from which place his wife came.

(IV) Samuel Jacobs, son of Joseph Jacobs, married, Feb. 11, 1737, Desire, daughter of Mr.

laughy, or Douty, of Windham, and their children, all born between 1728 and 1746, were: Benjamin, Solomon, William, Daniel and Douty.

(V) Benjamin Jacobs, son of Samuel, born April 30, 1738, married Jan. 14, 1761, Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. John Balcum, and their children, all born between 1763 and 1772, were: Desire, Benjamin and Zalmon.

(VI) Benjamin Jacobs (2), son of Benjamin, and the grandfather of Frederick A. Jacobs, was born Aug. 19, 1765. He married June 28, 1796, Delight Dunham, and had by this marriage three sons and two daughters. His second wife was Lucinda Meacham, and by this marriage he had nine children. Lucinda Meacham was born in 1782, and long survived her husband, dying in Danielson, April 5, 1858. Benjamin Jacobs was a native of Mansfield, lived to be about seventy-five years of age, and died in Smithfield, R. I. He was engaged in business as a plowmaker, and also followed the trade of chairmaking, as the demands of the neighborhood might call upon him. When not otherwise occupied, he worked at the repairing of buildings, and was in fact a natural mechanic, ready to turn his hand to anything. Asa Goodwin Jacobs, of Rockville, whose death occurred March 16, 1902, was the last surviving child of Benjamin Jacobs.

(VII) Oliver Phelps Jacobs, the son of Benjamin and Lucinda (Meacham) Jacobs, was born in Mansfield, Tolland Co., Conn., April 25, 1822. He attended in his early boyhood the district schools, but his father was poor, and he left home when a young man and went to Buffalo, N. Y. There he was employed as a clerk in a store, remaining until after his marriage, when he returned to Danielson (then Danielsonville) and was engaged at different locations, among which was that of clerk for Benjamin Chapman, who conducted a market. Later he was engaged in the insurance and real-estate business for several years, after which he bought out the hardware business of J. P. Chamberlin & Co., in company with his son Edward H., the firm being known as E. H. Jacobs & Co., and was engaged in that business until his death. Several years previous to his death the firm became W. O. Jacobs & Co., W. O. Jacobs having bought the interest of E. H. Jacobs. Oliver P. Jacobs died April 8, 1883, and is buried in Westfield cemetery. In politics he was a Republican. He was a deputy sheriff for a number of years, served as clerk of the borough of Danielson from 1863 to 1868, and held several minor offices in the town and borough. He was a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M.; Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M.; Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; and Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar, at Norwich. He served as past master of the lodge at Danielson. He became a member of St. Alban's Episcopal Church, at Danielson, and was serving as a vestryman at the time of his death. He was an excellent business man, became well to do, and was entirely self-made.

Mr. Jacobs married, Nov. 22, 1843, in Buffalo, N. Y., Charlotte Henrietta Hill, who was born at Bahia, Brazil, Sept. 23, 1824, daughter of Henry and Lucy Monson (Russell) Hill. She died March 25, 1896, and is buried beside her husband in Westfield cemetery. Henry Hill was a native of Guilford, Conn., and was a college graduate, presumably Yale. He served as a consul to Cuba previous to his marriage, and had an interesting and adventurous career. He was married in New York, and later was sent by his government to Rio Janerio. While there he became interested in a large coffee plantation, and was in a way to become immensely wealthy. An insurrection arose among the slaves, and the family were forced to flee in an open boat to an Indian village, which was just at the equator. Mr. Hill's health failing, he left Brazil and returned to the United States in a chartered vessel, leaving his estate in the hands of his business manager. He located at Buffalo, N. Y., where he died. The estate in South America, through the dishonorable dealings of the business manager, passed into other hands, and the family received no return from it. Henry Hill was the father of twelve children, of whom Sophia, widow of Lorenzo Stratton, residing in Chattanooga, Tenn., is the only survivor. Mrs. Oliver P. Jacobs could converse in the Portuguese language.

To Oliver P. and Charlotte Henrietta (Hill) Jacobs were born five children, namely: Edward Hill; George; Frederick A.; William O.; and Annie L. (1) Edward Hill, born Nov. 7, 1844, married Sept. 8, 1870, Ellen Chamberlin. They have one daughter, Annie Elizabeth, born March 4, 1873. Edward H. was engaged in the hardware business in Danielson for several years. He has served as president of the firm of E. H. Jacobs Mfg. Co. since the company was established, and is one of the substantial business men of the town. (2) George, born Nov. 13, 1850, died Nov. 15, 1850. (3) Frederick A., born Oct. 15, 1855, is the subject of this sketch. (4) William O. was born at Danielson, Jan. 11, 1858, and received his education in the common schools, and at the Friends School, at Providence, R. I. He engaged with his father in the hardware business, the firm later becoming W. O. Jacobs & Co., being known as such at the time of the death of William O. He was married Oct. 20, 1884, to Esther A. Burlingame, who was born Feb. 14, 1860. Two children were born to them: Oliver Burlingame, born Jan. 23, 1889; and Agnes, born May 25, 1892. William O. Jacobs was a member of the Congregational Church, and in politics was a Republican. While on a business trip to New York he was taken suddenly ill and died, March 25, 1893. It is claimed that improper medical treatment occasioned his death. Obituaries published at the time of his death showed the high esteem in which he was held. In an extended funeral notice the Windham County Transcript of March 29, 1893, said: "Mr. Jacobs was one of the most discriminatingly enterprising of our rising business men, a growing young citizen from whom much was expected in advancing the business interests of this community, and so far as human foresight can judge, his future was unusually bright, with assured prospect of all that can be reasonably hoped for." The stores of the village were closed during the services, and the funeral was largely attended. (5) Annie L., born Oct. 10, 1852, died April 21, 1854.

Hon. Frederick A. Jacobs was born in Danielson, Oct. 15, 1855, and was educated in the common schools of his native town. He began his business career at the age of eighteen years, as clerk in the hardware store of J. P. Chamberlin & Co., and continued as such until the store was purchased by E. H. & O. P. Jacobs, and a line of mill supplies was added. He continued with the new firm until the hardware business was sold to William O. & O. P. Jacobs. Frederick A., in company with his brother Edward H., continued in the mill supply business under the firm name of E. H. Jacobs & Co., and the business became one of the most successful industries of the town. It was first located in the Franklin block on Main street, afterward overflowing to the Bradford building, in the rear. It was soon obliged to find more commodious quarters, and a new brick factory was built on School street. Since then its capacity has been nearly doubled by the erection of another large building in the rear. The principal business is the making of leather, duck and ticking loom supplies of every description. The firm are also general mill furnishers. They control a number of valuable articles that are in constant demand. The firm was incorporated in 1890, with a capital of $50,000, under the name of the E. H. Jacobs Mfg. Co., and F. A. Jacobs has been treasurer of the company since its organization.

In politics Mr. Jacobs is a staunch Republican. In 1895 he represented Killingly in the Legislature, and served as chairman of the committee on New Towns and Probate Districts, and also served on the committee on Military Affairs. In 1897 he was again chosen to the Legislature, and served as the House chairman of the committee on Federal Relations. In 1903 Mr. Jacobs represented the Sixteenth district in the State Senate and served as chairman of the committee on Military Affairs. He also served on the committee on Senate Appointments. In 1887 he served as warden of the borough. Mr. Jacobs became a director in the First National Bank of Killingly in 1892, and continued as such until the bank was sold in 1895 and went out of existence. He was chosen the first president of the Danielson Board of Trade, organized Jan. 1, 1887, and has held the same ever since. He was secretary of the Village Improvement Society until that organization went out of existence. He has served as president of the Riverview Association since its organization, in August, 1886. He is president of the Quinebaug Country Club, and of the Bohemian Club. He is director in the Danielson Free Library, and in the People's Library Association. He has served as treasurer of the Westfield Congregational Church for ten years, and in 1892 was elected a deacon, which office he held until 1901, when he resigned; he is a member of the Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M.; Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M.; and Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.

Mr. Jacobs was mainly instrumental in securing the construction of the electric railway, under the name of the People's Tramway Co., between Putnam and Danielson. He was the first to agitate the improvement, and through his efforts the first representative of the builders came to Danielson and investigated the proposition. Mr. Jacobs, in spite of many obstacles, was successful, and the line was completed. To him more than to any other individual is due the credit for the completion of the electric railway system, now universally recognized as of inestimable value and benefit to the people of northeastern Connecticut and southern Massachusetts. He was chosen the first president of the People's Tramway Co., and was also president of the Danielson & Norwich Electric Railway Co., and of the Thompson Tramway Co. In 1902 when the above organizations were merged into one concern, he was chosen president of the new organization, known as the Worcester & Connecticut Eastern Railway Co. Mr. Jacobs was also interested in the organization of the Killingly Electric Light & Power Co., became the first president of the same, and served until it was transferred to its present owners, the People's Light and Power Company.

Mr. Jacobs is very public-spirited and progressive, and is ever ready and active in the furtherance of every enterprise which is of benefit to the community. He is liberal with his time and money in the acquirement of these public improvements. Mr. Jacobs has traveled extensively, having visited all parts of his native country, and many of the European countries. He is popular, very unostentatious in manner, and has a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Jacobs married, May 3, 1882, Clara E., daughter of Walter Barber. The latter was then a superintendent in the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, at New Haven, Conn. He is now foreman in the employ of the Thompson, Houston Company, at Lynn, Mass. To Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs have come five children, as follows: Walter Frederick, born Oct. 9, 1883, who attended St. John's Academy, at Manlius, N. Y., and is now a midshipman at the Annapolis Naval Academy, Annapo-is, Md.; Charlotte Clare, born Sept. 28, 1885, who died May 12, 1889; Alice Maxfield, born March 20, 1887; Marjorie Joy, born Jan. 4, 1890; Laura Goodwin, born June 16, 1893.

NATHAN DOANE (deceased). Among the highly respected and well-known citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, who have joined the "great majority," none were more justly esteemed than Nathan Doane, whose death occurred at that place November, 1898.

Isaac Doane, father of Nathan, resided in Stafford, Tolland county, where he followed the occupation of harnessmaker, and there he married Anne Wood. They had three children: Nathan, whose name opens this sketch; John, who was a spinner in early life, but later engaged in farming at Ware, Mass., where he died (he was the father of five sons, four of whom still survive); and Edward, who died young.

Nathan Doane was born Sept. 9, 1809, in Stafford, where he remained until seven years old. He went to Ellington, where he resided with, and worked for, Elijah Hammond until his sixteenth year, meanwhile devoting such time as he was allowed, in the winter months, to school. After another year given to work on the farm, he removed in 1826 to Rockville, where he became an apprentice of John Gilmore to the trade of blacksmith. After finishing his trade he worked for a time as journeyman, and then purchased a shop and began business on his own account, his skill and industry soon bringing a liberal supply of custom, and encouraging him to follow his trade for many years. He gained a reputation for reliability and skill, and was given the contract for the completion of the Rockville mill, at Rockville, constructing half of that building from the foundation. He received in part payment for his work a small mill which formerly occupied the same site, and this he operated for several years, manufacturing satinets. Mr. Doane was one of the stockholders in the Leeds Co., and when that concern failed bought the claims of the creditors, in the settlement acquiring possession of the property, which included the mill, water right, and land adjoining the Hockanum river. The mill he finally sold to the Rock Co., and abandoned active business, spending the rest of his life in the management of his other interests, never actually retiring.

Mr. Doane's blacksmith shop stood on the site of the present Doane building, one of the finest business locations in Rockville. In time he obtained possession of the property, owning the strip from Main street back to Brooklyn street, and after the burning of the wooden structure which had stood there for years, he erected the handsome Doane block, at the corner of Main and Market streets. Mr. Doane was at the time of his death one of the oldest citizens of Rockville, of which he had been a resident for over seventy years, and his memories of the city reached back to a period when it was anything but the thriving manufacturing center it now is. When he first came to the place a railroad had not been dreamed of, stages being the only means of travel, and as he watched and aided in the growth of the city he also took advantage of the opportunities its development afforded him, becoming a well-to-do man. But every dollar he acquired was well earned, and he ever bore the reputation of a deservedly successful, honorable, self-made man. He made purchase of considerable land, which in time became very valuable, what was pasture land in 1850 having become desirable building lots by 1880, and at one time he was one of the largest property owners in Rockville. However, he sold much land in building lots in various parts of the city, and not long before his demise disposed of all his real estate, selling a large tract on Main street to the Maxwell estate, and deeding to his son the Doane building and other property, that he might be released of its care. But he was active to the last, and his death, which occurred at the advanced age of eighty-nine years, was caused by an illness of less than ten weeks duration, with typhoid-pneumonia. As a good man and a progressive, useful citizen, he was sincerely lamented, and his funeral services, which were conducted by Revs. C. E. McKinley and W. J. Yates, were attended by a large number of his fellow citizens.

In disposition Mr. Doane was quiet and entirely unassuming, avoiding display of any kind—a characteristic especially marked in his charities and benevolences. He was generous and kind-hearted beyond the ordinary, and gave his aid to any worthy cause or individual whenever he knew of an occasion, but such actions were always performed in the most unostentatious manner. More than one poor family can thank Nathan Doane that the home or farm which was their all was not lost because of failure to keep up the interest on the mortgage, and many cases of his generosity might be cited. He was public-spirited, and ever ready with means and influence to back any project for the good of his town. When the movement to erect a school on North Park street was started, and the interested parties were casting about for a proper location, he donated the building site of seventy rods; he offered to erect a building costing $75,000 for the use of the Boys' Club, if some one else gave the land. But his native modesty extended to the point of aversion for public life, and therefore he never allowed his name to be presented as a candidate for any public or political office, although he was a staunch Republican in sentiment. For many years he was a supporter of the First Congregational Church, continuing his interest in that body when it became the Union Congregational, of which his wife was a member.

Nathan Doane was married Sept. 14, 1843, to Harriette C., daughter of Eli and Harriette (Cone) Porter, of Manchester, Conn. She survived Mr. Doane, her death occurring Dec. 20, 1899. Three children came to this union: George Sanford, born June 4, 1845; Edward Winslow, born April 28, 1853, who died at the age of four years; and Mary Alice, born Sept. 10, 1855, who also died young. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Doane first resided in a house on the present site of the railroad station, but they passed the greater part of their married life in the old home upon Main street, where Mr. Doane died, although he had sold the property a short time previously. He had bought the Dr. Tillotson house, on Park street, and there intended to pass his remaining days, but death came before his plans were carried out.

GEORGE SANFORD DOANE was born in Rockville, Tolland county, June 4, 1845, and was educated in the district and high schools of that city, from which latter he graduated. After his marriage he engaged in farming in Ellington, Conn., on the farm owned by his father, where he remained about nine years. He then returned to Rockville with his family, and joined his father in looking after the latter's varied interests, continuing thus for about twenty-one years when in March, 1897, he removed to Springfield, Mass., to look after his interests and to engage in the Rescue Mission work of that city and vicinity. This is carried on by a company incorporated May 25, 1894, and the trustees and members of the corporation comprise many of the leading business and prominent men of the city, all, like Mr. Doane (who is a trustee and active worker), moved to give their time and money to the furtherance of this noble charity. The Mission is undenominational, the work reaching beyond Springfield, keeping man from drink and degradation, and many very able men, who are now useful and influential citizens, have been saved by this self-sacrificing and noble work in which Mr. Doane is very much interested.

Mr. Doane married Miss Maria Lucy Cook, of Springfield, Mass., the adopted daughter of John R. and Mary Cook, of Pittsfield. Mrs. Doane was educated in the district schools, the high school, and Miss Wells Seminary, on South street, Pittsfield. She is a member of the Congregational Church at Rockville, but with her husband attends the Ashburn M. E. Church at Springfield. They reside at No. 326 Central street, that city. Mr. and Mrs. Doane have had two children: Nathan W., who died at the age of twenty-four; and Mary Alice, who lived but ten months.

Although George S. Doane has been a lifelong Democrat he has never sought office. Fraternally he is a popular member of Washington Commandery, Knights Templar, and of Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Hartford, and is well known to Freemasons throughout the State. During his residence in Rockville he was an active member of the

M. E. Church, and still retains that connection. He is a gentleman who worthily represents an old and honored Connecticut name.

CAPT. RUFUS THOMPSON HASKINS, one of the prominent and influential citizens of Scotland, Windham county, is a man who holds a unique place in the community in which he resides. Although not a native of the town, he has won a place in the hearts of his neighbors which might be envied by many an older resident. He was born Dec. 29, 1839, in Rochester, Mass., a descendant of one of New England's time-honored and representative families.

(I) Thomas Haskins, the great-grandfather of Capt. Haskins, was a prosperous and thrifty farmer of Rochester, and reared a family of several children, among whom was a son, Daniel, who served in the Colonial army during the war of the Revolution.

(II) Job Haskins, also son of Thomas, was born in Rochester on the home farm, where he grew to manhood. He removed to Plymouth, where he was engaged in the shipyards, but after a few years he returned to Rochester and again engaged in farming, finally settling in Middleborough, Mass., where the remainder of his useful life was spent, and where his death occurred at the ripe old age of eighty-five years. His remains rest in peace in the old burying ground of that place. In politics he was a staunch old line Democrat. He married Susan Hackett, daughter of George Hackett, of Middleborough, where she died and is buried. They were devout Christians, and were well known as charitable, self-sacrificing people. Their children, all now deceased, with the exception of Charles H., were: Clarissa, who married Willard Bump; Job; Phineas, who died in infancy; Susan, who married Benjamin Johnson; Betsey, who married James Bacon; Polly, who died unmarried; Phineas (2); George; Sebra; and Charles H., father of Rufus T.

(III) Charles H. Haskins was born Jan. 28, 1816, in Middleborough, Mass., where he grew to manhood; later he removed to Rochester, Mass., and for eighteen years was engaged in the iron foundries of that town, ten years of which were spent by him in puddling. He then settled on a farm, which he successfully conducted until 1878 when he disposed of it, and removed to Scotland to spend the autumn of his well spent life with his son, Rufus T. He is still (1903) living, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, retaining to a marked degree all his faculties, together with a rugged constitution. In early life he cast his lot with the principles of Democracy and cast his first ballot for Andrew Jackson. He continued to vote for the candidates of that party until 1896, when he became a Republican, casting his vote for William McKinley. He has always possessed a quiet unassuming disposition, yet holds his own opinion on matters of importance. In 1835 he married in Rochester, Mass., Almira Haskins, who was born April 16, 1818, daughter of Thomas Haskins, who was a soldier in the war of 1812. She died in Scotland, Conn., at the home of her son, and is buried in the Scotland cemetery. To this happy union nine children were born: Charles F., of Middleborough, Mass.; Rufus T., our subject; a son that died in infancy; Lucy, who is now the widow of William Benson, and resides in Brockton, Mass.; Almira, who died at the age of five years; Job; Ellen, who married William Snell, and resides in Rochester, Mass.; Andrew, now deceased; and Almira, who married George Parish, and resides in Massachusetts.

(IV) Rufus T. Haskins was born Dec. 29, 1839, in Rochester, Mass., on the home farm, and received his schooling in the district schools of his native town. At the age of fifteen years, having a desire to follow the adventurous life of a seaman, he sailed from New Bedford, Mass., on the bark "Newton," Capt. George Sherman, as a common seaman, and after a thirty-four month voyage of adventure and hardship the vessel was stove in the ice in the Ochotsk Sea, and the crew was compelled to leave her, reaching home on various vessels many months later. Notwithstanding his hazardous experience, the young seaman again set sail on a whaling voyage on the ship "Onward" as boat steerer, under Capt. W. H. Allen, and after three seasons sailing in the same sea wherein the "Newton" was lost, they reached port with over 6,600 barrels of oil. Having still a desire to visit foreign countries he shipped as mate on board a British merchant vessel, and visited many European ports. Returning home he later shipped on board the "Onward" under Capt. Allen as third mate. After making two voyages on that ship, for the latter of which he sailed as mate, he accepted the same berth on board the "Contest." After succeeding in obtaining about 1,400 barrels of oil on this voyage, the ship, together with thirty-one other vessels, was caught in the ice and the crew was compelled to abandon her, taking to the small boats, and for days the men were forced to cut and break their way through the ice for over twenty miles before reaching open water and then cruised for forty miles farther, experiencing untold hardships before they were finally rescued and taken to the Sandwich Islands. From there Mr. Haskins sailed to San Francisco, and came home overland.

After a few months he again set sail on the ship "Jerry Pery" to the Arctic Ocean. While on his voyage, they found the ship "Helen Snow" lodged in the ice and abandoned. The crew of the "Jerry Pery" was divided and Captain Haskins, taking command of the "Helen Snow," after completing a successful season, brought her to San Francisco. Having spent over twenty years of his life on the sea he abandoned that career for a less perilous one, and coming to Scotland in 1869 he purchased the old Tyler homestead and farm of 130 acres, then owned by Egbert Bass, and now known as the "Hillcrest" farm. Here Mr. Haskins has since been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. On July 11, 1867, Capt. Haskins was united in marriage with Miss Mary Ellen Anthony, daughter of Caleb and Acineth (Grammans) Anthony. The children born of this marriage were five in number: (1) Rufus Caleb was born July 24, 1871, in Scotland, Conn., where he attended the district schools. He later learned the trade of blacksmith, and is now successfully engaged in conducting a shop of his own near the homestead farm. (2) Leander Owen, born Feb. 29, 1876, in Scotland, Conn., received his education in the district schools of his native town, and in the Willimantic grammar school. After leaving the latter he was engaged in teaching for a term in Scotland. His father, retiring from the active management of the farm, has turned the same over to him, and he is now conducting one of the best cultivated farms in the town of Scotland. He has taken an active part in agricultural matters, being a member of Shetucket Grange of Scotland, of which he was overseer and master as well as of Pomona and State Granges, in the latter of which he is lecturer. He is a staunch Republican, takes an active part in the ranks of the party, and has served his town as tax-collector. He is a member and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church, and he is public-spirited and alive to the interests of his town. (3) Jessie Almira, born July 13, 1877, in Scotland, married Elwin B. Inman, of Scotland. (4) Flora May, born Nov. 26, 1880, in Scotland, married Daniel Knickerbocker, of Stamford, Conn., where they now reside. (5) Edith Abby, born Jan. 30, 1884, in Scotland, resides at home. She, as well as her sisters, has taken a very active part in the Grange work, and is now serving her second term as secretary of the local Grange. Mrs. Haskins is a noble Christian woman, an ideal wife and a devoted mother, possessing those higher qualities which endear her not only to her immediate family but to all who know her. She is a member of the Christian Church of Hampton, Conn., in which she is a faithful worker. She has also taken an active part in the Grange work, being a member of Shetucket Grange of Scotland.

Capt. Haskins is a man possessing qualities of integrity, sound judgment and business sagacity; a man of upright character, who thinks and speaks for himself. He has always been a consistent and staunch Republican, and his counsel has been sought by members of that party. He has served his town acceptably as a member of the board of selectmen for eight years, assessor for a like number of years, and has held minor offices of the town. He represented his town in the General Assembly in the session of 1884, serving on the important committee on Claims. He was one of the original incorporators and stockholders of the Scotland Creamery Association, of which he was first president, which position he held for ten years. He is socially affiliated with the Masonic Lodge, having joined Social Harmony Lodge, No. 7, A. F. & A. M. of Wareham, Mass. He is also a member of Shetucket Grange, of Scotland, in the organization of which he was active, and which he served as gate keeper, steward and overseer. He is also a member of the Pomona and State Granges. He also served two years as president of the Windham County Agricultural Society. His religion is of the character which finds good in all. Capt. Haskins and his family represent one of Scotland's most honored families and bear the respect and esteem of all who know them.

FROST. The Frost family of the town of Canterbury, Windham county, has given to the country several men who became more or less prominent in the learned professions. It was an intellectual and educated family, many of its members being graduates of the ranking colleges of our country.

In 1895 Rev. Andrew J. Hetrich, in an historical address delivered at Canterbury, made the following allusion to the family:

"Daniel Frost, Jr., son of Deacon Daniel, and his son Daniel C. were both natives of this town, both graduates of Brown University and members of this church. The former was also a worker in the society, was a very able lawyer and temperance reformer, probably exerting a more powerful influence in behalf of that reform than any man in Windham county, and the latter was pastor of the Congregational Church at Hampton, and is now residing in Putnam, at an advanced age. Hezekiah Frost, another son of Deacon Daniel, was graduated at Yale College in 1803, entering the legal profession, and achieved a good position in Windham, Maine."

The forerunner of the family in Canterbury was Stephen Frost, who along with Jonathan Hyde, settled on or in the vicinity of Little River, and was one of the "seven pillars" of the Canterbury Church, which was organized in 1711. His death occurred in that town in 1728. After his death the name of Stephen Frost continues often of record in the affairs of the town. This Stephen was probably the son of the settler and the grandfather of the late Rev. Daniel Clarke Frost, of Putnam, a man of prominence in the Congregational Church and of whom and his family it is especially the purpose of this article to treat.

REV. DANIEL C. FROST was born June 14, 1812, in Windham, Me., a son of Hon. Daniel and a grandson of Hon. Stephen Frost. The last named married Phebe Farnham of Hanover, Conn., and their two children were Hezekiah and Daniel, the former of whom was graduated from Yale College in 1803, and as stated in the historical address referred to in the foregoing, entered the legal profession and achieved good standing in the Windham (Me.) Bar. He died at Portland, Me. Stephen Frost was prominent in town and public affairs in Canterbury, and represented the town in the General Assembly of the State. He was a farmer and for a period was the post carrier for that section. Both he and his wife are buried in the Canterbury cemetery.

Daniel Frost, the other son of Stephen, was a native of Canterbury, and after attending the local schools entered Brown University, from which he was graduated. Having decided upon a legal career, he pursued the study of law under the direction of Judge Greenleaf of Newburyport. He was subsequently admitted to the Bar, located in Canterbury and successfully practiced his profession from 1813 to 1833. At some time during his legal career he practiced for a short period in Windham, Me., and he was also a resident of Franklin county, Mass., during which period he served as a trial justice. Mr. Frost achieved eminence in the profession and became widely known in the lecture field, more particularly in the line of temperance, of which he was a strong advocate. His temperance work was not confined to his locality but extended through New England and in other sections of the country. He made addresses both in Boston and New York City. Mr. Frost in the days of the old Whig party affiliated with it, and on the organization of the Republican party became an advocate of its principles. He represented his town in the State Legislature. His church relations were with the Congregational denomination. Daniel Frost married in Canterbury Conn., Miss Louise Clarke, a native of that town, daughter of Capt. John Clarke, an Englishman of means and a ship owner who came to Boston before the war of the Revolution. During that war Capt. Clarke was in sympathy with the colonies. He located in Canterbury, Conn., after the war and died there. Daniel Frost died in Canterbury, July 18, 1863, and his wife also passed away in the town. She was identified with the Episcopal Church there, of which her father was one of the founders. The children of Daniel Frost and his wife were: Daniel Clarke; Phebe, who married George Corlis, of Providence, R. I.; and Hele Louise. The last named married (first) Dr. Andrew Dean, a prominent physician of Cambridge, N. Y., where he died, leaving two children: Anderson, who died when young; and Jennie, who with her mother resides in Danielson, Conn. She married (second) Hezekiah Danielson, who died in 1882 at Danielson.

Rev. Daniel Clarke Frost, son of Daniel, was reared in the town of Canterbury, Conn., receiving his elementary education in its schools. At the age of sixteen he began teaching school in Northfield, Mass., and had for a pupil the afterward distinguished preacher and evangelist, Rev. Dwight L. Moody. Subsequently the boy school teacher entered Union College, N. Y., from which he was graduated. He then entered Yale Theologic school, from which he was also graduated. He began his ministerial work in 1839 and closed it in 1882, owing to an injury, after a period of forty-three years of active and effective service in the cause of his Master. Among the many parishes Rev. Mr. Frost served were: Sandy Hill and Cohoes, N. Y., Hampton and Northfield, Mass., and Abington, Woodstock, Putnam Heights and Dayville, Conn. For some thirty-two years Mr. Frost was a resident of the town of Killingly, Conn., and a useful member of the Society. He was a staunch advocate of the cause of temperance and was one of the charter members of the Connecticut Temperance Association. In his political views he was a Republican. He served Killingly as judge of probate for six years and was also for sixteen years a member of the board of relief of the town. For some seven years prior to his death, which occurred July 17, 1896, he resided at Putnam, of which place he was one of the most honored citizens.

In 1837 at Glens Falls, N. Y., Mr. Frost was married to Elizabeth Folsom Berry, of that city, a daughter of Sydney and Eliza (Folsom) Berry. Mrs. Frost died in 1889, and with her husband is buried in the Dayville Cemetery. She was a woman of great ability and literary attainments. To this marriage were born four children: (1) Sydney B., well known educator residing in Philadelphia, is graduate of Amherst College. He married (first) Sarah Knowles, of Laurel, Del., and (second) Amy Hull, of Westerly, R. I., and has two children, born to the first marriage,—Frances and Daniel Corlis. (2) Francis entered the Civil war and became a member of Co. D, 1st Conn. Heavy Artillery. He died in 1891. (3) Louise Clarke resides in Webster, Mass. (4) Bessie F. is a resident of Putnam. The latter has had erected on the family plot in Dayville cemetery a handsome Italian marble monument and expended considerable money in beautifying the surroundings.

NATHANIEL A. PATTEN, deceased. Among the well known and substantial citizens of Somers, Tolland county, was Nathaniel A. Patten, who descended from an old family and was the last of a long line of Nathaniels, there having been five more of his name among his forebears.

Nathaniel Patten, his grandfather, was born April 9, 1766, in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., where he was a farmer and became possessed of much land; his residence was on Bald Mountain, near the afford town line, in the town of Somers. His whole life was spent on his farm, where he peacefully passed away Dec. 17, 1816. On Sept. 29, 1796, he was married to Eunice Pomeroy, who was born Dec. 11, 1769, and died May 1, 1822. The children of this marriage were: Nathaniel, born July 22, 1797, a farmer, who died in 1880, unmarried; William, the father of our subject, born July 1, 1799; Eunice, born Nov. 23, 1801, who married

George Raynolds and lived in Long Meadow, Mass., where both died; Mary, born May 16, 1804, who married Henry Allen, a farmer, and lived in Enfield, Conn., where both died; Elizabeth, born Sept. 1, 1806, who married Enos Kellogg, and lived in Somers, later going to Oneida, N. Y., where he was a farmer; Lucinda, born Jan. 10, 1809, who married Eber Patten, a merchant of Stafford, where both died; Justus, born Nov. 23, 1812, who married Abigail Dixon, and resided in Hadley, Mass., where he was engaged as a farmer and carpenter, for many years being at the head of the repair and building force connected with the Mt. Holyoke Ladies Seminary at South Hadley.

William Patten, the father of Nathaniel A., was born on the above mentioned farm, and there his whole life was spent, in agricultural pursuits. After the death of his parents he took entire charge of the property, and by diligent industry amassed ample means. In politics he voted with the Republican party, but he never sought prominence in any way, living a quiet and worthy life, supporting to the extent of his means the Congregational Church, and passing away Nov. 14, 1856, greatly respected and esteemed by the community which he had benefited by his good example.

William Patten was married Jan. 5, 1826, to Lucretia Holmes, a native of Stafford, and a daughter of David Holmes, a farmer of the vicinity. Her death occurred Feb. 3, 1879. She was the mother of three children: Our subject, born April 7, 1828; William Alonzo, born June 25, 1833, who married (first) Marietta Kibbe, daughter of Capt. Calvin Kibbe, and (second) Almira Holmes, daughter of Josiah and Nellie Holmes, who now resides at Stafford Springs, living a retired life, and has a sketch elsewhere; and Julia A., born April 30, 1837, who married Albert F. Allen a farmer of Enfield, Conn., where she died.

Nathaniel A. Patten, the subject of this sketch, was born on the old homestead. His education was acquired in the district schools and the Wilbraham (Mass.) Academy. After leaving school he remained on the home farm until the age of twenty-one, and for several succeeding years worked in various lines. While doing farm work he received $12 per month, and later made a tour through the State, selling Yankee notions. Returning to the farm he assisted his father, and after the latter's death he bought the interests of the other heirs, and until the fall of 1886 engaged in general farming. However, having gained a competence, he then sold this property and removed to the pleasant little village street where he ever afterward resided.

There he purchased what was known as the Dr. E. E. Hamilton place, on Somer street, and during his latter years lived retired, only engaging in the little work on his grounds, which supplied sufficient exercise.

Mr. Patten was married, May 14, 1854, in South Wilbraham, now Hampden, to Mary E. Langdon, who was born Nov. 7, 1832, and who was a native of South Wilbraham, Mass., and a daughter of Noah and Eunice (Torrey) Langdon. The children of this union were three in number. Ella Louise, born Feb. 22, 1856, a lady of much intelligence, refinement and culture, educated at Wellesley College, has been identified with educational and philanthropic works and from 1893 was general secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association of Holyoke, Mass., which position she resigned upon the death of her sister. Julia Maria was born Aug. 18, 1858, and died Sept. 8, 1902. She was a graduate of the Westfield (Mass.) Normal School and the Woman's Hospital Medical College of Chicago. For many years she was one of the leading women physicians of western Massachusetts, practicing in Holyoke, Mass., twenty years. Socially and intellectually she was a woman of brilliant parts. She was prominent in social life and club work, and was always closely identified with the work of her own church and the philanthropic work of the city. William Herbert, born Jan. 18, 1864, died Nov. 7, 1869.

Mr. Patten was a prominent and active Republican, most efficiently filled a number of local offices, and in 1895 represented Somers in the State Legislature, serving on the committee on Sale of Lands. From 1895 until his death he was one of the assessors of the town of Somers and was an incumbent of that office for a longer period than any other individual. Also he was one of the useful members of the board of relief, and under his care every office was filled with an eye single to the public service. The religious connection of the family has always been with the Congregational Church, to which he was a liberal supporter, and encouraged all its benevolent enterprises.

Mr. Patten was a type of one of the right thinking, honest and upright citizens of his county, and a worthy and representative member of a family that has been respected and honored through the State ever since its earliest establishment. His death, which occurred unexpectedly April 2, 1902, was deeply mourned in the community with which he had been so long identified. His remains were laid to rest in the North cemetery.

JOHN E. ELLIS, a well known dairyman residing in Gilead, in the town of Hebron, Tolland county, traces his ancestry back to the time of the "Mayflower," and the name is prominent among those mentioned in the early history of the Colonies.

John Ellis, Jr., came to Plymouth, Mass., in the "Mayflower," in 1620, and was married in 1645 to Elizabeth Freeman, of Sandwich, Mass. Their children were: Bennett, Mordecai, Matthias, Joel, Nathaniel, Samuel, Freeman and John.

John Ellis, the youngest in the family of John, was born in 1661, and married in 1700 Sarah Holmes, by whom he had John and Jonathan.

Deacon John Ellis, son of John and Sarah, was born in Sandwich, Mass., in 1704, and died in Gilead, Conn., in 1792. His wife, Rose, was born in 1709, and died in 1782. Their children were: Jabez, Mary, John, Jr., and Barnabas.

Deacon Jabez Ellis, son of Deacon John, married Mary Sawyer, and they lived together over seventy-five years. He was a farmer in Gilead, but later removed to Lenox, Mass., where he died, aged over one hundred. Prior to his removal to Lenox he was a deacon in the Gilead Congregational Church. To himself and wife were born: Mary, Aug. 18, 1755; Sawyer, Feb. 13, 1757 (great-grandfather of John E.); Ruhamah, March 13, 1763; Jabez, Dec. 12, 1764; Mary (2), July 21, 1767; Mordecai, July 6, 1768; Isaac, March 10, 1772; Buelah, Jan. 28, 1777.

Sawyer Ellis, great-grandfather of John E., was born in Gilead, and followed the occupation of farming ther all his life, residing on the farm occupied by the late Deacon Benjamin S. Ellis. There he died, in the house now standing, on Sept. 4, 1830, just four hours before his son, both dying of typhoid fever, which was then epidemic. During this period no less than six deaths occurred in that house inside of two months. Sawyer Ellis married Abigail Hutchinson, born on Aug. 21, 1761, who died Sept. 8, 1830, and they had one child, Edward Sawyer, born Oct. 6, 1781.

Edward Sawyer Ellis was born in Gilead, on the farm before mentioned, where he resided all his life, engaged in farming, in which he was very successful, becoming well-to-do. In politics he was a Whig. He served as deacon in the Gilead Congregational Church for many years previous to his death, which occurred Sept. 4, 1830, four hours from the death of his father. His first wife was Mercy Rollo of Gilead, who died Feb. 28, 1815, aged thirty, the mother of the following family: William R., born Oct. 12, 1806, died young; Mercy M., born June 22, 1809, died Oct. 30, 1830; Abby L., born Sept. 15, 1810, died Oct. 6, 1830; Mary A., born Aug. 16, 1813, married George Benton, and resided in Gilead until his death, when she removed to Lynn, Mass., and died there (she is buried in Manchester). For his second wife, Edward S. Ellis was married on April 11, 1816, to Lydia Lord of Marlboro, Conn., born May 11, 1785, who died in April, 1867. She bore her husband: William L., born May 11, 1819, married Harriet Sumner, and died in Gilead Aug. 28, 1896; he was a farmer and stock dealer. Lydia Emeline, born Oct. 17, 1821, died Oct. 2, 1863. Samuel H., born June 15, 1822, married Cyrilla Dickinson, was a farmer, and died in East Longmeadow, Mass., Feb. 18, 1892. Sara E., born May 26, 1827, married William Goslee and resided in Glastonbury; later they removed to London, Minn., where she died Aug. 22, 1864. He was a farmer. Benjamin Sawyer was born May 24, 1829.

BENJAMIN SAWYER ELLIS, father of John E.

BENJAMIN S. ELLIS

was born in the house where he died. Having lost his father when an infant, at the age of eleven he went to Colchester, Conn., and made his home with a Mr. Gillette, a farmer, remaining there until he was seventeen. He attended district school in the winter months, and later received instruction at the Bacon Academy, at Colchester. When he returned to Gilead, at about the age of seventeen, he attended a select school kept by the Rev. Charles Nichols, at Gilead. Soon afterward he was employed in a bell factory at East Hampton, Conn., where he remained for about three years; then returned to Gilead, and in company with his brother Samuel, bought the home farm, which they were engaged in farming for several years in partnership. Later Benjamin purchased his brother's interest, and he spent the rest of his life upon the farm, where he died March 20, 1901, after a decline of several years, of muscular paralysis. He is buried at Gilead.

Deacon Ellis was a very hard-working man, beginning with but little capital, but by industry and good judgment, and aided by an excellent wife, he became very successful, and left a comfortable property to his heirs. In politics he was a Republican, and represented Hebron in the State Legislature in 1872; he also held a number of the minor offices of the town. Mr. Ellis was a very active and consistent member of the Gilead Congregational Church, and served as Deacon for over twenty years, being senior deacon for a number of years. The office was offered him for several years before he accepted it. Deacon Ellis attended all of the church meetings whenever it was possible to do so, and took an active part in them. In 1877 he was appointed an honorary member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and represented the Gilead Church in that capacity. For many years he taught a Bible class in the church. Deacon Ellis was a most highly respected citizen, and one to whom posterity can point with pride.

On March 5, 1856, Mr. Ellis married Julia Lord, who was born June 13, 1831, in Gilead, daughter of Elisha and Chloe (Manley) Lord. Mrs. Ellis was born in the same house as was her husband, and there she now resides. To this worthy couple came: John E., was born Dec. 8, 1856; Arthur B., born June 5, 1864, married Carrie E. Brown, of Hartford, is a farmer and resides in Buckingham, Conn.; Addie E., born Jan. 1, 1866, is unmarried, and at home; M. Eloise, born Aug. 13, 1869, is the wife of Ernest S. Newcomb, a farmer of Gilead.

John E. Ellis was born in the home now occupied by his mother, and during his boyhood attended district school and later a select school at Andover, kept by Mrs. James Marsh, an excellent teacher; he was also a pupil at Glastonbury Academy for one term. During this time he was reared to hard work upon the farm, and remained with his father until twenty-one, when he was employed upon farms in the vicinity, by the month. Later, for three years, he drove a four-horse lumber team for J. H. & H. E. Buell, lumber dealers of Gilead. In December, 1885, he rented the farm he now occupies, known as the Gen. Andrew Welles place, and where he is quite extensively engaged in dairying, milking on an average about eighteen cows, and making from sixty to seventy-five pounds of butter weekly, all of which is marketed to regular customers at South Manchester, Conn., he being one of the largest dairymen of the town. In addition, he has managed his father's farm for several years, having about 300 acres in all under his charge.

On Oct. 14, 1880, Mr. Ellis was married to Emily J. Webster, born Aug. 9, 1856, in Hebron, daughter of Dudley and Mary (Strong) Webster. For many years Dudley Webster was a successful farmer of Gilead; he now resides in West Suffield, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were born: Asa Webster, on Nov. 29, 1881; and Clara M., on April 6, 1895. In politics Mr. Ellis is a Republican, and he was elected to the State Legislature of 1900, serving on the joint committee on Constitutional Amendments. Both he and his wife are members of the Gilead Congregational Church, and he is now Sunday-school superintendent, and a deacon of the church. Mr. Ellis is well known, popular and highly respected.

SAMUEL KIMBALL ELLIS, a successful farmer in the town of Ellington, Tolland county, with his home close to the city limits of Rockville, comes from an old family that has many representatives still living in Massachusetts, which was the cradle of the clan in this country.

Harvey Ellis, the grandfather of Samuel K., was a farmer, and resided in East Long Meadow, Mass., where he died in early life at the age of thirty-five years. His widow remarried, and by both marriages became the mother of a large family; several of her children settled in northern Georgia.

Benjamin Ellis, the father of our subject, was born in East Long Meadow, Mass., Jan. 6, 1811, and was bound out at his father's death to a Mr. McIntosh, a neighboring farmer. On becoming of age he entered the employ of Calvin Hall, who lived on Hall Hill, and there made the acquaintance of the young woman who later became his wife. When they were married he settled on the farm of her mother, who was a widow, and engaged in its cultivation for several years. About 1836 he purchased a small farm near Wilbraham, Mass., and there he and his family spent some half a dozen years, when it was sold, the family moving back to another farm in Long Meadow, where they lived until they removed to the old homestead in East Long Meadow, which was the birthplace of Mr. Ellis, and which was owned by his father.

In 1855 Mr. Ellis bought the "Diantha Grant place," in Tolland, which was his home for two years, during which time he was engaged in getting out timber and lumber, the enterprise proving very remunerative. Mr. Ellis also bought the "Andrew Chapman farm," at Vernon Center, and adding to it in after years became known as an extensive landowner. There he spent the last years of his life, his death occurring Oct. 8, 1887. He was interred at Rockville. Many memories survive of his Christian character and genuine manhood. In politics he was a Democrat, and he was ever a public-spirited and upright citizen.

Mr. Ellis married Emeline Kimball, who was born in December, 1811, in Somers, Conn., daughter of Samuel and Susan (Watrous) Kimball, and died April 28, 1867. In her younger days she was a school teacher. To Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were born the following children: (1) Benjamin Franklin, born Dec. 23, 1835, married Fidelia Webster (whose brother Lorenzo is mentioned elsewhere) and lives in Rockville, Conn., where he works as a joiner. (2) Jerusha Cecilia, born Dec. 12, 1837, married Lorenzo Webster in the autumn of 1856. They had one child, Nellie, who married William F. Fay, of Rockville, a musician and teacher. Mrs. Webster died Aug. 13, 1902, and her husband passed away March 12, 1902. Both are interred in the Grove Hill Cemetery, at Rockville. (3) Samuel Kimball is mentioned below. (4) Harvey Spencer, of whom a sketch is given in another place, died March 28, 1895.

Samuel Kimball Ellis was born in Wilbraham, Mass., Oct. 22, 1839, and came to Tolland when quite young. His education was obtained in the district schools and at the Rockville high school. After reaching his majority he remained at home for a short time, and then went to Glastonbury, where he found employment at teaming and farm work with Hubbard & Broadhead, prominent tanners at that time. Mr. Ellis worked for them about a year, when he enlisted, at Glastonbury Sept. 2, 1862, in Company G, 25th Conn. V. I., under Col. George P. Bissell and Capt. Charles H. Talcott. The regiment was recruited from Hartford and Tolland counties, and came together in response to a call for nine months service. It was composed of the very best material, being made up almost exclusively of young men impelled by a patriotic motive, and from the first took a high stand for efficiency and good discipline. Later in its history, when it had been tried in marches and battles, it was thus described by Adj. Gen. Morse in his report to the Legislature for 1864: "This is one of the best nine months' regiments, and bore a conspicuous part in the advance upon and campaign preceding the fall of Port Hudson. By the bravery always displayed on the field of battle, and the patient endurance manifested on many long and arduous marches, it has won for itself a high and lasting reputation." The regiment was mustered into the United States service Nov. 11, 1862, and on the 14th sailed from Hartford for Centerville, to join at that rendezvous the Banks expedition. At Brooklyn the regiment embarked Nov. 29th, in two divisions, on the steamers "May Boardman" and "Che Kiang." Soon after leaving port the vessel on which Mr. Ellis sailed, one which had made many trips in the California trade, ran into a tremendous storm, which threatened the loss of the lives of all the soldiers aboard. The voyage, however, was safely made, and the regiment landed in New Orleans Dec. 14th, and was there put under the command of Gen. Grover, in the brigade commanded by Gen. H. E. Paine, of Wisconsin. Early in the following year, it was brigaded with the 13th Conn., 26th Maine and the 159th N. Y. V. I., and formed the 2d Brigade, 4th Division, 19th Army Corps. The movement on Port Hudson and Vicksburg soon began. The 25th Conn. moved on Bayou Sara as an advance guard under Gen. Banks, and occupied Bayou Montesano, where they built earthworks, bridging Bayou Sara, with much difficulty, and only after serious fighting. The regiment was then seven miles in advance of the army, and in a very exposed and dangerous position. On March 13 and 14, 1863, the regiment participated in the demonstration before Port Hudson, which was intended to cover the movements of Admiral Farragut's fleet. The last of the month they moved over to Donaldson, and marched to Paincourtville, and from there April 1st, to Labadieville, and encamped on Bayou Boeuff several days. During the closing days of that spring they participated in the campaign in West Louisiana, and bore the brunt of the fighting on McWilliams Plantation, one of the severer battles of that campaign, in which the Union forces were driven back with much loss. On May 18th the regiment went on the steamer "St. Maurice" to Bayou Sara, and from May 24th it was engaged in the siege of Port Hudson until its surrender. On May 27th the 25th Conn. led the assault on the Port, crawling on hands and knees for a long distance. For a few days after its surrender the 25th occupied Port Hudson, and was then moved out to Laurel Hill and Donaldsonville to support troops at Bayou LaFourche. During the next few weeks the regiment had a share in many conflicts and skirmishes, some of which took on a serious character, and was sent home Aug. 14, 1863, on the transport "Thomas A. Scott." The men were mustered out at Hartford, Aug. 26, 1863, having made a good record, and while at the front being ever in the center of the field of action. Mr. Ellis was with his regiment during its entire service.

Mr. Ellis met his old employers, and was assured that his situation was waiting for him. He immediately he resumed his place, which he held for several months. In the spring of 1864 he came to Rockville, and entered the employ of his brother-in-law, Lorenzo Webster, remaining with him for years, and being married while engaged with Mr. Webster. After his marriage Mr. Ellis rented a farm, which he cultivated for a time, and then bought a farm in Vernon Center, with his brother Harvey S. There he spent three years, and for seven years was employed at farm work near Talcottville. On March 22, 1879, he purchased his present farm, and at once entered into possession. It consisted of fifty acres, and since then he has bought fifty more. For twelve years he ran a milk route in Rockville, which is now in the hands of his son Frederick K., who owns and runs the route and has greatly increased the trade.

Mr. Ellis was married April 27, 1864, in Rockville, to Miss Sarah Lavina Towne, a native of Grafton, Mass., born Dec. 21, 1846. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are as follows: (1) Frances Lillian, born Nov. 18, 1865, was educated in the district schools and the Rockville high school, and also took two years in the Salem Normal School, which she supplemented with a post-graduate course, paying special attention to the study of languages. She taught a district school in Pepperell, Mass., was principal for two years in the high school at Hubbardston, Mass., and was assistant principal for two years of the Danvers (Mass.) high school. This position she relinquished Sept. 1, 1897, to marry Dr. H. O. Palmer, a practicing physician, at Hubbardston, Mass., who died in February, 1901. Mrs. Palmer has resumed teaching, being now principal of the grammar school at Hubbardston. She is an accomplished woman, and a very successful teacher. (2) Emma G., born Dec. 14, 1867, was educated in the district schools and Rockville high school. On Oct. 9, 1888, she married Clark H. Crane, a farmer of Mansfield, Conn., and they have four children: Luther Clark, born Dec. 5, 1889; Conrad Ellis, Dec. 15, 1893; Burdette William, March 12, 1898; and Rexford Samuel, Jan. 2, 1901. (3) Frederick Kimball, born March 1, 1877, was educated in the district schools, and the Rockville high school. He began driving the milk wagon for his father when he was fourteen years old, attending school during this time, and he now owns and runs the route. He has greatly increased his business, and daily serves many of the best families in Rockville. His marriage, Oct. 19, 1898, was to Bertha C. Walz, daughter of John and Catherine Walz, of Rockville, and they have one child, Palmer Kimball, born Oct. 14, 1900. Mr. Ellis lives on the old homestead. (4) Maybelle L., born Sept. 19, 1879, was educated in the district schools, the Rockville high school, and Huntsinger's Business College, at Hartford. She is a stenographer at the "Massasoit House," in Springfield, Mass. (5) Sara Florence, born March 20, 1882, attended the district schools and was graduated from the Rockville high school, class of 1900; was one year in the Boston University, and later taught school one year at Mansfield, Conn., and is at present a student in the Willimantic Normal School. (6) Samuel Carlton, born May 25, 1885, was educated in the district schools and the Rockville high school, and is at home assisting his brother on the farm.

Mr. Ellis has served as justice of the peace and as constable in both Vernon and Ellington. He is a life member of Burpee Post, No. 71, G. A. R., at Rockville, and in 1898 served as its commander. Mr. Ellis during his military service kept a diary of his daily experiences, and this book is still preserved, and very highly prized. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are members of the Rockville Union Congregational Church. Mr. Ellis is a good citizen, and is known as a keen, but thoroughly upright and honorable business man.

Mrs. Ellis is descended from William Towne, her emigrant ancestor in this country (1640) through Jacob, John, Jonathan, Jacob (2), Sylvanus (born Feb. 15, 1750), Charles (born April 24, 1786) and Charles Harris (born April 6, 1817). Sylvanus Towne, her great-grandfather, served in the Revolutionary war—"marched in Craft's Calvary Company in Lexington Alarm, in Saratoga battle." On May 2, 1838, Charles H. Towne married Fanny Lavina Chase, of Sutton, and through her Mrs. Ellis is descended from Aquila Chase (the emigrant settler about 1640), her line being through Moses, Daniel, Caleb (born Nov. 29, 1722), Nehemiah, and Caleb (2) (father of Mrs. Charles H. Towne), who on Dec. 27, 1806, married Fanny Harris. In the Massachusetts published records of the Revolution there is mention of a Caleb Chase in Capt. David Bachler's Company, Col. Joseph Read's Regiment, 1775, likely of Roxbury identity. There is also a Caleb Chase in Capt. Dan Haw's Company, Col. Samuel Holden Parson's 10th Regiment, 1775, reported enlisted Dec. 28th of that year, and forwarded to camp by John Caldwell, one of the enlistment committee of Worcester county. And in Capt. Nathaniel Hamilton's Company there was a Caleb Chase, receipt dated Ticonderoga Mills, Nov. 3, 1776, for wages from October, 1776.

JOHN H. GARDNER. The history of a State as well as that of a nation is chiefly a chronicle of the lives and deeds of those who have conferred honor and dignity upon society. The world judges the character of a community by that of its representative citizens, and yields its tributes of admiration and respect for the genius, learning and virtues of those whose works and actions constitute the record of a State's prosperity and pride; and it is in their character, as exemplified in probity and benevolence, kindly virtues and integrity in the various relations of life, that are ever afforded worthy examples for emulation and valuable lessons of incentive. To the student of biography there is nothing more interesting than to examine the life history of a self-made man and to detect the essential elements of character which have conserved his success. The subject of this memoir held precedence as one of the honored citizens and business men of Putnam, Windham county, where he lived and labored to goodly ends and where confidence and high regard were accorded him as the natural concomitant of his useful and worthy life.

John Horace Gardner was a native son of the State of Connecticut, having been born in Manchester, Nov. 25, 1837, and having passed passed away in Putnam, this State, Nov. 10, 1896. His father, Horace Gardner, was born in Exeter, R. I., May 3, 1810, and his death occurred in Manchester, Conn., Sept. 22, 1862. On Nov. 25, 1831, he was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Cleverly Annis, who was born in Newton, Mass., Sept. 17, 1811, and who died in Hartford, Conn., April 3, 1883, the daughter of William Annis, a representative of an old family of New England. Horace Gardner was an expert mechanic in connection with the great cotton manufacturing industry of this section of the Union and held many positions of trust and responsibility during his long and active business life, having been superintendent of mills in various parts of Connecticut and at Exeter, R. I. In his family were six children, of whom we enter brief records as follows: Albert E., born in Vernon, Conn., Sept. 25, 1832, who died at Stafford Springs, unmarried, May 3, 1854; Elizabeth Nancy, born at Mansfield, Conn., April 22, 1834, who married Ezra M. Lay, of Manchester, and died in Hartford in 1895 (her husband had been prominently engaged in the sewing machine business for a number of years); Mary Jane, born in Manchester, Oct. 29, 1835, who died in Hartford, Oct. 16, 1880, the wife of Chauncey Moore, a leading photographer of Springfield; John H., the immediate subject of this sketch; Josephine Ethelda, born in Manchester, March 2, 1840, who died in Hartford, May 10, 1877, unmarried; and George Orrin, born in the same place Dec. 5, 1843, who married Eva Cleveland, of Brooklyn, Conn., and died Dec. 11, 1878, having been a clerk in the dry-goods establishment of his brother, the subject of this memoir. The paternal grandfather was William Gardner, a well known resident of Mansfield, this State. He married Elizabeth Fowler, and they became the parents of ten children, namely: Martha, Polly, Job, Horace, Jasper, Albert, Julia, Susan, Orrin and Louise. Horace Gardner, father of John H., was for a number of years superintendent of the Granite cotton mills at Stafford, Conn., and was known as an expert in this line of manufacture and as a man of spotless integrity and marked ability.

When John H. Gardner was five years of age his parents removed from Manchester to Stafford Springs, where he received such educational advantages as were afforded in the public schools of the locality and period and where also he initiated his independent career at the age of sixteen by taking a clerkship in the general store there conducted by Horatio Bolton. He was thus employed for a period of two years and then went to the city of Hartford, where he was identified for a decade with the dry-goods business, as a salesman in the employ of Herman Goldsmith, soon being advanced to the management of the cloak-fitting department in both the wholesale and retail branches of the enterprise, showing that his interest and fidelity were not denied due appreciation. In January, 1869, Mr. Gardner came to Putnam and opened what was known as the People's Store, a dry-goods establishment which was at that time the only mercantile house on the east side of the railroad, or, indeed, in that section of the village. There he conducted a very successful business for the term of ten years, disposing of the same in February, 1879, to Edward Mesner, whereupon he retired from active business life, though he still retained important financial interests in the town until his demise. He was one of the original incorporators of the company which erected the Union Block, one of the best business structures in Putnam, and in July, 1880, he was chosen president of the Putnam Savings Bank, a position which he filled with signal efficiency until his death, being also a member of its board of trustees for a long term of years and promoting its success through his wise counsel and discrimination as an executive. Prior to this, in 1880, he had also been elected a member of the directorate of the First National Bank of Putnam, and was likewise incumbent of this office until death put an end to his useful and active career. He was popularly known as one of the most wise and conservative bankers in the State, and his judgment was confidently relied upon by the leading business men of his home community and by others with whom he came in contact in a public capacity. In private life he was essentially quiet and unassuming, charitable to a marked degree and steadfast in his friendships, which were ever held sacred and inviolate.

The religious faith of Mr. Gardner was that of the Congregational Church, of which he was a devoted and consistent member, holding various official positions and identifying himself with the charities and benevolences of his congregation. His wife also was for many years prominent in the work of the church, having been a teacher in the Sunday-school for eighteen years and prominent in the work of the various church societies. In his early life Mr. Gardner was identified with the Masonic fraternity, in Hartford. In politics he ever accorded a staunch allegiance to the Republican party, and he was one of its prominent and zealous adherents in his section of the State, his advice being frequently sought and held in high regard in the party councils, while his recognized eligibility led to his being chosen as incumbent of offices of distinguished trust and responsibility. He served as a representative of Putnam in the Legislature of 1891 and 1893, and in this body was a member of various important committees, among them being that on Appropriations. He was also for several terms a member of the board of selectmen of Putnam, and in this connection did yeoman service in securing to the town its excellent system of waterworks, while at all times he was known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen, ever ready to lend his influence and tangible aid in the support of every worthy measure tending to conserve the general good.

On Sept. 15, 1863, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Gardner to Miss Mary Wadsworth, who was born in Ellington, Conn., June 6, 1831, the daughter of John and Mary (Warner) Wadsworth, of that place, where the father was for many years a prominent business man. Mrs. Gardner survives her honored husband, residing in the attractive homestead which is so hallowed by the associations and memories of the past years and is revered and loved by a wide circle of devoted friends. No children were born of her marriage.

In studying the lives and characters of prominent and prosperous men we are naturally led to enquire into the secret of their success and the motives that have prompted their actions. Success is not a matter of genius, as is maintained by many, but is rather the result of the application of inherent powers which are given to the average man, and which need only to be quickened by decision and mature judgment until rendered prolific in results. Thus when we trace the careers of those who have risen to high position in public confidence and esteem and have achieved success through normal and legitimate enterprise, we find that in nearly every case they are those who have risen by gradations, fighting their own way and utilizing those common endowments which are given to every man, but having these re-enforced and vitalized by a strenuous persistency of purpose and an integrity that are, unfortunately, not so common. Self-reliance, self-respect, self control, lead on to sovereign power, and these are the traits of character that insure the highest emoluments and the best success. To these may we consistently and gratefully attribute the success that crowned the efforts of the honored subject of this memoir, one of the best known and most successful business men of Windham county and one whose word was a good as any bond ever vouched for. He was a man above reproach, and even calumny never presumed to enter any word of detraction, while his many kind and generous benefactions were so quietly and unostentatiously made that none knew of them save himself and those to whom came the timely ministrations. He was a self-made man in the truest sense of the term, and the heritage which he left to future generations was that of a man whose life was consecrated upon a plane of lofty ideals, with a deep appreciation of his stewardship.

ORRIN STONE ARNOLD, a prominent and successful manufacturer of Killingly, Windham Co., Conn., descends from one of the oldest and most honorable of the early families of the State of Rhode Island.

The Arnold ancestry is one which may well bring a feeling of pride to its representatives, so complete is the record and so honorable the achievements of this conspicuous family. The Arnold genealogical tree needs no props, standing secure, and typified by the sturdy oaks which for generations have shaded the old colonial homes of the family in various localities. The family is of English descent, and its early members were numbered among the most distinguished founders of Rhode Island, and they may be traced back in a connecting line for twenty-five generations.

Thomas and William Arnold, brothers, from Cheselbourne, Dorsetshire, England, descendants in the sixth generation from Roger Arnold, through Thomas, Richard, Richard (2), and Thomas Arnold, became early settlers of Rhode Island. William, born in 1587, married Christian Peak, and with his family sailed from Dartmouth, England, in 1635. On arriving in New England he was for a time at Hingham, thence moving to Providence in 1636, and to Pawtuxet in 1638; he died in 1676. He was one of the original thirteen members of the First Baptist Church of Providence. Thomas Arnold, the other brother, born in 1599, came to America in the ship "Plain Joan," in 1635, and settled in Watertown, Mass. He married (second) Phebe Parkhurst. In 1661 he removed to Providence, R. I., where he died in 1674. His widow died in 1688. Both were prominent and leading citizens of their respective towns, as have been many of their descendants. As may be judged, William and Thomas Arnold were among those who recognized the excellent qualities of Roger Williams (the founder of the city of Providence), and as sympathizers with him in his views on both civil and religious liberty, decided to join their fortunes with his. With their effects they embarked in a canoe, and, after a perilous voyage, finally landed safely at Providence, and history records them as being among the thirteen original proprietors of the town of Providence, Rhode Island.

The town of Coventry, R. I., the home for several generations of the ancestors of Orrin Stone Arnold, of Danielson, Conn., was formed from the town of Warwick in 1741, and in Warwick lived a branch of the descendants of William Arnold, the immigrant settler. In the town are recorded the marriages of a number of the children of Israel Arnold, and the births of the children of several of his grandsons, among them James Arnold, who married Dec. 3, 1740, in East Greenwich, Freelove Burlingame, and their twenty-two children were born between 1741 and 1769, all of record in Warwick, the sons being James, Eleazer, Caleb, David, George, Peleg, Wait, Reuben, Simon and Eleazer, the latter the youngest child, born March 7, 1769. These children were in the sixth generation from William Arnold the settler, their line being through Stephen and Mary (Smith), Israel and Mary (Smith), Israel (2) and Elizabeth (Smith) and James and Freelove (Burlingame) Arnold.

William Arnold, the immigrant settler, had the following family of children: Benedict, born Dec. 21, 1615, who died June 20, 1678, married to Damaris Westcott, and the father of Godsgift, Josias, Benedict, Freelove, Oliver, Caleb, Damaris and Priscilla; Thomas; Stephen, who lived and died in Pawtuxet; a daughter, who married Zachary Rhodes.

Thomas Arnold, the younger of the two brothers who came to America, moved to Smithfield, R. I., Oct. 17, 1661. By his first wife, whose maiden name is unknown, he had three children, two of whom died in infancy, the survivor marrying John Farnum. His second wife was Phoebe Parkhurst, and their children were: Ichabod, who died young; Richard; Thomas, who died single; John; Eleazer; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Comstock.

Benedict Arnold, son of William the settler, resided in Pawtuxet, and his name appears on the first conveyance in the records of the town. It is attached to a memorandum dated March 9, 1639, which was added to a deed conveying a grant of land by Massasoit, the noted Indian chieftain, and this was later confirmed by Chief Miantonomi. His name appears in the list of fifty-four persons to whom the town lots were granted, lots bounded by what are now known as North and South Main and Hope streets. In 1642 he was one of the four inhabitants who, having become dissatisfied with the conduct of Gorton and his company, placed themselves and their lands under the protection of Moss, where they remained for sixteen years, with the exception of Mr. Arnold, who, in 1653, removed to Newport, R. I. We find his name upon the list of commissioners from that place, appointed to adjust certain difficulties and to bring about the union of the towns of Rhode Island under the charter or patent granted by the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England. At the meeting of the General Assembly in 1654, Mr. Arnold was elected a colony officer and in 1657-61 he was president of the colony of Aquidneck, under the charter of King Charles, and was elected governor for several years.

Among the Arnold descendants were men who became prominent in town, State and nation, and women who were noted for wit and beauty. Lieut.-Col. Job Arnold, well remembered as a hero who won distinction at Bull Run and in the Burnside expedition, during the Civil war, was a native of Smithfield, R. I. Still farther back we note that Hon. Oliver Arnold was attorney-general of Rhode Island from 1766 to 1771; Gov. Lemuel Hastings Arnold was representative to the General Assembly in 1826 and succeeded Gov. James Fenner, in May, 1831, serving to 1833, during the Dorr Rebellion, and was one of the executive council in 1845 and later was elected representative to Congress from the Western District; Hon. Samuel Greene Arnold, LL. D., the historian of Rhode Island, was born in Providence in 1821, in the homestead located on the corner of South Main and Planet streets, a noted historical spot, as in this old mansion was planned the capture and burning of the "Gaspee" in 1772. In 1848 Samuel G. Arnold was a trustee of Brown University and in 1852 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor of Rhode Island and re-elected in 1861. In 1862, upon the resignation of Hon. James F. Simmons, he was appointed United States Senator and in 1878 he was made Republican presidential elector. This very incomplete list of the notable members of this prominent family merely indicates the fiber and strength of intellect which it has produced.

Grandfather Elisha Arnold was a descendant of the first of the name in Rhode Island and was a resident of Coventry, where he carried on farming operations during the summers and followed shoemaking during the winters. In his later years he went to Marshall, Mich., to live with his children and there he died. His wife was a member of the Bates family, one which was identified with Windham county, Conn. His three sons were Henry B., Alfred and Otis.

Henry Bates Arnold, son of Elisha and father of Orrin Stone Arnold, was born in Coventry, R. I., and there grew to manhood. He married Alzada Stone, born in Coventry, daughter of Waldo Stone, and a descendant of Hugh Stone, who came to this country between 1655 and 1665; he married Abigail Busecot and died at Providence at the age of ninety years, about 1725. When a young man, Henry B. Arnold followed both farming and school teaching. In 1849 he joined a company for California, going by way of Cape Horn, reached there safely and remained two years, attaining fair success in the mines. On a second trip, taken soon after his return from the first, Mr. Arnold was taken ill on board the ship and died in 1852 shortly before it reached San Francisco; he was buried on an island in the Pacific ocean. His widow remained in Coventry until her son Orrin came to Killingly, when she accompanied him there, and died at his home in Williamsville in 1877. Two sons were born to Henry B. Arnold and his wife, namely: Orrin Stone, of Williamsville; and Denham, born in 1839, who is now a resident of St. Louis, Mo. For a considerable period he occupied a chair in Washington College, but for the last ten years he has been at the head of a College preparatory school, and is a man of high scholarly attainments.

Orrin S. Arnold was born June 24, 1837, in Coventry, R. I. His education was acquired in the public schools of his native town, which he attended until the age of seventeen years, at which time he entered upon a practical line of work in Peck's machine shop in Coventry. His tastes were in the direction of machinery and he soon became a skilled workman. After learning bobbin-making, he followed that occupation for five years in Coventry, in the meantime accumulating means with which to enter into business for himself.

An opportunity of this kind was offered in 1864 at which time Mr. Arnold came to Williamsville, town of Killingly, and purchased a half-interest in the bobbin factory which was then owned and operated there by R. N. Potter. The business was carried on under the firm name of R. N. Potter & Co. until the death of the senior partner, which occurred April 26, 1878, when Mr. Arnold bought out the remaining interest. In 1887 he took in as a partner, G. D. Barber, and for a period the business was conducted under the name of the Arnold and Barber Bobbin Company. At the end of that time Mr. Arnold again became sole proprietor, and since then has carried on this extensive and increasing business alone. Mr. Arnold has found in his capable son, Henry D., an efficient assistant who every year assumes more and more of the responsibility. While this is gratifying, it is not an actual necessity in Mr. Arnold's case, as he possesses the vitality and activity of a much younger man, but the necessity has passed by for him to superintend everything and he feels justified in relieving himself of a part of his duties. The business has much more than trebled since he became its owner, and is now one of the leading industries of the place. The plant is run continuously through the year, giving employment to about twenty-five hands. Mr. Arnold has plans under consideration by which he will soon be able to increase his business fully one-third.

Mr. Arnold is too much of a practical man of business ever to accept political preferment, but his sympathies and interests are with the Republican party. Both he and his estimable wife are members of the Congregational Church, in Williamsville. For a time Mr. Arnold was one of its deacons, but later resigned the office.

Mr. Arnold was married in Killingly, Conn., to Miss Lucy L. M. C. Buck, and two children were born to this union: Henry Denham, born June 10, 1877, who is associated with his father in the bobbin factory; and Fannie Danielson, born Nov. 22, 1879, who died July 8, 1902, the wife of Frank Spaulding and the mother of a little daughter, Dorcas Arnold.

Buck. Capt. Joseph Buck, the grandfather of Mrs. Arnold, was a son of Samuel Buck, who served in Capt. Cady's Regiment during the Revolution, and grandson of Samuel Buck, who came from Rehoboth. Capt. Joseph received his title from the local militia, and remembered meeting Gen. Washington. He was born in Killingly, now Putnam, where he passed his life as a farmer, dying in 1861, at the age of ninety-five years. His wife was Dorcas Fairbanks, a native of Thompson, Conn., who lived to the age of eighty-five years. Their children were: Chloe, who married a Mr. Bragg, of Vermont; Simon, the father of Mrs. Arnold; Abigail, who married William Bartholomew, of Pomfret, Conn.; Martha, who married John Perin, of Thompson, Conn.; Joseph, who married Eliza Alton, lived in Killingly and Putnam, and died in Pawtucket, R. I., leaving two children, Lewis, and Elizabeth Briggs, wife of Nathan Whipple, of Putnam; Mary, who married George Rickard, of Pomfret; Eliza and Elisha, twins, the latter of whom died young, the former of whom married George Perry, of Putnam and lived at the old homestead; and Caroline, who died unmarried at the age of forty-two years. Mrs. Perry was living in 1902 at the age of ninety-one years.

Simon Buck, the father of Mrs. Arnold, was born Sept. 3, 1797, and died Aug. 6, 1869. His second marriage was to Mary Danielson, born Aug. 12, 1797, in Killingly, Conn., who died April 25, 1851. The children of this marriage were: Eunice W., born April 7, 1832, who married George Barber of Worcester, Mass., and died Jan. 6, 1864; Mary Jane, born Aug. 25, 1834, who resides in Worcester, Mass.; Lucy Maria Crosby, born Oct. 22, 1840, who married Orrin Stone Arnold, April 17, 1873; and Fannie Danielson, born Nov. 30, 1842, who married Horace Kendall in 1874 and died Aug. 22, 1881, in Worcester, Mass. By a prior marriage to Eunice Williams of Pomfret, Conn., Simon Buck had two sons, Edwin and Elisha F., the former of whom died in infancy, and the latter in Delavan, Ill., April 17, 1854.

DANIELSON. Through her mother Mrs. Arnold was connected with an old Revolutionary family and one which has from earliest days been prominent in Rhode Island and Connecticut. Mrs. Buck was a daughter of Capt. Samuel Danielson, a son of Samuel Danielson, who was a son of James Danielson, who came from Block Island, R. I., in 1706, and bought of Major Fitch in 1707 all the land that lies between the Quinebaug and Five Mile rivers, and as far north as Alexander's Pond. He laid out Westfield cemetery.

Capt. Samuel Danielson, Jr., served in the Revolutionary war in Capt. Cady's regiment, and went to the Lexington alarm with Gen. Putnam. On March 21, 1777, he was appointed Lieutenant by Gov. Jonathan Trumbull and was commissioned Captain May 16, 1783. He first married Hannah Whitman, of Providence, by whom he had these children: Samuel, Susannah and Martha. His second marriage was to Elizabeth Spaulding, of Killingly, Conn., by whom he had these children: John; Hannah; Elizabeth; Martha; Fannie; J. Willard, born Aug. 12, 1795, who died in Mason, N. H., Feb. 10, 1843; Mary, the mother of Mrs. Arnold, born Aug. 12, 1795, a twin of J. Willard; Lucy; and Thomas. J. Willard married Mary Palmer Roath, born Nov. 3, 1793, who died Jan. 3, 1832, daughter of Abial Roath, of Norwich, Conn. They had a daughter, Mary Roath, who is the wife of Deacon William H. Chollar, of Danielson. A portion of the land which came into the possession of the Danielson family in 1707 is still owned by them.

JAMES H. JOHNSON, a progressive merchant of Scotland, Windham county, and one of the enterprising business men of the town, dates his ancestry back to the colonial days.

The first of the name of whom there is any authentic mention was John Johnson, who in 1663 was granted a portion of land in West Farms, town of Franklin, Conn., and resided in the post known as New Concord, near the western border of the town. His will, made in 1716, divided his property between his wife Susannah and numerous children.

(II) Ebenezer, son of John, born in 1693, died April 13, 1779, aged eighty-six; he married Oct. 29, 1717, Deborah Champion, born in 1696, who died Aug. 27, 1778, aged eighty-two. Their children were: Deborah, born Sept. 15, 1718; Hannah, Dec. 31, 1720; Susannah, July 7, 1723; Isaac, Feb. 9, 1726, who died May 3, 1728; Isaac (Deacon), ancestor; Ebenezer, Feb. 25, 1731; Bethiah, April 16, 1734; Mary, April 7, 1738.

(III) Deacon Isaac, born March 24, 1728, died Nov. 5, 1814, aged eighty-six years, seven months; his wife, Jerusha, born in 1733, died March 10, 1807, aged seventy-four.

(IV) Oliver (I), son of Isaac, born in 1755, died Dec. 22, 1843, aged eighty-eight years, seven months; he married Martha Perkins, born in 1760, who died Nov. 30, 1826, aged sixty-six.

(V) Capt. Oliver, grandfather of James H., born in 1794, died Feb. 16, 1881; he married Abigail K. Hyde, born in 1794, who died Sept. 9, 1846, aged fifty-two. The second wife of Capt. Oliver was Miss Lucretia T. Hyde, of another family. The grandfather was a property owner and farmer in Franklin, where he died. His title of captain was obtained in the war of 1812.

(VI) Oliver L., father of James H., was a native of Franklin, where he grew up and married (first) Martha Anne Mumford, a native of Franklin and a descendant of an old Rhode Island family from Kingston. The second wife was named Anne Elizabeth Agnew, and she was a native of Kentucky, but a descendant of New England stock. The father is now a resident of New Haven, where he has for many years been in the employ of the Consolidated Road. In politics he is a Republican. To the first marriage were born: Lucretia, wife of Henry C. Hatch, of Windham county; John Perkins, a real estate man of Duluth, Minn.; Annie and Oliver Louis, Jr., twins, of whom the former married Christopher Hempstead, of Norwich, Conn., and the latter married Fannie Johnson, of the same city; Clara E., living in New Haven; James H. and Jennie, twins. The latter is Mrs. James Jimson, of Franklin, Conn. By his second marriage Oliver L. Johnson had the following family: Sadie, at home; Isaac H., clerk and book-keeper in his brother's store at Scotland; William, of Duluth, Minn.; George, a traveling salesman in Kansas; Myra, wife of Halsey W. Kelley, of New Haven; Nettie, wife of Percy Boulon, of New York.

(VII) James H. Johnson was born in Franklin, Conn., May 28, 1857. When a boy he went to South Windham and entered Smith, Winchester & Co.'s employ to learn the trade of machinist, and there he remained eleven years, the latter portion of the time being employed in the setting-up room. At the expiration of this period, he accepted a clerkship in the general store of William F. Palmer, of Scotland, Conn. After the death of Mr. Palmer in 1897 Mr. Johnson purchased the business and has since devoted his attention to the store; he has also acted as postmaster since 1891, when he was appointed by President Harrison.

On Nov. 9, 1882, James H. Johnson married Ella B. Palmer, the only daughter of William F. Palmer. Politically Mr. Johnson is a Republican, and socially is a member of the I. O. O. F. of Willimantic, having joined in 1897; and of the Royal Arcanum, of which he has been a member since 1891. Mr. Johnson is in every sense of the word a self-made man, thoroughly abreast of the times, and he conducts his business upon broad gauged lines, winning for himself the confidence of the community, as well as the friendship of his acquaintances.

The great-grandfather of Mrs. Johnson, Vaniah Palmer, was a lifetime resident of the town of Scotland, then known as Windham, and he married Cynthia Fitch.

John Palmer, grandfather, was born in Scotland, March 12, 1795, and married in 1820, Charlotte G. Bingham, their family being: Emily C., William F., Henry W., Lewis C., Sanford C., John P. and Charlotte E.

William F. Palmer was born in Scotland, June 29, 1824, and with the exception of seven years in Springfield, Mass., spent his entire life in his native town. After an elementary education received at the schools near his home, he engaged until the age of twenty-two at farm work. Then for a short time he was employed in teaming and subsequently entered the service of the Hartford, New Haven and Springfield Railroad Company, but soon returned to Scotland and for a brief time again engaged in farming. Later, Mr. Palmer in company with a partner embarked in mercantile business; in 1882 the entire interest was purchased by him, and he continued actively engaged in the conduct of the concern until his death, when Scotland lost one of its most highly respected and beloved citizens.

In 1866, Mr. Palmer was elected to represent the town of Scotland in the Legislature, and in 1872 was appointed postmaster, holding that office until 1891. For many years he held the office of justice of the peace and in 1874 became town clerk and treasurer, and in all of these positions he displayed sterling honesty, uprightness of character, and ability to discharge the many duties pertaining to the several offices. When a young man, he joined the Scotland Congregational Church, and for years was treasurer and clerk of that society, while he always gave liberally towards its support.

On Oct. 4, 1850, Mr. Palmer married Susan B. Webb, a daughter of Thomas Webb, mention of whom is made in the sketch of F. F. Webb, of Willimantic. A daughter was born to this union, Ella Brewer, who became the wife of Mr. James H. Johnson.

HON. JOHN A. FOSTER. Among the prominent citizens to whom the residents of Stafford point with justifiable pride as a true representative of Tolland county, is Hon. John Augustus Foster, who was born in Stafford, Conn., May 16, 1849. His grandfather, John Foster, was a Universalist minister, who married a daughter of William Rice, remembered as the keeper of the hotel on Stafford street.

Col. William Augustus Foster, the distinguished father of John A. Foster, was born March 22, 1811, in Stafford, Conn. and his whole life was devoted to the interests of the section of his birth. His elementary studies were pursued at the common schools, and later he enjoyed the private instruction of Rev. Mr. Knight, a teacher of some reputation in his day. His maternal grandfather, William Rice, took the lad to his home, and under his paternal care he grew to manhood, and from this beloved relative inherited the farm which was his home until his death March 3, 1874.

Col. Foster established a mercantile business on Stafford street, and to this business he later added the care of the farm, finally abandoning the former enterprise for the more congenial duties of agriculture. His general store is still easily recalled by his contemporaries, as for a number of years it was a well-known place of business.

The marriage of Col. Foster occurred June 11, 1845, in Stafford, Conn., his choice of companion being Eunice Lee Grant, who was born in Stafford, April 22, 1829, and died there Jan. 29, 1878. Her ancestral line could be traced back many generations, her parents being Dr. John and Fanny (Hall-Perit) Grant of Stafford, the line then extending through six ancestors: Miner, Oliver, Oliver, Josiah, Samuel and Mathew. The children born to Col. Foster and wife were: (1) William Rice, born April 23, 1846, in Stafford, died in Elmira, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1879. On Feb. 22, 1876, he married in Norfolk, Va., Kate Elizabeth Nichols, who was born in Troy, Pa., Sept. 24, 1854, a daughter of William and Catherine (Lincoln) Nichols. William Rice Foster was a lawyer, attending Yale College, graduated from the Law school in Albany, N.

Y., and until his health failed practiced law in Hartford, Conn. His children were, Leila Lincoln, born in Hartford, Feb. 25, 1877; an infant, born July 13, 1878, which died the same day; and Olive Grant, born in Elmira, N. Y., Sept. 11, 1879. (2) John Augustus was born in Stafford, Conn., May 16, 1849. (3) Lucille Hall Tryon, born May 8, 1851, in Stafford, married in West Hartford Nov. 3, 1880, William Augustus Erving, who was born in Westfield, Mass., April 27, 1847, a son of Daniel Dodge and Cynthia Ann Chapin (Woodward) Erving. He is secretary of the Hartford Co. Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

Col. Foster possessed a liberal share of general knowledge, and ability of no common order, but he had little taste for the tumult and strife of the great world, preferring the simplicity of rural life to the excitements of a more ample field of action. However, he possessed an instinct for public affairs, was clear headed, sound in his judgment, and gifted with a mental grasp which enabled him to grapple with and master intricate questions. This vigor of mind and force of character easily made him one of the leaders and moulders of public opinion in his town. Having been nurtured in the old Whig party, he found the Republican party in accord with his views and immediately became a supporter of its principles. He served as a representative, and also served his district, which was then the 20th, but is now the 24th, in the State Senate.

Col. Foster was at one time high sheriff of the county, was very active in the State militia, and for many years was the colonel of a regiment of cavalry. One of his characteristics was a love of nature, a fondness for the fresh, bracing air, and doubtless his enjoyment of out-door amusements did its part in developing his fine physique and in giving him a commanding presence. His death occurred March 3, 1874, in the sixty-third year of his age. Although not a member of any church, he belonged to the Ecclesiastical Society of Stafford street.

John Augustus Foster, of this sketch, was born in Stafford street and in his boyhood attended the common schools; he then enjoyed one term in Monson Academy, one term at the Woodstock Academy and three years in preparing for Yale, at Bacon Academy, Colchester, Conn. In 1872 he entered Yale College with high hopes, but his application to his books had been too close, and in a few weeks his health was in such a state that he was obliged to relinquish his aspirations in that direction and return to the farm.

Mr. Foster has one of the best farms in the county, comprising 150 acres and productive to a high degree. Dairying is also one of his interests, the products finding a ready sale in Stafford Springs. Like his lamented father he is fond of country life and pursuits, and one of his pleasures is to collect birds. He possesses many beautiful specimens arranged in a very attractive way. Mr. Foster has never neglected his duties as a citizen. A staunch Republican, he has repeatedly served in many offices of trust and responsibility. For several terms he has been a selectman, has been assessor, a member of the board of relief, and also a member of the school committee in his district. In 1900 he was honored by his fellow-citizens by an election as representative, and was on the Pan-American Exposition commission.

On Nov. 21, 1877, Mr. Foster was married to Lillian Potter Crawford, who was a daughter of William M. and Jeannette (Potter) Crawford, of Stafford Springs, and the children of this union are: William Augustus, born March 14, 1879, engaged in business in Palmer, Mass., with E. A. Buck & Co.; Grant Crawford, born July 19, 1881; and Mabel Agnes, born Aug. 24, 1882, both at home.

Mr. Foster is one of the prominent and leading citizens of the county. For many years he has been a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., and was for years active in the Stafford Grange. In religious matters the family attends the Congregational Church at Stafford Springs. The Foster family is an old and well-known one in Connecticut, and of its members none stands any higher in the estimation of his fellow-citizens than does the Hon. John A. Foster, who as private citizen and public official has faithfully discharged every duty imposed upon him.

GEORGE E. SHAW. This name introduces the reader to one of the prominent citizens and representative business men of Putnam, Windham county, who has for a number of years conducted one of the leading jewelry establishments in the city. He is a descendant of one of the most honorable of the early New England families, while his wife traces her ancestry in both the paternal and maternal lines back to the heroes who fought and died in the struggle for the establishment of religious and civil freedom in America.

Names are derived from occupations, peculiarities, places of birth, and various other agencies. The name of Shaw is accounted for in this manner. In a glossary in "Burns's Works" the word "shaw" is defined as "a small wood in a hollow," i. e., a grove in a valley, the people living there being called "Shaw." There are numerous families of the same name in no way connected, but trace any Shaw far enough and you will find he came from Scotland. George E. Shaw jocularly relates an incident concerning the name. One of the family, being told that "Shaw" came from "a grove in a valley," said, "Light timber," but added, "a match for any one," and the present members accept the amendment.

Edward Shaw of Scotland married Mary Ann Chalmers, and their family consisted of seven sons and four daughters, namely: David, who died June 30, 1779, in Jamaica; William, deceased in London, December of 1799; John, deceased in 1804; Edward, who also died in Jamaica, in 1806; James, the grandfather of our subject; George, deceased in Jamaica, 1819; Thomas, deceased in London, subsequent to 1838; Nellie, who became the wife of Mr. Baxter, and died in Dundee, Scotland, Nov. 3, 1796; Mary Ann, the wife of Mr. Spink, who died in Dundee, Dec. 30, 1819; Allison, wife of Alexander Derwood, who died in Arbroath, May 30, 1823; Margaret, who became the wife of John Ogg, and died in Arbroath, Aug. 11, 1838.

Of this family, Captain James Shaw, grandfather of George E., was born Jan. 20, 1773, in Arbroath, Scotland. He became the founder of the Shaw family in America. He was a skilled navigator, before coming to America had sailed to all parts of the world, and in the later years of his life was sailing master for the large importing houses of Brown & Ives, and Edward Carrington, of Providence, R. I. He died in Providence, March 15, 1812. The following is an excerpt from the Providence Gazette of March 21, 1812, in an article concerning his career:

"He was a native of Scotland and came to this country in early life. Possessing all those traits of honesty, industry, and steadfast resolution which characterize his fellow countrymen, joined with an agreeable and affable disposition, he soon attracted the attention and encouragement of the principal merchants of this and other seaport towns, who employed him in their most important concerns as a nautical commander. Those who have had the pleasure of his acquaintance can say with the poet, 'A man resolved and steady to his trust, averse to ill and obstinately just.' His friends most sincerely condole with his widow and children, who have by this afflictive dispensation of Divine Providence been bereaved of an affectionate husband and tender parent. His funeral was attended by the Marine Society and the Masonic Lodge."

Captain James Shaw married Elizabeth Westcote, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Hoppin) Westcote. She was the sixth in descent from Stukely Westcote, who came to Rhode Island with Roger Williams. They had five children. James was born July 30, 1801, in Providence, where he died March 27, 1880. He married Eliza Field Godfrey. He was popularly known as General Shaw, and was for many years of the mercantile firm of Shaw & Earle. He was a captain of the First Light Infantry in 1831 at the time of the memorable "Olney Lane" riot, and by order of the sheriff promptly dispersed the mob with ball cartridges when the power of the civil authorities had proven ineffective. He commanded the second brigade, R. I. militia from 1844 to 1850. His children were: James; Richard Godfrey; John Preston; Frank Herbert, deceased in infancy; Mary Elizabeth; Anna Frances; Frederick; Mary E.; Charles Ogg; and Charles Edward, the three last named dying in infancy. George W. is mentioned below. Edward, born in January, 1809, learned the watch-maker's trade, and settled in Thompson, Conn., about 1830, where he became one of the most prominent men in the place, both in civil affairs and in the church. About 1862 he removed to Putnam, where he remained until his death, which occurred in Philadelphia while on a visit to the Centennial Exposition in 1876. He married Hannah G., daughter of Squire William Larned, of Thompson. There were no children. John, born in December, 1802, died in Augusta, Ga., in 1833, a bachelor. He was a member of the firm of Shaw & Dean, of Providence. Rosamond was born in October, 1812, in Providence, where she died a spinster, in 1842.

George W. Shaw was born Oct. 15, 1806, in Providence, and died June 25, 1875, in Thompson, Conn. He married May 31, 1843, Abbey Carpenter, who was born Feb. 5, 1816, in Thompson. Her father was Richard Carpenter, her mother Cynthia Walker. She died April 21, 1890, aged seventy-four years, and is buried in Putnam, Conn. Her oldest child, Rosamond, was born Aug. 19, 1844, in Thompson, and died July 10, 1847. Emma, born Sept. 3, 1846, married May 19, 1893, Frederick William Colcleugh of Selkirk, Manitoba; Mrs. Emma Colcleugh is an authoress and writer of note and is at present (1902) on the staff of the Providence Journal, as special writer, on a tour through Central Africa. Her writings have attracted widespread attention. Julia, born May 19, 1850, has been a teacher for many years in Thompson and Putnam, and resides in the former town, where she now tutors private pupils. George E. is the subject of this review. Edward was born Jan. 19, 1857, and is a cotton goods broker in Providence. He married June 3, 1879, Carrie Amelia Knight, of Providence, and they have one child, Marian, born Dec. 25, 1884, who died aged thirteen years.

The father of this family was a shell worker by trade, making combs, jewelry, etc., from tortoise shells. He worked for several years for Claflin & Co., of Providence, and later about 1836, came to Thompson, where he operated a shop of his own. He was a great artist in his line, and while he plied his trade was successful. The business finally became unprofitable owing to a change in fashions, and he was compelled to abandon it. He was a master workman, and received a diploma from the American Institute for a tortoise shell bugle which he constructed. He was also the inventor of several useful articles, among them a wind-mill for which he took out several patents. He had a genius for mechanical construction. The latter years of his life were passed in Thompson, where he died, and now lies buried in Putnam. He and his wife were active and consistent members of the West Thompson M. E. Church. In political opinion he was a Jeffersonian Democrat, but never cared for public preferment. Both he and Mrs. Shaw were highly esteemed in the village where they passed the greater part of their married life.

George E. Shaw is the fourth child of his parents. His birthplace was Thompson, the date Jan. 20, 1853. He passed his childhood in his native village, attending the public schools and absorbing in the manifold ways known to the average "town" boy exclusively that equally important branch of learning which has for its end the giving of a proper balance and poise for the duties of life. At fifteen he became an inmate of his uncle Edward Shaw's home in Putnam, where he had the advantage of the newly started high school, then under Latham Fitch as principal. In his leisure hours he gave much attention to the business of his uncle, who conducted a jewelry store and was an expert watchmaker. In this manner he soon became thoroughly conversant with the details of the business, and on the death of his uncle in 1876, was capable of assuming entire charge. In the next year the establishment was completely destroyed by fire, a disaster which would have overwhelmed most young business men. But taking counsel of his courage, Mr. Shaw at once fitted up a new store and began again. He had hardly got "on his feet" when in 1881 he again suffered the loss of his stock by fire. But more determined than ever to succeed, he planned on a larger scale than had yet been attempted in his line in the city, and the new establishment gradually assumed its present proportions. It is doubtful if there is a jewelry store outside the large cities having better fixtures than this one, and the excellence and variety of the stock has caused it to become a household name throughout that section of the country. As the years passed Mr. Shaw has added lines of goods not usually carried in a business of this nature. In what he styles the "Annex" he has built up an excellent patronage in sewing machines, pianos and organs, and for years has been a leader in the sale of bicycles. Mr. Shaw has occasion to look with pride upon the record he has made in Putnam as a merchant.

May 4, 1875, was the date of the beginning of the family life of Mr. Shaw, as on that day he married Miss Ellen S. Sharpe, of Abington, the officiating minister being Rev. Thomas M. Boss. A daughter, Ruth Elizabeth, was born to them March 10, 1876. Ruth was given every advantage that a refined home and superior educational institutions could furnish, her literary education being acquired in the Putnam high school and Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass., where she graduated in the class of 1895. She early developed musical talent of a high order and for four years after leaving school taught that branch successfully in the Putnam and Willimantic schools. On Oct. 18, 1899, she was joined in marriage to Silas Mandeville Wheelock, son of Eugene A. and Sarah Smith (Taft) Wheelock, of Putnam, and is the mother of a daughter, Sylvia, born Nov. 26, 1900.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Shaw and their daughter are active and helpful members of the Second Congregational Church, in which he has for two years been identified in an official way with the Sunday-school as superintendent, holding that responsible position at the present time. Mrs. Shaw is an active worker in the different societies of the church, the Ladies' Aid finding in her a strong supporter.

In the public life of the community Mr. Shaw has been a leading factor. He was the originator and subsequent prime mover in the Business Men's Association, an organization to which can be credited many of the successful enterprises of Putnam, notably the Putnam Water Company and Putnam Foundry and Machine Corporation. Of the latter company he is a director and is also one of the incorporators and present directors and secretary of the Water Company. Mr. Shaw has the credit of being one of the first agitators for a pure and adequate water supply for Putnam. He was manager of the Electric Light and Power Company for a year, and one of the incorporators of the Putnam Box Corporation. He has always taken an active interest in the Putnam Library Association, and is one of the board of managers. The fire department of the city has also found in him an interested friend. In his earlier years he showed his loyalty to the State by a five-year service in the C. N. G. These facts serve to show the helpful character of the man. One thing he has always eschewed, at least so far as public preferment is concerned, and that is, politics. He, however, is staunchly Republican, and delights in the success of the nominees of that party.

Mr. Shaw belongs to several of the best fraternal societies, and is active in promulgating the principles for which they stand. He is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, F. & A. M., and of Putnam Lodge, No. 19, A. O. U. W.; Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, in which he has passed through all the chairs, and has also served as a member of the committee on Laws of the Grand Lodge.

SHARPE. The family of which Mrs. Shaw is an honored member has been closely identified with the history of New England since the Pilgrims landed on its "rock bound shores." Her father was Deacon Clement Dwight Sharpe, born Aug. 30, 1818, in Abington, Conn., where he died April 8, 1858, from the inhalation of flames from burning brush. He was a man of fine mold of character and of much influence in his community. In disposition he was jovial and companionable. His chief social recreation was in the line of music, and he was an excellent singer, a master of the technique of the voice, and served many years in the church as leader of the choir. He first married Mary Ann Chase, of Killingly, who was the mother of Sarah, born Dec. 21, 1846, who married Ripley Davis Allen of Hartford, and of Amelia, deceased at twenty years in Brooklyn. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Sharpe married Abbey Elizabeth Averill, Sept. 13, 1854, whose children are: Ellen Sophia, born April 10, 1856 in Abington, Mrs. Shaw; and Clement Dwight, born Oct. 12, 1857, who married Cora F. Sharpe, born July 24, 1859, daughter of William H. Sharpe, of Putnam.

The mother of these children was born Jan. 14, 1829, in Pomfret, Conn., and died in Putnam, May 25, 1889. She was the daughter of Lewis and Hannah (Burton) Averill. Lewis was the son of Frederick and Lucretia (Waldo) Averill. Lucretia's father was Jonathan Waldo, of distinguished Revolutionary fame, born March 28, 1728, in Canterbury, Conn., son of Daniel, who was the son of Deacon Cornelius Waldo. Daniel Waldo was born in Chelmsford, Mass., and married Susanna, daughter of Samuel Adams, who was the grandfather of Admiral Graves, of Cromwell's navy. Returning now to the Averills, Frederick was the son of Stephen and Sarah (Hendee) Averill, and a brother, Stephen, served in the Revolution. Stephen (1) was born in Hampton and removed to Pomfret in 1770; his second wife was Mrs. Mehitable (Dana) Allen; his father was William (3) and his mother Ruth Bemis. William removed to Hampton from Topsfield, Mass., in 1714; his father was William (2), his mother Hannah Jackson. William (2) was the son of William (1) and Abigail Averill, the former of whom was born in 1603 in Worcestershire, England, and died in 1653 in Ipswich, Mass. They were the parents of seven children, who were all born in Broadway, Worcestershire, and all came to America about 1635-36, the father in 1638 purchasing land.

Returning to Hannah Burton, the maternal grandmother of Mrs. Shaw, she was the daughter of Olney and Abigail (Burlingame) Burton. Olney was the grandson of Rufus Burton and Abigail Snell (daughter of Daniel), great-grandson of John and Mary Burton, great-great-grandson of John and Mary, and great-great-great-grandson of William Burton and Hannah Wicks, of Warwick, R. I. There were eight members of the Burton family from Connecticut in the Revolutionary war: Daniel, Ephraim J., Jeremiah, Joseph, Judson, Oliver, Samuel and William.

The following well-written paper by Mrs. George Shaw, who is a prominent member of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter, D. A. R., will serve to introduce the reader to the early history of the Sharpe family:

"The Sharpe family is one of great antiquity especially at Bradford and Little Horton, England where the earliest records of it exist. The name at the time of the fourteenth century was spelled Scharpe. This spelling was long continued, and was so written by Robert Scharpe, of Scrayingham, about 1553, but some branches of the family at this time omitted the 'c.' The wills of ninety-two persons of the name, all between 1501 and 1601 are preserved at York, and the ninety-two resided in sixty-three different places.

"Robert Sharpe of Yorkshire, the ancestor of our branch, came in 1635 on the ship 'Abigail' from London, and settled at Braintree, Mass., and was twenty years of age at the time. His son John was born here in 1643. In 1650 Robert bought, with Peter Aspinwall, the large farm of William Colburn at Muddy River, now known as Brookline, Mass. Here his daughter Mary was born and baptized at Roxbury, Dec. 5, 1652. He died January, 1655, his inventory being dated the 19th of that month.

"Inventory 19th By Peter Oliver and Edward Clapp. Amount 172 pounds. The house and land, valued at 110 Pounds, set apart at the request of the widow and her friends for the children's portion so far as it goes, the residue the widow is to make good. Said land and house is bound over to the court for said children's portions, the son paying his sisters three portions; the house and land said Robert Sharpe his father desired to be wholly his.

"John Sharpe, before mentioned, married Martha Vose. He had two sons, Robert and William, and one daughter, Martha. He was a lieutenant under Capt. Wadsworth, and a letter from him at this time may be of some interest.

"Letter from John Sharpe to Thomas Meekins. Address:—This for Loving Master Thomas Meekins, living at Hatfield, this deliver.

"JOHN SHARPE.

"Mudiriver, 8 of the 1 mo., 1676."

"He was killed in an engagement with the indians at Sudbury, Mass., in April, 1676. The indians having burned several houses at Marlboro, violently attacked Sudbury, burned several houses and barns, and killed ten or twelve of the English who had come from Concord to assist their neighbors. Captain Wadsworth, who had been sent with fifty men from Boston to relieve Marlboro, learning that the enemy had gone through the woods to Sudbury, turned back and pursued them. When the troops were in sight of the town, a party of about a hundred Indians, who retreated as if in fear, succeeded in drawing the English into the woods, where a large body of the enemy fell upon them and precluded the possibility of escape. The gallant leader and almost his entire company were killed. The following inscription may be seen to-day on a stone at Sudbury.

"Capt. Samuel Wadsworth of Milton, his lieutenant Sharpe of Brookline, and twenty-six others, soldiers, fighting for their country, were slain by the Indian enemy and lye buried here in this place."

"Lieutenant John Sharpe's son William married Abigail, daughter of John White of Watertown. He sold his farm to his brother and moved to Pomfret, Conn. He was deputy from Pomfret in the General Assembly of Connecticut in 1722-23.

"He had ten children. His son John married Dorcas Davis of Woodstock, who bore him eleven children, among them John, who figured in the wolf hunt. The gun that was used was bought in 1721 by John Sharpe, Sr., and his son carried it to the den, as guns were scarce in those days.

"Another son of John Sharpe was Robert, or as better known, Deacon Robb Sharpe. He married Sarah Davis, and when thirty-three years of age was drafted for service in New Jersey in the 3d Conn. Regt., under Israel Putnam. Afterwards the troops were reorganized and he became Ensign of the 11th Conn. When he became Ensign, he had no use for the gun. This was four years after his marriage. To quote from a letter from one of his grandchildren: 'The war of the Revolution commenced four years after their marriage, and Grandfather went, as so many patriots did, with the army, leaving his young wife with one or more children to get along as best she could with only a boy, too young for military service, to help in caring for the farm. In the winter Grandmother was obliged to go into the woods to help in getting fuel to keep the family from suffering. I have been told that she was the only woman in the neighborhood who could write, and her services were often required by the poor unlearned wives, who wished to send messages to their husbands, who had gone to fight for their country.'

"There were thirteen Sharpes in the Revolutionary war from Pomfret."

In addition to the above are the following facts:

Lieutenant John Sharpe was born March 12, 1643, his wife's Christian name being Martha, who bore him Robert, William and Martha, William having been born in 1673, at Ipswich. He died in Pomfret, Nov. 20, 1751, his wife Feb. 15, 1753, at the age of seventy-seven years. Their children, born between 1700 and 1720, were: Abigail, John, William and Solomon (the latter two twins), Martha, Joseph, Benjamin, Isaac, Elizabeth and Gershom.

John Sharpe of this family was born July 14, 1703, and married Dorcas Davis of Woodstock, Sept. 12, 1725. He died May 10, 1779, his wife Oct. 6, 1754. She was the mother of eleven children, all born between 1726 and 1746; John, John (2); Robert, Abigail, Mary, Elijah, Dorcas, William, Robert (2), Abigail (2) and David.

William Sharpe, eighth child of John and Dorcas, was the great-grandfather of Mrs. Shaw. He was born March 27, 1740, and married Feb. 9, 1764, Sarah Farrington, and their children were: Chester, Alethea, Sarah, Rhoda, Abishai, Clarissa, Clement, and Clement (2).

Clement Sharpe was born about 1784 and married March 16, 1810, Sarah, daughter of Robert and Sarah (Sharpe) Sharpe, the latter being a descendant of Robert, the original ancestor, through Lieut. John, William, John (2), and William Sharpe. The children of Clement Sharpe were: William, born Nov. 24, 1810, who died Feb. 12, 1811; Hezekiah, Dec. 9, 1811, who married in July of 1840 Elizabeth Truman, who bore him Elizabeth, Robert and William; Sarah, Aug. 24, 1813, who married March 16, 1837, George Randall and bore Jonathan, Eliza and George W.; a daughter unnamed, who died in infancy; Clement Dwight, father of Mrs. Shaw, the youngest of the family.

Thus ends the record. It is one highly honorable, and should be an inspiration to the future generations to make their lives lie close to the line, as made straight by an honorable ancestry.

CHAUNCEY C. YOUNG. Among the reliable bankers of Windham county, none are the recipients of more extended public favor than is Chauncey C. Young, treasurer of the Windham County Savings Bank at Danielson. He was born in Putnam, Conn., Dec. 3, 1857, and comes of an ancestry for many years connected with Connecticut, the paternal great-grandfather, Jonah, having been born at Sterling, in this State.

Jonah Young lived for many years in the northern part of Killingly, where he carried on extensive farming and stock raising enterprises. The professions also were represented in his father's family, for one of his brothers, Zadac, was a lawyer, and another brother, Silo, was a physician in Sterling. Jonah Young and his family were among the most prominent in the town, and so successful was he that he was able to give each of his sons a farm, and his daughters received a correspondingly large dowry. This degree of prosperity was unusual in his time, and it placed him among the most popular and substantial of the land owners of Windham county. He was a Whig in political preferment, and during his years of activity held a few town offices. His death, when ninety years of age, found him still in the possession of his bright and forceful faculties. The twelve children born to him and his wife were as follows: Nathan, a farmer of Sterling, who married Laura Short; Stephen, also a farmer, who married three times; Zephaniah, a farmer of Sterling; Zadac, the grandfather of Chauncey C.; Ezra, a farmer of Sterling; Jonah, who died when a young man; Judah, who married William Dorrance; Betsey, who married William Shaw; Amy, who became the wife of William Rhodes; Mary, who died in youth; Sally, who became the wife of William Carr, and then removed to New York State; and Hannah, who died when a young woman. The children of Jonah Young are all deceased.

Zadac Young, the grandfather of Chauncey C., possessed much business ability, and rose to a high place in the community of Killingly. He was born in Sterling, and reared to the management of a farm, although his earliest tastes were in the direction of educational and scholarly attainments. He was an unusually fine penman, an art fully appreciated in those days, and he was for many years engaged in teaching school in different parts of Sterling. During his vacations he improved his time working at the stone mason's trade, and after finishing teaching he lived for a year in Central Village and worked at his trade. He came to Danielson about 1859, and assisted in laying the foundation of the Quinebaug Mills, and in erecting the company's houses. He was a successful stone mason, and was thus employed up to the time of his death, April 19, 1861, at the age of seventy. He also was a Republican, and in religion was identified with the Adventists. He married Elsie C. Card, who was born in Sterling, Conn., and died in Danielson, Dec. 19, 1857, aged sixty-four years. Of the children born of this union, Calista is the wife of Lyman Kies, of South Killingly; Clinton L. was the father of Chauncey C.; Mary Maritta became the wife of Augustus Hall and lives at South Killingly; and Catherine Permelia is the widow of John R. Battey, and lives in Danielson.

Successful as was the comparatively short life of Clinton L. Young, his untimely taking away in the prime of a splendid manhood must always occasion regret in the minds of those who rejoiced in his friendship and viewed his promise with personal pride. He seemed to possess all of the elements of superior New England citizenship, and a degree of business ability commensurate with the most ambitious undertakings. He was born at Sterling, Conn., and was a young man when his parents removed to Danielson. His education was that of the public schools, supplemented by keen observation and methodical personal application. As a school teacher he was a success from the start, his efforts in this direction beginning in the Killingly district schools, and extending to the West Killingly Academy, and the Putnam schools, in which latter institutions he was principal of the grammar department. His spare time during vacation was spent in working at the stone mason's trade, as had his father.

before him, and he finally gave up teaching to engage in the grocery business, an enterprise made possible because of his own savings and the kindly loan of friends, the latter being paid back in a remarkably short time. In what is now a livery stable owned by Oliver W. Bowen, near the depot in Danielson, he started up his business on a comparatively small scale, soon after became the purchaser of the building now known as the Winkelman's building, and in time enlarged his capacity to meet the demands of an increasing trade. He was preparing greatly to enlarge his interests when stricken with the fatal typhoid fever which caused his death, April 16, 1868, at the age of thirty-five years and twenty-five days. Gifted with great business sagacity and powers of concentration, he was also keenly alert to every opportunity, and was ever ready to grasp an advantage as soon as it was apparent. He had also the supreme confidence of all classes of people in the community, as evidenced particularly at the time of his funeral, which was attended in large numbers by the French colony of Danielson, people noted for their exclusiveness in dealing with Americans in general. He was a staunch supporter of Republican principles and issues, although so great was his devotion to business that he would never accept any kind of public office, save that of school trustee. He was a member of the Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. and A. M., which body of men conducted the impressive and beautiful burial services. Considering his age, and the time allowed for its accumulation, he left a large property to his wife and children. He married Mary E. Wheaton, a native of Killingly, and daughter of Resolved and Abigail (Leffingwell) Wheaton. Abigail Leffingwell was a descendant of Thomas Leffingwell, one of the first settlers of Norwich, Conn. Resolved Wheaton was in early life a factory overseer, and later a farmer in Killingly. His widow lived to be ninety-eight years old, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Anthony Ames, of Danielson. She was very active up to the end of her life, possessed many admirable qualities of heart and mind, and was gifted with second sight. Of the children born to Clinton and Mary E. (Wheaton) Young, Chauncey C. is the oldest, Fred Wheaton being the second son in the family. The latter was educated in the public schools of Danielson and graduated at the high-school. He also completed the course at Eastman's Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and is now engaged in the shoe business at Pawtucket, R. I., under the firm name of Evans & Young. His wife was formerly Alice Potter, and of their union there have been born two children: Lucy M., an unusually bright child, deceased at the age of three; and Clinton A. Etta Melissa Young, the youngest of the children of Clinton L. Young, was educated in the Friends' School in Providence, married Gaius W. Hubbard, a broker of Providence, R. I., and has one child, Gaius W., Jr. The widow of Clinton L.

Young subsequently became the wife of Isaac Stetson, and lived in Saint Paul, Minn., until failing health demanded a change of residence. She therefore returned to Danielson and died June 29, 1887, at the age of forty-nine.

The children of Clinton Young were all young at the time of his death, but their education and general training was conducted under the capable management of their uncle and guardian, Anthony Ames, who, with the assistance of his wife, gave them every advantage within his power, and laid the foundation for the success which has attended their mature efforts. Chauncey C. Young was no exception to the rule, and he more than any of the rest reaped the benefit of his uncle's superior judgment and sound business success. He was born while his father was teaching school in Putnam, and he was but an infant when the father started out upon his auspicious mercantile career in Danielson. He went to the public schools and graduated from the Danielson high school in the class of 1876, this being the second school year of that institution. Further training for the stress of life was received at Howe's Business College, at Worcester, Mass., from which he graduated in November, 1876.

In January, 1877, Mr. Young entered upon his first business experience as clerk in the Windham County Savings Bank, of which his uncle, Anthony Ames, was then treasurer. He has remained with this bank continuously ever since, and succeeded Mr. Ames as treasurer upon the resignation of the latter in July, 1886. He was married in September, 1887, to Clara G. Martin, born Jan. 29, 1861, adopted daughter of Judge Earl and C. Jane (Champlin) Martin. Of this union there is one son, Earl Martin, born July 17, 1889. Mr. Young is a staunch upholder of Republicanism, and served as clerk and treasurer of the borough during 1887-8-9, and was district school fund treasurer from 1886 until 1898. He is a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M.; Warren Chapter, No. 12, and Montgomery Council, No. 2. With his wife he is an attendant at the Episcopal Church. Mr. Young is one of the conscientious and faithful business servants of the community of Killingly, and his association with the bank has been characterized by extreme fidelity to the highest traditions employed by custodians of public moneys. The only vacation which he has permitted himself was taken in 1901, when, in company with his wife and child, he made a tour of the West. He is popular and accommodating, and his tact and well balanced personality have won him many lasting friends.

HON. EARL MARTIN (deceased) was one of the leaders of the Windham county Bar. He was born in Chaplin, Windham county, in 1820, son of Thomas and Hannah Martin.

Judge Martin received a common school education, the ordinary training of the school being supplemented by instruction under private tutors.

He read law with Judge J. D. Richmond, of Ashford, Conn., and was admitted to the Bar in 1847, removing then to Danielsonville, now Danielson, where he resided until his death. His entire business life was devoted to the law, which he practiced honestly and conscientiously. In 1872 he was elected to the Legislature from the town of Killingly by the Democrats, and in 1874 he was advanced to the superior court bench, occupying the position for eight years. The Judge was for years the contemporary of Judge Carpenter of the Supreme court at Danielsonville, the two being considered the leading lawyers of that part of Windham county. Both were connected with the higher courts of the state at the same time, constituting an interesting incident in the life of each of them.

Judge Martin also held the office of judge of probate in the town of Killingly, and was regarded with profound respect and esteem by all in the community where he resided. He was a staunch Democrat, having joined that party in 1841. The career of Judge Martin on the superior court bench was one of honor and of strict personal devotion to the duties of the office.

In 1855 Judge Martin was married to C. Jane Champlin, daughter of Deacon Benjamin Champlin. She survives him and is residing in Danielson. Having no children of their own they adopted Clara G. Johnson, who is now the wife of C. C. Young, treasurer of the Windham County Savings Bank at Danielsonville. Judge Martin died June 1, 1895.

CHARLES CARROLL MOORE. Prominent among the well-known and substantial farmers of Ellington, Tolland county, near the Somers town line, is Charles Carroll Moore, a native of that locality, where he has spent almost all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits.

(I) James Moore, his great-great-grandfather, was a native of Ireland, who located in Grafton after coming to America, but Dec. 19, 1739, bought land in Union town, located in the west part in what was known as the Content District, and still known as the Dexter Moore place. James Moore died Oct. 20, 1770, in the eighty-third year of his age, and his widow died Jan. 22, 1785, at the advanced age of ninety-eight. The children were: John, born in 1717; William; Thomas; Anna, who married James McNall; and Jane, who married Dr. David McClure.

(II) John Moore, the great-grandfather, was born in 1717 on the passage to America, and when he had grown to maturity he purchased land from his father, Dec. 15, 1744, in Union, Conn. He lived at one time in Dorchester, Mass. His death occurred May 22, 1787. Sarah Bliss, of Brimfield, Mass., was his wife, and she died Aug. 2, 1818, at the age of eighty-four. The children born to John Moore and his wife were: Ichabod, born Oct. 9, 1759; James, Nov. 17, 1760; John, July 21, 1762;

(IV) Charles Wesley Moore, the father of Charles C., was born in Union, Conn., Aug. 14, 1802, and resided there until he was about thirty years of age, when he removed to Ellington. Reared to agricultural pursuits, he purchased a fine farm from Gen. Asa Fuller and went to work upon it with great industry. His means were limited, but by economy, industry and perseverance he accumulated a large property, and at the time of his death, in August, 1869, was considered one of the well-to-do farmers of the locality. A pronounced Republican, he never sought office, although he filled that of constable in Union. He was one of the leading members of the Baptist Church in Ellington while it was in existence.

Charles Wesley Moore was married May 30, 1830, to Ann Corbin, who was born in Union, Aug. 28, 1809, a daughter of David and Mary (Bugbee) Corbin, the latter of whom was a daughter of Jeremiah Bugbee, a Revolutionary soldier. Mrs. Moore passed out of life Dec. 5, 1874, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Guy P. Collins, in Ellington, Conn. There were fifteen children of this marriage. (1) Mariette, born Dec. 24, 1831, married, May 24, 1849, Col. Amos Pease, of Somers, and their children are: George B., who married Sarah Farnham, and has two sons, Frederick and Arthur, of whom the latter married Florence Covell; William A., who married Alice Woods, and has children Florence M. and Charles William; Isabella, who married W. (6) Charles Carroll was born June 9, 1837. (7) Amelia A., born Dec. 4, 1838, was married Dec. 11, 1867, to Everett P. Russell, a farmer in Somers, their children being: Mabel A., the wife of E. Ellsworth Niles, of New York City; and Lida M. (8) Carlos, born in 1840, died in 1841. (9) Romelia, born June 5, 1842, died July 12, 1843. (10) Augusta J., born May 20, 1844, married, Nov. 27, 1866, William H. Burdick, a farmer in Somers, and they have one child, Harry L., who married Ruby L. Gager, daughter of Henry and Nellie Bond Gager, and resides at Chicopee Falls, Mass. (11) Adeline H., born Jan. 4, 1847, died Sept. 28, 1852. (12) Julia M., born Sept. 20, 1849, March 12, 1875, married Malone G. Moore, a merchant of Union, Conn., where she died, without issue, Nov. 7, 1875. (13) Josephine, born Nov. 30, 1851, married Charles Harvey, a master machinist, who resides in Worcester, Mass., and their two children are Bessie and Ruth. (14) Edwin C., born March 20, 1854, died Sept. 5, 1855. (15) Frederick W., born June 21, 1857, married Harriet Walker, of Union, and is a farmer of Warehouse Point, Conn. They have had these children: Grace J., married Oct. 20, 1902, to Fred Abbey, of Warehouse Point; Annie, who, Oct. 14, 1902, married Frank Harrison, in the insurance business at Hartford; Charles; Marion, who died in 1900; and Morgan.

(V) Charles Carroll Moore was born June 9, 1837, on the farm in Ellington, and attended the district schools, the Somers high school and the Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, Conn. Until his marriage, which occurred when he was twenty-seven years old, he remained at home, and he then moved to the farm of his father-in-law, which was the next house north of his birthplace, and resided on this farm until his retirement from active life, a short time ago, when he assumed the management of the farm of his daughter, Mrs. Anna L. Pomeroy, at Somers.

(VI) Mrs. Anna L. Pomeroy resides in the Pomeroy homestead, built seventy years ago by Daniel Pomeroy, who drew the sand and clay and made the brick of which home is built. The old homestead stood near by and was torn down in 1896, having stood for over 120 years. In this house the thirteen children of Hiram and Ruby Parsons (Pomeroy) were all born. These children were: Hiram Sterling; Oren; Warren; Ruby; Chester; Harriet; Chauncy; Laura; George; Mary; Daniel; Noah; and Miranda, all born from 1797 to 1823.

Mr. Moore has followed general farming for many years and also was quite extensively engaged in stock dealing, buying the stock in different parts of New England and New York, bringing it to his farm and selling there. This business he followed for a number of years and proved it very profitable. Mr. Moore is in sympathy with the Republican party.

On Oct. 18, 1864, Charles Carroll Moore was married, by Rev. George A. Oviatt, to Anna C. Clark, who was born in Ellington, Dec. 31, 1836, the only child of Daniel and Lavina (White) Clark, the former of whom was a farmer in Ellington, born Jan. 1, 1781, and who died in 1863. His wife was born Nov. 22, 1796, and died March 15, 1874. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Moore were five in number. (1) Charles W., born July 22, 1865, died Feb. 4, 1867. (2) Anna L., born Nov. 22, 1866, a graduate of Rockville high school in 1885, a teacher for two years in Somers, in the schools in which her talented mother had taught when a young lady, and for six years in Ellington, was married Oct. 1, 1895, to Arthur C. Pomeroy, who was born Nov. 8, 1870, a son of William C. and Julia Pease Pomeroy, and a grandson of Daniel B. Pomeroy, a very successful farmer of Somers. Arthur Pomeroy was a prosperous farmer, but he died Aug. 30, 1898, his one child, Lucile, born June 12, 1898, dying the same day. (3) Francis C., born Aug. 24, 1868, was married Oct. 1, 1895, to Miss Susan C. Percival, of Somers, and he is a thrifty farmer on the homestead. He has three children: Marjorie A., born May 3, 1897; Carroll Percival, born April 11, 1900; and Lucile, born Oct. 28, 1902. (4) Abbie, born July 12, 1870, died July 14, 1872. (5) Katie, born Aug. 16, 1874, died Aug. 18, of the same year.

Mr. Moore has long been a member of the Somers Congregational Church, of which his wife was also a member, and in which the son and daughter are active workers. Previous to marriage Mrs. Moore attended the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield, Conn., from which she was graduated, and for a number of years was an efficient teacher in Ellington and Somers; she died April 29, 1902.

FRANK GRANT. One of the oldest families in the State of Connecticut is the Grant family, and the genealogy of this important family, issued in 1898, is one of the most valuable contributions to genealogical literature that has appeared in years, our subject, Frank Grant, having materially assisted in its compilation. The Grant family in its divisions were the real pioneers of Vernon and Rockville; the first mill built in the latter town was by a Grant, and from the very first settlement of these towns, the records show that this family were prominent among the influential citizens.

Our subject traces his lineage to the American founder of the family, Mathew Grant, one of the first settlers in Windsor, Conn., in 1635; he was born in England in 1601, where he married, and in 1630 embarked from Plymouth, England, on the vessel "Mary and John." The first settlement of the family was at Dorchester, but in October, 1635, Mathew Grant joined the party that came to Windsor, one of the foremost men in the colony, taking an active part in politics and becoming a deacon in the church, holding most of the town offices. Dr. Stiles in his "History of Ancient Windsor," says of him, "Few men indeed filled so large a place in the early history of Windsor, or filled it so well, as honest Mathew Grant." In 1654 he compiled a "Book of Records of Town Ways in Windsor," and was also the compiler of the "Old Church Record," which has furnished the basis for the histories of most of the families of ancient Windsor. After the death of his first wife, in 1644, he married Susanna (Capen) Rockwell.

Samuel Grant, the son of Mathew, was born at Dorchester, Mass., in 1631, and died at East Windsor Hill in 1718, married Mary Porter; and his son Samuel was born in 1659 at Windsor. Samuel (2) first married Grace Miner, who was born in Stonington in 1670, and the eldest son of this union, Samuel (3) was the ancestor of our subject, while the third child and second son, Noah, was the ancestor of Gen. U. S. Grant.

Samuel (3) was born in 1691 at Windsor, and died at East Windsor in 1751. On Jan. 1, 1718, he married Theophile Bartlett, who died in 1775; in 1713 he removed to Tolland and in 1726 to Bolton, now Vernon, having purchased 500 acres of land on which a large part of the city of Rockville now stands. A large family of children was born to Samuel (3) and his seventh child and sixth son was Ozias, born in 1733.

Early in 1726, the inhabitants of Bolton, being somewhat ambitious of appearances, desired to lay out through the center of the settlement a broad street or common, and the owners were to throw the lands into the common, of course without charge. In carrying out this project, a certain farm, owned by Samuel Grant, of Windsor, was found to interfere, as he, being a non-resident, would not take sufficient interest in the improvement to induce him to give the land. A proposition was therefore made to him to exchange his farm in Bolton, for certain lands belonging to the proprietors of Bolton and lying in the north end of the town. Mounting his horse, Mr. Grant rode over from Windsor to look at the lands. Arriving at their western boundary he plunged into the forest and climbed over rocks and through thickets until he reached the pond now called Snipsic Lake, and after prospecting sufficiently made his way back to the starting point, rode to Bolton and offered to trade his farm there, 100 acres, for the 500 acres offered him in what is now known as Vernon. This offer was eagerly accepted, the papers hastily prepared for fear lest Mr. Grant should regret his bargain, as none could imagine what he proposed to do with the rough lands of Snipsic Lake, then considered nearly worthless. The transaction was fully consummated and Samuel Grant became the possessor of 500 acres of the land where the city of Rockville now stands. It is barely possible that Mr. Grant foresaw what those tumbling waters were to be made to do and what wealth they were to develop, but he doubtless saw a future possibility of grist and saw mills on his newly acquired water way, and shrewdly closed the bargain. Immediately after, one Monday morning, he packed his saddle bags, and amid the fears and tears of his family in Windsor, rode off through the forest and finally hitched his horse at a point near where is now located the corner of Union and West streets.

Sturdily setting to work with his ax, in the course of a few weeks he had erected a comfortable log house, which stood upon the site of the present home of our subject. Not far from this forest home, Mr. Grant built a dam, and later erected a grist mill, this being operated by the family until 1837, and without doubt was the very first mill in Rockville. The short limits of this biography prevents the further recital of the excellent management of this pioneer ancestor, but he lived a busy, useful life, and died respected and remembered by a large circle of acquaintances.

Ozias Grant, son of Samuel, was born at East Windsor, and died in 1823, at what is now Rockville. In June, 1761, he married Lorana Strong, who was born in Windsor in 1739 and died at Bolton in 1817, a daughter of John and Hepzibah (Walcott) Strong. In 1761 Ozias removed to Vernon, just south of Ellington, where he became a farmer; one day while ploughing in his field, he was pressed into the British service in the Quebec campaign. Later he operated both a saw and grist mill, and was remarkable for his great stature, perfect health and quaint manners. The children born to Ozias and his wife were: Elnathan; Abiel; Wareham; Aurelia; Augustus; Aruma; Zeruiah; Elijah; Elisha; who was the father of G. L. Grant, of Rockville; Francis, the grandfather of our subject; Lorana; Anna; and Elvira.

Francis Grant was born in what is now Rockville, Dec. 6, 1777, and died in the same city in 1856. His first marriage was on Nov. 18, 1807, to Lora Root, born in Coventry, Conn., in 1787, who died in Vernon, Conn., in 1809, a daughter of Capt. Nathaniel and Elizabeth (Kingsbury) Root. This wife bore one son, Harlow Kingsbury, born Feb. 5, 1809, in Rockville, who was the father of Frank Grant. For his second wife, Francis Grant married in 1811 Anna Gates, born in East Haddam in 1780, who died in Vernon, in 1814. The third marriage was in 1816, to Mrs. Anna Doane, of Rockville, widow of Israel Doane and daughter of Lyman Wood.

Harlow Kingsbury Grant was born in a house that stood on the site where Samuel Grant built his log cabin, and attended the best schools of the locality, finishing his education in the high school in Vernon, where he became noted for his fine penmanship. As an incident in his school career, a composition, composed and written by Mr. Grant, on the temperance question, was so convincing that the teacher, T. L. Wright, of East Hampton, Mass., found it necessary to prepare a reply to it. On June 4, 1834, Mr. Grant married Emily Ann Rathburn, who was born in Vernon, Sept. 20, 1810, a daughter of Rodney and Ruth (Redfield) Rathburn, and to this union were born three children. Nathaniel, born in 1836, married Agnes Susan Anderson, a native of Thompsonville, Conn., and resides on the old Grant homestead, owning thirty-five acres of the original 500 acres purchased in 1726. He has served the town as selectman, superintendent of public works and is one of the substantial citizens. Frank is our subject. Schuyler, born at Rushford, N. Y., in 1840, married in Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1865, Alice Elmira Smith, born in Barre Center, N. Y., in 1844, a daughter of Ransom and Desire (Dennison) Smith; he was a student at the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield, later at Ann Arbor, and was graduated from the University of Michigan with degree A. B. in 1864. He resided in Ann Arbor for some time, was once teller, later cashier of the Ann Arbor Savings Bank, taught in a business college in Hartford, Conn., and Providence, R. I., and now resides in Detroit, where he is the general agent for Michigan, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York.

After his marriage, Harlow K. Grant resided in Rockville until 1836, when he removed to Allegany county, N. Y., the trip being made in wagons, and it may be noted that these were without springs. Buying a farm in the town of Centerville he engaged in farming, also buying an interest in a saw mill, which he later traded for a farm in Rushford. As his father still lived in Rockville and desired his son to return, this was accomplished in 1848; the family drove from Rushford to Cuylersville, where they took a boat on the Erie canal to Rochester, where a "line boat" brought them to Albany, thence by rail to Hartford, and Mr. Grant then settled on the old homestead where he was born. In 1849 he bought the farm and took charge of it, being among the first to introduce the progressive methods, and new crops, one of which was a trial of tobacco, succeeding very well. His death occurred Sept. 20, 1854, and his wife survived until March 9, 1861, both of them being buried in Vernon cemetery. Formerly a Whig, in later life Mr. Grant became a Republican, served as selectman and was one of the prominent supporters of the Baptist Church, in which he was a trustee.

Frank Grant was born in Rushford, N. Y., Jan. 24, 1839. His first schooling was obtained in the country schools of his native town, but he was yet small when his parents returned to Connecticut. Immediately he was placed at school again and attended the West street school, S. B. Little and Sarah Roberts being among his early teachers there, and although at the age of fourteen his school days were about over, the excellent instruction given him formed a solid foundation upon which to build.

In February, 1855, Mr. Grant entered the co-operative grocery store of P. R. Moore, which was located a short distance east of where the former's present store is located. After nine months with this firm in its changes, our subject went back to school for one week, the instruction during this limited period affording him more benefit than that of several longer seasons. The next business engagement was with Chauncy Hibbard as clerk, and there he remained until the death of Mr. Hibbard, in 1860, going from there into the employ of Joseph Selden, the mill owner and merchant, whose store was on the corner of Prospect street. In 1862 Mr. Grant was made secretary and treasurer of the Leeds Mill at Rockville and remained in that capacity until 1871, later operating in wool at Rockville, while in 1876 he bought from the trustees of F. H. Thompson & Co. a business from which his present one has grown. In 1895 Mr. Grant suffered a loss by fire, but like a man of his energy and business ability soon rebuilt and continued his business with greater prosperity than before. Dealing in painters' and builders' supplies, Mr. Grant has the leading trade of Tolland county, his methods have gained him the full confidence of the public, and he is justly regarded as one of the most substantial and solid business citizens of Rockville.

On March 20, 1863, Mr. Grant was married to Miss Louise Winchell, a native of Rockville, born June 15, 1839, the youngest child of Chauncey, Sr., and Mary (Vibbert) Winchell, one son coming to this union, Ernest Winchell, born Jan. 31, 1876, who married Agnes E. Talcott, and resides in Hartford.

Mr. Grant is a director and the vice-president of the Rockville National Bank, and is an extensive owner of real estate. His elegant home on Union street was completed in 1888. For nine years he served in the State militia; enlisting as a private, he held the various ranks to captain in Co. G, 3d Reg., Conn. N. G. The first vote of Mr. Grant was for President Lincoln, in 1860, and he has been a staunch Republican ever since, not as a politician in the usual acceptation of the term, but taking a keen interest in the party's success. As a prominent citizen, he has held the office of city treasurer of Rockville since 1889, and he also efficiently served as assessor and as a member of the board of relief. Rockville has no more substantial or respected citizen than Frank Grant.

CAPT. THOMAS KEITH BATES. It is not possible for every individual to establish vast undertakings, to increase either the prosperity or happiness of nations, or even pile up millions for himself, for conditions are not equal, the same opportunities do not come to all, and in many cases it is very doubtful if every individual would be willing to build his fortunes on the failures of his fellow-men. However, it is not always in the ranks of those whom the world calls distinguished, that real heroes are found. These thoughts have come to the humble biographer in considering the life of one of the best-known and most esteemed citizens of Webster, Mass., who through a long life of usefulness has followed faithfully the path of duty, and has benefited both himself and his fellow-men without thought of reward or distinguishing notice.

Capt. Thomas Keith Bates, whose title was honorably won on the field of battle during the Civil war, and who for almost forty years has been connected with the Slater mills of Webster, was born Nov. 25, 1835, on a farm in the vicinity of Webster, Mass., a son of Alanson and Betsey (Keith) Bates, and a grandson of Capt. Alanson Bates. Alanson Bates, the father, was a son of Alanson and Comfort (Robinson) Bates, and he was born on the old Bates homestead at Webster, Mass., where he followed an agricultural life, was respected by his old neighbors and friends and at death was laid away by them in the old Bates cemetery at East Thompson. He had taken part in the religious, educational and military movements in his town, and was a captain in the local militia. In early life he voted with the Whig party, but later became thoroughly identified with the Republican party. He married Betsey Keith, a daughter of Capt. Thomas Keith, of Webster, and with him she was consistently connected with the Methodist Church. A family of five children was born to them, as follows: Loren; Lucian, who died at Southbridge in 1902; Kimball, also deceased; Thomas Keith, who is the subject of this biography; and Loretta, who died in 1902, the widow of David Colvin, and a resident of Danielson, Connecticut.

Capt. Thomas Keith Bates was reared on the farm and until he was fourteen years old attended the district schools of Webster. At this early age he left home determined to make his own way in the world, and as a very sensible beginning, entered the Blue mills at Putnam, in order to learn the machinist's trade. Here he received the sum of fifty cents a day during his first year of employment, seventy-five cents during the second year, and was advanced to a $1 scale during the third year. After the three years of apprenticeship had expired, he went to Danielson, Conn., and was employed there for three years, removing then to Dayville, where, in partnership with M. A. Greene, he embarked in business. Two years later he sold his interest and returned to Danielson where he was made foreman in the Quinebaug Mill Company, and was thus employed when President Lincoln issued his call for 75,000 volunteers. Mr. Bates was a member of the State militia and immediately offered his services and was elected lieutenant of Co. A, but the roster of this company was not completed and it was finally disbanded without serving. After the battle of Bull Run, Mr. Bates again tendered his services and was appointed lieutenant in Co. A, 6th Reg., in which he served five months, returning then to Danielson in 1862. Under Col. Ely he then accepted the position of captain of Co. B, 18th Reg., and while gallantly leading a charge, at the battle of Winchester, was severely wounded in the left fore arm. On June 15, 1863, he was taken prisoner and so securely was he held that his friends regarded him as dead, but a fortunate chance enabled him, with others, to effect his escape and get to Baltimore. The exposure and hardship brought on physical disability, and after a leave of absence, he was finally honorably discharged, by order of Governor Buckingham.

After recuperating at Killingly, Conn., Capt. Bates resumed work at his trade there until 1866, and then came to Webster, where he entered the machine department of the Slater mills, beginning an association which has lasted ever since. His position of responsibility is that of superintendent of the mechanical department of the mills, and the same attributes which made him a good soldier have made him invaluable in his present position. He is not only most highly regarded for his reliability and skill in his daily vocation, but he commands the respect of all who know him in social life.

Capt. Thomas Keith Bates was married to Jane Herrick, a daughter of Hiram Herrick, born in Central Village, Conn., who, at death, left three children, namely: Sarah, deceased wife of Vernon Conden; and Ida and Ella, both of whom died in youth. The second marriage of Capt. Bates was to Elizabeth Sessions, a daughter of Nathaniel Sessions, of Webster, and the one child of this union is Georgia L., who married H. O. Lacount, of West Somerville, Mass. Mrs. Bates is a most estimable Christian lady and a valued member of the Congregational Church.

Capt. Bates is a man of social nature and is connected with Lieut. Nathaniel Lyon Post, G. A. R., No. 64, of Webster, and the Royal Arcanum, of Webster. His political opinions are fully in sympathy with the Republican party, while his religious faith makes him a Congregationalist. A brave soldier, a steady, reliable and trust-worthy member of his profession, and a good and useful citizen, Captain Thomas Keith Bates may look back on a well-spent life.

LEVI CADWELL GRANT, now living retired in East Hartford, was one of the very successful farmers of the town of Vernon, Tolland county. He is a descendant of Matthew and Priscilla Grant, the founders of the Grant family in America.

Laban Grant, second son and third child of Matthew Grant, was but a babe when his parents removed from Dorchester, where he was born Feb. 3, 1633-34, to Windsor, Conn., at the first settlement. He married Hannah Palmer.

Laban Grant (2), son of Laban, married Hannah Bissell.

Thomas Grant, son of Laban (2), married Elizabeth Rockwell.

Samuel Rockwell Grant, son of Thomas, and the great-grandfather of Levi Cadwell, married Mabel Loomis.

Louis C. Grant

Sylvester Grant, son of Samuel Rockwell, and grandfather of Lewis Cadwell, married a Miss Gilbert.

Luther Grant, son of Sylvester, married Huldah Hamilton.

The Hamilton family, of which Levi Cadwell Grant is a member in maternal lines, is an old established one in Ellington, and its history in this country begins with the coming of three brothers from Scotland about 1650, who settled in Massachusetts in that year. Daniel Hamilton, who settled in Ellington in 1782, was in the third generation of this family. Daniel Hamilton had four brothers, all of whom were noted men in the troubled times of the American Revolution.

Luther Grant, mentioned above as the son of Sylvester, was born in East Windsor, and there attended school until he was about eighteen years of age. Married in Broadbrook, he soon after moved to Harts Grove, Ashtabula Co., Ohio, where he took up a claim on government land. After some two years' residence he met with severe losses by fire, and returned to Connecticut. A second experiment in Ohio settlement was also followed by disastrous fire losses, and he again returned to Connecticut, and settled at East Windsor, where his wife's father, Theodore Hamilton, gave him the rental of a large farm, and there he remained for a number of years. Luther Grant was a man of much ability, and though with limited advantages, he made the most of them. After a time he took up the sale of "Yankee notions" through Connecticut, making a specialty of brooms. He was a man who was not afraid of hard work, and could accomplish anything he undertook. For a time he worked on rafts that were floated down the Connecticut river, but ill health hindered him from successful effort in this line. In 1848 the family moved to New Hampshire, and purchased a large lumber tract in Grafton county, where Mr. Grant engaged in lumbering and farming, but the climate proved too severe for him, making many visits to Connecticut a necessity for him. His health became more and more impaired, and he died in Grafton county of consumption. Before his death his wife and his son, Levi C., had taken entire charge of the farm. Luther Grant was a Democrat, a man of high moral character, and closely associated with the church, where he sang for many years in the choir.

To Luther and Huldah (Hamilton) Grant were born: (1) Hamilton, a farmer in East Windsor, where he died in 1898, was twice married, first to Eliza Moody and second to Eliza Allen, both of East Windsor. (2) Frances married D. Wilson, and died in Arkansas. (3) Huldah Ann died young. (4) Levi Cadwell is mentioned in full further on. (5) Ianthea married Charles N. Young and moved to Deer Park, La Salle Co., Ill., where he died soon after their arrival. She then married Caleb Young, and is now located near Rantoul, Ill. She is the mother of twins, Charles M. and Roestine. (6) Charles R. served in the Civil war from 1862 to 1865. At his first enlistment he was rejected as being under the prescribed age. When he returned from the war he located in Boston, where he was long express agent for the Boston & Albany Railroad, later becoming general baggage master. Frequently he acts as conductor of the Raymond excursions to the Pacific Coast and other points. He is married and has three daughters, Daisy, Amy and Grace. His home is at Malden, Mass. (7) Roestine has been twice married, and is now residing at Orford, New Hampshire.

Levi Cadwell Grant was born in East Windsor, Conn., July 4, 1837, and began to earn his living when a very small lad. When his parents removed to New Hampshire he accompanied them, and as his father's health failed much of the burden of the farm labor fell on him. Mr. Grant had but limited opportunities for schooling, but what he lacked in the work of the schoolroom he has more than made up by close observation and wide reading. Early in his life he showed native ability and business foresight, and his career has been very successful. In every situation in which he has been placed he has showed himself equal to the demands made upon him. At the age of sixteen he went to Vernon, where he worked for a time in the farming circles, and was then received into the working force of the paper mill at Talcottville. When he was nineteen he spent some months in Ohio, and then making a second westward trip from Connecticut, went to Minnesota, stopping in Dane county, Wis., where he took up a farm near Lodi, but thinking it would not give him ready returns, he returned to Connecticut. After his marriage his wife did not favor his western ambitions, and they decided to remain in Connecticut. For several years he was employed at farm work in Columbia, his wife's native town, and was also engaged in East Windsor town. Mr. Grant says of his early life, that he was always a good hand to earn money, but his wife a better hand to save it.

In 1862 he bought a farm property in the town of Columbia, which was flooded by the building of the Willimantic Linen Company's reservoir. In 1864 he bought a farm of 168 acres in the town of Vernon, on the Hockanum river. From that time he has bought and sold considerable property, and now has quite extensive real estate interests in East Hartford, Conn., and Springfield, Mass. In 1865 he raised his first crop of tobacco, and has developed extensive interests in this line. Aside from his very successful general farming, Mr. Grant has acted for thirty-two years as the local agent for the fertilizer firm of E. Frank Coe Co., of New York. In 1881 he built the substantial and elegant home where he lived until April 1, 1902, when, after disposing of his farm above, he removed to East Hartford, where he now lives. Mr. Grant is a staunch Republican, and cast his first vote for John C. Fremont, and he has always voted "no license." He could never be induced to accept a position in the official service of his community, though he has often been asked to do so. Mr. Grant does not belong to any secret societies, and attends the Methodist Church.

Mr. Grant was married March 16, 1856, to Mary Elizabeth, a daughter of Gerard Abel and Eunice (Brown) Bascom, of Columbia, Conn., and a granddaughter of Bealey Bascom. To Gerard A. Bascom and his wife were born two children: Mary E., born Sept. 28, 1831, is the wife of Mr. Grant; and Fannie W. is the wife of C. E. Brown, of Columbia, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Grant have had the following children: (1) Olin A., born Aug. 1, 1857, died at the age of two months. (2) One born Feb. 24, 1859, died unnamed. (3) Herbert W., born Jan. 3, 1861, married Annie Hale, of Middletown, Conn., and resides in East Hartford, where he is engaged in the livery business. They have two children, Hazel Wildwood and James Levi. (4) George H., born May 18, 1863, married Ella Tuttle, and lives in East Hartford. They have one son, Olin. (5) M. Rosa, born Jan. 31, 1866, married William Trask, of Springfield, Mass., and is the mother of two children, Bernice Iola and Donald Cadwell. Mr. Trask was employed as an operator for twenty years in the Smith & Wesson Works, and is now engaged with the Morgan Envelope Company. (6) F. Iola, born Feb. 23, 1867, married, Nov. 27, 1885, Harry A. Adams, a practical mechanic, now the superintendent and part owner of the Fox Typewriter Co., at Grand Rapids, Mich. Their home is at East Hartford. They have had two children, Ethel Rosaline, who died at the age of nine years; and Ruth Viola.

The career of Mr. Grant is a singularly happy illustration of what push and energy, when conjoined with moral ideals and a noble ambition, can accomplish. Beginning with nothing, and fighting his own way, he has come to the front, and well deserves a prominent place in a list of the representative and successful men of Tolland county. Despite his years and wonderful energy, he is active in mind and body. Few men have gone through life as he, with the years of hard labor, who remain physically his equal at his age. His success has been of the kind that enables him to retain the respect and esteem of all, and he was fortunate in the selection of a wife who shares the credit of his success.

THOMAS W. EVANS. One of the valued and trusted overseers of one of the most necessary departments in the great Rock Mill, at Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., was Thomas W. Evans, the subject of this biography. Mr. Evans was a native of Wales, his grandfather, Edward Evans, having resided at Llanidloes, Wales, where he was well known as a skilled weaver, and where both he and his wife died, she living to the unusual age of ninety-two years.

William Evans, the father of Thomas W., was born in Llanidloes, Wales, where he also learned the trade of weaver, and where he later became a beloved Baptist preacher. A man who educated himself, for fifty years he expounded the word to his people, and became widely known for his piety and success in his chosen calling. When the final call came to him at the age of eighty-eight in Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Wales, the crowds who came to pay a last tribute to this good man, exceeded anything ever known in that section. His marriage had been to Sarah Jones, who survived him some years, the daughter of John and Sarah (Bevans) Jones, the children of this union being: Sarah, who died young; William, who died at the age of twenty-four; John, who married Mary Mumfert, a spinner and cloth-dresser, living in Dayville, Conn.; Thomas W.; Ann, who married David Rinalds, and died at Newtown, Wales; Mary, who died at the age of thirteen; Edward, who died when twenty-two; Richard, who died in Wales, having married Ann Griffiths, who came to the United States and now resides in Rockville, her children being,—Jennie Howard, and Gilbert; and David, who married Mary Wooley in Boston, Mass., and for twenty-four years was chief wool sorter in a mill at Dalton, Mass., where he was entrusted with the buying of the wool.

Thomas W. Evans was born Nov. 5, 1830, in Welchpool, Montgomeryshire, Wales, his parent moving to Newtown when he was four years old. His education was pursued under many difficulties on account of the laws regulating the management of the public schools, and the advantages he enjoyed were principally at the Sunday-school of the Baptist Church, with others who on account of religious belief were debarred from the regular schools of the town. Fortunately, both Mr. and Mrs. Evans were intelligent and thoughtful people, and at his mother's knee the boy learned many a lesson.

In that neighborhood where labor conditions required work by almost every pair of hands, it was an unusual thing for a lad of seven years to enter a factory and with his little hands try to earn a few pence to put into the family purse. Twenty-four cents a week was toilsomely earned by this child, twelve hours being a day's work, and at the age of twelve he could only earn forty-eight cents a week, and he was as well paid as any in the employ of the mills. When thirteen he began to work at weaving, earning more, as this was piece work. Many rules were then in force which have been abrogated since. At the factories then the workmen were compelled to furnish the heat for the working rooms, the factory only furnishing the empty stove, thus weekly assessments had to be made in order to have fuel and each took a turn at caring for the fire, thus losing some time, when employed on piece work.

Until 1856 Mr. Evans remained at Newtown and had become an expert in weaving. About this time a great grief came to him, in the death of two of his children, and the surroundings became so painful that he decided to move from the place. His desire at that time was to remove to America, but want of means prevented, and he located again in Wales, at Knighton, Radnorshire, where he was employed as a loom fixer, cloth dresser, and at general factory work, remaining in this position until June, 1866, when he sailed for America, taking the Cunard line steamer, "Alipo," which landed him safely in New York, after a passage of fourteen days. Hinsdale, Mass., was his objective point, as his brother David was there employed. During the passage, Mr. Evans had earned a little money, by assisting the crew and when he landed in New York, he still had a capital of seven pounds.

Upon finding his brother in Hinsdale, a search was made for a position, and one was soon found in Pittsfield, Mass., where he was employed for three months, going from there to Pontoosuc, as a hand-loom weaver, and while here, he was joined by his wife and son. Mrs. Evans was a skilled weaver also, and she found employment on a power loom, remaining for two and one-half years, when they both went to Dalton, Mass., where a brother of Mr. Evans was residing, the manager of a factory, and there both Mr. Evans and his wife found lucrative employment, the former at spinning, the latter at weaving.

These were prosperous times for this little family and in addition to a comfortable living for themselves, they were able to send sums to those they had left behind. They remained in Dalton for three and one-half years, when the water power froze during a severe winter, work stopped, and Mr. Evans and his family came to Rockville, arriving in 1872. Mr. Evans immediately entered the Rock mill, and soon Mrs. Evans also was employed there. Mr. Evans remained at the spinning until an accident wrenched his hip, making lighter work a necessity. In search of this he moved to Minersville, Pa., where he entered a carpet weaving factory, remaining about six months and then went back to Dalton, Mass., where he was given work by his former employer as boss weaver, and later as spinner, but six months later he returned to Rockville and both he and his wife found employment in the Florence mill, at weaving; but ill luck came, in the shape of a strike, and he was again out of a position. For a time he peddled notions, but soon became employed by the Rock Mill, where he has since remained, one of the most capable and trusted employes of the business, being the overseer in the winding and spooling room.

Mr. Evans's energetic wife could not remain idle, but worked at weaving until 1878, when she started a notion and dry-goods store in her home, at No. 11 Village street, which she has successfully conducted, in connection with her household duties. For many years Mr. Evans made quite an addition to the family income by making picture frames, after his day's work in the mill was over, and both he and his wife lived quiet, economical lives and richly deserved the competence and comfort which became theirs. Since 1879 they occupied the present family home, having purchased it in 1893.

Mr. Evans was married Jan. 25, 1855, in Newtown, Wales, to Martha Richards, born May 15, 1835, in Carno, near Newtown, the worthy daughter of David and Mary (Evans) Richards, and to this union three children were born: Thomas, born in 1856, who died when about four years of age; Edward, born in 1859, who died at the age of fourteen months, in the same week as his brother Thomas; William D., born Jan. 26, 1861, in Knighton, Wales. The latter graduated from the Rockville high school, in 1881, from Yale College in 1885, and taught school at Plymouth, East Hartford, where he was principal of the high school, resigning to become the editor of the Duluth, Minn., Daily News. Later he went to the Duluth Herald, still later to West Superior, Wis., where he was manager of the Daily News of that place, and after that into newspaper work in New Jersey, and is now on the staff of the New York Journal. He married Jennie Jones, of Utica, N. Y., a native of Newtown, Wales, and they have three children,—Herbert, Ruth and an infant.

Thomas W. Evans was a staunch Republican and thoroughly believed in a Republican form of government. Socially he was connected with Fayette Lodge No. 69, F. & A. M., of Rockville. A Baptist by education and from principle, he was a constant church attendant. By his death, March 26, 1901, Rockville lost one of its most esteemed citizens.

CHARLES HENRY BAKER, one of the modern and progressive farmers and fruit growers of Andover, Tolland county, has, by his industry and original methods, won an enviable standing among the cultivators of the soil in that community.

Manassah Baker, the grandfather, was married in 1792 at Uxbridge, Mass., to Sarah Williams, who lived to 1793, and left no children. His second marriage occurred in 1795, when Lois Benson, a native of Mendon, Mass., became his wife. She died in 1840, aged sixty-six years. To this union were born: Mary Sanger, in 1800; Bezalial Sawyer, in 1802; William Henry, in 1805; Chloe Taft, in 1807; John William, in 1810; Hannah Dyke, in 1813, who died July 3, 1836; Caleb Strong and John Brooks, twins, July 30, 1816, of whom Caleb died in 1834. Manassah Baker, the father of the above children, was commonly called Capt. Baker, and passed his entire life at Uxbridge, Mass., where he died June 30, 1831, at the age of sixty-six. A tanner by trade, he bore a good name, and was much respected in his time.

John B. Baker, the father of Charles H., was reared in Uxbridge, and when a young man he came to Andover, where he married Rebecca E. Williams, a daughter of Wheeler and Cynthia (Blackman) Williams.

The Williams family is of English origin and is an old one in New England. Samuel Williams, grandfather of Mrs. Baker, married a Welsh woman, and resided in Oxford, Mass., where he was a mason, and died in 1852, at the age of eighty-four years. His children were: Alpheus, Samuel, Wheeler and one daughter. Wheeler Williams was born in 1795, and came with his parents to Andover when he was nineteen years old, and he died at the age of eighty-four years. Cynthia Blackman, his wife, whom he married in 1814, was a native of Vermont, where she was born in 1793; she died thirteen months before her husband passed away. Their children were: Daniel Wheeler, born in 1815, who married first Chloe Baker, second, Lydia Hilton, and died in South Manchester, Conn.; Orrin Amerst, born in 1816, who was the father of Anson O. Williams; Rebecca E., the mother of Charles Baker, who was born Jan. 22, 1818, and died May 12, 1899; Louisa Cynthia, born in 1821, who married William Drinkwater, and years after his death, married Warren Callender; and Samuel Henry, born in 1834, who died two years later. Wheeler Williams bought the property now owned by his grandson, Anson O. Williams, and devoted his life to its cultivation, though carrying on shoemaking to a limited extent. In politics he was a Democrat.

In 1848 John B. Baker bought a farm of sixty acres in Andover, having previously rented it. To this original purchase he added more land and became a very successful farmer. A Whig and a Republican in political sentiment, he yet never took an active part in politics. Both himself and his wife belonged to the Coventry Methodist Church, and were later attached to the Bolton Church. He died Jan. 15, 1887. To John B. Baker and his wife were born the following children: Charles Henry; Chloe Lucretia, who married (first) Rev. W. L. Marks, an Episcopal clergyman, by whom she had a daughter, S. Louise, and (second) Charles Eggleston, of Northampton, Mass.; Albion Wheeler, who enlisted as a member of Co. I, 1st Conn. V. C., when he was eighteen years old, and died in the army; John Adelbert, of East Hartford, and Hockanum, who married Nellie Goodell, and became the father of Fred, Hattie, Grace, Ruth and Edie. On Sept. 4, 1892, S. Louise, daughter of Rev. W. L. and Chloe L. Marks, was married to F. Burdette Lincoln, by whom she has six children, Frederick, Charles, Elsie, Geraldine, Mabel and Alice.

Charles H. Baker was born Dec. 28, 1838, in a house west of the one in which he now lives, and received his education in the "red" school house in his native district, and in the select school taught by Rev. John R. Freeman. The work he did for himself was as a teamster, owning at the time his own outfit. Andover was then the railroad shipping point of Hebron, Colchester, and adjacent towns, and Mr. Baker had a large business until the building of the "Air Line" Railroad. At one time he operated with nine horses, and was in the business some twenty years. After the building of the road, Mr. Baker bought the Bishop place and engaged in farming. On this farm a small orchard had been started, and Mr. Baker determined to go into fruit growing on a large scale. He put out a large orchard, and has now one of the most profitable fruit farms in the town, and he is one of the few farmers who realize the value of spraying the trees. Each year he handles from one to three thousand bushels of apples. A thoroughly practical farmer, his success in fruit raising comes from study and experiment. In politics he is a Republican, though strictly independent in local affairs. Many of the town offices have been filled by him, including those of registrar, assessor and member of the board of relief, and for five or six years he has served on the school board. His wife is a member of the Congregational Church, and all are active members of the Andover Grange, of which he has been treasurer for many years.

Mr. Baker was married Sept. 17, 1862, to Celestia Adelaide Cutler, who was born Aug. 18, 1840, a daughter of Lucius and Ruth (Webster) Cutler. Lucius Cutler was a resident of Manchester, and for a time at Colchester, where he graduated from Bacon Academy; his wife, a native of Bolton, was a daughter of Jacob and Ruth (Culver) Webster, being the only child of her parents to reach maturity. To Charles H. Baker and his wife were born: (1) Albion Maurice, born Oct. 17, 1872, who became a music teacher of ability and promise, was a student at Hosmer Hall, Hartford, Conn., and died July 8, 1897; (2) Effie Mabel, born Sept. 25, 1875, who died Oct. 13, 1878; and (3) Collette Ameret, born Dec. 8, 1879, who married Sept. 5, 1900, Cullen Le Roy Potter of Andover, South Coventry, Conn., where he is employed as a blacksmith; they have one daughter, Corinne Leora, born Aug. 18, 1901.

MOSES S. PERRIN, one of the prominent and substantial farmers and dairymen of Woodstock Windham Co., Conn., was born Jan. 30, 1827, in West Woodstock, of an old Connecticut ancestry which has been known in that locality for generations.

Penuel Perrin, the grandfather of Moses S., was born in August, 1765, in West Woodstock and passed out of life full of years and honors, Dec. 21, 1852, in Woodstock. His occupation was farming and lumbering, and in addition to large sawmills he owned some 700 acres of land in Windham county. In 1791 he married Dorothy Bugbee, of West Woodstock, born Jan. 7, 1766, and died at the age of seventy-three, June 12, 1839. Their children were Augustus, born Feb. 13, 1793; Erastus, March 2, 1795; Adin, Jan. 25, 1797; Dorothy, March 2, 1799; Margaret, Aug. 12, 1801; Artemus, May 18, 1803; Almira, Jan. 2, 1806; and Amos, Sept. 1, 1809.

Erastus Perrin, son of Penuel, was born March 25, 1795, in Woodstock, and died on his farm there, Aug. 23, 1860. His life was spent in tilling the soil and he was noted for his industry and for the success which attended his efforts. Mr. Perrin was a fine specimen of manhood, standing six feet in height and weighing over 200 pounds and possessed the warm heart and jovial disposition which often attends such unusual size. His relations with the neighborhood were of the kindest character and he possessed the friendship of all. In politics he was a Whig, but never consented to hold office. His interest was in his farm, his home and family and in the Baptist Church, of which he was a consistent member.

In 1818 Erastus Perrin married Martha Blackmar, born May 25, 1799, in Woodstock, who died here Sept. 13, 1871, a daughter of Noah and Sarella (Howe) Blackmar. The children born to this union were as follows: Purley Ann, born May 24, 1820, in Woodstock, who married Lucian Hiscox, of Union, Conn., both of them dying at Cherokee, Iowa; George Monroe, born June 5, 1822, in Woodstock, who married Lucy A. Stetson, of Woodstock, both now deceased, his death occurring Aug. 9, 1856, in Woodstock Valley; Eliza, born Oct. 4, 1824, in Woodstock, who died unmarried at the age of twenty years; Moses Sabin; Andrew Adin, born June 16, 1830, in Woodstock, who resides in Sioux City, Iowa, where he is a shoemaker and farmer, married to Charlotte Bloomfield, of Stockton, N. Y.; and Benjamin Sabin, who married Mary Ellen Herindeen, of Woodstock, and resides at Cherokee, Iowa, engaged in farming.

Moses Sabin Perrin acquired a common school education in West Woodstock and, at the age of twenty years was prepared to take his place as one of the capable farmers of his locality. After several years of practical experience with his father, he went to Stockton, N. Y., where an uncle resided, and remained with him on the farm for two years, returning then to the old home on account of his father's failing health. He then took the entire management of the home place and after his father's death remained there until 1863, when he sold the homestead farm and purchased the old Hibbard place, consisting of 150 acres in the northern part of the town. There Mr. Perrin has since engaged in general farming and dairying, keeping from ten to twelve milch cows and making a specialty of a very high grade butter which he disposes of to customers in Southbridge.

In politics Mr. Perrin supports the candidates of the Republican party and upholds its principles. As a member of the school board he has done his full duty for the advancement of education in the community. Both Mr. Perrin and his wife are members of the Advent Church and both of them belong to Woodstock Grange, No. 150.

On Sept. 6, 1853, Mr. Perrin was married to Mary Eliza Potter, daughter of George Chauncy and Martha (Draper) Potter, of Woonsocket, R. I. At the time of their marriage, Mrs. Perrin lived at home with her mother. Later her family removed to Woodstock. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Perrin. (1) Frank Lorin, born July 15, 18—, in Stockton, N. Y., married (first) Nov. 25, 1884, Vinnie Howard Carpenter, who was the daughter of Horatio Carpenter, of West Woodstock, and who died May 24, 1886, in Sturbridge, leaving one son, Howard Vincent, born May 21, 18—. This young man now lives with his grandfather. The second marriage of Frank Lorin took place Oct. 31, 1900, to Carrie Eliza Dailey, of Fredonia, N. Y., their one son being Frank Dailey, born Aug. 5, 19—. Frank L. Perrin is a member of the optical firm of Cruff, Holmes & Perrin, the establishment being known as the old Putney Works. (2) Clara Melvern, born June 8, 18—, in North Woodstock, married June 1, 1882, Charles Evans Rawson, a farmer in North Woodstock, and has one daughter, Ethel Almira, born Oct. 19, 18—, now attending Woodstock Academy. (3) Nettie Cornelia, born Sept. 27, 18—, in Woodstock, died Sept. 16, 1876. (4) Edith Mabel, born June 31, 18—, in Woodstock, resides at home. Miss Perrin is a member of the Congregational Church in North Woodstock, where she has filled the place of organist for several years; she is also a prominent member of Grange No. 150.

KINNEY. The earliest records of the family whose name is variously spelled Kene, Kinne and Kinney, are to be found among the archives in the State House in Boston, Mass., and the documents preserved in Salem and Danvers, Massachusetts.

In 1651 there was in Salem Village, now Danvers, Essex Co., Mass., one Henry Kene, and the name is found in several forms in the church records in Danvers and Salem. This Henry was undoubtedly born in 1624, for in 1684, deposing as witness to a will, he says that he is sixty years of age. It is very probable that he was born in Holland, of Puritan parentage, the name being found in those portions of England from which came the Pilgrim Fathers to America. In 1712 Henry Kinney, in a quit-claim deed to his brother John, speaks of his father Henry as "now deceased." As this Henry once owned the ground which is the site of the old Danvers cemetery, near the house in which Gen. Israel Putnam was born, in 1718, it is more than probable that he and many of his descendants lie buried there, although at present there are no monuments marking their graves. This Henry Kene was the American founder of the family of Kinney, which has long been an honored one in New England.

Nathan Kinney, a descendant of Henry, was a native of Sutton, Mass. With his two brothers, Reuben and Jonas, he moved to Westboro, Mass., and later to Union, where Nathan and Jonas were enrolled in the militia company, May 15, 1783. Reuben and Jonas afterward moved back to Westboro.

A deed of John Rosebrooks, of South Brimfield, dated Oct. 1, 1773, conveying land in Union to Nathan Kinney, certifies that he was of Westboro. Of his three sisters, Prudence married Joseph Lilly, Jr., of Union; Rebecca married Nathan Hiscock, of Union; and Molly married David Grover. Nathan was a farmer and died in Union. His first marriage was to Abigail Williams, who died March 28, 1778. His second wife was named Eunice, and his third was Anna Chaffee. Nathan Kinney had eight children, namely: Joel, born Aug. 1, 1769; Eleazer, March 28, 1771, a farmer in Union, Conn., who married Mary Paul, daughter of Mathew Paul; Ruth, Aug. 14, 1772, who married first Thomas Lawson, Jr., and second Jonathan Blanchard, of Monson, Mass.; Lucy, Dec. 4, 1774, who married David Coye; John, May 30, 1776, who married June 16, 1811, Rhoda Chamberlain, of Union; Alpheus, July 29, 1781, who married Lucy Eaton, daughter of John Eaton; Nathan, Nov. 6, 1785, who married Roxana Thompson; and David, March 28, 1789.

Joel Kinney, son of Nathan, was born Aug. 1, 1769, at Westboro, Mass., and died March 2, 1852, in Union, Conn. On May 10, 1792, he married Chloe Coye, daughter of Archibald Coye, of Union, who died March 21, 1834. They had nine children. (1) Abigail, born Sept. 23, 1793, died Sept. 27, 1793. (2) Archibald, born Oct. 24, 1794, died March 10, 1867, in Suffield, Conn. On Oct. 28, 1821, he married Sarah Ranney, who died Jan. 27, 1890. For years he was a school teacher in Portland and Suffield, Conn., and had among his pupils many who later became distinguished in various walks of life. In 1844 he represented the town of Portland in the Legislature and was a man of prominence and reliability. (3) Daniel, born March 11, 1798, died the following day. (4) Elizabeth, born March 16, 1800, died in infancy. (5) Elizabeth (2), born Sept. 26, 1801, married Moses C. Sessions, of Union, and died in Michigan. (6) Nathan was the father of M. H. Kinney. (7) Elisha, born Oct. 11, 1805, lived at Holland, Mass., where he kept a hotel. Aug. 25, 1833, he married Mary Ann Marcy, who died Feb. 5, 1881, aged sixty-eight years, his death occurring Aug. 23, 1888, at the age of eighty-three years. (8) Danforth, born Nov. 30, 1809, followed the trade of carpenter in Thompson; March 21, 1833, he married Jane N. Holmes, of Woodstock, Conn., and died Aug. 27, 1880. (9) Horace, born March 22, 1814, carried on a carpenter and cabinet-making business at Stafford, Conn., later becoming a loom repairer. March 24, 1839, he married Millicent B. Marcy, of Holland, Mass., and he died in Stafford.

Grandfather Joel Kinney followed farming all his life. In 1796 he purchased a farm in Union from Nehemiah and Mary Child, of Woodstock, which he conducted very successfully, becoming a man of means and local prominence, especially in the Congregational Church, in which he carefully reared his children.

Nathan Kinney, son of Joel, and father of Milton H. and Myron Kinney, was born Nov. 28, 1803, in Union, Conn. Jan. 18, 1830, he married Lucy Wales, born Feb. 6, 1803, daughter of Gideon and Betsey (Allen) Wales, of Union, who died Dec. 22, 1863, in Union. A family of six children was born to them. Ann Eliza, born April 1, 1831, on March 16, 1852, married Robert B. Paul, of Union, son of Chauncy Paul, and a farmer in Geneseo, Ill., where he died and where she still resides. Myron is spoken of below. Maria Jane, born Feb. 14, 1835, was married May 24, 1859, to Edward C. Chamberlain, of Woodstock, where they lived, their residence now being West Woodstock, where Mr. Chamberlain is a farmer and lumberman. Milton Horace has a sketch following. Albert, born Aug. 15, 1839, in Union, Conn., married Jan. 14, 1864, Abby Olney, a native of Ashford, Conn., and died in May, 1898. He engaged extensively in lumbering and also farming but later was a soap manufacturer at Southbridge, Mass. Esther, born May 6, 1842, married March 14, 1861, Ripley Chamberlain, of West Woodstock, where they still reside, and where he engages in farming and teaming.

Nathan Kinney lost his life Jan. 5, 1852, at the age of forty-eight years, through being accidentally drowned by falling through a flume on Bush Meadow Brook. His knowledge of lumbering was extensive and until his death he conducted a saw mill in Bigelow Hollow. Mr. Kinney was a large farmer also, owning an estate comprising 350 acres of excellent land. He is still remembered as a man of robust appearance and dignified bearing. Although no office seeker, his friends prevailed upon him to serve as assessor and selectman, and in 1844 he was the Democratic representative of his town in the Legislature. Always busy he possessed the executive ability which enabled him not only successfully to manage his private interests, but creditably to perform the duties of public life. His father had reared him in the Congregational Church, but his own inclinations led him in the direction of the Universalist faith. His early death probably deprived his community of a man who in later life would have reflected honor upon it.

MYRON KINNEY, son of Nathan and Lucy (Wales) Kinney, was born Feb. 24, 1833, in Union, Conn. His education was acquired there, both in public and select schools, one of his remembered teachers being an instructor named Ford. By the time he reached his nineteenth year he was able with his brother Milton, to take active part in his father's business, the death of the latter placing entirely in their hands. Later they enlarged its scope and engaged in the manufacture of shoe and packing boxes, the business requiring the employment of a number of hands. Later Milton Kinney withdrew from the business, and Myron continued alone until 1878 in the same location. At that time Milton Kinney moved to Putnam and carried his business on from that point for three years, finally closing it.

Soon after Mr. Kinney embarked in the retail lumber business, dealing in lumber and house supplies, and has prospered in this line ever since.

Although Mr. Kinney is a staunch member of the Republican party and well qualified in every way to fill many of its honorable offices, his tastes do not lie in that direction. His only service was on the special assessment committee in the town of Union, in 1854-55. In a fraternal way he belongs to Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, and the Golden Cross. His religious connection has long been with the Congregational Church, in which he was a deacon fourteen years in Union, and he has also held the same office for ten years in Putnam.

On Jan. 5, 1864, Mr. Kinney was united in marriage to Miss Mary Jane Corbin, born March 14, 1831, daughter of Deacon Penuel and Mary (Chamberlin) Corbin, of West Woodstock, Conn., the latter born July 29, 1806. To this union has been born a family which is noted for its intellectual vigor and social prominence. Mary L., born March 3, 1865, in Union, died three days later. Emma Jane, born March 21, 1866, in Union, graduated from the Putnam high school in 1886, and also took a course at the Connecticut State Normal School at New Britain. She has been engaged in teaching, and is now librarian of the Putnam Free Public Library. Ellen Lucy, born March 29, 1868, in Union, graduated at the Putnam high school in 1886, at the State Normal in 1890 and supplemented this with a year at Oberlin College, Ohio. She engaged in teaching until her marriage, Sept. 5, 1894, to Rev. Willard L. Beard, of Shelton, Conn., who was sent in October, 1894, as a missionary by the American Board of Missions to Foo Chow, China. Their children are Phebe Kinney, Myron Gould, Geraldine and Dorothy. Etta Louise, born April 7, 1870, in Union, graduated from the Putnam high school in 1889, and then took a year's instruction at Moody's school at Northfield, Mass., and spent two terms at the Springfield (Mass.) Bible Normal School. June 27, 1901, she was married to Rev. Willis P. Hume, a minister of the Presbyterian Church, who is located at Meridian, N. Y. Elbert Corbin, born July 24, 1873, in Union, in 1893 graduated from the Putnam high school and in 1898 at the Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, since which time he has been associated with his father in the lumber, coal and wood business.

Mr. Kinney is regarded as a reliable business man of Putnam, and at the same time as one of its representative citizens. Socially his family is prominent and few in the community have been given superior educational opportunities.

MILTON H. KINNEY, one of the most prominent citizens of Union, Conn., was born July 9, 1837, in Union, the second son of Nathan and Lucy (Wales) Kinney. His preparatory schooling was in his native town, this being supplemented later by one term at Groton Academy, Mass., and one term at the Worcester Commercial School. His first entrance into business was when he was about nineteen years of age, as a clerk for one year for Walker, Sessions & Co., at Mashapaug.

After leaving school, Mr. Kinney went to Stafford Springs and entered the employ of the firm of Baker & Heald, grocery and dry-goods merchants, continuing there one year, and then, returning to Union, went into business with his brother Myron. Together they built a box shop in Bigelow Hollow, and conducted an extensive business under the firm style of M. & M. H. Kinney, this enterprise continuing successfully for a period of eight years. Milton H. Kinney then sold his interest in this business and became a partner at Mashapaug in the firm of Corbin & Tourtelotte, the firm then becoming Corbin, Tourtelotte & Co., which was continued three years, manufacturing men's, women's and children's leather shoes, making a specialty of children's boots. At the expiration of three years Mr. Tourtelotte retired and then William M. Corbin and Mr. Kinney continued under the firm name of Corbin & Kinney. The succeeding ten years proved very successful for the firm, which employed some fifty hands, but on account of improved machinery coming into the market, the partners decided to close their establishment. Since that date, 1880, Mr. Kinney has lived retired from business activity. In 1891 he removed to Stafford Springs and resided there some years in order to give his daughter superior educational advantages, returning in 1895 to Mashapaug, where the family home has, since been.

Although a leader in the political life of Union and absorbed by many private interests, Mr. Kinney has never withdrawn from public life when he considered he could serve his town to its advantage. An active Republican, he was made a representative in 1871, when the legislation was still carried on in the old State House in Hartford, and it was during his term of office that the first appropriation was made for the present magnificent edifice. Mr. Kinney served acceptably on the Corporations committee. During his years of public service he has been constable, collector, member of board of relief and selectman. Under Col. Amos Pease he also served as deputy-sheriff, continuing in the same capacity under George M. Paulk. His latest public service was given when he was unanimously chosen to represent the town of Union in the Constitutional convention, to amend the constitution of the state of Connecticut.

In 1871 Mr. Kinney became one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, of which he remains a director. His interest has always been displayed in agricultural matters, particularly relating to his own community, and he is an interested member of Mashapaug Grange, in which he has served as Chaplain. With his family he belongs to the Congregational Church of Union, which he has served on the Society's committee and as clerk, and has been Sunday-school superintendent for several years. To all charitable and benevolent enterprises, Mr. Kinney shows a very generous spirit, and has long been regarded as one of the most valuable citizens of Union.

On March 14, 1860, Mr. Kinney was united in marriage with Miss Martha Moore, daughter of Charles Wesley and Anna (Corbin) Moore, of Ellington, Conn., born July 23, 1835. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kinney, namely: Charles Milton, born Oct. 3, 1871, who died Aug. 16, 1873; Carlos Moore, born July 3, 1874, who died Aug. 25, 1874; and Mattie Josephine, born Dec. 26, 1876, who married Ernest D. Corbin, of Union, on June 15, 1898. Ernest D. Corbin is a son of Lucius A. Corbin, and with his family resides in Southbridge, Mass., where he is employed by the Hamilton Woolen Company. Mr. and Mrs. Corbin have one daughter, Alta Almira, born April 26, 1899, and a son, Milton Kinney, born July 6, 1903.

WALES. The Wales family, to which the mother of both Myron and Milton H. Kinney belonged, was one of the old and honored ones of New England, which has produced many men distinguished for piety and learning.

Mrs. Lucy Wales Kinney was born Feb. 6, 1803, and died Dec. 22, 1863, a daughter of Gideon and Betsey (Allen) Wales, and was in the sixth generation in lineal descent from Timothy Wales, the American founder of the family, through Gideon, Solomon, Deacon Ebenezer, Deacon Nathaniel, and Timothy.

Timothy Wales was of Milton, Mass., and an eminently pious and eccentric man. His father was Deacon Nathaniel Wales and both he and Timothy were fellow passengers with Rev. Richard Mather on the ship "James" of Bristol, which came from England in 1635. They were among the first settlers at Dorchester, Massachusetts.

F. I. HARTENSTEIN (deceased) was, during a busy life, one of the substantial business men of Rockville, Tolland county, and he built up and successfully conducted the leading jewelry business of this locality. His life demonstrated what industry and honesty can accomplish—landing in the United States a poor boy, unacquainted with the customs, and unable to speak or to understand the language, by dint of untiring energy and perseverance all obstacles were overcome, and at the time of his death he left a comfortable competence and a name in the commercial world that represented much.

Mr. Hartenstein was born at Wossek, Bohemia, Austria, Aug. 20, 1851, a son of Marcus and Josephine Hartenstein. In his native country he received a good education, but, being ambitious, he thought to better his fortunes in this country and reached here in July, 1867. A few years later two brothers, Emanuel and Jacob, also came to the United States, the latter of whom died at Ogden, Utah, but the former is a well-settled citizen of Salt Lake City. The parents remained in the old home, where the father still lives, but the devoted mother died in 1896, her demise undoubtedly hastened by her grief over the death of our subject. The first years of Mr. Hartenstein's life here were trying ones, as they were devoted to the acquisition of the language, which he industriously studied, poring over books and spelling out newspapers so that he might become accustomed to what foreigners call Americanisms, and thus made remarkable progress. The groundwork in his own schools was very thorough, and made so good a foundation upon which to build that he was soon master enough of the new tongue to engage in business. The first line into which Mr. Hartenstein entered was that of peddling notions, and later, upon locating in Hartford, he was employed in Hollander's clothing store as a clerk. Early in the seventies he came to Rockville, and entered the employ of Henry Kohn, the jeweler, displaying such ability that in 1874 he was taken into partnership, although he was obliged to contract debt in order to get himself established. The time soon came, however, when all his obligations were discharged, and the firm moved to Hartford, where they entered into the wholesale and retail business under the firm name of Kohn & Hartenstein. About 1879 our subject severed his connection with the firm and returned to Rockville, where he opened a jewelry store in the Doane Block, on Market street, but later removed to the Henry Building, where his business was one of the most successful in the city. He died Jan. 20, 1896.

Mr. Hartenstein visited the old country three times after locating in the United States, his last visit being in 1893, when he was accompanied by his wife and son, and they spent a long time in travel in search of health.

On Sept. 5, 1874, Mr. Hartenstein was married to Miss Emma E. Reil, a native of New York City, a daughter of Daniel and Dorothea (Eichenlaub) Reil, both from the old country. Daniel Reil came to America in 1848, locating in Rockville in 1858, where his family resided with the exception of a short time spent in Ellington. Mr. Reil died in April, 1899. The three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hartenstein were: Lillian, who married Eugene H. Dorr, of Plymouth, Mass., and has three children, Dorothea, Miriam and Ethel; Bertha; and Hugo Joseph, a graduate of the New York Military Academy at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, and now located at Havana, Cuba. The family is one that would be a credit to any parentage.

Mr. Hartenstein was prominent in Masonic circles, a member of Fayette Lodge and Adoniram Chapter, of Rockville; Washington Commandery, of Hartford; and Norwich Consistory, of Norwich, Conn. He also belonged to Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Rockville; the A. O. U. W. and the Knights of Pythias, both of Rockville. Other societies and organizations, both German and English, received his support, and at the time of his death he was a member of the High School committee and a director in the People's Savings Bank. In political life Mr. Hartenstein was interested only as a good citizen, voting with the Democratic party, but never consenting to hold any office. For a period of over twenty-five years he was more or less connected with the business life of the city, and his record is of one who never abused the confidence of the public, and his death caused grief to many business as well as to his personal friends. Mrs. Hartenstein still resides in the comfortable home on Elm street in Rockville, highly respected.

F. H. Lautenstein

ORRIN DRAPER PERRY, though a resident of Putnam, Windham county, only since 1898, has for a number of years been a well-known business man of this section, but over the line, in Massachusetts. He was born Aug. 8, 1832, in Oxford, Worcester Co., Mass., son of Otis Perry, and grandson of Anson Perry, who was of the fifth generation of the family in America. The genealogy is given in full elsewhere.

Otis Perry, born Dec. 2, 1794, in Killingly, Conn., died there March 15, 1866. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Elijah and Abigail (Perry) Ormsby, and after her death, in March, 1842, he married Abby P. Ormsby, her sister. All his children were born by the first union. (1) Charles Henry, the eldest, died in Riverside, R. I., where he had spent the last years of his active life engaged as a carpenter. He left a wife, and a daughter who married William A. Ferris. (2) Albert Otis went to California in 1849, and was killed nineteen years later by a runaway team, in San Francisco. He left two daughters. (3) Edwin Dyer was a carpenter. He went to Elmira, N. Y., where he married Nancy L. Bingham. Returning to Killingly, he served in the 15th C. V. I. during the war, after which he settled in Nebraska, where he died. He was the father of ten children. (4) Orrin Draper is mentioned below. (5) Ellen Frances became the wife of Albert M. Paul, of Providence. She was born Sept. 1, 1838, and died in Riverside, R. I., at the age of thirty-four years.

Otis Perry was a farmer and teamster by occupation, in his early married life following those vocations in Oxford, Mass. After the death of his first wife he removed to Providence, R. I., in 1842, and was there engaged in teaming for five or more years. While a resident of Oxford, he had carried the mail for about a year between Worcester and Norwich, covering the distance on horseback, one way each week-day. In 1849 he returned to his native town, and until his death tilled the farm that had belonged to his father. Mr. Perry was a strong and robust man, and never had a physician except to set a broken limb, until seized by the attack of pneumonia which caused his death. It is related that, within a few hours after the setting of his broken limb, having been left alone in the house, he got out of bed, and, supporting the injured member on the seat of a chair, hobbled to the door and admitted a caller. He was a member of the Episcopal Church, and was a Whig in politics until the organization of the Republican party, whose principles he sincerely endorsed. Of kind disposition, he was devoted to his family, but cheerfully gave three sons—all save the eldest—to the service of his country in the Civil war. The husband of his daughter was also a soldier in the same struggle.

Orrin D. Perry passed the first ten years of his life in Oxford, and then accompanied his father to Providence. He attended the public schools in both places, and subsequently at Long Plain, Acushnet, Mass., where he then lived. In 1866 he took up the trade of upholsterer in New York, where he continued for three years. He then went to Providence and entered the employ of William Barstow & Co., carpet dealers, with whom he remained over twenty years. For five years he was station agent at North Webster, Mass., on the (then) New York & New England Railroad, and he has since been engaged in business on his own account. In 1898 he took up his residence in Putnam. His religious faith is represented by the doctrines of the Baptist Church. He first voted in support of the Republican party, and he is now a steadfast Prohibitionist.

Mr. Perry enlisted in New Bedford, Mass., Aug. 13, 1862, in Co. H, 38th Mass. V. I., and served until June 30, 1865, when he was mustered out at Savannah, Ga. His first service was in the Department of the Gulf, during his connection with which he participated in the battle at Algiers in Banks' Red River expedition and was under fire forty-three days and nights at the siege of Port Hudson. He participated in the battle of Cane River the day after marching forty-four miles in twenty-four hours to reach that point. He was with Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley, and subsequently served along the Atlantic coast. The principal engagements in which he took part, besides those previously named, were those of Winchester, Sept. 19, and Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864. During his long service Mr. Perry was neither a patient in hospital nor a prisoner of war, and received no wounds.

JULIUS A. KIBBE, a successful farmer and prominent business man of Ellington, Tolland county, is one of the representative men of his part of the county. The family history of this branch of the Kibbe family is presented in connection with the sketch of Horatio Kibbe, of Ellington, who is a brother of Julius A.

Julius A. Kibbe was born May 7, 1823, and was fourteen years old when his parents moved from his birthplace, Somers, to Ellington, obtaining his education from the district school, and a term each at the Glastonbury and the Ellington Academies, the latter being kept by Rust & Merrill. After leaving school, Julius A. Kibbe was engaged during the summer season in peddling Yankee notions through rural Connecticut with a horse and wagon. At this he proved quite successful. In 1850 he spent a season in Delaware City, N. J., where he was engaged in raising tobacco on shares. The following year he returned and bought at auction his present home, the Col. Belcher place. In 1865 he moved the farm barns from across the street to their present location, at the same time remodeling and adding to them. In 1872 he built his present cosy and attractive home. Mr. Kibbe has been engaged in general farming, tobacco culture and dairying on this very fine Connecticut estate of 200 acres and more. Mr. Kibbe has been very successful, and his farm shows the effect of long and careful handling. At the time of his purchase it was run down, but now compares favorably with any place of its size in Tolland county. Of late Mr. Kibbe has retired from active farming, passing the management of the place to his son, William H. In his more active years Mr. Kibbe was an extensive dealer in cattle, handling particularly oxen for the local market.

Mr. Kibbe was married to Ellen Warner, Jan. 21, 1851. Mrs. Kibbe was born Aug. 30, 1830, in Ellington, and was a daughter of Horace and Matilda (Martin) Warner. To this union were born six children: (1) E. Brainard, born July 17, 1854, was for a time engaged in farming in Ellington, and while residing there was town clerk for several years and for four years was county sheriff. He is at present the agent for Connecticut of the Essex Fertilizer Company of Hartford, where he lives. He married Anise Warner, and they have the following children: Maude E., the wife of Winfred Chapin; Edna L.; Lucius Warner, deceased; and Henrietta E. (2) Horace W., born April 27, 1857, married Henrietta E., daughter of Deacon James Talcott, of Ellington, and is the superintendent of the farm at the State Reform School for Boys, at Meriden, Conn. (3) Mary E., born March 16, 1859, died Oct. 3, 1870. (4) George F., born April 17, 1861, married Ida Raymond, of Hebron, Conn., and is engaged in a hotel and livery business at Brimfield, Mass., and they have one child, Ida. (5) Jessie, born March 2, 1865, died Sept. 11, 1867. (6) William H., born Aug. 19, 1869, married Estella F. Yost, and was engaged in the cultivation of the family homestead until it was sold.

Mr. Kibbe is a Democrat, and served as a member of the General Assembly in 1856, holding a position on the committee on Claims; for four years he has been selectman; for several years he has acted as constable, tax collector one year, and was registrar of voters for twenty years previous to his resignation.

Mr. and Mrs. Kibbe are members of the Ellington Congregational Church, as are the most of his family. Mr. Kibbe has filled several minor offices in the church, and is a man much respected in the community where his sterling manhood and genuine worth have been long recognized and universally respected.

Mrs. Ellen Kibbe belongs to the Warner family, an old and familiar name in the annals of Tolland county. At one time it had many local representatives, but at the present time the family is almost extinct. Daniel Warner was the first of the family to come to Ellington. He came from Stafford, Conn., about 1760. A weaver by trade, on his arrival here he purchased a farm in North Ellington, for which he incurred a heavy debt. This farm was in the family for four generations, and was recently purchased by a Swiss.

Daniel Warner married Hannah Russell and had the following children: Horace and Daniel, who died in infancy; Horace (2), who died young; Lemuel, who married Hannah Darby; Nathaniel; Ebenezer, who married Ruby Herrick, a singer of ability, and an astronomer; Daniel, who married Azuba Clark, and spent his life in South Hadley, Mass., where he was engaged in the mercantile business; Hannah married Stephen Gifford, and removed to Watertown, New York.

Nathaniel Warner was a farmer on the family homestead, and in 1796 married Martha Gifford, who was born in 1774, and died in 1814. To this union there were born seven children: (1) Martha, born in 1797, died Dec. 2, 1891. She married David S. Pember. (2) Horace, born in 1797, married Matilda Martin, and was father to the following children: Nelson, who married Helen Kibbe; Charles, who married Mariette E. Dimmock; Ellen, who married Julius A. Kibbe; Treat M., who married Lucina Lawrence for his first wife, and for his second wife, Mrs. Sarah Richmond; and Horace, who married Ella Hayden, and, on her death, Emily Ford. The father of this family died Aug. 28, 1870. (3) Betsy, born April 22, 1802, married Eleazer Whiton, and died Nov. 10, 1828. (4) Mary (Polly), born Aug. 13, 1804, married April 24, 1828, John Wadsworth, of Ellington, and a sketch of this family appears on another page. She died Aug. 23, 1897. (5) Nelson, born Aug. 2, 1806, was drowned July 18, 1812, in a small stream near his home. (6) Lora, born May 13, 1808, married Samuel M. Bliss, and made her home in Wilbraham, Mass., where she died June 2, 1859. (7) Sophronia, born July 5, 1811, married Edwin, the son of Rev. Diadate Brockway, of Ellington, and died Nov. 27, 1841.

On the death of his first wife, Nathaniel Warner married Martha Newell, by whom he had one child, Abigail, who was born Sept. 5, 1818, and is now the widow of Aaron Charter, of Ellington.

THOMPSON. There are still residing in the beautiful and picturesque old town of Pomfret, Windham county, some of the descendants of the late Ebenezer Thompson, a gentleman of wealth, influence and high social standing in that community in the earlier part of the last century, but most of whose active business career was passed in the city of Providence, where as a citizen and merchant none stood higher. In Pomfret are still the picturesque and attractive grounds of the old New England home which bespeaks the old time hospitality and culture so generously dispensed there three quarters of a century ago.

Ebenezer Thompson was born March 8, 1773, at Providence, R. I. He descended from one of the first planters of New Haven, Anthony Thompson, who, with his brother John, was a settler of that colony under the compact of 1639; both are believed to have accompanied Theophilus Eaton thither in the spring of 1638. Another brother, William, was of New Haven in 1647. John and William died leaving no children. Anthony Thompson at the time of coming had two children, John and Anthony. He married a second time, and his children were: Hannah, born in 1645; Lydia, born in 1647; Ebenezer, born in 1648. From this (I) Anthony Thompson the lineage of the late Ebenezer Thompson, is through John, Joseph, Rev. Ebenezer and Ebenezer (2). Of (II) John nothing is known.

(III) Joseph Thompson married Elisabeth Smith in 1697, and died Dec. 10, 1719. Their children were: Ann, Joseph, Stephen, Jonathan C. and Rev. Ebenezer, born June 21, 1712.

(IV) Rev. Ebenezer Thompson, born June 21, 1712, married Esther Stevens, who was born May 17, 1715, and died July 21, 1813. Rev. Mr. Thompson died Nov. 20, 1775. Their children were: Esther, Ebenezer (2), John, Amy, Anna, Levy, Lewis, Mary and Jane. Rev. Ebenezer Thompson graduated at Yale, and was settled at Scituate and Hanover, Mass.; he had charge of several other stations also from 1743 to his death, in 1775. Mr. Thompson was ordained to the priesthood in London, England, in the chapel of Fulham Palace, by the Bishop of London, Aug. 24, 1743.

(V) Ebenezer Thompson (2), son of Rev. Ebenezer and Esther (Stevens) Thompson, was born in New Haven, Jan. 15, 1735. He married Lydia Kinnicut, daughter of Coe Edward Kinnicut and Mary (Tillinghast), and in 1754 moved to Providence, R. I. Mrs. Thompson died Aug. 30, 1770. Mr. Thompson married (second), Elisabeth Kinnicut, a sister of his first wife. His children by his first marriage were Sarah, born in 1760; Edward, in 1762; and Mary, in 1764. None lived to marry, but Edward, who married Sarah Kuhn-Swoope, of Alexandria, Va., daughter of Col. Michael Swoope and Eva (Kuhn). By his second wife he had children: Ebenezer, John, Thomas, Joseph, Lydia and Stephen. None married but Ebenezer and John.

(VI) Ebenezer Thompson (3), son of Ebenezer (2), married Ruth Stockbridge, of Scituate, Mass., in 1806. Mr. Thompson was reared and educated in a manner in keeping with his family's standing, and was a graduate of Yale College. He early began a business career in Providence, R. I., the city of his birth. He finally became a merchant, engaging in foreign trade and shipping extensively to the West Indies. He had the elements of character which brought him great success in his business undertakings, which were extensive and lucrative. He was the owner of his own trading vessels, and in his younger years made frequent trips abroad. On his retirement from active business, at the age of thirty-seven, he purchased 200 acres of land in Pomfret, Conn., built an attractive house, and then enjoyed his life in laying out his grounds and caring for those acres amid the various scenes of that beautiful town. He was one of the founders of the Episcopal Church in Pomfret, and a faithful member of the parish. He held the confidence and esteem of his fellow townsmen. He died March 23, 1837. The children of Ebenezer and Ruth (Stockbridge) Thompson were (1) Eleanor Stockbridge, born Dec. 25, 1806, married Rev. Alexander Hamilton Vinton, Oct. 14, 1835, and died Oct. 21, 1877. (2) Anna, born in Feb., 1809, married Rev. Ezra B. Kellogg, the Episcopal clergyman of the old Pomfret Church, now in the town of Brooklyn, Conn. They had six children. (3) Ebenezer, born in May, 1810, died Dec. 30, 1842. (4) Charles Stockbridge, born June 2, 1812, died April 10, 1891. He married Clara Grosvenor, daughter of Samuel Putnam and Clarissa (Downe) Grosvenor. Mrs. Thompson died in March, 1890. They had three children, the youngest, Charles Otis, still lives in Pomfret. (5) Thomas, born Dec. 26, 1815, died in June, 1867. He married, June 22, 1842, Anna T. Dorrance, of Providence, R. I. They had six children, of whom three are deceased, and the rest are scattered.

Eleanor Stockbridge Thompson married Rev. Alexander Hamilton Vinton, of Providence, Oct. 14, 1835. He was the son of David and Mary (Atwell) Vinton, of Providence, R. I. His mother was a woman known far and wide in New England for her remarkable force of character, which she impressed upon the lives of her five sons, all of whom have filled places of high distinction in the world. For three of them this devoted mother secured the high education of West Point, which fitted them for subsequent lives of great usefulness to the public.

REV. DR. ALEXANDER HAMILTON VINTON was born May 2, 1807, at Providence. He graduated first at Brown University, and subsequently pursued a course of medical study at Yale. After taking his degree he settled at Pomfret, Conn., where he practiced medicine. After three years of medical practice, Dr. Vinton's attention was strongly attracted to the sacred ministry, and he abandoned his original profession, and after the usual course of study, graduated at the New York Theological Seminary and was ordained by Bishop Griswold in the spring of 1835. Almost immediately afterward, he took the temporary charge of Grace Church, New York, during the absence of the Rector, Rev. Dr. Taylor, and upon his return, accepted the charge of a church in Portland, Me., in October, 1835. His next charge was Grace Church, Providence, and in February, 1842, he accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Boston, Mass. During his connection with St.

Paul's, Dr. Vinton was invited no less than fourteen times to other pulpits, and finally accepted a pressing invitation to take charge of the new parish of the Church of the Holy Trinity in Philadelphia, Pa., in October, 1858. It is an interesting, though sad, coincidence, that Dr. Vinton died at the occasion of the consecration of that church, which he then came to inaugurate, and beneath the same hospitable roof, that first received him when he entered upon his rectorate, twenty-three years before. Upon the death of Dr. Anthon, Dr. Vinton accepted the charge of St. Mark's Church in New York, where he officiated from May, 1861, until November, 1869, when he returned to Boston as the rector of Emanuel Church. There he continued to labor until, in accordance with a long contemplated purpose of relinquishing active parochial service on the attainment of his seventieth year, he resigned in December, 1877, and retired to his old and cherished home in Pomfret, where he afterward resided, occupying his winters with courses of lectures before the Cambridge Divinity School, and the remainder of his time in the happy indulgence of rural pursuits, for which he retained a keen taste, and from which he derived great pleasure. His beautiful Hamlet Lodge has for many years been a charming center of genial hospitalities and of rare domestic felicity, and his influence among his neighbors was one of incalculable usefulness.* This is the bare outline of the official record of one of the greatest men that the American Church ever produced. It will devolve upon other hands to draw the portrait of the colossal character that filled these forty-six years of service in the church with so much dignity, honor and usefulness.

Dr. Vinton belonged to a race of giants, physically, intellectually and morally. His splendid frame was a suitable abode of a grand mind and a great heart. He moved among ordinary men with a grave gentle courtesy, adorned with a genial affability that made his society most charming, and invested him with a rare power of attraction, especially for the young. A profound thinker, a deeply read theologian, a masterly reasoner, a scholar whose attainments ranged through all the sphere of human knowledge, Dr. Vinton stood among the general ranks of the clergy of his church, in an attitude of preeminence, occupied with a beautiful and modest dignity, and exercising a most powerful influence upon the minds and lives of all with whom he came in contact; wherever he was, he was necessarily the central and foremost figure, yet never by his own seeking or preference. He was singularly devoid of all taste for ecclesiastical parade, the simplicity of the habits of his private life impressing itself equally upon all his official relations. In the pulpit his power was prodigious, and his manner was a rare combination of stateliness and convincing earnestness and simplicity. In all public utterances, whether in the debates of the general convention, in his own pulpit, or upon the platform, there was the suggestion of great reserve forces, that added overpowering weight to all appeal or argument. In his private ministrations among the sick and sorrowful, there was a genuine sympathy and tenderness in his words and manner that rarely failed of their loving purpose. A gentleness that was truly feminine, blended in perfect harmony with all the rugged massiveness and masculinity of his character and made it very beautiful. Dr. Vinton was, from first to last, a stanch, consistent and persistent champion of what used to be called the "Evangelical" school of the Episcopal Church, always ready to maintain his position, yet never seeking controversial attitudes in it. He was stoutly conservative as to all modern developments in the doctrine or the practices of his church, of which he was a most devoted and loyal son, and upon which his death inflicted a most severe loss.

It would be difficult to name five brothers of an American family, all filling such positions as have been honorably occupied by the five sons of the noble New England woman, who was the mother of Dr. Vinton. His eldest brother, Amos Maine Vinton, was known throughout New England as one of the great East India merchants of Providence, and exercised a large influential position in Rhode Island. Major John Vinton, of the United States Army, was one of America's bravest and best soldiers, the hero of the famous charge at Monterey, and subsequently falling dead at his post in the fierce assault upon Vera Cruz. General D. H. Vinton, U. S. A., was throughout the Rebellion the quartermaster-general at New York, where he conducted the prodigious operations of his office, involving the expenditure of several hundred millions, with an exact integrity and degree of ability that won for him the highest encomiums. The Rev. Dr. Francis Vinton, of Grace Church, Brooklyn, and subsequently of St. Paul's and Trinity Church, New York, was a man of brilliant abilities and of the most distinguished position in the church.

Dr. Vinton died as he would have chosen to do, in the harness of active service, and in the midst of a circle of devoted friends to whom he was ardently attached. Dr. Vinton's splendid last discourse forms a grand ending of a grand career. Finis coronat opus. May, 1881. [From a memorial sketch of one who knew him well.]
